
Where the owner or operator of an automobile invites another to ride with him in the automobile with the hope of making some future profit as a result of such ride, there is "compensation" within meaning of statute providing that no person who as a guest accepts a ride in a vehicle without giving compensation for such ride has right of action for injuries unless they resulted from intoxication or willful misconduct of the motorist. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

6. Automobiles ⇐181(2)

Where motorist is promised a money payment for transportation to a certain point, as where the occupant is a passenger in a taxicab, there is "compensation" within meaning of statute providing that no person who as a guest accepts a ride in a vehicle without giving compensation for such ride has right of action for injuries unless they resulted from intoxication or willful misconduct of the motorist. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

7. Automobiles ⇐244(20)

In action against motorist for death of occupant of automobile which overturned, evidence that purpose of trip was to take occupant of automobile to a meeting of an organization of which all occupants were members, did not warrant finding that deceased occupant was a "passenger" or that motorist received "compensation" within meaning of automobile guest statute. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

8. Trial ⇐140(1)
Witnesses ⇐316, 317(2)

The jury is the sole judge of the credibility of witnesses and may believe all of the testimony of a witness or believe a part and reject parts as it may be convinced of the truth or falsity of such testimony, whether it arises from willfulness or mistake.

9. Automobiles ⇐244(20)

In action against motorist for death of occupant of automobile which overturned, evidence that purpose of trip was to take occupants of automobile to a meeting of an organization of which occupants were members, and that motorist received money from organization for making the trip, sustained jury's finding that deceased occupant was a "passenger" and that there was "compensation" within meaning of automobile guest statute, warranting recovery without proof of willful misconduct or intoxication of motorist. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

10. Appeal and error ⇐930(1)

An appellate court must accept as true all evidence tending to establish correctness of finding or verdict on which judgment appealed from is based, consider evidence in aspect most favorable to prevailing party, and give such party benefit of every reasonable inference supporting his claim.

11. Automobiles ⇐244(20)

In action against motorist for death of occupant of automobile, which overturned, evidence supported jury's finding that motorist was negligent in operating automobile in unsafe mechanical condition because of rotten inner tube, driving at excessive speed, and failing to keep automobile under control and use proper care in bringing it to stop after sensing fact that tube was leaking. Vehicle Code, § 679, St.1935, p. 225.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; T. R. Thomson, Judge.

Action by David Mitchael Whitechat, a minor, etc., and another against Ervine O. Guyette to recover for the wrongful death of David Whitechat, deceased. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Prior opinions, 107 P.2d 300 and 115 P. 2d 814.

Chester O. Hansen and John Said, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Gray, Cary, Ames & Driscoll, of San Diego, amicus curiæ, on behalf of appellant.

Rae B. Carter and John D. Chinello, both of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Defendant appeals from a judgment rendered by the trial court after a jury verdict awarding plaintiffs, as surviving widow and minor child, $8,000 damages for the alleged wrongful death of one David Whitechat. The death occurred when the automobile in which the deceased was riding overturned while being driven from Fresno to Stockton. The defendant owned and was driving the car at the time of the accident. The occupants of the car, other than defendant, were officers of the Fresno Chapter of the Young Men's Institute and, as such, were going to Stockton to attend a business meeting of that organization. The defendant was a member of the Young Men's Institute but was not an officer required to attend the meeting. One of the occupants of the car was a grand officer of the organization and was allowed mileage, which would amount to approximately $5. This money was to be turned over to the defendant.

A few miles north of Fresno, while driving at a speed of fifty miles per hour, defendant lost control of the car as the result of the flattening of the left rear tire, and the accident and death above referred to followed. The complaint alleged that Whitechat was riding as a passenger for compensation and that his death was the direct and proximate result of defendant's negligence. There were no allegations, nor was there any proof offered, of intoxication or wilful misconduct on the part of defendant.

Appellant argues that the evidence most favorable to the respondent shows, as a matter of law, that Whitechat was technically a "guest" and was not a "passenger for compensation," as alleged in the complaint, and that therefore the judgment cannot stand, as neither wilful misconduct nor intoxication was pleaded. Respondents argue that whether or not compensation was given was a question of fact for the jury, and that by returning a verdict in their favor, the jury impliedly found that there was compensation either because the relationship between the parties was of a business rather than a social nature and the transportation was supplied in pursuance thereof for their mutual benefit, or because of the special tangible benefit to the appellant for furnishing the ride, viz., the promise of the $5 to defray expenses. The determinative question, therefore, on this appeal is whether Whitechat was a passenger or a guest without having given compensation for the ride, within the meaning of section 403 of the Vehicle Code, St. 1935, p. 154.

In approaching this problem it is well to keep in mind the observation made in the case of McCann v. Hoffman, 9 Cal. 2d 279, 282, 70 P.2d 909, to the effect that although the terms "passenger" and "guest" have for convenience been adopted for the purpose of distinguishing a person carried for hire or reward from one carried gratuitously, the chief concern of the courts should be the meaning of the phrase "without giving compensation" as used in section 403 of the Vehicle Code, and not a definition of the term "guest."

Since the enactment of the "guest law" in 1929 there have been numerous decisions both by this court and the District Courts of Appeal wherein it was determined that certain benefits passing from the occupant to the owner or operator of an automobile were or were not sufficient to be termed "compensation" within the meaning of what is now section 403 of the Vehicle Code. These cases have laid down certain general rules which may be used as a guide, but as noted in McCann v. Hoffman, supra, the nature of compensation as contemplated by the statute is as variable as the particular facts involved. Instead of attempting to formulate some new or further rule in the instant case, the better method would seem to be to place this case within one of the classifications of the previously decided cases, if we are justified in so doing by its facts.

[1-6] As a starting point reference might be made to a situation in which a person driving along a highway picks up a hitch hiker. It is clear that the pleasure derived from the doing of such an act of kindness is not a benefit sufficient to be considered compensation, and, in fact, the only tangible benefit is enjoyed by the hitchhiker. Nor is there any question of compensation involved if a driver of a car takes another to some social event which both desire to attend or to some other point of common destination solely for the pleasure derived from the taking. It is equally clear that the benefits of hospitality, companionship or goodfellowship accruing to the owner or operator of an automobile as the result of a simple pleasure trip are not benefits that may be considered compensation. Even if there is something tangible in the way of a contribution of money from the occupant to the driver, a sharing of expenses, or even in some cases full payment of gas and oil by the occupant, there is no benefit sufficient to be termed compensation if the trip is of a purely social nature. In the McCann case, supra, two couples were on a pleasure trip from San Mateo to Rio Del Mar, and there was a mutual understanding that the expenses of the trip would be shared equally. It was there held that such sharing of expenses was not compensation. See, also, Stephen v. Spaulding, 32 Cal.App.2d 326, 89 P.2d 683; Starkweather v. Hession, 23 Cal.App.2d 336, 73 P.2d 247; Rogers v. Vreeland, 16 Cal.App. 2d 364, 60 P.2d 585; Chaplowe v. Powsner, 119 Conn. 188, 175 A. 470, 95 A.L.R. 1177; Morgan v. Tourangeau, 259 Mich. 598, 244 N.W. 173; Clendenning v. Simerman, 220 Iowa 739, 263 N.W. 248. On the other hand, if the parties are engaged in a business venture for their mutual advantage and the ride is an integral part of that business venture, then the driver may be said to be in receipt of benefits sufficient to be classified as compensation, and the occupant becomes a "passenger," who may recover for injuries suffered as a result of the negligence of the driver. In the case of Walker v. Adamson, 9 Cal.2d 287, 70 P.2d 914, the driver and occupant were business associates, and the trip was for the purpose of taking some material to carpenters engaged in construction work on property jointly owned by them, and for the purpose of supervising said construction and the renting of the property. Under such circumstances compensation was said to have been given. See, also, Jensen v. Hansen, 12 Cal.App.2d 678, 55 P.2d 1201; Parrett v. Carothers, 11 Cal.App.2d 222, 53 P.2d 1023; Woodman v. Hemet Union High School District, 136 Cal.App. 544, 29 P.2d 257. Another situation where the benefit received has always been held to be compensation is that in which the owner or operator invites another to ride with him with the hope of making some future profit as a result of such ride. One of the first and a typical example of this type of situation is the case of Crawford v. Foster, 110 Cal.App. 81, 293 P. 841, wherein a prospective purchaser of an automobile injured in an accident during a demonstration was held not to be a "guest" without having given compensation, because of the hope of a future sale on the part of the driver. See, also, Piercy v. Zeiss, 8 Cal.App.2d 595, 47 P.2d 818; Riley v. Berkeley Motors, Inc., 1 Cal.App.2d 217, 36 P.2d 398. The final and most obvious situation in which it may be said that compensation has been given is that wherein an owner or operator is promised a money payment for transportation to a certain point. The clearest example of this is a passenger in a taxicab. Chaput v. Lussier, 132 Me. 48, 165 A. 573. If the person injured is one of a class which the owner or operator was paid to transport, then it is immaterial whether or not that particular person made the payment. Smith v. Fall River Joint Union High School District, 118 Cal.App. 673, 5 P.2d 930.

Having outlined the classifications made by the appellate courts of this and other states, there remains the question whether the facts in the instant case place it in one of the above-mentioned categories.

Respondents contend that the jury could have found the deceased to be a "passenger" or that the defendant received compensation, under the authorities, for two different reasons: First, because the relationship between the parties was that of business and the transportation was supplied in the pursuit thereof for their mutual benefit; and second, because of the promise of payment of the $5 for furnishing the ride.

[7] In order to uphold the respondents' first contention, it must be shown that the appellant and the deceased were engaged in a business venture for their mutual advantage and that the ride was an integral part of that business venture. No such showing has been made. It is true that all of the occupants of the car were members of the Young Men's Institute, and it might be said generally that the trip was being made for the purpose of attending a meeting of that organization, but, specifically, the four occupants of the car other than appellant were attending a business meeting which, as officers, they were required, or at least expected, to attend. The appellant, although a member, was not an officer and was not required to attend. Therefore, as between appellant and deceased, it cannot be said that the trip was an integral part of a business venture for their mutual advantage, as in the case of Walker v. Adamson, supra, where the trip was being made for the purpose of taking material to carpenters who were working on property jointly owned by the driver and the injured occupant. Disregarding for the moment the promised money payment, the relationship between the appellant and the deceased may be said to be merely one of a social nature analogous to that existing in the case of McCann v. Hoffman, supra, wherein the parties were on a pleasure trip. From this standpoint then the benefit received by appellant was not sufficient to be termed compensation, within the meaning of section 403 of the Vehicle Code.

Respondents' second contention is that whether the promise of payment of $5 was compensation as in the case of Smith v. Fall River Joint Union High School District, supra, or merely a sharing of expenses as in the McCann case, supra, was a question of fact for the jury, and that body, by rendering a verdict for respondents, impliedly found that the payment was compensation, which finding is conclusive on this court. In answer to this contention appellant argues that in view of the evidence presented, the question is one of law, and as a matter of law under McCann v. Hoffman, supra, deceased was a "guest" and not a "passenger," or in other words, that the promise of payment of $5 was merely a promise to share expenses and not compensation.

The record discloses that the only evidence in regard to the conditions under which appellant agreed to take his car and drive to Stockton was given by the appellant himself. Prior to the trial and on June 29, 1939, his deposition was taken under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. His testimony on that occasion was, in part, as follows:

"Q. (By Mr. Carter): Now, you say, you were driving these boys up there to that meeting? A. That is right.

"Q. And the Y. M. I. was paying you for your gas and oil a certain amount of money for driving up there? (Emphasis added.) A. That is right.

"Q. Some $9. A. I think it was $5.

"Q. $5? A. Yes, sir."

[8, 9] Some four months later at the trial, upon being called as a witness in his own behalf, appellant testified that he agreed to take the officers to Stockton before the $5 offer was made; that subsequent to that agreement, the grand officer told appellant that he would give him the $5, which he could collect from the Young Men's Institute as mileage, to defray appellant's expenses on the trip; and that he (appellant) accepted the offer but still insisted that he was going to take the men to Stockton because of his friendship for them and in the interest of the organization, and not because of the promised money payment. If this latter testimony were accepted as true, then it would follow that the promise of the $5 payment was merely a promise to share expenses, and not a promise of compensation. However, "The jury is the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and may believe all of the testimony of a witness or believe a part and reject parts as it may be convinced of the truth or falsity of such testimony, whether it arises from willfulness or mistake." Lindemann v. San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co., 5 Cal.2d 480, 503, 55 P.2d 870, 882. The jury could therefore have believed that portion of appellant's testimony given at the trial in which he stated that he agreed to make the trip before any mention of payment was made, and the further portion thereof wherein he stated that he was making the trip only out of friendship for the men and in the interest of the organization. On the other hand, the jury could have accepted as true only that portion of the deposition in which the appellant stated that he was being paid $5 by the Y. M. I. for his gas and oil "for driving up there." Because of the verdict in favor of the respondents, it must be assumed that the jury accepted as true the statement made in the deposition, and that it rejected the statements made at the trial in regard to the promised $5 payment. At the time of giving his deposition, appellant made no claim that he was driving the deceased and the other occupants of his car to Stockton in the interest of the organization and on account of his friendship for them. Nor did he then state that he was not making the trip for the $5. From the statement in the deposition the jury reasonably could have concluded, and apparently did conclude, that the $5 payment was promised and the promise was accepted as compensation for making the trip to Stockton. In view of the evidence presented, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the promise of payment of the $5 was merely a promise to share expenses. The jury impliedly found that the payment was compensation and such finding, on a question of fact, is conclusive on this court.

[10, 11] Appellant further contends that the evidence is insufficient, as a matter of law, to support the implied finding of the jury that he was negligent in the operation of the automobile. This point was ably discussed by the District Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, in an opinion written by Justice Griffin prior to the granting of a hearing by this court. In his petition for a hearing before this court, appellant did not question the disposition of this contention as made by the District Court of Appeal. Nothing further said by this court could improve the disposition there made. Therefore, that portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal dealing with the negligence of appellant is hereby adopted as expressing the views of this court. Said portion of the opinion, [107 P.2d 300, 304] is as follows:

"Appellant insists that the record does not establish that he failed to exercise ordinary care, and endeavors to defend on the doctrine of unavoidable accident. We are again confronted with the rule, as admitted by appellant, that in passing upon the merits of an appeal an appellate court will and must accept as true all evidence tending to establish the correctness of the finding or verdict and must consider the evidence in the most favorable aspect towards the prevailing party and give that party the benefit of every inference that can reasonably be drawn in support of his claim. Cope v. Goble [39 Cal.App.2d 448, 453], 103 P.2d 598.

"Appellant argues that 'the Gods of fortune do not smile on all persons equally. As a result, some people do not have the financial wherewithal to buy new automobiles, or in the event they buy used automobiles, to buy new tires and tubes "all around," ' and contends that appellant acted as a reasonable and prudent person would act under the same or similar circumstances after buying a second-hand car, and that his failure to dismount the rear tires on the automobile on the chance that he might find that the inner tubes were 'lifeless', was not negligence. It is further argued that the owner of an automobile does not owe an absolute duty to others that his automobile shall be in a safe condition, but he is only bound to use reasonable care to see that his vehicle is in proper condition to use on the highways, citing Bolin v. Corliss Co., supra [1928, 262 Mass. 115, 159 N.E. 612]; Coppedge v. Blackburn, supra, [15 Tenn.App. 587]; and Kemp v. Stephenson, supra [139 Misc. 38, 247 N.Y.S. 650].

"Respondents claim that the record supports the finding that appellant was negligent in several respects: (1) That he violated section 679 of the Vehicle Code forbidding the operation of automobiles that are not in safe mechanical condition and which would endanger the driver or other occupant or any person upon the highway; (2) that he violated the speed laws of the state; and (3) that he failed to keep his automobile under control.

"As to the first claim, the rule set forth in 2 California Jurisprudence Ten Year Supplement, section 157, page 234, is quoted to the effect that: 'The statute declares that it shall be unlawful for any person to drive a vehicle unless it is in "such safe mechanical condition" that its operation on the highway shall not endanger the driver or an occupant of the vehicle or any person upon the highway. "It is the duty of one operating a motor vehicle to see that it is so equipped in order that it may at all times be under control and not become a menace to other traffic on the highway." Proof having been made that the collision was occasioned by the defective condition of the party's vehicle, the issue as to his responsibility for the happening of the calamity depends upon the showing as to whether he knew or ought to have known of the existence of the defect.'

"An instruction to this effect was given in Brandes v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 102 Cal.App. 221, 282 P. 1009, where an automobile left the highway and ran upon a sidewalk and injured a pedestrian due to the breaking of a portion of a steering gear, the evidence tended to show that the vehicle had been used to such an extent that its safety was a matter of doubt. See, also, Coppock v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 137 Cal.App. 80, 30 P.2d 549; Smith v. Brown, 102 Cal.App. 477, 283 P. 132; Maus v. Scavenger Protective Ass'n, 2 Cal.App.2d 624, 39 P.2d 209; Rath v. Bankston, 101 Cal.App. 274, 281 P. 1081; Silvey v. Harm, 120 Cal.App. 561, 8 P.2d 570; Dunn v. Shamoon, 37 Cal.App.2d 486, 99 P.2d 1113.

"The question then presented is this: Do the facts in the instant case come within the rule which would impose negligence on the part of appellant? The force of the evidence on the mechanical condition of the car was that the left rear tire did not blow out but went flat because the inner tube was 'rotten' and in a dangerous condition. A portion of the tube bore evidence of five or six patches. It was incapable of retaining air. The jury saw that portion of the inner tube and saw a demonstration of its condition. That the inner tube was not in a safe condition is not open to doubt.

"From the evidence it appears that appellant was told by the salesman of the used car, at the time of the sale, that all of the tires and tubes were in good condition. Observation subsequently informed appellant, however, that the spare tire was in a bad condition, notwithstanding the salesman's statement. A few months after the sale, again notwithstanding the salesman's statement, and after a puncture appellant found that the left rear tire and tube were in such bad condition that they also had to be thrown away. This should have placed appellant upon notice of the fact at least, that the salesman's representation as to those particular tires and tubes was somewhat erroneous and of the added fact that if those tires and tubes were in such bad condition the same might be true of the others.

"The added and admitted fact that appellant was operating his automobile, of somewhat ancient vintage, with tires and tubes of the kind described, on a warm day, at 50 miles per hour, may have been prima facie unlawful, and the jury had the right to determine that the operation of the vehicle under the surrounding circumstances, at the excessive speed, constituted negligence. Secs. 511 and 513, Vehicle Code.

"The record further discloses testimony given by a witness for the respondents who had been in the automobile tire and garage business for 32 years, and who more or less qualified as an expert on the subject. His evidence substantiates respondents' claim that appellant did not use the proper care in bringing the car to a stop after he sensed the fact that the tube was leaking or that he was having tire trouble. It reads in part as follows:

"'Q. (By Mr. Hansen): But I am asking you based upon what you saw, that the marks got wider as they went along, that it appears to you as a tire expert which you say you are, that the air did not leave that tire in just one explosion but went out gradually? A. Gradually, yes, sir. * * Q. He (Guyette) said in his deposition that he couldn't control it, he was permitting it to stop without applying the brakes? A. Yes, sir. Q. As a tire man you would say that was the proper way to stop a car when you have a flat tire? A. No, sir. Q. What do you do, put on your brakes? A. No, sir. Q. What do you do? A. The minute you feel that tire flat, if you are going very fast, the best thing to do is slow it down a little and then when you come to your crawling speed you will have to release it, and when you get below that again, you put your brakes on again. * * * Q. But you wouldn't say that he did the wrong thing by not using his brakes hard when he felt the tire go down on him? A. Yes, sir, I do. I think that could have been avoided if he had been a little careful in putting them on quickly and using them at the proper time.'

"In Brandes v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., supra, it is held that if the question of whether or not the automobile was being operated in a careless manner was one from which reasonable minds might draw different conclusions, the determination of the jury that it was being carelessly operated was controlling on appeal."

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

19 Cal.2d 439

DRUZANICH v. CRILEY et al.

L. A. 17817.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 6, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⇐181(2)

Where occupant and driver of automobile were delegates from their local union to district conference, but the attendance of one was not necessary for the enjoyment of the benefits of attendance by the other, regardless of whether the conference was of a business or social nature, the driver and occupant were not engaged in a business venture for their mutual advantage so as to constitute occupant a "passenger", who had given "compensation" for the ride within meaning of Vehicle Code, and entitled as such to recover damages if driver negligently injured him. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Compensation" and "Passenger".

2. Automobiles ⇐181(2)

An occupant of automobile, who was tendered and accepted transportation on condition that he assist in driving, was a "passenger", whose promise to assist in driving was a special tangible benefit and constituted "compensation" for the transportation within Vehicle Code, so as to entitle him to recover damages if driver negligently injured him. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1071(1)

In action against driver and owner of automobile for injuries sustained by an occupant thereof when automobile left highway, trial court's error in finding that occupant was not a passenger but was riding in the automobile as a guest without giving compensation for the ride within meaning of Vehicle Code did not require a reversal of judgment denying recovery, unless trial court also erred in finding that the accident was not proximately due to driver's negligence. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

4. Automobiles ⇐242(2)

In action against owner and driver of automobile for injuries sustained by occupant, who was riding in rear seat, when automobile, which was under exclusive control of driver and without any voluntary action of occupant, left the highway while rounding a left curve and plunged down an embankment, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" was applicable to raise an inference of negligence of driver.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

5. Negligence ⇐136(6)

The application of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not give a plaintiff an absolute right to a judgment, but where the defendant produces evidence to rebut the inference of negligence arising under the doctrine, it is ordinarily a question of fact whether such inference has been dispelled.

6. Negligence ⇐121(2)

The inference of negligence, arising under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur", is in itself "evidence", which may not be disregarded by the trier of facts, and in the absence of any other evidence as to negligence necessitates a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, since it is incumbent on the defendant to rebut the prima facie case thus created by showing that defendant used the care required of him under the circumstances.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Evidence".

7. Automobiles ⇐244(20)

In action against owner and driver of automobile for injuries sustained by passenger, who was riding in rear seat when automobile, while rounding left-hand curve at a speed of 50 to 55 miles per hour, left the highway and plunged down an embankment, finding of negligence on part of driver was required under the evidence.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Action by George Druzanich against Dorothy Criley and others for injuries sustained by plaintiff, while riding in an automobile driven by named defendant. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Prior opinions, 107 P.2d 445 and 115 P. 2d 810.

Edward M. Raskin and Belmore D. Goulden, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joe Crider, Jr., and John J. Ford, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants after trial by the court without a jury. The action was brought against the operator and the owners of an automobile by an occupant thereof to recover damages for personal injuries. The third amended complaint contained three causes of action, the first two of which were abandoned at the trial. It was alleged in the third cause of action that plaintiff was a "passenger" in the automobile and that defendant Dorothy Criley was negligent in its operation. The trial court found that plaintiff was not a "passenger" but was riding in the automobile as a "guest without giving compensation for such ride." It further found that the defendant driver was free from negligence in the operation of the car in which plaintiff was riding at the time he sustained his injury.

From the above statements it may be seen that this case involves a problem already considered in the case of Whitechat v. Guyette, Cal.Sup., 122 P.2d 47, filed today, viz., the meaning of the phrase "without giving compensation" as used in section 403 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 154.

Appellant and respondent Dorothy Criley were delegates to a conference in Los Angeles of the United Cannery and Agricultural Workers of America, a labor union affiliated with the C. I. O. The conference was called by District No. 2 of this union for the purpose of forming a set of rules and the policy for this district, which comprises California, Nevada and Arizona. The parties were delegates from separate branches of the same local. The means of transportation to the conference were discussed in the union office in Sunnyvale. Those present were appellant, respondents Dorothy and Richard Criley, Lloyd Lehman, another delegate, and Luke Hinman, who apparently was not a delegate but who desired to go to Los Angeles. Dorothy Criley asked her husband Richard if he would let her use their car so that they could all go together. Criley said that he didn't feel that she should use the car and drive all the way to Los Angeles, but if the others would assist her in driving, she could have the car. The parties all agreed to this, and they started that evening. Dorothy Criley drove from Sunnyvale to King City; appellant drove from there to Santa Maria; Hinman from Santa Maria to Santa Barbara, where respondent Dorothy Criley again took the wheel and drove until the time of the accident. There was no definite schedule or plan as to distances each was to drive, and the shifts were made as each driver felt in need of a rest. Lehman, who was to attend an early conference, did not drive at all.

The accident occurred at about 7:30 o'clock in the morning. Appellant was in the back seat and because he was dozing at the time, his testimony is of little aid as to the events leading up to or the cause of the accident. Respondent Dorothy Criley didn't testify at the trial, but according to her deposition she was driving at a speed of fifty or fifty-five miles an hour and came to a left curve. She was sleepy because of the all-night ride and blinked her eyes on the curve. The car was traveling on the outer lane and the wheels hit a soft shoulder. Respondent lost control and the car went over an embankment, turning over several times. Appellant was thrown out of the car and suffered the personal injuries for which he now seeks to recover damages.

[1] Appellant first argues that he had given "compensation" for the ride within the meaning of section 403 of the Vehicle Code and was thus a "passenger," who could recover if the driver was negligent, because the parties were engaged in a business venture for their mutual advantage and traveling in contemplation of their mutual business. This same contention was made by the respondents in the Whitechat case, supra, and we there held that the relationship between the driver and the deceased was not such as to bring the case within that group of cases headed by Walker v. Adamson, 9 Cal.2d 287, 70 P.2d 914, which stands for the above-mentioned proposition. The relationship in the Whitechat case differs from that presented here in that in the former case the driver, although a member of the Young Men's Institute, was not required to attend the meeting in Stockton, whereas in the instant case both parties were delegates to the conference. However, the instant case still does not come within the Walker v. Adamson classification. It is true that both parties desired or, as delegates, were required to attend the conference. It is also true that each would be benefited by individual attendance. However, the attendance of one was not necessary for the enjoyment of the benefits of attendance by the other. This being so, it becomes immaterial whether the conference was of a business or social nature. The case of Doherty v. Edwards, 227 Iowa 1264, 290 N.W. 672, 674, is illustrative of that type of situation in which it may be said that compensation was given because the trip was an integral part of a business venture for the mutual advantage of the parties. There the driver was a supervisor of federal loans and the occupant was interested in borrowing some money. The court stated that "Presumably the presence of both was necessary." In the instant case either the appellant or respondent Dorothy Criley could have enjoyed the benefits of the conference without the presence of the other. The fact that the parties were both interested in the general objective of the trip, viz., the attending of the conference, is not the controlling factor. If an attorney were transporting a client to a place where the client's case was to be heard, then it might be said that the client would be a "passenger" and not a "guest" who had not given compensation, but if two attorneys were riding to a certain point in a car owned by one for the purpose of appearing on different matters in the same court, no such relationship would exist unless some tangible benefit had passed from one to the other.

[2, 3] The qualification of the last statement brings us to the second contention of appellant. That contention is that the promise to aid in the driving was sufficient to take him out of the category of a "guest" who had not given compensation. In opposition to this respondents argue that this sharing in the driving was merely incidental and analogous to the sharing of expenses as in McCann v. Hoffman, 9 Cal.2d 279, 70 P.2d 909. Cases may arise in which a sharing of the driving might be a "courtesy of the road" and thus not of sufficient benefit to be considered compensation, but this is not true in the instant case. Reference to the testimony of both parties in regard to the conversation prior to the trip shows that the offer to transport appellant was conditional upon his sharing in the driving. This appellant agreed to do, and it was just as much payment for transportation as a railroad fare. Respondent Dorothy Criley desired to take her husband's car to Los Angeles, but she could not do so unless appellant and the others promised to share in the driving. Appellant's promise then was the "special tangible benefit" which was the "motivating influence for furnishing the transportation" referred to in the McCann case, supra, 9 Cal. 2d at page 286, 70 P.2d at page 913, and must be termed compensation. The instant case cannot be distinguished from the case of Lerma v. Flores, 16 Cal.App.2d 128, 60 P.2d 546, wherein the plaintiff was invited by the defendant to ride with him so that he [plaintiff] might show the defendant which route they should follow. Nor does it differ materially from the case of Haney v. Takakura, 2 Cal.App.2d 1, 37 P.2d 170, in which the plaintiff, who had experience in selling oranges, was asked to accompany the defendant driver into town to aid the defendant in selling his crop of oranges. In each case there was a special tangible benefit passing from the occupant to the driver which was sufficient to be termed compensation within the meaning of section 403 of the Vehicle Code. The case of Mayer v. Puryear, 4 Cir., 1940, 115 F.2d 675, cited by respondents, is clearly distinguishable in that there the furnishing of transportation was not made conditional upon the sharing in the driving. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the trial court erred in finding that appellant was not a "passenger" but was riding in the automobile as a "guest without giving compensation for such ride." However, this conclusion is not sufficient to compel a reversal of the judgment unless it can be said that the trial court also erred in finding that the accident was not proximately due to negligence on the part of respondent Dorothy Criley.

[4] In support of his contention that the trial court erred in finding respondent Dorothy Criley free from negligence, appellant urges that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should have been applied to the instant situation and that the purported "explanation" of the cause of the accident offered by said respondent was, as a matter of law, insufficient to rebut the inference of negligence created by the application of that doctrine. Under the circumstances here presented, viz., the instrumentality being in the exclusive control of said respondent; the accident being such that in the ordinary course of things it would not have happened if the respondent driver had used proper care; and the injury having occurred without voluntary action on the part of appellant, the res ipsa loquitur doctrine must be held to have been applicable. See Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P.2d 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092; Ellis v. Jewett, 18 Cal.App. 2d 629, 64 P.2d 432; Cookson v. Fitch, 116 Cal.App. 544, 3 P.2d 27; Queirolo v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 114 Cal.App. 610, 300 P. 487; Ireland v. Marsden, 108 Cal.App. 632, 291 P. 912; Crooks v. White, 107 Cal. App. 304, 290 P. 497; Brown v. Davis, 84 Cal.App. 180, 257 P. 877.

[5, 6] The application of the doctrine does not give a plaintiff an absolute right to a judgment in every case. Raymer v. Vandenbergh, 10 Cal.App.2d 193, 51 P.2d 104; Nicol v. Geitler, 188 Minn. 69, 247 N.W. 8; Sweeney v. Erving, 228 U.S. 233, 33 S.Ct. 416, 57 L.Ed. 815. It does not shift the burden of proof, and when the defendant produces evidence to rebut the inference of negligence, it is ordinarily a question of fact whether the inference has been dispelled. Anderson v. I. M. Jameson Corp., 7 Cal.2d 60, 59 P.2d 962; Scarborough v. Urgo, 191 Cal. 341, 216 P. 584; Ireland v. Marsden, supra; Crooks v. White, supra. However, the trier of fact cannot arbitrarily disregard the inference. As stated in Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 99, 64 P.2d 409, 417: "The rule is well settled by a multitude of decisions of the appellate courts of this state to the effect that the inference of negligence which is created by the rule res ipsa loquitur is in itself evidence which may not be disregarded by the jury and which in the absence of any other evidence as to negligence, necessitates a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. It is incumbent on the defendant to rebut the prima facie case so created by showing that he used the care required of him under the circumstances. The burden is cast upon the defendant to meet or overcome the prima facie case made against him."

[7] In the instant case respondent Dorothy Criley's explanation in no way indicates that she was exercising due care while driving the car. On the contrary, it indicates a lack of due care. She testified that she was driving at a speed of 50 to 55 miles per hour; that she was sleepy because they had not slept all night; that she started around a left-hand curve on the outer lane; that she blinked her eyes on the curve; and that the car hit a soft shoulder and went over the embankment. Other evidence shows that the sun was shining and, in so far as appears from the record, the pavement was dry. The windshield on the car was clean and visibility ahead was clear. There is no evidence or even suggestion that there was any gravel or other substance on the pavement which would have caused the car to skid; that any tire on the car became flat or was in a condition other than normal; that the steering apparatus was not operating properly; or that the sun or anything else blinded the respondent driver. Nevertheless the car left the road with the result above mentioned. Automobiles when driven with due care and caution do not leave the highway under these circumstances. Respondent Dorothy Criley has failed completely to rebut the inference of negligence raised by the attending circumstances. Such failure necessitates a finding of negligence in accordance with the inference. Ales v. Ryan, supra; Seney v. Pickwick Stages, Northern Div., 206 Cal. 389, 274 P. 536; Ireland v. Marsden, supra. Therefore the trial court erred in finding said respondent free from negligence.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., did not participate herein.

49 Cal.App.2d 714

De ARYAN v. AKERS.

Civ. 11895.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

Contracts ⇐329

Action on verbal contract, providing that if Board of Equalization was legally authorized to collect sales tax from defendant who printed newspaper owned and published by plaintiff plaintiff's protest should be void, but if court ruled that collection of tax from defendant by the Board was illegal, the sales tax was to be returned to plaintiff, was properly dismissed as "premature" where undisputed evidence showed that the controversy was still pending before the Board of Equalization.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Premature".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Arthur L. Mundo, Judge.

Action on a contract by C. Leon de Aryan against Roy O. Akers. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., did not participate.

Roy O. Akers in pro. per.

C. Leon de Aryan in pro. per.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Plaintiff sued on a verbal contract to recover $2.10. The action was brought and tried in the Superior Court of San Diego County. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were waived, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the sum demanded, from which judgment defendant appeals. The grounds of appeal, as defendant states them in his brief, are: "First. That the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision. Second. That said decision is against the law." Each point is well taken.

It appears from the admitted allegations of the complaint and the undisputed evidence that the plaintiff, C. Leon de Aryan, during the month of January, 1940, paid to the defendant, Roy O. Akers, $70 for printing one weekly issue of "The Broom," a weekly newspaper owned and published by plaintiff, and at the same time paid to defendant, under protest, the additional sum of $2.10 as a sales tax. The latter sum, so the complaint alleges, was paid pursuant to a verbal agreement between the parties that if the Board of Equalization was legally authorized to collect a sales tax from the defendant Akers, plaintiff's protest should be deemed void; "but if the courts were to rule said collection of a 3 per cent sales tax on $70, in the sum of $2.10 from defendant Akers by the Board of Equalization to be illegal for any cause whatever, said sales tax of $2.10 must be returned to plaintiff." In other words, according to the terms of the verbal agreement pleaded and proved, plaintiff's right to the return of the $2.10, hence his right to bring an action against the defendant for the recovery thereof, accrued only upon the happening of a condition precedent, to-wit, a court determination that defendant was not liable for the payment of said tax; and nowhere in the complaint is it alleged, nor was any evidence introduced to show, nor does plaintiff claim, that prior to the commencement of this action any such court ruling was rendered herein or in any case involving a like situation. To the contrary, the undisputed evidence shows that at the time of the trial herein the controversy between defendant and the Board of Equalization as to whether defendant was liable for the payment of the tax was still pending before said board; and that no court action has ever been instituted to collect the tax. Therefore, under the terms of the verbal agreement sued upon, no cause of action existed in favor of plaintiff for the return of the $2.10 at the time he commenced this action.

In view of our conclusion that the action has been prematurely brought, it is not necessary to discuss the question as to whether such action was properly brought in the superior court.

The judgment is reversed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 692

KENNINGTON v. NEFF.

Civ. 12872.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 11, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 9, 1942.

Appeal and error ⇐994(3)

In action for injuries sustained in an encounter in a saloon whether plaintiff was too drunk at time of encounter to recall and later to testify concerning what occurred, whether plaintiff's testimony was contradictory in itself and to certain extrajudicial statements he had made, and whether plaintiff should have corroborated his testimony, were matters for the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Action by George J. Kennington against Art Neff to recover damages for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Courtney A. Teel, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John N. Hurtt, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is a suit to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by a quarrelsome drunk who invited a physical encounter in a saloon and, in the language of the street, got all and more than he bargained for. As the trial court saw fit to award him damages in the sum of $3,000, defendant is here contending that there was no substantial evidence to sustain the judgment. In support of that contention defendant, while conceding that there was a direct conflict in the evidence, insists that no credence can be given to the testimony of the plaintiff for five reasons: First: Because plaintiff was too drunk at the time of the encounter to recall and later to testify to what occurred. Second: Because plaintiff's testimony was uncorroborated. Third: That plaintiff's testimony was not only contradictory with itself but with certain extra-judicial statements he had made. Fourth: That had the plaintiff's testimony been true he should have corroborated it by his drinking partners, who were available as witnesses. Fifth: That plaintiff not having called his drinking partners to corroborate him, it was obvious that they too had been too drunk to have a recollection of the events so they could testify.

While we think these arguments might well have been made to the trial court, they cannot be entertained here. The trial judge saw and heard the plaintiff, the defendant and the bartender who testified for the defendant. He evidently disbelieved the defendant and his witness and believed the testimony of the plaintiff. As the testimony of the plaintiff—contradictory in certain immaterial parts—was adequate to sustain his cause of action, it rested with the trial court to determine whether it was based on memory of the events or was fabricated for want of recollection. Under those circumstances we must accord full weight to the holding below.

Moreover, we have read the entire record and are satisfied that no grounds for reversal exist, either on the question of liability or as to the amount of the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 489

FREDERICK v. NORTH SIDE WATER CO. OF WALNUT.

Civ. 12864.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 3, 1942.

1. Action ⇐6

A complaint alleging that plaintiff had a right to "allocate" shares of defendant corporation's stock which it might issue and sell, that corporation represented to plaintiff that it could not borrow $10,000 to pay a creditor unless it could settle controversies with plaintiff, that contract disposing of controversies was entered into, that plaintiff performed covenants thereof, that defendant gave notice of cancellation of contract, and that defendant refused all of plaintiff's demands to fulfill contract or return to plaintiff the rights, interests, privileges, beneficial interest, and equities that he had enjoyed before execution of contract and praying for declaratory relief and damages, was demurrable.

2. Action ⇐6

To be entitled to declaratory relief, it is not enough that there be a controversy, but it must be a justiciable controversy, and the specific claims made must be set forth together with the ultimate facts to sustain them.

3. Appeal and error ⇐949

In absence of a showing of abuse of the discretion given to the trial court to grant or deny declaratory relief, the reviewing court is without power to review.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Benjamin J. Scheinman, Judge.

Action by Wilson D. Frederick against the North Side Water Company of Walnut, Cal., for declaratory relief and damages. From a judgment entered on an order sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

John E. Martin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Horowitz & McCloskey, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer of defendant corporation to plaintiff's second amended complaint without leave to amend. The action was for declaratory relief, with a prayer for damages in the sum of $6,463. The grounds of demurrer were: (1) that no cause of action was stated and (2) that the complaint was uncertain, ambiguous and unintelligible.

[1] The complaint alleges that during the period 1926 to 1935 plaintiff had a right to "allocate" such shares of defendant company's corporate stock as it might issue and sell; that defendant company in 1934 represented to plaintiff that it was indebted to a creditor in the sum of $10,000 and that it was essential, if it were to continue in business, that it borrow this sum so as to pay the creditor; that the defendant company represented to the plaintiff that it could not borrow the money unless it could settle its controversies with him and eliminate his right in the future to allocate any of its corporate stock; that a written contract (annexed to the complaint) was entered into that disposed of the controversy; that the plaintiff on his part promptly complied with all the covenants thereof but that defendants did not; that two years later—in 1937—the company gave notice of its cancellation of the contract; that thereafter plaintiff demanded of defendant company that it fulfill the terms of the contract or, in the alternative, that it "return to him the rights, interests, privileges, beneficial interest and equities" that he had "held, owned and enjoyed prior to" the execution of the written contract mentioned; that defendant had refused all of plaintiff's demands, and that an actual controversy exists between the parties concerned relative to their respective legal rights and duties. The prayer is for a declaration as to the rights, privileges, equities and duties of the respective parties and for a judgment of $6,463 in favor of plaintiff.

What is meant by the pleader by his reference in the complaint to allocating stock is not stated, nor is there any statement of the "rights, privileges or equities" he claims subsisted in the period prior to the written contract. No factual basis for a recovery of money is alleged. Moreover, there is nothing in the complaint which would give the trial judge the slightest notion as to what the supposed controversy was about, except for what little he could gather from the complaint, the substance of which we have narrated here.

[2, 3] In presenting the case to us appellant presses the argument that an actual controversy existed between the parties and hence that declaratory relief was proper even though there was a breach of the obligation by the defendants. We think the contention overlooks the fact that it is not enough that there be a controversy. It must be justiciable. Moreover, the specific claims made must be set forth together with the ultimate facts to sustain them. The complaint here falls far short of doing so. If plaintiff wishes to rely on the contract his remedy is an action at law for damages, which on the facts shown is adequate. If he does not choose to stand on the contract but instead to enforce such rights as he had prior thereto, he has not shown by the allegations of his complaint that he is entitled to a declaratory judgment. As no abuse of discretion given to the trial court to grant or deny declaratory relief is shown, we are without power to review. See Monahan v. Department of Water & Power, 48 Cal.App.2d 746, 120 P.2d 730.

The judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 537

SHEEHY v. ROMAN CATHOLIC ARCHBISHOP OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

Civ. 11781.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 6, 1942.

1. Judgment ⇐102, 150

Where a complaint is amended in substance as distinguished from a mere matter of form, it operates to open a default, and it must be served on all adverse parties affected including the defaulting party, since the default on the original complaint is limited in its effect to that complaint, and the defaulting party is entitled to opportunity to be heard under the allegations of the complaint on which judgment is sought against him.

2. Pleading ⇐417

Where a party does not leave his pleading where the order sustaining a demurrer has left it, he "waives" any error on the part of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

3. Pleading ⇐417

Plaintiff, when he amended his complaint after a general demurrer was sustained, in effect admitted that the demurrer was good and that his original complaint was insufficient to state a cause of action.

4. Pleading ⇐417

Where a particular portion of a complaint is questioned on a general demurrer, and the demurrer is sustained, plaintiff, if he abandons his original complaint and files an amendment correcting the questioned allegation, is no longer in a position to say that the original complaint was good as against the judgment sustaining the demurrer and that the court erred in its ruling

5. Pleading ⇐417

Where a general demurrer to a complaint is sustained, plaintiff may test the sufficiency of his complaint on the judgment sustaining the demurrer or he may accept the judgment that the complaint was not good and file an amendment, and, if he elects to file an amendment, he impliedly confesses that the original complaint was not sufficient and that it should be corrected, and, having made that election, he may not then claim the benefit of the original complaint and the amended one also.

6. Judgment ⇐102, 150
Pleading ⇐252(2)

The filing of an amended complaint substituting allegations for hearsay allegations to which a motion to strike and a general demurrer, which were respectively granted and sustained, had been directed, not only vacated a defendant's default but superseded the original complaint, and the original complaint dropped out of the case and ceased to have any effect as a pleading or as a basis for a judgment.

7. Judgment ⇐102, 141

Where an original complaint had dropped out of existence as such when a second default was entered against a defendant, and an amended complaint had not yet been served on defendant, the second default stood as a nullity and was properly vacated by the trial court.

8. Judgment ⇐19

Where the efficacy of an original complaint as a pleading had been destroyed by the filing of an amended complaint, and plaintiff declined to offer any evidence in support of amended complaint, the trial court properly refused to give judgment on the original complaint and was bound to render judgment for defendant upon plaintiff's refusal to support his amended complaint with proof.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James G. Conlan, Judge.

Action by Andrew J. Sheehy against the Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco, the Right Reverend P. J. Quinn, and others, to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's minor son. Plaintiff dismissed the action as to all of the defendants except the Right Reverend P. J. Quinn, and, from a judgment for that defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

E. C. Mahoney, of Burlingame, for appellant.

Garret W. McEnerney and Henry J. O'Connor, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

B. C. JONES, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in an action to recover damages for the death of his minor son. The basis of the action is an injury claimed to have been inflicted upon the child by other students while at play upon the grounds of St. James School. It is alleged that at the time of the injury the St. James School was in charge of the Dominican Order of Sisters under an arrangement with the Rt. Rev. P. J. Quinn, pastor of St. James Church, and that the school and church operated under the direction of the Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco. When the case was called for trial the appellant dismissed the action as to all of the defendants except the Rt. Rev. P. J. Quinn, the respondent herein. He then declined to offer any evidence in support of his amended complaint and judgment went for the defendant. The plaintiff places his reliance entirely upon a default of the defendant entered upon the original complaint.

The action was commenced on November 13, 1935, and on November 15th the complaint and summons were served on the respondent. He failed to appear and on December 11, 1935, his default was entered. The Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco, a corporation sole, one of the other defendants, appeared and entered a general demurrer to the complaint and noticed a motion to strike certain portions thereof. On January 2, 1936, this general demurrer was sustained with leave to amend, and the motion to strike granted. The plaintiff filed an amended complaint on January 9, 1936. This amended complaint was not served on the respondent until October 25, 1937, and was answered by him on December 2, 1937. The trial resulting in the judgment appealed from was had on December 27, 1939, approximately two years after answer to the amended complaint.

After the amended complaint was filed on January 9, 1936, and before it was served on the respondent on October 25, 1937, and on the 11th day of September, 1936, the default of the respondent was again entered for his failure to answer the original complaint. At this time the plaintiff also asked the court to enter judgment against the defendant on the second default. This request for judgment was submitted by the court, and later an order, ex parte, was made setting aside the default and also the order of submission. This order was made on October 15, 1936. When the case was called for trial the plaintiff moved that this order be set aside. This motion was denied, the order of denial being incorporated into and made a part of the judgment appealed from.

[1] The position taken by the appellant is that the filing of the amended complaint did not open the default of the respondent entered upon the original complaint. He urges that the complaint was not amended in substance but in form only, and that it did not affect the default. It is the general rule, and one which is too well settled to be longer open to question, that when a complaint is amended in substance as distinguished from a mere matter of form it operates to open a default and must be served on all adverse parties affected, including the defaulting party. Gutleben v. Crossley, 13 Cal.App.2d 249, 56 P.2d 954;

Linott v. Rowland, 119 Cal. 452, 51 P. 687. As stated in Cole v. Roebling Construction Co., 156 Cal. 443, 105 P. 255, 257, "The reason for this rule is plain. A defendant is entitled to opportunity to be heard upon the allegations of the complaint on which judgment is sought against him. His default on the original complaint is limited in its effect to that complaint; and, if by amendment a matter of substance is added, he should be given the opportunity to contest the same before any judgment is given against him on account thereof."

In the instant case the plaintiff, in paragraph IV of his original complaint, set up certain conversations and complaints of the deceased boy with the defendants concerning the roughness of his playmates. In the amended pleading in lieu of these hearsay allegations he has alleged that he, the plaintiff, "advised defendants that the students at the aforesaid school indulged in very rough pursuits in the playgrounds thereof and that the older students very often inflicted injuries upon the younger students." In other respects the original and amended complaints are almost identical. While neither the demurrer, the motion to strike, nor the orders disposing of the same, directed to the original complaint, are included in the record on appeal, counsel for both the appellant and the respondent have proceeded in their briefs upon the theory that both the motion to strike and the general demurrer were directed to the hearsay allegations of paragraph IV, and that they were respectively granted and sustained. It is this change which plaintiff insists is not an amendment in a matter of substance but in form only.

[2-5] It was upon leave being granted to amend after the general demurrer to his complaint had been sustained that plaintiff filed his amended pleading. He made an election not to stand upon the allegations of his complaint as originally presented but availed himself of the opportunity granted to bind the defendant under a new complaint. The courts have declared on many occasions that when a party does not leave his pleading where the order sustaining the demurrer has left it, he waives any error on the part of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 25; Madden v. Occidental, etc., S. S. Co., 86 Cal. 445, 25 P. 5; Ganceart v. Henry, 98 Cal. 281, 33 P. 92; Brittan v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 112 Cal. 1, 44 P. 339. When he amended his complaint after the general demurrer was sustained he in effect admitted that the demurrer was good and that his complaint was insufficient to state a cause of action. As is stated in Home Real Estate Co. v. Winnants, 39 Cal.App. 643, 179 P. 534: "'But, when he takes leave to amend, he virtually asserts that he has not set up his whole case in his petition; and, although the judgment is that his petition does not show a cause of action, yet the leave to amend takes from the judgment that quality of finality which is necessary to make it an estoppel, and thus "sets the matter at large"'". Where, as here, a particular portion of a complaint is questioned upon a general demurrer and the demurrer is sustained, the plaintiff, if he abandons his original pleading and files an amendment correcting the questioned allegation, no longer is in a position to say that the original pleading was good as against the judgment sustaining the demurrer and that the court erred in its ruling. Upon the order sustaining the demurrer being made, the pleader has two avenues open to him. He may test the sufficiency of his pleading upon the judgment sustaining the demurrer, or he may accept the judgment that the complaint was not good and file an amendment. If he elects to pursue the latter course he impliedly confesses that the original pleading was not sufficient and that it should be corrected. Having made his election, he may not then claim the benefit of the original pleading and the amended one too. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., supra. As pointed out, it is alleged that the St. James School and the St. James Church were both operated under the direction of the Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco, and if the plaintiff is not in a position to claim that the amendment was not one of substance as to the one defendant, he is not as to the others.

[6-8] Not only did the filing of the amended complaint vacate the default of the defendant entered on December 11, 1935, but it superseded the original complaint which dropped out of the case and ceased to have any effect as a pleading or as a basis for a judgment. Collins v. Scott, 100 Cal. 446, 34 P. 1085; Linott v. Rowland, supra; Gutleben v. Crossley, supra. At the time the second default was entered on September 11, 1936, the original complaint had gone out of existence as such, and the amended complaint had not yet been served on the defendant. The second default stood as a nullity and was properly vacated by the trial court. Likewise the efficacy of the original complaint as a pleading having been destroyed by the filing of the amended complaint, no judgment could be based upon it. Only the amended complaint was left to plaintiff as a pleading upon which to base a judgment against the defendant, and in support of which pleading he declined to put in any evidence. The trial court properly refused to give judgment upon the original complaint, and was bound to render judgment for the defendant upon the refusal of the plaintiff to support his amended complaint with proof.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 431

McMAHAN et al. v. BARINGER.

Civ. 12762.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 30, 1942.

1. Judgment ⇐304, 340

The court has power to set aside judgments and orders inadvertently made which are not actually the result of the exercise of judgment, but it has no power, having once made its decision after regular submission, to set aside or amend judicial error, except under appropriate statutory procedure.

2. Judgment ⇐340

Where demurrer came on regularly for hearing and having been regularly submitted for decision, court made an order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend and entered judgment dismissing action, and there was no showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, clerical error, or that the judgment as signed did not express actual judicial intention of the court at time it was signed, trial court was without power to vacate the judgment and grant plaintiff permission to file an amended complaint. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Benjamin J. Scheinman, Judge.

Action in tort by Walter C. McMahan and others against Charlotte Baringer. From an order vacating a judgment entered on sustaining a demurrer to complaint without leave to amend, vacating the order sustaining the demurrer, and granting plaintiffs permission to file amended complaint, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Lasher B. Gallagher, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Pearlson & Singer, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

The appeal is from an order which (1) vacated a judgment that had been entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, and (2) vacated the order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend, and (3) granted plaintiffs permission to file an amended complaint.

Appellant contends that the court did not have authority to make the order. The contention is well taken.

Respondents filed a complaint in tort. Appellant filed a demurrer to the complaint. the demurrer came on regularly for hearing and, having been regularly submitted for decision, the court made an order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend and signed and entered a judgment which dismissed the action as to appellant. Two weeks thereafter plaintiffs served and filed a notice of motion to vacate the judgment and order, and for permission to file an amended complaint, a copy of which accompanied the notice. The motion was granted.

The notice did not state the grounds or papers upon which the motion would be based. No affidavits were filed. The only part of the record which indicates a theory upon which the motion was made is the citation, in the notice, of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There was no showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, clerical error, or that the judgment as signed did not express the actual judicial intention of the court at the time it was signed. The judgment was not void.

Apparently, in granting the motion, the court concluded it had made an error in the exercise of judgment.

[1, 2] While a court has power to set aside judgments and orders inadvertently made which are not actually the result of the exercise of judgment, it has no power, having once made its decision after regular submission, to set aside or amend judicial error except under appropriate statutory procedure. Bastajian v. Brown, 1941, 19 Cal.2d 209, 120 P.2d 9; Stevens v. Superior Court, 1936, 7 Cal.2d 110, 59 P.2d 988; Fisch & Co. v. Superior Court, 1935, 6 Cal. App.2d 21, 43 P.2d 855.

Respondents' contention that the case of Carter v. Shinsako, 42 Cal.App.2d 9, 108 P. 2d 27, is controlling cannot be sustained. The facts in that case were materially different from those in the present case. There it was established by affidavit in support of the motion that after the order sustaining the demurrer was made, and while proceedings for a modification of the order were pending, the judge inadvertently signed a judgment of dismissal.

The order is reversed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 491

DARSIE v. DARSIE.

Civ. 13190.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 3, 1942.

1. Divorce ⇐160

Where defendant in divorce action had answered original complaint and had entered into a property settlement and had stipulated that action could be set as a default matter, but thereafter plaintiff filed an amended complaint and defendant's default was duly entered upon such amended complaint, the statute limiting relief to prayer of the complaint where there is no answer was applicable. Code Civ.Proc. § 580.

2. Pleading ⇐252(2)

An amended complaint supersedes original complaint and thereafter original complaint performs no function as a "pleading".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Pleading".

3. Divorce ⇐104

Where amended complaint was filed by plaintiff in divorce action, it superseded the original complaint as a pleading, and defendant's acts with reference to original complaint could not be considered in determining his status with reference to the amended complaint.

4. Divorce ⇐160

Where defendant in divorce action answered original complaint but filed no answer to amended complaint, and it appeared that defendant's counsel was present in same courtroom on another matter at time of hearing on defendant's default and expressly declined to participate in the proceeding, defendant was not represented by counsel at hearing and his default was properly entered.

5. Divorce ⇐203

Where prayer of complaint in wife's divorce action failed to request alimony and husband's default was duly entered, trial court did not have power to make an award of alimony to wife, but such fact would not deprive court of power given it under statute to provide for maintenance of children and wife where divorce is granted for husband's offense. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 307, 580; Civ. Code § 139.

6. Divorce ⇐6½

A divorce action is in nature of an "action in equity".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Action in Equity".

7. Divorce ⇐203

The relief granted to a plaintiff in a divorce action, if no answer is filed, cannot exceed that which is demanded in the complaint. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 307, 580.

8. Courts ⇐90(1)

Courts are slow to interfere with a principle announced by a decision and may uphold it even though they would decide otherwise, were the question a new one.

HANSON, Justice pro tem., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Peirson M. Hall, Judge.

Action by Ruth B. P. Darsie against William Watters Darsie for divorce. From a default judgment awarding alimony, the defendant appeals.

Judgment modified and as so modified affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 118 P.2d 898.

Joe Raycraft, of San Pedro, for appellant.

Louis Lombardi and G. L. Funai, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From the portion of a judgment in an interlocutory decree of divorce awarding alimony to plaintiff, defendant appeals.

These are the essential facts:

Plaintiff filed a complaint for divorce from defendant to which defendant filed an answer and cross-complaint. Subsequently the parties executed a property settlement agreement and stipulated that plaintiff could file an amended complaint and that the clerk of the court be authorized to set the case for trial upon the amended complaint as a default matter.

An amended complaint was filed, the prayer of which read thus: "Wherefore, plaintiff prays that the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant be dissolved, and for such other and further relief as to the Court may seem just."

Thereafter the court entered defendant's default to the amended complaint. At the time of the hearing of the application for divorce defendant's counsel was present in the same courtroom where the matter was being heard in connection with another case, but declined to appear in the present action. Thereafter the trial judge entered an interlocutory judgment of divorce providing, among other things, that the defendant pay to plaintiff the sum of $5 per month as alimony until the further order of the court.

It is necessary for us to determine two questions, which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim.

[1-4] First: Does section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to a case where the defendant fails to answer an amended complaint and his default is duly entered upon such amended complaint, and where prior thereto defendant has answered the original complaint and has entered into a property settlement and stipulated that the action may be set as a default matter?

This question must be answered in the affirmative. The law is established in California that an amended complaint supersedes the original complaint and thereafter the original complaint performs no function as a pleading. (Bray v. Lowery, 163 Cal. 256, 260, 124 P. 1004; Collins v. Scott, 100 Cal. 446, 453, 34 P. 1085.) Therefore, since in the present case an amended complaint was filed by plaintiff, it superseded the original complaint as a pleading, and defendant's acts with reference to the original complaint may not be considered in determining his status with reference to the amended complaint. In the present case, since defendant did not answer or appear in response to the amended complaint, his default was properly entered. The fact that defendant's counsel was present in the same court on another matter at the time of the hearing on the default in the instant case and expressly declined to participate in the proceeding makes it clear that defendant was not represented by counsel at the time the order in question was made.

[5] Second: In an action for divorce, where the prayer of the complaint fails to request alimony and defendant's default is duly entered, is it error for the trial court to make an award of alimony to plaintiff?

The second question must likewise be answered in the affirmative, and is governed by the following rules:

[6] (1) A divorce action is in the nature of an action in equity. (Harron v. Harron, 123 Cal. 508, 509, 56 P. 334.)

(2) In California there is but one form of civil action for the enforcement of private rights or the redress of private wrongs. (Sec. 307, Code Civ.Proc.)

[7] (3) The relief granted to a plaintiff in a divorce action, if no answer be filed, cannot exceed that which is demanded in the complaint. (Sec. 580, Code Civ. Proc.; Bennett v. Bennett, 50 Cal.App. 48, 49, 194 P. 503; Lang v. Lang, 182 Cal. 765, 769, 190 P. 181; see Horton v. Horton, 18 Cal.2d 579, 116 P.2d 605.)

Applying the foregoing rules to the facts of the instant case, this being a divorce action it came under the equitable cognizance of the court. Since in California there is only one form of action, section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure was applicable; and as plaintiff had failed to apply for alimony in the prayer of the amended complaint, to which defendant's default was entered, it was error for the trial court to make an order awarding plaintiff alimony.

The foregoing conclusion does not deprive the court of the power given it under section 139 of the Civil Code to provide for the maintenance of children and the wife where a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband. Should the trial court be of the opinion that an award of alimony is proper in a case where a default has been entered to a complaint for divorce which fails to contain a prayer for alimony, the court may order that the default be set aside, the prayer of the complaint amended to demand alimony and that the complaint as amended be served upon the defendant. Or, the trial judge may issue an order to show cause, requiring defendant to appear and show cause why he should not be required to pay alimony for the support of his wife and/or children.

[8] The precise point presented in the instant case was decided by this court in the year 1920, in the case of Bennett v. Bennett, supra. That case has been accepted by the legal profession as the correct rule for over twenty-one years. A question once deliberately examined and decided should be considered as settled and closed to further argument. Courts are slow to interfere with a principle announced by a decision and may uphold it even though they would decide otherwise, were the question a new one. (See 15 C.J. (1918) 916, sec. 304; 21 C.J.S., Courts, § 187.)

A rule other than that announced in the Bennett case would require an attorney to advise his client in every divorce action to file an answer and be present at the hearing with witnesses so that his client might be protected from the whim or view of the trial judge at the time of the hearing of the application for divorce based on an incomplete presentation of the evidence; this even though the parties have entered into a property settlement which is fair and satisfactory to both of them. Such a rule would be contrary to section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure and reason. We cannot see wherein it would serve any useful purpose to depart from the law as now established in this jurisdiction.

In Parker v. Parker, 203 Cal. 787, at page 792, 266 P. 283, at page 285, Mr. Justice Shenk, after citing Bennett v. Bennett, supra, says: "None of the cases relied upon go to the length of holding that the granting of relief in excess of that demanded by the complaint renders the judgment void on its face. They do however, uniformly hold that the granting of such excessive relief is erroneous, from which relief may be granted under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure or which may be corrected by appeal, either by a reversal or by a modification of the judgment, neither of which courses was pursued by the defendant in this case."

See, also, Wallace v. Wallace, 111 Cal. App. 500, 506, 295 P. 1061, where Bennett v. Bennett is cited and approved.

For the foregoing reasons the decree is modified by striking therefrom the following: "the defendant shall until further order of court pay to the plaintiff the sum of Five Dollars per month, payable on the first day of each month, commencing with the first day of May, 1941." Otherwise it is affirmed, defendant (appellant) to recover his costs on appeal.

W. J. WOOD, Acting P. J., concurred.

HANSON, Justice pro tem. (dissenting).

On rehearing the court recedes from the view it expressed in its former opinion in this case, reported in 47 Cal.App.2d —, 118 P.2d 898. The present opinion does not attempt to challenge the view there expressed. Instead, the decision is rested largely on the fact that as the procedural rule announced in the case of Bennett v. Bennett has been on the books for twenty years it should be followed because the profession has accepted it as the correct rule ever since. I do not know upon what data this assertion is made, but assuming its correctness the fact nevertheless is, as I pointed out in our original opinion, that alimony or support money has been awarded since the days of the Ecclesiastical courts not on issue joined but as an incident of divorce. The case turns on that point and that alone, and the majority opinion does not meet it. Accordingly, while I am reluctant to disagree with my associates I have here no other alternative.

49 Cal.App.2d 599

OGLE, County Counsel, v. ECKEL, County Auditor.

Civ. 2971.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 9, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 8, 1942.

1. Statutes ⇐93(9)

The office of county counsel, as intended to be created under statute authorizing the board of supervisors in counties having a population of 100,000 or more to appoint a county counsel, is a "county office" within constitutional provision prohibiting Legislature from passing local or special laws creating offices or prescribing powers and duties of officers in counties. Pol.Code, § 4041.12a, as added by St.1941, p. 2075, § 2; Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 28.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "County Office".

2. Statutes ⇐93(9)

The statute authorizing the board of supervisors in counties having a population of 100,000 or more to appoint a county counsel is not a "local" or "special law" within constitutional provision prohibiting Legislature from passing local or special laws creating offices or prescribing powers and duties of officers in counties but it is a "general" or "uniform law". Pol.Code, § 4041.12a, as added by St.1941, p. 2075, § 2; Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 28.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "General Law", "Local Law", "Special Law", and "Uniform Law".

3. Statutes ⇐93(9)

The mere fact that the statute relating to the office of county counsel provides that in counties having a population of 100,000 or more the board of supervisors may appoint a county counsel does not necessarily classify such counties in violation of constitutional amendments and thereby cause the statute to become a "local" or "special law" as opposed to a "general" or "uniform law". Pol.Code, § 4041.12a, as added by St.1941, p. 2075, § 2.

4. Statutes ⇐93(9)

The Legislature may classify counties according to population for the purpose specified in the statute authorizing the board of supervisors in counties having a population of 100,000 or more to appoint a county counsel, and, such classification being permissible, the statute in its operation and effect applies equally and uniformly to all persons and things falling within the designated class. Pol.Code, § 4041.12a, as added by St.1941, p. 2075, § 2; Const. art. 11, § 5.

5. District and prosecuting attorneys ⇐2(1)

Under constitutional provision that the Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for election or appointment of certain county officers and such other county officers as public convenience may require, the Legislature had authority to provide for appointment of county counsels in counties having a population of 100,000 or more and to prescribe the duties of the office and fix the term thereof. Pol.Code, § 4041.12a as added by St.1941, p. 2075, § 2; Const. art. 11, § 5.

6. Constitutional law ⇐63(3)

The state may, through its Legislature, and in the exercise of its sovereign power and will, in all cases where the people have not restricted or qualified such exercise of that power, apportion and delegate to counties any of the functions which belong to it.

7. Constitutional law ⇐66

A statute may be conditional and its taking effect may be made to depend upon some subsequent event, and affirmative legislation may, in some cases, be adopted, of which the parties interested are at liberty to avail themselves or not, at their option.

8. Constitutional law ⇐66
District and prosecuting attorneys ⇐2(1)

The Legislature had power to provide in the statute authorizing the board of supervisors in counties having a population of 100,000 or more to appoint a county counsel that counties might come within or remain without the provisions of the statute, as the board of supervisors of the respective counties might determine. Pol.Code, § 4041.12a. as added by St.1941, p. 2075, § 2.

9. Constitutional law ⇐63(3)
District and prosecuting attorneys ⇐2(1)

The statute authorizing the board of supervisors in counties having a population of 100,000 or more to appoint a county counsel is not unconstitutional as delegating to boards of supervisors power which is granted to Legislature under constitutional provision that Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for election or appointment of certain county officers and such other county officers as public convenience may require. Pol.Code, § 4041.12a, as added by St.1941, p. 2075, § 2; Const. art. 11, § 5.

Original mandamus proceedings by Joel E. Ogle, as County Counselor, etc., against L. H. Eckel, as County Auditor, etc., to compel respondent to draw a warrant in favor of petitioner for services rendered by petitioner to Orange County as county counsel.

Writ issued.

Joel E. Ogle, of Santa Ana, in pro. per., and Earl Redwine, of Riverside, for petitioner.

George F. Holden, Dist. Atty., S. B. Kaufman, and Theodore R. Coomber, all of Anaheim, for respondent.

L. E. GRIFFIN, Justice.

Petitioner, as County Counsel of Orange County, seeks a writ of mandate directed to respondent as Auditor of Orange County requiring him to draw his warrant in favor of petitioner in the sum of $285.70, as and for compensation claimed to be due petitioner for services rendered to Orange County as County Counsel thereof from October 17, 1941, to November 3, 1941.

Petitioner alleges in the petition (1) that the position of County Counsel of Orange County was created and given certain powers dependent on action of the county board of supervisors pursuant to and in compliance with the provisions of chapter 618 of the Statutes of 1941, p. 2074. (2) That pursuant to section 2 thereof the board of supervisors of that county, which county has a population of more than 100,000 inhabitants, did on September 16, 1941, adopt an ordinance which by section 57c thereof fixed his monthly compensation; that this ordinance is now in effect; that on September 16, 1941, petitioner was appointed County Counsel by resolution of the board of supervisors effective October 17, 1941; that respondent is the Auditor of Orange County; that petitioner demanded that respondent draw and deliver his warrant for the sum above mentioned; that sufficient funds are available for such purposes; that respondent refused to draw the warrant "because of the fact that said respondent entertained some doubt as to the constitutionality of chapter 618 of the statutes of 1941" and "* * * that section 4041.12a of the Political Code is in violation of article XI, section 5, and article IV, section 25, subsection 28, of the Constitution of the State of California * * *"; that a writ should be issued because on the validity of section 2, of chapter 618, page 2074 of the Statutes of 1941, depends the orderly administration of the county government of the county of Orange for the reason that many and various duties heretofore required to be done by the District Attorney of Orange County are now by statute required to be done by the County Counsel of the county of Orange; and that all of the more populous counties falling within the provisions of this chapter will be confronted with the same problems and difficulties regarding the orderly administration of county government as are now confronted by that county.

Respondent demurred to the petition on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. No other appearance was filed. Respondent did not desire to file an answer. The facts set forth in the petition therefore stand undenied. Respondent now contends that section 4041.12a of the Political Code and the ordinance of the county of Orange creating the office of County Counsel are null and void as being in violation of article XI, section 5, and article IV, section 25, subdivision twenty-eighth of the Constitution.

Section 4041.12a of the Political Code provides in substance that in counties having a population of 100,000 or more, the board of supervisors may appoint a county counsel, and said section further provides that the county counsel shall perform all duties required by law of the district attorney, except the duties of public prosecutor. It further provides that the county counsel shall be appointed for a period of four years and until his successor is appointed. It is now argued that under the constitutional provisions above mentioned the legislature had no power to classify counties except for the purpose of fixing the compensation of officers, and that any attempt by the legislature to classify the counties for the purpose of creating an office that is not uniformly established throughout all the counties is null and void, citing Rauer v. Williams, 118 Cal. 401, 50 P. 691; San Francisco v. Broderick, 125 Cal. 188, 57 P. 887; Galvin v. Board of Supervisors, 195 Cal. 686, 235 P. 450; Sanchez v. Fordyce, 141 Cal. 427, 75 P. 56; Payne v. Murphy, 18 Cal.App. 446, 123 P. 350; Pratt v. Browne, 135 Cal. 649, 67 P. 1082; Welsh v. Bramlet, 98 Cal. 219, 33 P. 66. In other words, it is argued that any laws creating a county office or regulating the duties of a county officer, in order to be general and uniform, must be applicable to all of the counties in the state; that section 4041.12a of the Political Code delegates the authority to the board of supervisors of each county having a population of 100,000 or more to appoint a county counsel and that under article XI, section 5 of the Constitution the powers granted to the legislature in that section cannot be delegated to the board of supervisors, citing Arnold v. Sullenger, 200 Cal. 632, 254 P. 267; Coulter v. Pool, 187 Cal. 181, 201 P. 120; People v. Wheeler, 136 Cal. 652, 69 P. 435.

[1] The office of county counsel, as here intended to be created and classified by the duties and functions to be performed, is a county office within the meaning of article IV, section 25, subdivision twenty-eighth. Coulter v. Pool, supra. Under article XI, section 5, the legislature, by general and uniform laws, is empowered to provide for the appointment, in the several counties, of such county officer, if public convenience may require, prescribe the duties thereof, and fix the term of office. The board of supervisors of each respective county is authorized to regulate the compensation. The purpose of the constitutional provision requiring that laws throughout the state, affecting municipal corporations, be uniform in character, arose as a design of the framers of the Constitution to prevent, on the part of the legislature, a practice theretofore permissible, of singling out a particular town or city, and passing legislation directly affecting it and no other. It was believed that the exercise of this power by the legislature led to abuses, and that a constitutional provision relieving cities from this particular form of legislative control and preserving to them their autonomy unimpaired except by general legislative action, would better subserve the purposes of good government. In the case of counties, the Constitution then permitted a classification by population only for the purpose of fixing the compensation of officers, and strictly insisted that the system of county governments should be uniform throughout the state and that the duties of the officers recognized by this system should likewise be prescribed by general and uniform law. Const., art. XI, sec. 4 [now repealed]; art. XI, sec. 5; Rauer v. Williams, supra. The provisions of the Constitution were much broader in respect to the right of the legislature to classify cities and towns than they were respecting counties, because cities containing a large population required different legislation from those composed of a few hundred inhabitants. Rauer v. Williams, supra. If the act creating the county office here involved is classified as a local or special law, then that act is in violation of article IV, section 25, subdivision twenty-eighth of the Constitution and void.

[2, 3] The question then presented is whether this act may be classified as a local or special law. We think not. Article XI, section 4, prior to its repeal on June 27, 1933, provided in part that "The legislature shall establish a system of county governments, which shall be uniform throughout the state * * *." The original section, article XI, section 5, read in part that "The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors * * * and such other county * * * officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties, and fix their terms of office. It shall regulate the compensation of all such officers, in proportion to duties, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population * * *." The 1908 amendment to this section only added an additional provision in reference to grand and trial jurors. The 1928 amendment contained the same provision that the counties may be classified for the purpose of regulating the compensation of officers. The 1933 amendment was enacted, as above mentioned, but in respect to the provision in reference to classification of counties by the legislature provided that "It shall regulate the compensation of boards of supervisors, district attorneys and of auditors in the respective counties and for this purpose may classify the counties by population." The boards of supervisors in the respective counties, under the new amendment of 1933, regulate the compensation of all officers in said counties other than the boards of supervisors, district attorneys, auditors and judges of the municipal courts. The legislature (Chap. 643, Stats.1933, p. 1674) adopted a new section (4056d) to the Political Code in conformity with the constitutional provision as adopted. The authority of the legislature to establish the office of county counsel in the several counties under the 1933 constitutional amendment, if public convenience may require, from the very wording of the act must be conceded. We do not understand that merely because section 4041.12a of the Political Code provides that in counties having a population of 100,000 or more, the board of supervisors may appoint a county counsel, necessarily classifies such county in violation of any constitutional amendment and thereby causes that section to become a local or special law as opposed to a general or uniform law.

[4] In the early case of Sanchez v. Fordyce, 141 Cal. 427, 75 P. 56, the court held, under the county government act of 1901, that the provision "in townships having a population [of] less than six thousand there shall be but one justice of the peace and one constable" was constitutional. The court said that if they were to adopt a rule which would not allow the classification according to population, we would destroy the power of the legislature to classify counties, the power to classify school districts in proportion to population for the purpose of assigning teachers, and the power to make many other provisions which the public convenience may require. It will be noticed that there was considerable change made in 1933 in article XI, section 5, of the Constitution compared to the original section and the previous amendments thereto. The decisions cited by respondent under the original provision and previous amendments thereto are therefore not applicable as a true guide in the construction of the 1933 amendment. The legislative history or argument advanced to the people as a reason for the adoption of the 1933 amendment is enlightening. It is therein stated that it was the purpose of the proposed constitutional amendment to vest more power in the board of supervisors and to make the government of the county more responsible to local demands. All of the cases cited by respondent were decided prior to the repeal in 1933 of article XI, section 4 of the Constitution. This was the prohibitive section and contemplated and commanded a uniform system of county government. Martin v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 93, 105, 227 P. 762. This left section 5 of article XI, which merely states that the legislature "may" classify counties for the purpose of fixing the compensation of certain designated officers. Prior to 1933, section 4 of article XI provided that "the legislature shall establish a system of county governments, which shall be uniform throughout the state * * *." This in effect practically prohibited the classification of counties for any purpose. However, an exception was stated in the succeeding section (article XI, section 5) wherein authority was granted to classify for the purpose of fixing compensation. The legislature, therefore, since the adoption of the 1933 amendment and the repeal of article XI, section 4, may now classify counties according to population for the purpose specified in the act here involved. This question was presented and similarly discussed by our own Supreme Court in Consolidated Printing & Publishing Co. v. Allen, 18 Cal.2d 63, 112 P.2d 884. This classification being permissible, it is not and cannot be denied that the law purports to and undoubtedly does, in its operation and effect, apply equally and uniformly to all persons and things falling within the designated class. Martin v. Superior Court, supra.

[5] As to the question of the legislature delegating the authority to the board of supervisors to appoint a county counsel, it seems clear from the constitutional provision as amended in 1933, that the legislature has the authority to provide for the appointment and prescribe the duties of the office and fix the term thereof. The Constitution does not designate that the legislature shall make the appointment but only requires it to provide for the appointment. The power to fix the compensation of such an officer by the board of supervisors has been directly given to the board of supervisors by the provisions of the act itself.

[6-9] The state may, through its legislature, and in the exercise of its sovereign power and will, in all cases where the people themselves have not restricted or qualified such exercise of that power, apportion and delegate to the counties any of the functions which belong to it. Watson v. Greely, 67 Cal.App. 328, 227 P. 664; Scott v. Boyle, 164 Cal. 321, 128 P. 941; Barton v. Kalloch et al., 56 Cal. 95, 110; Ryan v. Riley, 65 Cal.App. 181, 223 P. 1027. A statute may be conditional and its taking effect may be made to depend upon some subsequent event. Affirmative legislation may, in some cases, be adopted, of which the parties interested are at liberty to avail themselves or not, at their option. The legislature had the power to provide, in the act under consideration, that counties might come within or remain without the provisions of the act, as the board of supervisors of the respective counties might determine. Davis v. County of Los Angeles, 12 Cal.2d 412, 84 P.2d 1034; Board of Law Library Trustees of Orange County v. Board of Supervisors, 99 Cal. 571, 573, 34 P. 244. This principle has been followed in the late case of Housing Authority of the County of Los Angeles v. Dockweiler, 14 Cal.2d 437, 446, 94 P.2d 794. There is no merit to respondent's second contention.

For the reasons expressed, the writ should issue and it is so ordered.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 542

CONNELL v. BOWES et al.

Civ. 12012.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 6, 1942.

1. Venue ⇐43

The right to a change of venue is generally determined by the allegations of the complaint and the condition of things at the time the parties claiming the change first appear in the action.

2. Venue ⇐43

A second motion for a change of venue should be discouraged, if the complaint and the conditions remain unchanged. Code Civ. Proc. § 396.

3. Venue ⇐72

Where a change of venue of action to compel specific performance of a contract to sell shares of corporate stock was sought on the ground that defendants resided in the county to which change was sought and that contract was entered into and to be performed in that county, the court had the right to inspect the allegations of the complaint to determine whether jurisdiction was in the county wherein the action was filed.

4. Venue ⇐70

In action to compel specific performance of contract to sell shares of corporate stock, where complaint alleged that contract was in writing, was entered into in the county of suit, and provided for delivery of stock upon the payment of specified sum, and that plaintiff had tendered the purchase price in the county of suit, but defendants had failed to deliver stock, a denial of defendants' motion for change of venue, supported by affidavit alleging that defendants were residents of another county and that contract was entered into and to be performed in such other county, would have been proper.

5. Venue ⇐67

Where order denying defendants' first motion for change of venue had become final, an amendment to the original affidavit of merits could not be considered on their second motion for change of venue until the order of denial of the first motion had been set aside. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 396, 473.

6. Appeal and error ⇐965

Where allegations of complaint, showing that venue was properly laid in the county of suit, were denied by affidavit of merits filed in support of defendants' motion for change of venue to another county in which they allegedly resided and in which contract sued on allegedly was entered into and to be performed, trial court's finding on such conflicting allegations would not be disturbed except for an abuse of the discretion.

7. Venue ⇐43

In action for specific performance of contract to sell shares of corporate stock, where complaint alleged that contract in writing was entered into in the county of suit and that plaintiff had tendered the purchase price in such county but defendants had refused to deliver the stock, after an order denying the motion for change of venue to county of defendants' alleged residence had become final, court did not abuse its discretion in denying a second motion for change of venue based on an additional ground, and in refusing to set aside denial of the first motion, and to permit defendants to file an amended affidavit of merits. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 396, 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; S. Victor Wagler, Judge.

Action by James P. Connell against E. L. Bowes and others for the specific performance of a contract for the sale by defendants of 2,500 shares of the stock of a hotel corporation. From an order denying defendants' motion for a change of venue, and an order denying their application for an order, pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, setting aside an order, which had become final, denying their first motion for change of venue, permitting the filing of amended affidavit of facts thereon, and restoring such motion to the calendar, defendants appeal.

Orders affirmed.

Charles A. Christin and T. J. Keegan, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

James R. Agee and Harold C. Holmes, Jr., both of Oakland, for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

Appeal by defendants from two orders—one denying their motion for a change of venue, and the other denying an application for relief under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The action is one to compel the specific performance of an alleged contract for the sale by defendants Bowes of 2,500 shares of the stock of defendant hotel corporation to plaintiff. The complaint alleges that the contract is in writing, was entered into in Alameda County and provides for the delivery of the stock upon the payment of a specified sum on or before January 2, 1945; that on the 25th day of July, 1940, in the county of Alameda plaintiff tendered the purchase price, but defendants failed and refused to deliver the stock. Appellants filed a demurrer and notice of motion for change of venue, accompanied by affidavit, averring the residence of all the defendants in the City and County of San Francisco. No reference was made in the motion or in the supporting affidavit to the allegation in the complaint that the contract was entered into in the county of Alameda. The motion was denied. No appeal was taken from the order, which has become final. Subsequently defendants filed a second motion for change of venue to the City and County of San Francisco, also based upon the residence of defendants therein; in addition they averred that the contract was entered into, and to be performed, in said city and county; they denied the allegation in the complaint that it was entered into, or to be performed, in the county of Alameda. The second motion was timely and the supporting affidavit set forth the original and a new statement of facts.

[1, 2] The right to a change of venue is generally determined by the allegations of the complaint and the condition of things at the time the parties claiming the change first appear in the action. Remington S. M. Co. v. Cole, 62 Cal. 311; Story v. Christin, 137 Cal.App. 484, 30 P.2d 1016. A second motion for a change of venue should be discouraged if the complaint and the conditions remain unchanged. McNeill & Co. v. Doe, 163 Cal. 338, 125 P. 345; Code Civ.Proc. sec. 396. It was never contemplated that determination of the merits of an action should be delayed by repetition of a motion for change of venue when it appears that the second motion is based upon a ground that could have been presented upon the first motion.

[3, 4] The new state of facts set forth in the second motion related to the claim of defendants that the contract was to be performed in the City and County of San Francisco. In considering such motion the court would have the right to inspect the allegations of the complaint to determine whether jurisdiction was in the county wherein the action was filed. Sheeley v. Jones, 192 Cal. 256, 219 P. 744; Turlock Theatre Co. v. Laws, 12 Cal.2d 573, 86 P.2d 345, 120 A.L.R. 786. An inspection demonstrates that a denial of the second motion could have been sustained upon the record.

The second motion was accompanied by an application for relief under section 473, Code Civ.Proc., i.e., an order setting aside the denial of the first motion for change of venue, permitting defendants to file an amended affidavit of merits thereon, and restoring such motion to the court's calendar, upon the ground of excusable neglect, inadvertence and surprise, based upon an affidavit that the defendants' attorney had misunderstood statements of his clients relative to the county wherein the contract had been entered into. It appears from appellants' brief that two contracts had been entered into, one in Alameda County and one in the City and County of San Francisco.

[5] Appellants call attention to Palmer & Rey v. Barclay, 92 Cal. 199, 28 P. 226, and Jaques v. Owens, 18 Cal.App. 114, 122

P. 430, in support of their theory that the original affidavit of merits could have been amended. Amendments to affidavits of merit were allowed in the cases cited, but before an order made denying the motion for change of venue. In the present proceeding an amendment to the original affidavit of merits could not be considered on the second motion for change of venue until the order of denial of the first had been set aside.

[6, 7] The court in its discretion had a right to weigh the statements in the second affidavit against the allegations of the complaint, and its finding will not be disturbed unless an abuse of such discretion appears. Under all of the circumstances as they appear in the record, the decision of the trial court is conclusive.

The order of August 12, 1940, denying defendants' second motion for change of venue, and that made and entered on the same day denying relief under the provisions of section 473 are and each of them is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 516

BELYEW v. UNITED PARCEL SERVICE OF OAKLAND et al. (CITY OF OAKLAND, Intervener).

Civ. 11722.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 5, 1942.

1. New trial ⇐75(1)

Under Code provision, power to grant a motion for new trial because of inadequacy of damages awarded is not limited to those cases in which amount awarded is so inadequate that it shocks the conscience and raises an inference of passion or prejudice of the jury, but new trial may be granted if it clearly appears to the trial court from the evidence believed by it that the damages awarded were inadequate. Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 6.

2. Appeal and error ⇐979(5)

On appeal from an order granting a new trial because of inadequacy of damages awarded, only question for review is whether trial court abused its discretion in determining that the damages awarded were inadequate. Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 6.

3. Damages ⇐132(3)
New trial ⇐75(4)

Award of $2,460 to 43 year old policeman who sustained injury to upper spinal region and who was required to wear a cast for the purpose of pushing his chin up and out in order to stretch his neck, and who approximately 15 months after the accident was still disabled, was inadequate and warranted granting of a new trial. Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 6.

4. Damages ⇐135
New trial ⇐75(4)

In action for injuries sustained by policeman wherein city intervened, an award of $3,702.63 which was the exact amount expended by city for wages paid to policeman, for medical and hospital fees paid, for services to the policeman, and for repairs to automobile, and which did not cover any allowance for further treatment of the policeman or for wages during any further period of disability, was inadequate and warranted the granting of a new trial. Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 6.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action for injuries by Hal A. Belyew against United Parcel Service of Oakland, a corporation, and others wherein the City of Oakland intervened. Verdict for the plaintiff and intervener, and from an order granting them a new trial because of inadequacy of damages awarded, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Hoge, Pelton & Gunther and A. Dal Thomson, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Nathan Goldwater and Leo Murcell, both of Oakland, for plaintiff and respondent.

F. Bert Fernhoff, City Atty., and John W. Collier, Asst. City Atty., both of Oakland, for intervener and respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff, a sergeant of police employed by the city of Oakland, sought damages for injuries sustained by him in an accident alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendants. The city of Oakland filed its complaint in intervention seeking the damages which it had sustained by reason of said accident. A jury trial was had and a verdict was returned awarding damages to plaintiff in the sum of $2,460 and awarding damages to plaintiff in intervention in the sum of $3,702.63. Both plaintiff and plaintiff in intervention were dissatisfied with the amounts awarded. Both made motions for a new trial and an order was made by the trial court granting said motions "upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdicts rendered in the above entitled action." Defendants appeal from said order.

At the opening of the trial, defendants admitted liability and no question of liability is presented on this appeal. The briefs of the parties are devoted entirely to a discussion of the extent of the damages suffered and a discussion of the question of the propriety or impropriety of the trial court's order granting a new trial because of the alleged inadequacy of the damages awarded.

[1, 2] At the outset, it should be stated that when a trial court grants a motion for a new trial because of the inadequacy of the damages awarded, it acts upon the broad ground of the "Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict" (Code of Civil Procedure, section 657, subd. 6), and its power to grant such motion is not limited to those cases in which the amount awarded is so inadequate that it shocks the conscience and raises an inference of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. Hoffart v. Honig, 41 Cal.App.2d 271, 106 P.2d 630; Hoffmann v. Lane, 11 Cal.App. 2d 655, 54 P.2d 477; Peri v. Culley, 119 Cal. App. 117, 6 P.2d 86. On the contrary, it is the duty of the trial court in considering such motion to weigh the evidence, to exercise its independent judgment and to grant a new trial if it clearly appears to the trial court from the evidence believed by it that the damages awarded were inadequate. Peri v. Culley, supra; see also Fisher v. Zimmerman, 23 Cal.App.2d 696, 73 P.2d 1243; Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 P. 337. If the motion is granted, the only question presented on an appeal from the order granting such motion is the question of whether the trial court abused its discretion in determining that the damages awarded were inadequate. Sanford v. Wilcox, 13 Cal.App.2d 193, 56 P.2d 548.

Defendants' argument in support of their contention that the order should be reversed is based upon the premises that plaintiff's injuries were slight; that plaintiff was a malingerer; that he recovered sufficiently so that he might have returned to work long before the trial; that his failure to return to work constituted a "deliberate endeavor to make his injury appear more serious"; and that his continued absence from his duties was wholly unjustified. While there was some conflict in the evidence relating to the nature and extent of plaintiff's inquiries, the evidence most favorable to plaintiff shows that none of said premises adopted by defendants can be accepted by this court on this appeal from the order granting a new trial.

Prior to the time that the accident occurred, plaintiff was a healthy, able-bodied man of the age of 43 years. He was injured on August 10, 1939. He had stopped his car at an intersection awaiting the change of traffic signals. While his car was so standing, it was struck violently from the rear by the truck of the defendants. The force of the impact violently snapped his head back and his main injury was an injury to the upper spinal region. The exact nature of this injury was difficult to ascertain because of the difficulty encountered in obtaining satisfactory X-ray pictures in that region. As the immediate result of the impact, plaintiff was dazed; he experienced great pain all along the spine and particularly across the back of the neck and across the shoulders; and he temporarily lost control of his arms and experienced a tingling sensation and numbness in his arms. He was taken to the hospital in an ambulance and he remained there for 21 days. Boards were placed under his body and traction was applied to stretch his neck by attaching apparatus under his chin and applying a fifteen-pound weight over a pulley. He was forced to lie flat on his back for eighteen days in traction, during which time he suffered great pain and was unable to get much sleep. Thereafter a large cast was applied for the purpose of pushing his chin up and out in order to stretch the neck. He insisted on going home but he carried the cast for a month and thereafter he wore a steel brace for many months and until shortly before the trial.

Treatments continued two or three times per week after plaintiff left the hospital, including stretching treatments, manipulation of the head and stretching of the spine, which treatments were very painful. There were approximately sixty such treatments as well as deep massage and heat treatments. In the early part of 1940, the doctors advised occupational therapy and he attempted to return to work. This attempt lasted but 2½ days and he was unable to continue. He was in a very nervous condition, and the doctors advised plaintiff to go away. He did so and did engage in light work assisting the carpenters around the house in order to tone up his muscles.

The trial was held approximately fifteen months after the accident. He was still disabled and expressed a willingness to undergo any treatment to get relief, including the recommended Skeletal treatment. At that time, his head was still forced into such a position that it was held toward his right shoulder with his chin pointed toward the left. He could not turn his head to the left beyond the mid line. Plaintiff testified that at that time his legs and arms were as good as ever, except for a numbness in the inner arm, but that in attempting to raise his right arm above his shoulder, a catch came in his neck; that he still experienced almost continuous pain and had not been relieved of pain since the accident; that he suffered pain at night and had not averaged four hours' sleep a night in fifteen months; that he had a continuous ringing through his head and a continuous pain at the base of his skull; that he also suffered pain through his spine at the level of the bottom of his arm pits; that any motion of his head was very painful; and that when he was able to get to sleep, any rolling over caused such pain and shock that he was awakened.

The doctors who had treated plaintiff substantiated the foregoing testimony and described in detail their findings and treatment. They described plaintiff's main injury as a sprain of the cervical spine of considerable severity, evidenced by muscle spasm and marked edema. It was suspected that there had been some fracture or dislocation and numerous X-rays were taken. The doctors had never been able to determine definitely whether there was such fracture or dislocation because the region of the spine affected was an exceedingly difficult region in which to take X-rays. It appeared that the failure of plaintiff's injuries to respond more rapidly to the treatment given indicated that Skeletal treatment should be applied. This treatment involves traction applied by the use of calipers with very sharp points inserted in the outer table of the skull. In plaintiff's case the recommended treatment would involve about four weeks of hospitalization and about four or five months' treatment thereafter. The doctors did not feel absolutely certain that this treatment would bring plaintiff back to normal but they apparently felt reasonably certain and felt that plaintiff could return to work in about six to eight months after the commencement of such treatment.

[3, 4] We believe that the foregoing summary of the evidence is sufficient to show that plaintiff suffered a severe, painful and disabling injury which had not responded well to the treatment given; that further treatment was required to restore plaintiff to normal; and that even with such further treatment there still remained some doubt concerning the results thereof. As above stated, the award made to plaintiff himself was in the sum of $2,460. The award made in favor of plaintiff in intervention was $3,702.63. The last-mentioned amount covered the exact amount expended by plaintiff in intervention up to the time of trial for wages paid to plaintiff, for medical and hospital fees paid for services to plaintiff, and for repairs to its automobile. It did not cover any allowance for further treatment of plaintiff or for wages during any further period of disability. We believe it is clear from what has been said that this court may not hold that the trial court abused its discretion in determining that the damages awarded were inadequate.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 597

PEOPLE v. PASCUA DEL PRADO.

Cr. 3538.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 9, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

If circumstances shown in evidence reasonably justify finding of court, trying criminal case without jury, that defendant was guilty of crime charged, reviewing court's opinion that such circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with defendant's innocence will not justify reversal of judgment of conviction.

2. Robbery ⇐24(1)

Evidence held sufficient to sustain judgment of conviction for second-degree robbery.

3. Criminal law ⇐938(1)

Whether motion for new trial after judgment of conviction for crime should be granted on ground of newly discovered evidence is within trial court's discretion on issues whether due diligence was exercised and whether different decision would be reasonably probable on presentation of new evidence.

4. Criminal law ⇐1156(3)

To justify reviewing court in disturbing trial court's findings, on hearing of convicted defendant's motion for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence, as to whether due diligence was exercised and different decision would be reasonably probable on presentation of new evidence, clear and unmistakable abuse of discretion must be shown.

5. Criminal law ⇐938(3)

Where convicted defendant knew, at time of his trial for robbery, that another man was awaiting trial for participating in same robbery, but failed to present him as witness for defense, order denying defendant's motion for new trial on ground of newly discovered testimony of such other accused, who was acquitted, must be affirmed, in absence of showing of clear and unmistakable abuse of trial court's discretion in finding that due diligence was not exercised and that different decision was not reasonably probable on presentation of new evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward R. Brand, Judge.

Tony Pascua Del Prado was convicted of robbery in the second degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

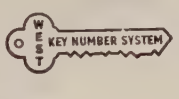
Arthur F. Larrabee, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was found guilty of the crime of robbery in the second degree at a trial by the court without a jury. He has appealed from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] It is contended that the evidence is insufficient to establish that the crime of robbery was committed and that defendant participated therein. The complaining witness, Agapito Fortuno, a Filipino chauffeur, testified that he was returning from his work in Beverly Hills on the night of May 15, 1941. On arriving at the neighborhood of his home on North Fremont Street in Los Angeles he was accosted by another Filipino, with whom he was not acquainted. This Filipino asked the witness if he "wanted a girl." Upon a negative answer by the witness the other Filipino struck him with his fist and a fight ensued. Three other Filipinos, none of whom was an acquaintance of the witness, joined in the attack upon Fortuno. The defendant was identified as one of these assailants by Fortuno, who testified that "he was grabbing me by the waist and trying to grab my wallet." In the struggle Fortuno was struck with a blunt instrument and became unconscious. When he regained consciousness he complained to police officers in the vicinity, who took him to the Central police station and later to his home. The next morning Fortuno discovered that the sum of $30 had been taken from his wallet.



If the circumstances shown in evidence reasonably justify the finding of the trial court, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not justify a reversal of the judgment. People v. Newland, 15 Cal. 2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778; People v. Tedesco, 1 Cal.2d 211, 219, 34 P.2d 467.

Measured by this rule the evidence is sufficient to sustain the judgment of the trial court.

[3-5] In support of his motion for a new trial defendant filed affidavits by his attorney and by one Velasquez, who had been charged with participation in the robbery and who had been acquitted. Although defendant knew at the time of his own trial that Velasquez was awaiting trial for participating in the same robbery, he nevertheless failed to present him as a witness for the defense. The question whether a motion for a new trial should be granted is within the discretion of the trial court as to the issue whether due diligence has been exercised and as to the issue whether a different decision would be reasonably probable upon the presentation of the new evidence. A clear and unmistakable abuse of discretion must be shown before a reviewing court would be justified in disturbing the findings of the trial court. No such showing has been made. People v. Loveless, 140 Cal.App. 291, 294, 35 P.2d 574.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 576

PEOPLE v. ROBINSON.

Cr. 3516.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 9, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

Reviewing court cannot substitute its judgment on the facts for that of the jury or trial court, and, before the verdict or judgment of trial court can be set aside on appeal on ground of insufficiency of the evidence, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trial court.

2. Criminal law ⇐553

In prosecution for robbery heard by court without a jury, trial court was authorized to reject accused's version of robbery and accept as true the testimony of the complaining witness and other evidence of the prosecution, and therefrom to draw an inference of accused's guilt. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1847, 2061.

3. Robbery ⇐24(1)

Evidence sustained conviction of robbery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence L. Kincaid, Judge.

Maurice Robinson was convicted of robbery, and he appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial.

Affirmed.

R. E. O'Neill, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

To an information accusing him of the crime of robbery defendant entered a plea of not guilty and admitted, as charged, that he had suffered a prior conviction of a felony. After trial before the court, a jury having been waived, defendant was found guilty of robbery in the second degree. From the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial he prosecutes this appeal, urging, as his sole ground for reversal, that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment.

From the evidence adduced by the prosecution, it appears that on the evening of April 21, 1941, at or near midnight, the complaining witness, James H. Staples, and a party of friends, went to a night club on Central Avenue in Los Angeles, where they met the defendant, who said he was the head waiter and would get them a table. The party ordered Coca Colas, and Staples had a bottle of whiskey which he passed around. The defendant was seated at or near the table of Staples' party. About one o'clock defendant appeared to be sick, and asked Staples to take him out so that he could get some fresh air. After they got outside and walked around the corner, defendant asked Staples how much money he had, and Staples replied that he did not have any. Then, according to Staples testimony, defendant "made a pass" at him, and reached over and put his hand in Staples' left trouser pocket, whereupon Staples struck at defendant. At that moment someone grabbed Staples and started to choke him; he was hit on the head and knocked unconscious. When he recovered consciousness he found his billfold, bank book and money were gone.

About three o'clock on the morning of April 22d, police officers, in answer to a call, came to 1032 East 42d Street, about one and one-half blocks from the night club, where they found defendant attempting to enter the house, claiming that he lived there. Upon ascertaining from defendant that his address was 1338 East 48th Place, the officers took him to that address, where he was admitted. About five minutes after the officers left defendant, they received a radio call describing defendant as being wanted for robbery, whereupon they returned to defendant's home and arrested him. While the defendant was being removed from the premises at 1032 East 42d Street, one of the officers found Staples' billfold, bank book and driver's license lying on the sidewalk in front of the house. One of the officers testified that when they found the defendant on 42d Street he appeared to have been drinking; that he was unbalanced, but "not down"; that he could walk without support; that his answers were coherent, except as to where he lived.

In his own behalf defendant testified that he was not a waiter or head waiter at the night club; that he met the complaining witness, Staples, and his party, at the club, and at Staples' invitation had several drinks between midnight and two o'clock; that about a quarter of two Staples suggested going out for more whiskey; that about two o'clock defendant began to feel sick, and that he went outside with Staples; that he remembered Staples' talking to two men on the sidewalk, but that he, the defendant, continued down the street; that he was feeling sick and wanted to sit down some place. The defendant asserted that he did not assault Staples. He testified that he did not see Staples again until he was taken to the police station; that he did not know how long he was on the porch at 1032 East 42d Street; that he took no part in any robbery or assault of the complaining witness. In rebuttal, Staples testified that as they left the club defendant said, "Hello, boys," to two men on the sidewalk, but that they left them behind and continued down the street.

In support of his contention that the evidence is insufficient, appellant points out that he did not flee from the scene of the crime; that the evidence does not show possession by him of the fruits of the robbery, nor is there any evidence that appellant had anything to do with the placing of the billfold and papers where they were found on the sidewalk, and that no connection is shown between appellant and the person or persons who assaulted Staples. It is just as reasonable, argues the appellant, to suspect that Staples was assaulted and robbed by unknown persons acting independently, as to believe that appellant, feigning drunkenness, lured Staples out of the club to be robbed by appellant and his accomplices. This contention cannot prevail. If the account of the complaining witness be accepted, then the trial court's finding of appellant's guilt is amply supported. In addition to the evidence which placed appellant at the scene of the robbery at the time it occurred, the record contains, as hereinbefore stated, the positive testimony of the complaining witness that appellant was attempting to rob him at the moment the complaining witness was struck down by a blow on the head. If the testimony of Staples be true, then appellant's version of what occurred, to-wit, that he was drunk and sick, and that he staggered on down the street, leaving Staples talking to two men near the cafe, must be false, as must also be his testimony that the two men were unknown to him. As to appellant's alleged drunkenness, the testimony of the complaining witness, members of his party, and the police officer would warrant the conclusion that while appellant had been drinking, he was not drunk. Appellant himself testified that he did not begin drinking until about midnight, and that he had "two or three" drinks. Appellant testified that he did not go out with Staples until after two o'clock, but it was stipulated at the trial that police officers, if called, would testify that the crime was reported at 1:50 a. m.

[1-3] Nothing is more firmly established in the law of this state than the rule that an appellate court may not substitute its judgment on the facts for that of the jury or trial court, and that before the verdict of the jury or the judgment of the trial court can be set aside on appeal upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support it, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trial court. People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 184 P. 389; People v. Tedesco, 1 Cal.2d 211, 34 P.2d 467. The jury, or as in this case the trial court, when a jury is waived, is the exclusive judge of the credibility of witnesses (Code Civ. Proc., sec. 1847) and of the value and effect of the evidence presented. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 2061. It necessarily follows that the trial court in this case was authorized, if it conscientiously felt warranted in so doing, after full and fair consideration thereof, to reject appellant's version of the affair and accept as true the testimony of the complaining witness and the other evidence of the prosecution, and therefrom to draw an inference of appellant's guilt.

An examination of the record discloses no prejudicial error. The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 473

CARPENTER v. DEVITT.

Civ. 11815.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 2, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 2, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⇐19

Under statute providing that no transfer of title to motor vehicle shall be effective without change of registration except as transferor may be estopped by law to deny transfer, where dealer repossessed automobile sold under conditional sale contract and delivered it to buyer's father who paid amount then due, the cost of repossession and assumed balance of payments under contract, but no change was made in registration of automobile which was registered in son's name, as between the son and father, the son was "estopped" by law to deny the transfer. Vehicle Code, § 186, St.1935, p. 118.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

2. Estoppel ⇐98(1, 4)

The execution creditor and sheriff acting for him in attempting to satisfy judgment debt by execution are "privies" of the judgment debtor and take no better title than the judgment debtor possesses, and are bound by the same estoppel as binds him.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Privy".

3. Attachment ⇐178
Execution ⇐111, 268, 269

The lien of an execution and attachment proceedings attaches to the real and not to the apparent interest of the judgment debtor to his property, and the purchaser at execution sale takes subject to such existing liens and equities as the property was subject to in the hands of the debtor, unless he can show he purchased property without notice of the existence of such liens or equities.

4. Automobiles ⇐19

Where dealer repossessed automobile sold under conditional sale contract and delivered it to buyer's father who paid amount then due, the cost of repossession and assumed balance of payments under contract, but no change was made in registration of automobile which was registered in son's name, and sheriff levied writ of execution on automobile to satisfy judgment against the son at time when automobile was in possession of father who filed a third party claim, the son being estopped to deny title of the father, sheriff acting with full knowledge of the father's rights was bound by the same estoppel, and father could properly maintain action for conversion against sheriff. Vehicle Code, § 186, St.1935, p. 118; Code Civ. Proc. § 689.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; James L. Atteridge, Judge.

Action for conversion of an automobile by J. L. Carpenter against J. R. Devitt. From a judgment for the plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

W. A. Deans, of Santa Cruz, for appellant.

J. L. Carpenter, in pro. per.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

Appeal from a judgment for the value of an automobile in an action for conversion. Defendant and appellant, as sheriff of Santa Cruz County, levied a writ of execution upon the automobile to satisfy a judgment against A. R. Carpenter. Plaintiff and respondent filed a third party claim pursuant to section 689, Code of Civil Procedure, and the execution creditor having given the sheriff the undertaking provided for in that section, the sheriff sold the automobile at execution sale. This action followed.

The evidence showed that one Watkins, a dealer, had originally sold the automobile to A. R. Carpenter on conditional sale contract. A. R. Carpenter having defaulted in certain payments Watkins repossessed the automobile. Thereafter respondent J. L. Carpenter (who is the father of A. R. Carpenter), A. R. Carpenter and Watkins entered into an agreement among themselves whereby respondent assumed the balance of the payments under the contract with his son, paid Watkins the amount then due plus the costs of repossession and the car was delivered to respondent as purchaser. The car had been registered in the names of Watkins as legal owner and A. R. Carpenter as registered owner. No change was made in the registration. Respondent continued to make the payments to Watkins and at the time of the levy on the car only one monthly instalment remained unpaid. The indebtedness upon which the judgment and execution were based was not incurred in reliance upon the apparent ownership of the car by A. R. Carpenter.

Appellant relies upon section 186 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 118 and the case of Coca Cola Bottling Co. v. Feliciano, 32 Cal.App.2d 351, 89 P.2d 686, 687. Section 186 of the Vehicle Code read at the time of the execution: "No transfer of the title or any interest in or to a vehicle registered hereunder shall pass nor shall delivery of any said vehicle be deemed to have been made and any attempted transfer shall not be effective for any purpose until transfer of registration is made and the department has issued a new certificate of ownership and registration card with respect thereto as provided herein, except as a transferor may be estopped by law to deny a transfer. * * *"

In Coca Cola Bottling Co. v. Feliciano, supra, the court did not discuss or decide the effect of the proviso of this section which reads "except as a transferor may be estopped by law to deny a transfer."

In the later case of Dennis v. Bank of America, etc., Ass'n, 34 Cal.App.2d 618, at page 623, 94 P.2d 51, 54, the court said of this proviso: "The same section also provides that the provisions thereof cannot be availed of by a transferor who 'may be estopped by law to deny a transfer'. In Boles v. Stiles, 188 Cal. 304, 204 P. 848, 849, this language was construed to mean that where, as in the case before us, the transferring dealer by his own act and agreement placed respondent in the 'immediate and exclusive' possession of the automobile, such transferor cannot invoke the provisions of the quoted statute."

[1] It is plain under the authorities that in a suit between respondent and A. R. Carpenter the latter would be "estopped by law to deny a transfer." Dennis v. Bank of America, etc., Ass'n, supra; Boles v. Stiles, supra; Pacific Acceptance Corp. v. Jones, 95 Cal.App. 365, 370, 272 P. 1084; Kenny v. Christianson, 200 Cal. 419, 423, 424, 253 P. 715, 50 A.L.R. 1297.

[2] The execution creditor and the sheriff acting for him in attempting to satisfy the judgment debt by execution are privies of the judgment debtor and take no better title than the judgment debtor possesses. They are bound by the same estoppel that binds him.

[3] "The lien of an execution and attachment proceedings attaches to the real and not to the apparent interest of a judgment debtor in and to his property, and the purchaser at an execution sale takes subject to such existing liens and equities as the property was subject to in the hands of the debtor, unless he can show he purchased the same without notice, either actual or constructive, of the existence of such liens or equities." Richman v. Bank of Perris, 102 Cal.App. 71, 88, 282 P. 801, 809; Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Oakland Railways, 193 Cal. 451, 469, 225 P. 452; Wood Estate Co. v. Chanslor, 209 Cal. 241, 286 P. 1001.

In Wood Estate Co. v. Chanslor, supra, the court applied this rule specifically to an estoppel of the judgment debtor saying at page 250 of 209 Cal., at page 1004 of 286 P.: "It is too elementary to need citation of authority that, if the corporation is estopped, in absence of fraud, the estoppel likewise applies against the creditors of the corporation. This is so because the creditors get only the rights of the debtor, and no more. 10 Cal.Jur. 652."

[4] It follows that A. R. Carpenter being estopped to deny the title of respondent the appellant sheriff, acting with full knowledge of respondent's rights as set out in his third party claim, was bound by the same estoppel.

The respondent having had possession of the automobile at the time of the levy and appellant being estopped to deny his title the action for conversion was properly maintained. Pendell v. Thomas, 95 Cal. App. 33, 272 P. 306; Davis v. Cline, 184 Cal. 548, 195 P. 42; Mueseler v. Bridgewater, 138 Cal.App. 217, 31 P.2d 1089.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 545

DALY v. MATHEWS et al.

Civ. 12880.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 6, 1942.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐808(1)

Under the common law there is no liability upon the part of an adjacent landowner for injuries occurring on a public sidewalk.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐808(1, 4)

The abutting landowner is not bound to keep the sidewalk in front of his premises in repair or in a safe condition for public travel, in absence of statute or ordinance imposing such a duty upon him.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐808(1)

Where a portion of a sidewalk is used for the particular benefit of adjacent landowner, the landowner is liable for a negligent construction or maintenance which proximately causes personal injury to a pedestrian.

4. Municipal corporations ⇐808(1)

Abutting property owners were not liable to a pedestrian for injuries sustained from a fall in stepping from a sidewalk onto a depressed driveway which crossed sidewalk, where depth of driveway at curb line was six and one-half inches below adjacent curbs, and there was no contention that driveway was not properly constructed or that it was out of repair, and driveway was in the same shape as other driveways in the city, and there was no defect in original construction of driveway.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐768(3), 808(1)

If the continuance of a depressed driveway in a sidewalk under surrounding conditions was inherently dangerous to pedestrians, liability to a pedestrian for injuries sustained in a fall while stepping from sidewalk onto driveway rested with city and not with abutting landowners.

6. Municipal corporations ⇐816(8), 818(10)

Where complaint in action for personal injuries referred to and annexed as an exhibit a copy of an ordinance declaring that a public sidewalk which as a matter of fact is in a condition to endanger persons passing thereon is a nuisance and unlawful, but complaint did not charge that defendants had violated ordinance, the ordinance was admissible as evidence only in support of some other allegation of negligence, and then only if ordinance conferred a right on plaintiff for a violation of it.

7. Municipal corporations ⇐808(7)

An ordinance merely declaring that a public sidewalk which as a matter of fact was in a condition to endanger persons passing thereon was a nuisance and unlawful did not confer a right of action on a pedestrian, who was injured in a fall while stepping from a sidewalk onto a depressed driveway, against abutting property owners for violation of ordinance.

8. Pleading ⇐8(17)

In pedestrian's action against abutting property owners for injuries sustained from a fall in stepping from a sidewalk onto a depressed driveway, a complaint containing allegations that owners negligently maintained a public sidewalk at a level below normal surface level of adjacent balance of sidewalk and curb, thereby endangering safety of persons using sidewalk and curb in customary manner, which allegations were mere "conclusions" of pleader, did not state a cause of action.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Georgia P. Bullock, Judge.

Action by Mabel A. Daly against Lucile G. Mathews and others for personal injuries. From an order granting a new trial in favor of plaintiff after judgment for defendants, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Eugene S. Ives and Leonard Wilson, both of Los Angeles, and Paul E. Schwab, of Beverly Hills, for appellants.

Felix H. McGinnis, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

The primary question presented in this case is whether abutting property owners are liable to a pedestrian for an injury which she suffered from a fall in stepping from a sidewalk onto an unlooked for depressed driveway which crossed the sidewalk. The case reaches us on an appeal from an order granting a new trial in favor of the plaintiff after judgment for the defendants.

The controlling facts are undisputed. It appears that several years ago the sidewalk with its driveway was constructed in front of the property here involved, in the city of Beverly Hills. The driveway extends along the curb line a distance of 10 feet and inward and upward from the curb towards the property a distance of 4 feet. Its depth at the curb line is 6½ inches below the adjacent curbs, and it slopes gradually to the sidewalk surface for a distance of 4 feet. Some time after the sidewalk with its driveway had been constructed a two-story office building was erected across the entire front of the property, thus obviating any further need of the driveway as a method of ingress and egress by vehicles. In that condition defendants acquired the property in 1936. In September of that year the city enacted an ordinance which declared that it should be "a nuisance and unlawful for any person * * * owning real estate * * * to permit any public sidewalk * * * to be * * * in a condition to * * * endanger persons * * * passing thereon or thereover." The ordinance further provides that any person may file with the clerk of the city court a verified statement of any violation of the ordinance, and that thereupon an order shall issue under the seal of the court directing the owner complained of to appear and show cause why the nuisance should not be abated by repair of the defective condition. It is further provided that a trial may be had on the issue as made, and that if an order is issued directing an abatement of the nuisance and it is not complied with, the person thus failing shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished either by a fine or by imprisonment in jail, or both. The ordinance does not prohibit driveways, nor does it declare them to be nuisances per se. Nowhere does it declare that driveways generally, or driveways not in use as driveways, must be reconstructed so as to leave level sidewalks only in front of properties. It merely declares that a public sidewalk which as a matter of actual fact is in a condition to endanger persons passing thereon is a nuisance and unlawful. The ordinance contains no provision conferring a right of action on any party injured by reason of a violation of the ordinance.

At noon on December 17, 1938, the daughter of plaintiff stopped her car directly in front and immediately alongside of the driveway. Thereupon the plaintiff, who was on the other side of the street, crossed over in order to enter the car. As she desired to sit in the seat with her daughter, who was occupying the driver's seat, it was necessary for plaintiff to pass in front of the car and to go up over the curb to the sidewalk. This she did, looking down as she stepped up onto the sidewalk. The day was clear and dry and her sight was unimpaired. After reaching the sidewalk she turned abruptly to her right so as to pass along the hood of the car to the door thereof. In so doing she did not look down so as to observe the sidewalk, nor did she notice the depression therein caused by the driveway. Without looking she went forward a step or two and then, as her foot reached the unexpected depression, lost her balance and pitched forward, and as a result was injured.

On these facts the question is whether a verdict if rendered for the plaintiff could stand. If not, it was error to grant a new trial after judgment for the defendants.

In our opinion the trial court correctly found for the defendants in the first instance and committed reversible error when it granted a new trial. Moreover, we are of the view that the motion for judgment on the pleadings, based on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action should have been sustained.

So far as the driveway was concerned, there was nothing about it that was different from any other properly constructed and well-maintained driveway. There is no dispute here but that the driveway was properly constructed, and none that it was out of repair or had a single flaw in it. This driveway, it was stipulated, was substantially in the same form and shape as the other driveways in that city. We pass to a consideration of the legal questions involved.

[1-3] Under the common law there is no liability upon the part of an adjacent landowner for injuries occurring on a public sidewalk. Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 3; Martinovich v. Wooley, 128 Cal. 141, 60 P. 760; Bolles v. Hilton & Paley, Inc., 119 Cal.App. 126, 6 P.2d 335. Likewise in this state there is no obligation on the abutting landowner to keep the sidewalk in front of his premises in repair or in a safe condition for public travel, in the absence of statute or ordinance imposing such a duty upon him. Cases supra; Restatement, Torts, sec. 288. Where a portion of a sidewalk is used for the particular benefit of the adjacent landowner, such as grates or glass therein for light, or sidewalk elevators or heavy planked driveways, it has been held that the abutting landowner is liable for a negligent construction or maintenance which proximately causes personal injury to a pedestrian. No case, however, has gone so far as to charge an abutting landowner with liability for the condition of a driveway, whether used or not by him, unless he personally created, through use or otherwise, some unsafe condition therein.

The case of Granucci v. Claasen, 204 Cal. 509, 269 P. 437, 59 A.L.R. 435, heavily relied upon by respondent, is not contra to what we have said. In that case the abutting property owner had constructed, with the permission of the city, a special type of driveway for her exclusive benefit; and so it was held that she was directly liable to a pedestrian for an injury caused by her failure to keep the driveway in repair. The case is an exception to the rule and its doctrine does not cover the case before us nor should it be extended to it.

[4] The facts of the case at bar bring it squarely within the holding of the Massachusetts court in Heaney v. Colonial Filling Stations, 262 Mass. 338, 159 N.E. 916, where it was held that a perpendicular drop of 5½ inches in the grade of a driveway with the sidewalk adjoining does not render the abutting owner liable, and as a matter of law is reasonably safe and convenient for the use of pedestrians. Cf. also Joel v. Electrical Research Products, Inc., 2 Cir., 94 F.2d 588.

[5] In the instant case it is conceded that there was no defect in the original construction of the driveway and that it was in the same condition at the time of injury as at the date of its construction. In short, there was no defect or flaw in the driveway. The sole claim is that the continuance of the driveway in the sidewalk under the surrounding conditions was inherently dangerous to pedestrians. If it was, the liability to the plaintiff therefor rested with the city and not with the abutting landowners.

[6-8] The complaint refers to and annexes as an exhibit a copy of the ordinance. But nowhere does the complaint charge that the defendants in any respect violated it. Cf. Lake Erie, etc., Co. v. Mikesell, 23 Ind.App. 395, 55 N.E. 488. Accordingly, the ordinance was admissible in evidence, as evidence, only in support of some other allegation of negligence, and then only if the ordinance conferred a right on the plaintiff for a violation of it. As we have seen, the ordinance does not confer such a right, and so it was erroneously admitted in evidence and erroneously considered, if it was, on the motion for judgment on the pleadings. Moreover, the complaint failed to charge any act of negligence, and so far as it attempted to do so it was done by way of conclusion only and not by the statement of any ultimate fact. The allegation in the complaint that defendants "negligently * * * maintained a public sidewalk * * * at a level below the normal surface level of the adjacent balance of said sidewalk and curb, thereby * * * endangering the safety of persons using said sidewalk and curb in the normal and customary manner," states at best a mere condition and the conclusion of the pleader. The allegation is of no greater import or significance in respect to negligence than if it had merely averred that a level sidewalk was maintained, thereby endangering pedestrians. An allegation that an owner maintained steps from a sidewalk to his house clearly would not imply he was negligent. So here, something more than maintaining a driveway across a sidewalk below its level is necessary to show the maintenance was negligent. The allegation that it was dangerous is the conclusion of the pleader. No doubt the notion back of the allegation is that "but for" the depression existing by reason of the lowered driveway in the sidewalk the plaintiff would not have been injured; but this is not an allegation of negligence.

As the ordinance imposed no liability on the defendants for the maintenance of the driveway and sidewalk and, what is more important, conferred no right of action in favor of an individual pedestrian against the abutting owners, no cause of action based on the ordinance was stated. Aside from the ordinance no basis for a claim of common-law negligence was alleged in the complaint or shown by the evidence. Accordingly, as a judgment for the plaintiff would lack support, it was error to grant a new trial.

Order reversed.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 465

FIRST FEDERAL SAVINGS & LOAN ASS'N OF ALTADENA v. JOHNSON, State Treasurer et al.

Civ. 6557.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 31, 1942.

Hearing Denied March 30, 1942.

1. Taxation ⇐6

States may not impose taxes on the assets or property, with the exception of realty, of any agency or branch of the federal government, without consent of Congress.

2. Taxation ⇐6

Congress may lawfully authorize states to levy and collect taxes on certain property and assets or income derived from governmental agencies doing business within the states, by appropriate legislation therefor.

3. Taxation ⇐9

In view of provision of federal statute that no state taxing authority shall impose any tax on a federal savings and loan association, greater than that imposed by such authority on other similar local mutual or cooperative thrift and home-financing institutions, the state may impose on a federal savings and loan association, franchise tax computed on basis of annual net income derived from investments of both local funds and federal funds, where the tax is not greater than that levied on a similar state institution. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488; Const. art. 13, § 16; Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, §§ 1 et seq., 4(c), 5(h), 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1461–1468, 1463(c), 1464(h).

4. Statutes ⇐206

Statutes should be construed, if possible, so as to give force and effect to all language employed therein.

5. Taxation ⇐165

Federal savings and loan association was not free from state franchise taxes because it did not hold a franchise from the state. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488; Const. art. 13, § 16; Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, §§ 1 et seq., 4(c), 5(h), 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1461–1468, 1463(c), 1464(h).

6. Taxation ⇐37

In view of state statute authorizing the taxing of all banks, including national banking associations, located within the state, and all financial, mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations, levy of franchise taxes against a federal savings and loan association was not void because the state failed to take advantage of the authorization conferred by the federal savings and loan association act to tax such association's franchise and income by thereafter enacting a statute to that effect, since the association was a "financial corporation" within the statute. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488; Const. art. 13, § 16.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Financial Corporation".

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Raymond T. Coughlin, Judge.

Action by the First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Altadena against Charles G. Johnson, as state treasurer, etc., and others, to recoup franchise taxes levied by the state. From a judgment of dismissal after a general demurrer to the complaint had been sustained, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

McEachern & Ritchie, of Pasadena, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney and Valentine Brookes, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondents.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

The plaintiff has appealed from a judgment of dismissal which was rendered against it after a general demurrer to the complaint had been sustained. By this action the plaintiff sought to recoup franchise taxes levied by the State of California pursuant to article XIII, section 16, of the State Constitution, and the corresponding enabling act of the legislature. Stats.1929, p. 19; Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 8488. The taxes were paid under protest.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is a Federal Savings and Loan Association, organized under the United States statute, and doing business in Los Angeles, California; that it was granted a federal charter in 1934, as a branch of the government, under the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, 12 U.S.C.A., p. 984, §§ 1461–1468, to finance the building of homes in California, pursuant to that act of Congress; that the federal government supplied the plaintiff with the aggregate sum of $775,000 for the purpose of such loans, all of which was used for that purpose, together with other corporation funds; that pursuant to California law (Stats.1929, p. 19, as amended, Act 8488, 2 Deering's Gen.Laws of Calif., p. 3851), the defendants levied and collected from plaintiff franchise taxes in the aggregate sum of $2,056.93, computed on the same basis applicable to "other similar local mutual * * * and home financing institutions" which taxes were paid under protest. The complaint alleges that the taxes in question were computed on the basis of the annual net income of plaintiff derived from investments of "both locally deposited funds and funds invested by the Federal Government." The complaint asks for repayment of said sum of $2,056.93 on the ground that it was illegally levied and collected.

The defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff failed to amend its complaint. Judgment was thereupon rendered dismissing the suit. From that judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

The appellant contends that the franchise tax in question was illegally levied and collected by the State of California for the reason that all assets, except the real estate of the plaintiff, First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Altadena, are exempt from all state taxes since it is an agency of the United States and Congress has not affirmatively authorized such property to be taxed, and that, in any event, the state lacks authority to levy such taxes based on the portion of plaintiff's income which is derived from the investment of funds furnished by the federal government.

We are of the opinion the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a valid cause of action for the repayment of franchise taxes levied and collected pursuant to law, and that the demurrer to the complaint was therefore properly sustained. The judgment of dismissal necessarily followed.

[1] Ever since the Supreme Court of the United States rendered its opinion in the famous case of McCulloch v. State of Maryland, reported in 4 Wheat. at page 316, 17 U.S. 316, 4 L.Ed. 579, it has been recognized as a fact that the states of this union may not impose taxes upon the assets or property of any agency or branch of the federal government, with the exception of real property, without consent of Congress. For the purposes of this appeal, it may be conceded the plaintiff in this case is an instrumentality of the federal government for the purpose of loaning its money advanced to relieve financially distressed owners of farms and homes, pursuant to the provisions of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, which was adopted by Congress as an emergency measure under the general welfare clause of the federal Constitution. It may also be conceded that mere silence or failure on the part of Congress to enact legislation with respect to the taxing of property of particular governmental agencies, may be deemed to constitute a prohibition against the levying of such taxes by a state. First National Bank v. Richmond, C.C., 39 F. 309.

[2] It is, however, acknowledged that Congress may lawfully authorize the states to levy and collect taxes on certain property and assets or income derived from governmental agencies doing business within such states, by appropriate legislation therefor. From time to time, ever since 1864, Congress has specifically authorized the states to levy and collect taxes on specified classes of property and incomes of particular governmental agencies. In 1923, Congress specifically authorized the states to tax the shares, dividends and net income of "National banking associations" located within their borders, to the extent and in the manner prescribed by section 548 of the Federal Code. 12 U.S.C.A p. 604, sec. 548, as amended in 1926. That section provides in part:

"The legislature of each State may determine and direct, subject to the provisions of this section, the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within its limits. The several States may * * * tax such associations on their net income, or * * * according to or measured by their net income."

Pursuant to the foregoing authorization on the part of Congress, article XIII, section 16, of the Constitution of California was adopted in 1930, authorizing the levying and collection of annual franchise taxes against all "banks, including national banking associations, located within the limits of this state" and against all "financial, mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations" similarly located and doing business in California, for the privilege of operating therein, "equivalent to four per cent of their net income." To carry into effect the provisions of the preceding section of article XIII of the Constitution, the Legislature of California adopted chapter 13 of Statutes of 1929, which is found at page 19 thereof.

The Federal Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 provides for the creation of the "Home Owners' Loan Corporation," which it specifically declares "shall be an instrumentality of the United States." 12 U.S.C.A. p. 985, § 1463. With respect to that particular corporation, subdivision (c) of that section specifically exempts all of its property and assets, except real property, from taxation in the following language:

"The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves and surplus, and its loans and income, shall likewise be exempt from such taxation."

The following section 1464, 12 U.S.C.A. p. 994, was amended by Congress in 1934, authorizing the creation of Federal Savings and Loan Associations, as distinguished from the previously-mentioned Home Owners' Loan Corporation. It is declared that such a Federal Savings and Loan Association shall automatically become a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank of the particular district in which it is located. It is not stated that such associations shall become "instrumentalit[ies] of the United States," as it was specifically declared with respect to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Nor is it stated in section 1464, supra, as it was unqualifiedly declared in section 1463, that the corporation's property and assets are exempt from taxation. On the contrary, it is clearly inferred by the provisions of subdivision (h) of section 1464, that states are authorized to tax the income derived from such associations. It provides that:

"Such [savings and loan] associations, including their franchises, capital, reserves, and surplus, and their loans and income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, * * and all shares of such associations shall be exempt both as to their value and the income therefrom from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States; and no State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxing authority shall impose any tax on such associations or their franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, loans, or income greater than that imposed by such authority on other similar local mutual or cooperative thrift and home financing institutions." (Italics added.)

It is not contended that the taxes which were imposed in the present action were greater than those which were levied upon similar thrift or home-financing institutions in California. It must be conceded that the taxes which are involved in this suit were computed in exact accord with the procedure which is followed in California with respect to other similar financial institutions.

[3, 4] Although the language of subdivision (h) of section 1464, with respect to state taxation of federal agencies is negative in form, its meaning is clear and un-ambiguous. We are of the opinion it constitutes federal authority for states to levy and collect franchise taxes from Federal Savings and Loan Associations, as agencies of the United States Government, doing business within such states, based upon their net incomes, provided the rate is not greater than that which is imposed upon other similar local mutual or cooperative thrift and home-financing institutions. That method is the precise manner in which the State of California computed the franchise taxes which were levied against the net income of the plaintiff association. There was no discrimination in fixing the taxes which are involved on this appeal. Our conclusion in regard to the authority for states to impose taxes upon the incomes of such federal agencies, furnishes the only reasonable construction of which the language of subdivision (b) of section 1464 is susceptible. Statutes should be construed, if possible, so as to give force and effect to all of the language employed therein. If Congress had not intended to authorize states to impose taxes upon the incomes of such federal agencies, it would have omitted the latter portion of that subdivision of the section entirely, and prohibited absolutely taxation of their properties by both the government and the states. The fact that the first portion of that paragraph specifically exempts the property of such associations from taxation "by the United States" and then separately prescribes the manner or extent to which state authorities may impose taxes thereon, furnishes conclusive evidence that Congress intended thereby to authorize states to tax the designated properties of such Federal Savings and Loan Associations. Our construction of the language of subdivision (h) of section 1464 is supported by the following recent decisions: Texas Unemployment Compensation Comm. v. Metropolitan Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, Tex. Civ.App., 139 S.W.2d 309; First Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Loomis, 7 Cir., 97 F.2d 831, 121 A.L.R. 99.

[5] There is no merit in appellant's contention that it is exempt from taxation because the association does not hold a franchise from the State of California. It is alleged that plaintiff was duly granted a charter by the United States Government on July 10, 1934, and that it continued to operate thereunder, in the State of California, by virtue of the provisions of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933. It is not necessary for banks or savings and loan associations to hold franchises issued by the State of California to make them liable for taxes under article XIII, section 16, of the Constitution or the legislative enabling act of 1929. These laws provide that banks, including national banking associations, "located within the limits of this state" shall be liable for the taxes. The law imposes the taxes upon all franchises whether they be national or local in character. See Matson Navigation Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 3 Cal.2d 1, 6, 43 P.2d 805; Butler Bros. v. McColgan, 17 Cal.2d 664, 111 P.2d 334. The case of People v. Alaska Pacific Steamship Co., 182 Cal. 202, 187 P. 742, relied upon by the appellant to support its contention that it is exempt from taxes because it holds no franchise from the State of California, contains no language in conflict with what we have previously said in that regard.

[6] Nor is there merit in appellant's assertion that the levy is void because the State of California failed to take advantage of the authorization conferred by the Federal Savings and Loan Association Act of 1934 to tax its franchise and income by thereafter enacting a statute to that effect. The California statute of 1929, in accordance with article XIII, section 16, of the Constitution, is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include the power to tax the franchise and net income of the plaintiff as a savings and loan association. Indeed, the law authorizes the taxing of all "banks, including national banking associations, located within the limits of this state" and all "financial, mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations." Certainly the plaintiff is a financial institution. The law clearly authorizes the taxing of all named industries which were doing business in the State of California at the time the statute was enacted, and also all such associations and institutions which may thereafter conduct their businesses within the borders of the state, regardless of when they were created or organized.

Finally, the appellant contends that even if the Federal Savings and Loan Association Act does authorize the taxing of franchises and net incomes, to some extent, "they nevertheless do not have power to tax plaintiff on its entire net income, but must of necessity be limited in its taxation to that portion of plaintiff's income which is derived from the use of locally invested funds, and defendants have no power whatsoever to levy, assess and collect any tax from that portion of plaintiff's net income derived from the investment of funds invested with plaintiff by the Federal government."

We cannot agree with that construction of the federal statute. No such limitation is placed upon the taxing power of the states by the provisions of subdivision (h) of section 1464. It authorizes the state to tax all incomes of such associations. That provision contemplates the taxing of all such associations or their franchises, capital, reserves, surplus, loans or income to an extent not "greater that that imposed by such authority on other similar local mutual or cooperative thrift and home financing institutions." This absence of a limitation leaves the clear inference that the entire income is taxable and that the portion which is derived from loans of funds invested by the federal government is not exempt. If Congress had intended to exempt the income derived from that source it would have so stated. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Tradesmens National Bank of Oklahoma City v. Oklahoma Tax Comm., 309 U.S. 560, 60 S.Ct. 688, 84 L.Ed. 947, determined that the State of Oklahoma was authorized under the National Bank Act, 12 U.S.C.A. p. 604, § 548 to levy and collect franchise taxes on the entire net assets or income of the bank, notwithstanding the fact that it included therein tax-exempt federal securities. The syllabus in that case correctly announces the decision of the court in that regard as follows: "A state has power to levy on a franchise a tax measured by net assets or net income, including tax-exempt Federal instrumentalities or their income." Section 548, supra, which was involved in that case, authorized states to "tax such associations on their net income." It then provides, similar to section 1464, that such taxation on net incomes shall not discriminate against the banks, but must be computed in the same manner and not higher than the franchise taxes which are imposed upon "other financial corporations nor higher than the highest of the rates assessed by the taxing State upon mercantile, manufacturing, and business corporations doing business within its limits." It will be observed that the language of section 548 is quite similar to the language of subdivision (h) of section 1464 in that regard. It follows that the principle which was involved in the Oklahoma case, supra, is determinative of that issue in this case. To the same effect is the case of Pacific Company, Ltd. v. Johnson, Cal., 285 U.S. 480, 52 S.Ct. 424, 76 L.Ed. 893.

We are satisfied the portion of the net income of the plaintiff association which was derived from funds furnished by the federal government is not exempt from the franchise tax imposed by the State of California in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEEL, J., pro tem., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 522

GRAHAM v. CALIFORNIA DRILLING EXPLORATION CO. et al.

Civ. 2572.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 5, 1942.

Mechanics' liens ⇐260(4)

A mechanic's lien foreclosure sought by way of answer and cross-complaint to a suit to foreclose a materialman's lien on the same property was barred where the answer and cross-complaint were filed more than 90 days from the recording of cross-complainant's lien, notwithstanding that original complaint was filed within the 90-day period. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1190, 1195.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Warren Stockton, Judge.

Suit by D. H. Graham against California Drilling Exploration Company, Siemon Brothers and Associates, Frank Vessels, Big Boy Drilling Company and others to foreclose a materialman's lien, wherein Frank Vessels by affirmative defense and cross-complaint, sought personal judgment against Big Boy Drilling Company and foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. From a decree of foreclosure for Frank Vessels, Siemon Brothers and Associates appeal.

Reversed.

Alfred Siemon and Bennett Siemon, both of Bakersfield, for appellants.

D. A. Boone and James T. Satchell, both of Long Beach, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by certain defendants from a judgment in favor of defendant Vessels establishing and foreclosing a mechanic's lien against the appealing defendants. There is another judgment disposing of the claims of other parties from which no appeal has been taken.

Plaintiff Graham commenced an action to foreclose a materialman's lien for materials furnished to defendant California Drilling Exploration Company in drilling an oil well, said defendant being the drilling contractor. Defendants and appellants Krebs were the fee owners of the land and defendants and appellants Siemon Brothers and Associates, a limited partnership, were lessees under an oil and gas lease from defendants Krebs. Defendant and respondent Vessels filed an answer which contained "a second and separate affirmative defense" which alleged, among other things, that defendant California Drilling Exploration Company entered into an agreement with defendant Big Boy Drilling Company under which defendant Big Boy Drilling Company agreed to furnish labor and materials to drill the well and that defendant and respondent Vessels furnished labor and materials for that purpose. The prayer of said respondent's answer sought personal judgment against defendant Big Boy Drilling Company and the foreclosure of the mechanic's lien filed by respondent. Defendant Oil Well & Supply Company, sued as a party having an interest, answered and set up a claim to a part of the production. Defendant Big Boy Drilling Company sued as a party having an interest, defaulted to plaintiff's complaint. The claim of plaintiff Graham was satisfied during the pendency of the action and thereafter he took no part in the litigation. Defendant California Drilling and Exploration Company, the drilling contractor, filed an answer contesting plaintiff's claim but did not appear at the trial or take any part in the case after the filing of its answer. Defendants and appellants Krebs, the fee owners, and defendants and appellants Siemon Brothers and Associates separately answered plaintiff's complaint and also contested the claim of defendant and respondent Vessels for a lien.

When the case came on for trial on April 12, 1939, there were no appearances except for plaintiff, for appellants, and for respondent. At that time respondent asked to have the affirmative defense set forth in his answer considered as a cross-complaint, and asked to be given time to serve the defendants, no service of said answer or affirmative defense having been made upon any party except plaintiff. Counsel for plaintiff and for appellants objected but their objections were overruled by the court and the court permitted defendant and respondent Vessels to serve his answer on counsel for appellants as a cross-complaint and required the parties to proceed to trial. The court heard plaintiff's case and then recessed the trial from April 12 to May 12, 1939, to allow appellants time in which to answer said affirmative defense or cross-complaint. Appellants thereafter filed answers which they designated as "Answer to Cross Complaint" denying the material allegation of respondent's answer and further set up the defense that the claim of respondent was barred by the provisions of section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure in that no action for the foreclosure of the lien was commenced within ninety days after the filing thereof. On May 12, 1939, the trial was resumed and completed and the case submitted. Before the court decided the case plaintiff filed a stipulation consenting that judgment might be given in favor of appellants on the demand of plaintiff, and thereafter the court filed its decision in favor of defendant and respondent Vessels and the judgment and decree of foreclosure appealed from was entered.

Appellants prosecute this appeal upon several grounds but the principal ground upon which the appellants rely for a reversal of the judgment is that the mechanic's lien of respondent was extinguished by the failure of the respondent to commence proceedings to enforce it within ninety days after the lien was filed. We will discuss this contention of appellants first because if appellants' position is sustained upon this point the judgment must necessarily be reversed and a discussion of the other points raised will be unnecessary.

Section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as applicable here, provides as follows: "No lien provided for in this chapter binds any property for a longer period than ninety days after the same has been filed, unless proceedings be commenced in a proper court * * * to enforce the same."

The record in this case shows that respondent's claim of lien was filed and recorded on December 20, 1937. Plaintiff's complaint was filed on February 14, 1938, and the answer of respondent which contains the "separate affirmative defense" asking for the foreclosure of respondent's lien, and which the trial court permitted to stand as a cross-complaint, was filed on April 20, 1938, but was not served on any party other than plaintiff until the trial commenced on April 12, 1939.

Appellants contend that, taking the view most favorable for respondent, respondent's proceeding to enforce his lien was not commenced until April 20, 1938, the date upon which his answer was filed and that the ninety-day period after the filing of respondent's lien expired on March 20, 1938.

Respondent, in answer to this contention of appellants, asserts that the date of the filing of plaintiff's complaint operated "to suspend the statute of limitations as to any cause, demand or counterclaim which existed in favor of a defendant at the time of such commencement" and that inasmuch as the same property is involved in respondent's answer or cross-complaint as was involved in plaintiff's original complaint the respondent was entitled to have the provision of section 1190, hereinbefore quoted, suspended.

In the case of Whittier v. Visscher, 189 Cal. 450, at page 456, 209 P. 23, at page 25, our Supreme Court said:

"It is next contended that the claim in this case is barred by the statute of limitations. It is conceded that it was not so barred when the original action was begun, and the authorities in this state seem to be agreed that, if the right of action relied on was alive at the commencement of the suit, the statute does not run against it, when, as in this case, the full statutory period has expired thereafter during the pendency of the action and before the claim is pleaded as a cross-complaint. Lyon v. Petty, 65 Cal. 322, 4 P. 103; Perkins v. West Coast Lumber Co., 120 Cal. 27, 52 P. 118; McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 64 P. 278; Bliss v. Sneath, 103 Cal. 43, 36 P. 1029; Id., 119 Cal. 526, 51 P. 848; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Shafer et al., [57 Cal.App. 573], 208 P. 197. The same rule is stated in 24 R.C.L., § 43, as declarative of the common law, as follows:

"'If, however, a counterclaim or set-off is not barred at the commencement of the action in which it is pleaded, it does not become so barred afterward during the pendency of that action, and in pleading the statute of limitations to a counterclaim it must be shown that the bar of the statute had matured when the original action was commenced, and it is not sufficient to aver a bar when the counterclaim was filed.'"

It is to be noted that the case just cited was an action by plaintiff upon a promissory note of a corporation and that the set-off or counterclaim sought to be established by defendants was a cross-demand against plaintiff's assignor, the original payee of the note in suit, for her stockholder's liability on the note sued upon.

In the case at bar, plaintiff Graham commenced an action against defendants to foreclose a mechanic's lien for certain materials and equipment furnished to defendants other than respondent, and respondent was joined as a person claiming some interest in the premises or improvement. In setting forth his claim of lien in his answer and seeking the foreclosure thereof respondent was not asserting any counterclaim or set-off or cause of action against plaintiff, but was seeking to enforce a lien as against his codefendants, against whom the original action had been commenced by plaintiff.

Section 1195 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that two mechanic's liens against the same property can be consolidated and tried in one action but this does not mean that the foreclosure of each lien does not involve a separate cause of action, complete and independent in itself, to which cause of action any defenses which existed at the time it was filed may be set up. The mere fact that the law permits different liens to be established and enforced in the same action does not change the various causes of action from the nature of independent actions, and there is nothing in any of the decisions cited by respondent which holds to the contrary. Each cause of action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, whether set forth in a complaint, cross-complaint or complaint in intervention, must stand upon its own allegations and must be considered as having been commenced on the date it was filed. In Tubbs v. Delillo, 19 Cal.App. 612, 127 P. 514, 517, the court said:

"But, as stated in the Mars case [Mars v. McKay, 14 Cal. 127], the position of the intervenors is the same as though they had brought a new action, and the situation must be viewed in the light of the facts existing at the time the complaint in intervention was filed. * * *

"A complaint in intervention sets up a new cause of action, and admittedly also in favor of a third party, and the doctrine of relation does not apply. To determine, therefore, whether the action has been brought prematurely or whether the statute of limitations has run against it we must look to the date of the filing of the complaint in intervention and not of the filing of the original complaint."

In Sanford v. Bergin, 156 Cal. 43, 103 P. 333, 334, the action was for partition. A defendant, by answer, set up a mortgage and asked to have it declared a lien. The question arose as to whether the debt was barred and the Supreme Court, on appeal, said:

"The action was begun on April 30, 1898. The answer of Jones, in which, for the first time, the mortgage claim was asserted, was filed on April 20, 1903. The filing of this answer must be deemed to be equivalent to an action of foreclosure, and the question of the bar of the statute of limitations or of laches must be decided upon the theory that the action was begun upon the date last mentioned."

In California Savings Bank v. Parrish, 116 Cal. 254, at page 259, 48 P. 73, at page 75, it is said:

"Here it appears that the time within which, under the provisions of the Code, an action could have been brought upon the principal obligation, had expired before the cross complaint was filed. The lien was therefore extinguished, and the demurrer should have been sustained."

In Rowley v. Davis, 34 Cal.App. 184, at page 188, 167 P. 162, at page 164, the court said:

"But the cross-complaint of the defendant Davis was not filed until after plaintiff Rowley, had acquired the title of the defendant and cross-defendant Alice Huse. By filing that cross-complaint the cross-complainant tendered new issues, whereby he set up a cause of action which relates to the date of filing the cross-complaint. This he had the right to do. Johnson v. Taylor, 150 Cal. 201, 208, 88 P. 903, 10 L.R.A.,N.S., 818, 119 Am.St.Rep. 181."

From the foregoing authorities we think it is clear that respondent's action to establish and enforce his mechanic's lien against his codefendants, appellants herein, must be considered as having been commenced on April 20, 1938, and the date on which his answer or cross-complaint was filed, and, in view of the fact that that date was more than ninety days after the recording of his claim of lien, is barred by section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It follows, therefore, that the court below erred in decreeing the foreclosure of respondent's mechanic's lien.

Numerous other points are raised by appellants, some of which have substantial merit but, in view of the fact that we have already determined that the judgment must be reversed, it is unnecessary to discuss them.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 446

ROBBINS INV. CO. Inc., v. ROBBINS et al.

Civ. 13262.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 30, 1942.

Judgment ⇐768(1)

Where a certified copy of a judgment contained all the essential information required by the statute providing for the creation of a lien upon the property of a judgment debtor upon the recording of an abstract and judgment, the certified copy was an "abstract of judgment" within the meaning of the statute, notwithstanding that it was a full transcription of the judgment and not a summary or epitome, and its recordation created a valid lien on property of judgment debtor. Code Civ.Proc. § 674.

Ordinarily the noun "abstract" denotes a summary or epitome, or that which comprises or concentrates in itself the essential qualities of a larger thing or of several things, and generally means a mere brief and not a mere copy of that from which it was taken, although sometimes used in the sense of copy.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Abstract" and "Abstract of Judgment".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Suit by Robbins Investment Company, Inc., against A. C. Robbins and others to quiet title to real property. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Neil S. McCarthy, Earl L. Banta, and Howard P. Hall, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. J. Rankin, Milo V. Olson, and Zuckerman & Stein, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Annandale, Inc.

Anne Fulton Robbins, in pro. per.

SCHAUER, Presiding Justice.

This case was submitted to the trial court on stipulated facts; no element of evidentiary conflict is involved and there is no dispute as to what essentially constitutes the sole legal question which must be answered. Hence we refrain from needless narration of the facts and state the question directly: Is a lien impressed on the property of a judgment debtor by the recording in the office of the county recorder of the county where the property is situated of a document certified by the county clerk, which document contains all of the factual data concerning a money judgment required by section 674 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be included in a valid abstract of judgment but which instead of epitomizing the judgment transcribes it in full?

The trial court answered this question in the affirmative and with its conclusion we agree.

The Code section (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 674) states that "An abstract of the judgment or decree * * * certified by the clerk or justice of the court where such judgment or decree was rendered, may be recorded with the recorder of any county and from such recording the judgment or decree becomes a lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor, not exempt from execution, in such county, owned by him at the time, or which he may afterwards and before the lien expires, acquire. * * * The abstract above mentioned shall contain the following: Title of the court and cause and number of the action; date of entry of the judgment or decree; names of the judgment debtor and of the judgment creditor; amount of the judgment or decree, and where entered in judgment book, minutes or justices' docket."

The document recorded in this case contained every item of data specified in the Code section and was certified by the clerk of the court. The only attack upon it is predicated on the ground that it contained surplusage; i. e., that it was not an abstract but a transcript (complete copy) of the judgment, hence was not entitled to be recorded under our recording laws and its unauthorized recordation failed to impress a lien on the property of the judgment debtor.

For the purposes of a hypothesis for this decision we may assume that the recordation of the document in question is authorized, if at all, only by the above quoted Code section (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 674) and that its unsanctioned recordation would not operate to create a lien. But we conclude that the questioned document satisfies the requirements of an abstract as defined by such Code section. The only definition of the term in our Codes, other than as applied in the small claims court (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 117m), is that quoted above.

Ordinarily the noun "abstract" denotes a summary or epitome, "That which comprises or concentrates in itself the essential qualities of a larger thing or of several things." Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d Ed., 1942. In 1 C.J.S., Abstract, at page 378, among other definitive statements appears the following: "It ordinarily means a mere brief, and not a copy of that from which it is taken, although sometimes used in the sense of copy." These extraneous definitions, however, are not as important as is the language of the Code section itself (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 674), hereinabove quoted. That language does not purport to avouch that an abstract must essentially comprise anything less than a transcript of a judgment but it does require that it contain more; i. e., a mere copy of a judgment might not, but by said Code provision (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 674) an abstract must, disclose the date of entry of the judgment or decree and where entered in judgment book, minutes or justices' docket. These requirements are of substance, not of form; it is admitted that such requirements of substance have been met. Although it was unnecessary to copy into the document words of the judgment beyond those actually essential to state the data required, their presence in the abstract does not vitiate it (Civil Code, sec. 3537) or render its recordation ineffective.

The case of Frazier v. Crowell, 1877, 52 Cal. 399, cited by plaintiff, does not appear to be inconsistent with or authority against our conclusion. The court in its opinion in that case, at page 401 of 52 Cal. says: "A 'certified' copy is not an 'abstract,' and the statute (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 897) makes the distinction and prescribes the exact form in which the abstract is to be prepared." That Code section (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 897) has long been repealed; it is still true under the present cast of the law, as we have observed, that a mere copy of a judgment does not make an abstract, but that is so because the present law prescribes substance beyond the copy of a judgment; it does not prescribe form. Furthermore, as commendably pointed out by counsel for appellant, the Supreme Court on application for rehearing in the cited case vacated all that portion of its opinion pertinent to our question. This latter fact apparently was not called to the attention of the District Court of Appeal in Erkson v. Parker, 1906, 3 Cal.App. 98, 84 P. 437, 438, also cited by appellant, wherein the vacated portion of the opinion (in Frazier v. Crowell, 1877, 52 Cal. 399) is referred to and quoted as a holding of the court. However, that decision of the District Court of Appeal is likewise not inconsistent with our conclusion here. Its holding simply was that "the filing of an abstract is not a compliance with a law requiring the filing of an authenticated transcript." Our holding is not that the recording of a mere certified copy of a judgment is compliance with a law requiring the recording of an abstract, but is rather that the document which was recorded and which admittedly contained all the required data was, within the purview of the statute, an abstract.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN and PARKER WOOD, JJ., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 511

GREENE v. FICKERT et al.

Civ. 2570.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 4, 1942.

1. Waters and water courses ⇐158½(1)

In action to quiet title to easement to use spring on defendants' land adjoining land conveyed to plaintiff by defendants' predecessor in title, evidence held sufficient to support trial court's findings that plaintiff's use of spring was exclusive, obvious, and apparent until such predecessor made change therein after conveyance of property to plaintiff, that benefit of such use appeared to belong to plaintiff's property, and that such predecessor intended to transfer right to exclusive use of spring to plaintiff with such property. Civ.Code, §§ 1084, 1104.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

In action to quiet title to easement to use spring on defendants' land adjoining land conveyed by their predecessor in title to plaintiff, question, on which evidence was conflicting, as to whether plaintiff was entitled to exclusive, free, and uninterrupted use of spring was for trial court to determine.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1054(1)

In action to quiet title to easement to use spring on defendants' land adjoining land conveyed by their predecessor in title to plaintiff, error, if any, in admission of evidence that spring was used exclusively by plaintiff's predecessors in interest as far back as 30 years was not prejudicial to defendants, where they brought out same evidence by their own witness, and there was other ample evidence to support trial court's conclusion that spring was so used. Civ. Code, §§ 1084, 1104.

4. Appeal and error ⇐193(1)

Where no demurrer to complaint was interposed in trial court, question as to sufficiency of allegations thereof cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by Angus F. Greene against Louise Fickert and another, individually and as administratrices with the will annexed of the estate of Frederick A. Fickert, deceased, to quiet title to an easement to use a spring on defendants' land. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

A. B. Bianchi, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Frederick W. Welsh, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiff and respondent instituted this action against defendants and appellants Louise Fickert and Nellie Fickert, individually and as administratrices with the will annexed of the estate of Frederick A. Fickert, deceased, to quiet title to an easement to use a certain spring located on appellants' land. The trial court decreed that appellants' predecessor in title, by conveyance of a portion of his estate to respondent, transferred an easement to a spring on grantor's reserved portion in favor of the granted estate. The complaint is in the ordinary form of a complaint in a quiet title action.

From 1910 to 1935, one George H. Palmer and wife owned all of section 18, township 82, S. R. 32 E., M. D. B. & M. in Kern County.

On June 26, 1935, the Palmers deeded to Frederick A. Fickert the N. W. ¼ and the E. ½ of section 18. This deed was based upon some oral agreement of sale between them, made a few months prior to that date. October 30, 1935, Fickert conveyed to respondent Angus F. Greene 185 acres of the south portion of the east half of section 18, which would be approximately the southeast quarter of section 18, which we will designate parcel A, "subject to reservations and rights of way of record * * * together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, * * *." Parcel A is now and has been since 1890, improved by a house, barn, corrals and outbuildings. These improvements are located on the north part of parcel A and immediately adjacent to the north ¼ of the east ½ of section 18, which we will designate as parcel B.

From 1890 until January, 1936, the house and barn on the premises so conveyed by Fickert to Greene (parcel A) received its water supply for household and domestic uses and for watering stock and poultry from one of several springs known as the "house spring," all of which were located north of the house and barn on parcel B. The water was transferred from the "house spring" to the house and barn by means of pipes. There were no springs on parcel A, and no other source of water for household, stock or other use was ever developed on parcel A. The use of the water from the "house spring," at the house and barn, was practically continuous from 1890 to January 1, 1936, except for interruptions due to necessary repairs and infrequent interruptions when no one was living in the house. About March 1, 1935, respondent Greene and his wife entered upon the property described as parcel A, took possession of the house and barn thereon, and lived thereon up to the date of the trial of this action. This entry and occupation was made by virtue of an oral lease between the Greenes and George H. Palmer, owner of the property at that time. Rental therefor was paid to Palmer. Thereafter, when Fickert purchased the property from Palmer, they attorned to Fickert and paid the rent directly to him.

From March 1, 1935, until about January 1, 1936, respondent had the free and uninterrupted use of the "house spring." Subsequent to July 1, 1936, Fickert forcibly tore up the pipe line running from that spring to the house and prevented respondent from enjoying the benefits thereof.

Appellants' answer sets up two defenses: (1) That the right given by Fickert to the Greenes was a mere license to use the water; (2) that in any event Fickert, after arrangements had been made to acquire the Palmer tract, had rearranged the burdens and services as to the various portions of his common estate so as to allow for the joint user of the water of the "house spring" during the summer ranging season.

The trial court specifically found (1) that at the time of the Fickert-Greene sale, Fickert was the owner of the entire estate, (i. e., of both the servient and dominant tenements); that at the time of conveyance, "the benefit of the exclusive use of said house spring * * * together with the right to pipe the water therefrom and the right to enter upon the land upon which the spring is located, was obvious and apparent, and that said benefit appeared * * * to belong to the property conveyed to said Greenes as between it and the property which the vendor Fickert retained"; (2) that Greene had the exclusive free and uninterrupted use of the "house spring" from March 1, 1935, to January 1, 1936; (3) that during said period, the "house spring" "was obviously permanently used * * *" for the benefit of the Greene parcel. It found generally in accordance with the facts above stated and decreed that respondent was the owner of a right and easement to the use of the "house spring" and of the water from that spring for household and domestic use, and for watering stock and poultry, together with the right and easement to pipe the water from that spring through pipes from the location of the spring and restrain appellants from interfering with the use thereof by respondent.

It is now argued by appellants (1) that there is no evidentiary support for special findings 1 to 3 inclusive; (2) that the court's conclusion that respondent was entitled to all the water from the "house spring" was erroneous and not supported by the evidence.

[1] In an endeavor to prove that respondent was not entitled to the exclusive, free and uninterrupted use of the "house spring," appellants introduced testimony that in September, 1934, grantor Fickert installed a watering trough near the "house spring," connected it up with the spring, used it for watering cattle, and did not permit the house on the Greene portion to use this water or any portion of it except during the nighttime when it was not needed for cattle, and that this situation and arrangement continued during the cattle ranging seasons of 1934 and 1935. The evidence on this question is conflicting. We will refer to sufficient evidence to support the finding complained of.

There is no question but that the "house spring" supplied the house and buildings on parcel A up to a time when Fickert removed a watering trough which had been used at another spring called the "tunnel spring" over the "house spring." At some period in 1934, 1935 or 1936, Fickert made this change. The change allowed Fickert's cattle grazing on parcel B to water from the trough at the "house spring" during the summer months. By a hose connection, the supply could be changed from running to the trough and made to run through the pipes leading to parcel A. Under this change, it was necessary for the owner of parcel A to regulate the flow by walking 1500 feet from the house to the "house spring" each time it was changed. This procedure continued until the pipes were torn up as above indicated.

The question as to the time when this trough was installed at the "house spring" becomes important to show what easement or condition existed at the time of the transfer of parcel A to respondent and whether he would be entitled to the full flow of that particular spring. The evidence in this respect is not only conflicting but confusing. One witness, Gonzales, who was a tenant on parcel A from March, 1933, to March, 1935, testified that he used the "house spring" for two years prior to the time Greene came onto the property; that there was no trough at the "house spring" when he went there. He then testified that "as long as I been there I never seen it," but said in answer to the question: "Was there one before you left?" "Yes, afterwards Mr. Fickert took another trough over there to the other spring" (tunnel spring). Margaret Greene, wife of respondent, who moved into the house on the Greene property about the first day of March, 1935, testified:

"Q. When was the watering trough put in at the house spring? A. Well, they hauled the trough up there and it laid on the ground for three or four weeks, I think, it was hauled up there in August and it was connected * * *

"Q. (Interrupting) August what year? A. I wouldn't want to be hung for this answer, but I think it was in 1936 * * *"

She also testified that the first interruption of respondent's exclusive, free and continuous use of the spring came six or seven months after she "got the deed" (the deed from Fickert to Greene was dated October 30, 1935). Respondent testified that the change in the trough came about in September, 1936; that he had a conversation with Fickert pending negotiations for the purchase of the property wherein it is claimed that Fickert said: "* * * you got a nice spring there, and went on to tell me the fine watermelons the Davenports raised there and the nice garden that was also raised down by the barn with water from this spring, and that we could have all the garden we ever needed there from water from the spring." Much more evidence to the same effect was produced. Without further repetition of it, it will suffice to say that there was sufficient to support the finding that the change in the "house spring" was not made until sometime after the transfer of the property to respondent and that the use thereof up to the time of the change was exclusive, that such use was obvious and apparent, that the benefit appeared to belong to the property, and that Fickert intended to transfer the right to the exclusive use of that particular spring with the property to respondent.

[2, 3] The question of the conflict in the evidence was for the trial court to determine. There was certain evidence admitted, over objection, showing that the particular "house spring" was used exclusively by respondent's predecessors in interest back as far as 30 years. Even if the reception of this testimony was error, as claimed by appellants, it cannot be said that appellants were prejudiced thereby when they brought out the same evidence by their own witness and where there was other ample evidence to support the conclusion reached.

It therefore follows, under the findings, section 1104 of the Civil Code which provides that "A transfer of real property * * * creates in favor thereof an easement to use other real property of the person whose estate is transferred in the same manner and to the same extent as such property was obviously and permanently used by the person whose estate is transferred, for the benefit thereof, at the time when the transfer was agreed upon or completed," section 1084 of the Civil Code, and the decisions thereunder, that appellants' contentions are without merit. Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135; Kallenburg v. Long, 39 Cal.App. 731, 179 P. 730; Swarzwald v. Cooley, 39 Cal.App.2d 306, 103 P.2d 580; Jersey Farm Co. v. Atlanta Realty Co., 164 Cal. 412, 129 P. 593; Vargas v. Maderos, 191 Cal. 1, 214 P. 849.

[4] Appellants question the sufficiency of the allegations of the complaint. The complaint states a cause of action. No demurrer to the complaint was interposed in the trial court. This question cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Egilbert v. Hall, 44 Cal.App.2d 305, 311, 112 P. 2d 291. The evidence supports the findings and the findings support the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J. concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 581

WASHBURN v. WASHBURN.

Civ. 13317.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 9, 1942.

1. Divorce ⇐298(1)

In proceedings between divorced parents respecting custody of a minor child, the underlying principle, paramount to all others, is the welfare and best interest of child.

2. Divorce ⇐303(2)

Where a court has decreed with respect to the custody of a minor child as between divorced parents, there may be no change in the child's custody except where adequate cause therefor arises out of changed conditions, and, except for a modification based upon adequate grounds, a decree awarding custody is conclusive.

3. Divorce ⇐303(2)

Where a court has decreed with respect to the custody of a minor child as between divorced parents, the conduct of one of the parties to divorce which gives offense to the other, or even to the public at large, is not a matter that calls for a change of custody unless such conduct is shown to affect directly the welfare of child.

4. Divorce ⇐303(2)

Where a court has decreed custody of a minor child to one parent in divorce proceedings, such parent may not be deprived of custody for any supposed unfitness unless it is shown that he or she is so unfit as to endanger child's welfare.

5. Divorce ⇐303(2)

A "custody proceeding" with respect to custody of a minor child as between divorced parents is not one to discipline one parent for such parent's shortcomings as an individual, nor to reward the other for any wrong suffered therefrom, and faults of relatives or ancestors are not a matter of concern in such proceeding.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Custody Proceeding".

6. Divorce ⇐303(3)

Before a decree awarding custody of a minor child to a divorced parent may be vacated, the evidence must be clear and convincing that the child's welfare and best interest will be directly promoted by a change.

7. Divorce ⇐303(2)

Generally, there may be no change in the custody provisions of a divorce decree respecting custody of a minor child unless material facts occurring subsequent to decree render it essential or expedient for child's welfare that there be a change, and each case must be decided on its own facts.

8. Divorce ⇐298(6)

Under statute, a mother is entitled to custody of a minor child whose custody is involved in divorce proceedings, everything else being equal, unless the child has reached age which necessitates a particular education or preparation for its life work. Civ. Code, § 138.

9. Divorce ⇐303(3)

In proceedings respecting custody of a minor child as between divorced parents, only such evidence as bears on question of child's welfare and best interest is admissible.

10. Divorce ⇐303(3)

Where custody of a minor child as between divorced parents has once been decreed, in subsequent proceedings respecting custody of child evidence concerning child's welfare and best interest must generally be limited to such proper evidential facts as have arisen subsequent to decree, and, this being a matter of "substantive law" and not a "rule of evidence", it is not necessary to object to evidence that goes beyond the rule, since the court may disregard it.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Rule of Evidence" and "Substantive Law".

11. Divorce ⇐303(3)

Where custody of a minor child as between divorced parents has been decreed, and it is contended that subsequent conduct discloses a vital change in conditions upon which decree was entered, evidence of earlier facts may be shown for purpose of showing a change in conditions, but the decision may not be predicated thereon, except in unusual cases.

12. Divorce ⇐303(2)

As regards right to change of custody, a decree awarding custody of minor children to the mother as between divorced parents conclusively presupposed that the mother was the proper person to have custody of children despite her conduct prior to decree.

13. Divorce ⇐303(3)

An action involving a change of custody of minor children from one divorced parent to the other is a "judicial proceeding" to be conducted in a strictly judicial manner and in which the decision is to be rendered by judge only upon evidence before him.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judicial Proceeding".

14. Divorce ⇐301, 303(3)

Under the constitution, the judicial power to award custody of minor children as between divorced parents is vested in the courts alone, and in the exercise of that power the law requires a full hearing and a decision on evidence produced under oath or upon stipulation of parties.

15. Divorce ⇐303(3)

The power of decision vested in the trial court with respect to custody of minor children as between divorced parents is to be exercised by a duly constituted judge, and that power may not be delegated to investigators or other subordinate officials or attachés of the court, or anyone else.

16. Constitutional law ⇐80(1)

It is the constitutional right of every citizen and litigant to be governed by the law as expounded by judges and not by officials or employees provided by the legislature to assist a judge in an administrative or quasi judicial capacity.

17. Courts ⇐55

Investigators provided by legislature for the Domestic Relations Department of the Superior Court of the county of Los Angeles and the city and county of San Francisco, through an appointment by a majority of judges of respective counties, are investigators only, and they are not court assistants nor are they endowed with a single judicial attribute, and it is neither their province to recommend a decision or to decide an issue that comes before the court.

18. Divorce ⇐303(3)

An investigator for Domestic Relations Department of Superior Court of Los Angeles county stands in no better position than an ordinary witness in proceedings respecting custody of minor children as between divorced parents, and his report is not "prima facie evidence" and investigator must be available for cross-examination on any matter on which he reports at trial judge's instance, and investigator cannot make a secret report in such proceedings.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Evidence".

19. Divorce ⇐303(3)

Where report submitted by investigator for Domestic Relations Department of Superior Court of Los Angeles county in proceedings wherein a divorced husband sought modification of provisions of divorce decree awarding custody of minor children to wife was composed chiefly of hearsay, and report was not confined to facts which had occurred subsequent to decree, and trial judge had based an order awarding custody of children to husband upon the report and other testimony that was inadmissible, the order was unauthorized.

20. Divorce ⇐303(3)

In proceedings wherein a divorced husband sought modification of provisions of divorce decree awarding custody of minor children to wife, the trial court was not authorized to order wife to repay a certain sum representing a payment for maintenance of children, since that was not a matter within the issues.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Divorce proceedings by Julia C. Washburn against Donald K. Washburn, wherein a decree was entered granting a divorce to plaintiff. From an order modifying provisions in the decree awarding custody of minor children to plaintiff, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Charles V. Caldwell, of Los Angeles, and Howard E. Hurd, of Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Thomas P. Menzies and M. W. Phelan, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This appeal relates to a contest between divorced parents concerning the custody of their minor children, a girl 9 and a boy 15 years of age. In the decree entered on December 14, 1939, granting the divorce to the mother after a contested trial, it was provided that she should have the custody of the children subject to the right of the father to visit them at reasonable times and to have them in his custody on alternate weekends. Less than six months after the interlocutory decree was entered the father procured an order directing the mother to show cause why the custody of the children should not be awarded to him on the grounds that since the entry of the interlocutory decree (1) she had neglected to care for the children properly and (2) she was no longer a fit and proper person to have their care, custody and control. Except to the extent that these grounds implied that the welfare and best interests of the children required a change of custody, there was no direct issue in respect thereto and no competent evidence was adduced thereon.

Upon the testimony introduced at the hearing and upon a written report and recommendation signed by an investigator with the euphonious superscription of "court assistant," the court awarded the custody of the children to the father. Neither the report nor the evidence was restricted by the court to the period subsequent to the decree. Moreover, it appears from the record that the modification of the custody provisions of the judgment was based upon the mother's conduct prior to the original trial and known to the father. So far as the ruling is based upon the mother's conduct subsequent to the divorce decree, it appears that such conduct was of a like tenor and no more serious than that which preceded the decree.

The mother contends (1) that there was no evidence of any change of circumstances, nor was she shown to be less fit to have the custody of the children at the time of the hearing than at the time of the decree; (2) that the court based its ruling on matters which were taken into account in the divorce trial and there adjudicated when the court awarded the custody to her; (3) that the court refused to receive evidence bearing on the unfitness of the father to have the custody, and applied one standard of conduct to the mother and another to the father; (4) that the record discloses an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court.

Inasmuch as the trial court had previously read the report of the domestic relations investigator, it was stipulated by counsel on the trial that the report might be received in evidence. Thereupon counsel for the plaintiff stated that he understood the court was of the view that the report established a prima facie case for the defendant and that it was the duty of the plaintiff to controvert it, after which defendant would have the right of rebuttal. To that the court responded: "* * * the way I think we should proceed in this matter would be that instead of the moving party putting on evidence, that the moving party stand on the report, which is, of course, evidence and subject to be controverted. In other words, it is not conclusive evidence. That is the situation." Aside from the report the only evidence offered on the case of the defendant was testimony pertaining to certain personal conduct of the plaintiff prior and subsequent to the divorce. This testimony was given by two detectives who shadowed the wife from early in November, 1939, to June, 1940. One of the detectives testified he had seen Mrs. Washburn intoxicated on a dozen occasions, but with one exception none of these occasions was shown to have occurred subsequent to the decree of divorce. Other episodes testified to by the detectives occurred prior to the decree, with but two exceptions. One of these is that of her visit to her doctor's apartment on January 10, 1940. She and the doctor both testified that such visit was strictly professional. The other pertained to her meeting the doctor on the preceding December 19th at Palm Springs, but she was there accompanied by her neighbor and friend. All parties involved testified that the meeting was accidental and not prearranged.

It is undisputed that both parties have affection for the children and the children for them. Both children suffer from an asthmatic condition, which in the case of the girl is such as to require rest periods in school. Both parents are equally interested in their welfare and in providing the best educational advantages for them. In that regard the father, when called to the stand by counsel for the mother, testified that he had no educational plans for the children which would work out better for them than those employed by the mother. He also testified that he had visited the home of plaintiff quite often to see his children and always found the house clean, and added that Mrs. Washburn was "one of the best of housekeepers." He always found someone at home with the children if the mother was not there. So far as the evidence goes there is not one iota to indicate that the children did not have the best of care from their mother, and none to indicate that any of the acts or conduct of the mother of which the father complains was known to the children. The maternal grandmother of the children lives in the mother's home and assists with the housework and the care of the children. The father is active in his business and employs a housekeeper to maintain his home; and so if the children were to reside in his home they would be largely under the immediate care of a housekeeper or of a governess if he employed one, as he stated he would if awarded the custody. Moreover, so far as the record discloses the home surroundings are the same now as when the interlocutory decree was signed.

The record does not disclose the ground upon which the decree of divorce was granted. It does, however, show that the parties separated about September 1, 1939, when the husband left home to reside elsewhere. When the wife in October, 1939, filed her action for divorce the husband immediately employed detectives to shadow her, and this shadowing continued not only up to the date of the divorce trial but until after the order to show cause herein was issued and served. What acts or conduct of the wife were relied upon by the husband at the divorce trial to award the custody of the children to him rather than to the wife is not disclosed by the instant record. The wife's acts and conduct on the night prior to the contested divorce action, upon which the judge below relied so heavily in transferring the custody of the children, was known at the time of its occurrence by the husband. Accordingly we must necessarily assume that the facts in connection with that episode became a part of the record in the divorce action and were considered by the court. If they were not, it is not a matter upon which the husband may rely in the instant case.

[1-7] In custody cases the underlying principle, paramount to all others, is the welfare and best interest of the child. In no way in conflict with this rule is another, equally well established, that once a court has decreed it there may be no change in the child's custody except where adequate cause therefor arises out of changed conditions. This principle is based on the idea not only that the stability of the home life of the children is an important and vital factor, but also that the turmoil of litigation must somewhere end. Short of a modification based upon adequate grounds, the decree awarding custody is conclusive and settled beyond recall other than by appeal. Moreover, the acts and conduct of one of the parties to the divorce which give offense to the other, or even to the public at large, are not a matter that calls for or permits a change of custody unless such acts and conduct are shown to affect directly the welfare and best interest of the child. Where a court has decreed custody to one parent, such parent may not be deprived of the custody for any supposed unfitness unless it be shown that he or she is so unfit as to endanger the child's welfare. A custody proceeding is not one to discipline one parent for such parent's shortcomings as an individual, nor to reward the other for any wrong suffered therefrom. Much less are the faults of relatives or ancestors a matter of any concern. Before a decree awarding custody may be vacated and the child's life unsettled the evidence must be clear and convincing that the child's welfare and best interest will be directly promoted by a change. Generally speaking, there may be no change in the custody provisions of a decree unless the material facts and circumstances occurring subsequently are of a kind to render it essential or expedient for the welfare of the child that there be a change. While each case must be solved on its own facts, there are, of course, elemental factors common to all cases that must not be overlooked.

[8] It is not open to question, and indeed it is universally recognized, that the mother is the natural custodian of her young. This view proceeds on the well known fact that there is no satisfactory substitute for a mother's love. So true is this that in this state the code exacts that she shall have custody of her child, everything else being equal, unless the child has reached the age which necessitates a particular education or preparation for its life work. Civ.Code, § 138. In the case of girls it is obvious that they are particularly in need of the sympathy, affection, consideration and tender care which only a mother can give—and so normally they should be in her custody.

[9-11] Only such evidence as bears on the question of the welfare and the best interest of the child is admissible or to be considered. Where custody has once been decreed such evidence must generally be limited to such proper and material evidential facts as have arisen subsequent to the decree. As this is a matter of substantive law and not a rule of evidence, it is not necessary to object to the evidence that goes beyond the rule, as the court must disregard it. Wigmore on Evidence, 3d Ed., § 2. Where it is contended that the subsequent conduct discloses a vital change in the conditions upon which the decree was entered, such earlier facts may be shown for that one purpose; but the decision may not be predicated thereon, except in unusual cases. We have no such unusual case here.

[12, 13] Although we are deprived of a knowledge of the pleadings and the evidence upon which the decree was entered in favor of plaintiff, nevertheless such a decree conclusively presupposes that the mother was the proper person to have the custody of the children despite any conduct prior to the court's decision. The decision may or may not have considered the father an equally proper person to have the custody of the children, but it is clear that the court concluded that the welfare of the children required that the custody be awarded in the manner it decreed. However, we think it needs to be made clear that an action or issue involving the change of custody of minor children from one parent to the other is a judicial proceeding, to be conducted in a strictly judicial manner, in which the decision is to be rendered by the judge only upon evidence before him.

[14-18] Under the Constitution of this state the judicial power to award the custody of children is vested in the courts alone, and in the exercise of that power the law requires a full hearing and a decision on the evidence produced under oath or upon the stipulation of the parties. The power of decision vested in the trial court is to be exercised by a duly constituted judge, and that power may not be delegated to investigators or other subordinate officials or attachés of the court, or anyone else. The court may not even delegate to a referee the power to decree a divorce upon sworn testimony, duly corroborated, taken by a referee vested with the power to administer oaths. Civ.Code, § 130. It is the constitutional right of every citizen and every litigant to be governed by the law as expounded by the judges, and not by officials or employees provided by the legislature to assist a judge in an administrative or quasi-judicial capacity. Such help as may be accorded a judge to assist him in the exercise of his judicial functions may never be permitted to reach the point where someone else decides the case or an issue before him. Investigators provided by the legislature for the Domestic Relations Department of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles and the City and County of San Francisco, through appointment by a majority of the judges of the respective counties, are investigators only; nothing more. They are not court assistants nor are they endowed with a single judicial attribute. It is neither their province to recommend a decision nor to decide a single issue that comes before the court. They do not rank with special masters, commissioners or auditors appointed by the court. They have not even power to administer the oath or to take evidence. It is not contempt of court for a witness or a party to deny them information. They may act as messengers of and acquire information for the judge, but in no event may their influence upon the chancellor guide or control the decision of a cause. The legislature does not prescribe their duties, and their duties are only such as the judges of the court declare; and such may in no event extend beyond the strict limits of the Constitution. The notion that the report of an investigator is prima facie evidence, or that an investigator may delve into and report on factual matters antecedent to the date of a prior decree, has no legal sanction.

[19] There is here no need to mark the exact boundaries beyond which an investigator may not go as to matters which have transpired subsequent to a decree. It is enough to say that an investigator stands in no better position than an ordinary witness, and must be available for complete cross-examination on any matter on which he or she reports at the instance of a judge. Moreover, an investigator may make no secret report, but stands like any other person—subject to an order of contempt if he does. There is no back door to the courts for witnesses, investigators, litigants or others. We pronounce thus positively because there appears over the years to have been a popular misapprehension by the courts as to their relation to their attachés under the statutes. Cf. Wigmore on Evidence, 3d Ed., vol. 1, p. 111; Bestel v. Bestel, 153 Or. 100, 44 P.2d 1078, 53 P.2d 525.

[20] In the instant case the report submitted violates nearly all the rules. It does not possess a single vestige of judicial restraint. Aside from "recommending" a change of custody from the mother to the father, the report, which occupies 15 printed pages of respondent's brief, is a very partial and extreme brief and argument for defendant. Instead of seeking facts during the period subsequent to the interlocutory decree and bearing directly on the issues involved, made necessary by the order to show cause, the report goes back thirty years to narrate the matrimonial history of plaintiff's mother and sister, as well as that of her closest friend. It eulogizes the country home of the father, but reaches conclusions as to his own conduct which are not supported by his own admissions, and evidences the biased credulity of the investigator. It is almost entirely hearsay, and most of it is hearsay piled upon hearsay, with ample ground for appellant's complaint that the report impales her on the apex of a pyramid of neighborhood gossip and hearsay. It contains medical diagnoses and conclusions incapable of acceptance from such a source and directly conflicting with the sworn testimony of a qualified physician.

The force and influence of the investigator's report upon the judge is revealed by innumerable references to it in his questions to witnesses and his quotations from it as he decided the case from the bench. Moreover, he rested his decision in large part on it as well as on testimony that was inadmissible. For that reason alone there must be a reversal.

[21] A further contention that the court was without authority to order Mrs. Washburn to repay the sum of $250, representing the September payment for the maintenance of the children, is well taken. It was not a matter within the issues.

The order is reversed.

MOORE, P. J., and McComb, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 433

DAVIES et al. v. SYMMES et al. (GREENSPUN, Intervener).

Civ. 13258.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 30, 1942.

As modified Feb. 24, 1942.

1. Pleading ⇐263

There is no error in refusing permission to amend answer to set up defenses which are insufficient in law.

2. Quieting title ⇐42

Where motion for leave to amend answer in action to quiet title was not made until over seven months after original answer was filed, refusal of leave to amend would not constitute abuse of discretion, in absence of satisfactory excuse for the delay, if new issues tendered by amendment would have interfered with prompt trial of case in manner fair to all parties, even if amendment pleaded sufficient facts to establish good defense.

3. Mortgages ⇐294

A deed reconveying property from grantees to grantors, reciting that deed was given and accepted in full satisfaction of trust deed indebtedness on premises, was supported by a "valuable consideration", so as to preclude grantors in reconveyance deed from rescinding on ground that transaction was not supported by consideration.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Valuable Consideration".

4. Quieting title ⇐42

Where, in action to quiet title to land which defendant had reconveyed to plaintiffs, amendment to answer, after pleading plaintiff's deceit and imposition in obtaining reconveyance, alleged that defendant had become ill, and that, believing that in order to recover his health it would be necessary to rid himself of his business worries, he urged plaintiffs to take a reconveyance, which they did, and defendant's evidence was to same effect, defendant's pleading and evidence destroyed his own theory, and the amendment was properly denied.

5. Deeds ⇐68(3)

The fact that grantor becomes worried on being advised that he is suffering from serious malady, and sets about to rid himself of debts and annoying business responsibility in order to devote himself unreservedly to restoration of his health, does not indicate an impairment of his mentality, as respects validity of deed.

6. Mortgages ⇐294

Where grantee, believing he was suffering from serious illness which required him to terminate all business worries in order to recover, reconveyed property to grantors by deed reciting that it was given in full satisfaction of trust deed indebtedness on property, and grantee subsequently recovered his health, his reconveyance deed was not given for an "inadequate consideration".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Inadequate Consideration".

7. Mortgages ⇐294

Where grantee, believing that he was suffering a serious illness which required that he be relieved of all business worries, insisted that grantors accept in satisfaction of trust deed indebtedness on property, a reconveyance of property over grantors' objections, and, according to grantee's own testimony, grantors' statement of willingness to extend time and carry transaction until question of grantee's health could be more definitely determined, grantee could not subsequently rescind his reconveyance on theory that he had been imposed upon or overpersuaded by grantors.

8. Pleading ⇐236(7)

Where defendant seeks to amend answer by injecting new issues which would entitle plaintiffs to continuance, he must make a showing excusing want of diligence in making application for amendment, and where he fails to do so, a denial of amendment is not abuse of discretion.

9. Pleading ⇐236(7)

Though fact that an amendment of a pleading will necessitate a continuance does not necessarily furnish sufficient reason for refusing right to amend, it does where there has been a long and unexcused delay.

10. Quieting title ⇐43

The rule that where it is sought to recover possession of property or to quiet title thereto, defendant need not anticipate source of plaintiff's title and may prove, without pleading fact, that it depends on a void conveyance, is an exception to rule that fraud, undue influence, want of consideration, and similar defenses, must be pleaded, and rests on supposition that defendant does not know and excuses him from ascertaining source of plaintiff's title before he answers, and such departure from established procedure is tolerated only through necessity and in exceptional cases.

11. Quieting title ⇐43

The rule applied in certain cases that defendant in action to quiet title is not bound to anticipate source of plaintiff's title and may prove, without pleading fact, that it depends on a void conveyance, was inapplicable, where defendants had purchased land from plaintiffs and had reconveyed it to plaintiffs, but defendants had affirmative duty of proving invalidity of their deed to plaintiffs in order to defeat plaintiffs' title or establish their own, and also of pleading their grounds for rescission.

12. Quieting title ⇐39

Where grantors to whom grantees had reconveyed land sought to quiet title thereto after grantees filed notice of rescission as to their deed of reconveyance, customary practice would be for defendant grantees to have filed a cross-complaint for rescission on which proper issues would have been framed by pleadings.

13. Fraud ⇐41

It is fundamental that wherever fraud constitutes an element of a cause of action or of an affirmative defense, or is foundation of a right sought to be established, it must be pleaded.

14. Contracts ⇐340, 342

Defenses of undue influence and want of consideration must be pleaded.

15. Quieting title ⇐43

In action to quiet title brought by grantors, to whom grantees had reconveyed property, after grantees had served notice on grantors of rescission of their reconveyance deed, original grantees' denial of original grantors' title and an allegation of title in themselves did not authorize admission of evidence of grantors' fraud or undue influence in obtaining the reconveyance and want of consideration therefor, which were not pleaded.

16. Trial ⇐395(6)

Findings that allegations of answer "which are in conflict with the foregoing findings are untrue" were insufficient.

17. Trial ⇐395(9)

Where trial court made specific and sufficient findings on all material issues, judgment was sufficiently supported by findings, notwithstanding insufficiency of other findings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Arthur Davies and others against Carrick W. Symmes and wife to quiet title to land, in which M. Greenspun intervened. From a judgment for plaintiffs and intervener, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Laurence B. Martin and Samuel Reisman, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

David J. Keily and Wm. P. Mealey, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Davies.

Feinfeld & Feinfeld, of Los Angeles, for intervener and respondent Greenspun.

SHINN, Justice.

Appeal by defendants from a decree in favor of plaintiffs and intervener in an action to quiet title to 4½ acres of land. Appellants appear by counsel other than those who represented them in the court below.

The principal ground relied upon for reversal is that appellants were denied the right to amend their joint answers to the complaint and the complaint in intervention. While we have concluded that no error was committed in ruling on the applications to amend, the facts of the case are sufficiently peculiar to require a somewhat extended statement. In considering the applications to amend, the inquiry went beyond mere matters of procedure and involved the validity of the proposed defenses.

The complaint to quiet title was filed March 14, 1939. Defendants Carrick W. Symmes and wife (herein referred to as defendants) answered April 14, 1939, denying plaintiffs' title and asserting title in themselves. The complaint in intervention was filed June 8, 1939, alleging that intervener Greenspun held an oil lease with option to purchase the land, executed by plaintiffs on August 8, 1938; that an oil well had been drilled under the lease and was nearly completed. Defendants answered the complaint in intervention, again asserting title in themselves and denying all adverse rights of plaintiffs and intervener. A motion for early trial was granted and the case was set for November 27, 1939. On November 21, 1939, defendants gave notice of an application to amend their answers. The proposed amended answers to the complaint and the complaint in intervention contained substantially the same matter. The motion was presented in the law and motion department and was denied with leave to renew the same before the trial judge; the trial was continued for 30 days. On December 26, 1939, defendants gave notice of a motion to file amended answers differing in material respects from those first proposed, and they presented the motion to the trial judge when the trial was opened January 2, 1940. The record shows that the motion was denied for the following reasons: that no facts were alleged which were unknown to defendants or their counsel when the original answers were filed; that there had been unexcused delay in tendering the amendments; that allowance of the amendments would necessitate a continuance of the trial to the prejudice of the rights of plaintiffs and intervener and, finally, that the proposed defenses, as limited by defendants' opening statement, were insufficient. We should state here that the question of the right to amend the answers was presented and ruled upon at the close of the trial as well as at the beginning. This is an important fact in our consideration of the merits of the appeal.

The second proposed amended answers, which differed from those first proposed in respects to be noticed later, alleged that defendants had purchased the land from plaintiffs in August, 1937, for $4,750, paying $1,000 in cash and giving a note and trust deed on the land for $3,750, upon which they later paid $500; that in December, 1937, defendants had reconveyed the land to plaintiffs, and in that connection three separate grounds for rescission of their deed were alleged or attempted to be alleged, namely, that Dr. Symmes (Carrick W. Symmes) on the date of the deed was mentally incompetent; that plaintiffs had procured the deed through fraud, and in addition thereto that Dr. Symmes was suffering from mental weakness and worry and because thereof conveyed the land and caused his wife to convey it without consideration.

Upon the opening of the trial defendants' counsel offered the amendments and stated at length what they expected to prove should the amendments be allowed. No reference was made to the defense of actual fraud, and there was a definite abandonment of the defense of incompetency. A clear intention was manifested to rest the defense upon the alleged mental weakness of Dr. Symmes and inadequacy, but not total want, of consideration for the reconveyance. This was evidenced by several colloquies between court and counsel. The discussion culminated with the following statement by the court: "There is no intimation of any fraud or improper actions on the part of plaintiffs. Apparently, the only thing is that Dr. Symmes got sick and became scared that he was going to die. That is insufficient." This statement of the court correctly summarized counsel's statement of what the defendants expected to prove and the argument that had been made in the presentation of the application to amend. Counsel throughout the discussion acquiesced in the court's statements of the issue tendered for decision. The ruling which followed, disallowing the amendments, was made under no misapprehension on the part of the court or counsel as to the withdrawal of two of the pleaded defenses and the abandonment of the contention that the deed was given without any consideration. Sufficient reasons for the abandonment of these defenses will be disclosed in the course of our discussion.

The remaining allegations which it was contended constituted a defense to the action were in substance the following: that Dr. Symmes became ill mentally and physically to such an extent that he was unable to exercise ordinary care and judgment in the handling of his own affairs; that he believed himself to be suffering with cancer, was on the verge of a nervous breakdown, that he would have to curtail his activities and remain under the care of medical advisers; that he believed that he would be unable to meet the expense of medical care and attention or to pay the balance of the purchase price of $3,250 on the property, although in fact he was well able to do so; that he believed he was more likely to die than to recover and in order to recover it would be necessary for him to get rid of all his worries; that in case of his death his wife would not be able to carry on if she still had and retained said real property; that these matters preyed on his mind until he almost suffered a nervous breakdown, and that all of such facts were known to plaintiffs; that under these circumstances he conveyed the property to plaintiffs for no consideration, although the property at that time, with improvements placed thereon by him, was worth not less than $10,000 and was subject only to an indebtedness of $3,250 in favor of plaintiffs. It was further alleged that plaintiffs had voluntarily offered to extend and carry along indefinitely the said indebtedness of defendants Symmes in the amount of $3,250; that they suggested to Dr. Symmes that his condition of health might not be as bad as he believed it to be and that it was possible that his medical advisers were in error, and further suggested that he take no action to dispose of the property. It was then alleged that Dr. Symmes still urged plaintiffs to accept the conveyance of said property, which they agreed to do, promising at the same time to hold title for defendants and to reconvey it to them upon payment of the trust deed indebtedness if Dr. Symmes recovered within 12 or 15 months. They alleged that they made the conveyance in reliance upon the promise and agreement on the part of plaintiffs to hold title for them and to reconvey it upon the conditions stated; that Dr. Symmes' health did improve; that defendants offered to pay the $3,250 plus taxes and interest and demanded a deed; that plaintiffs refused to accept the money or give the deed and that defendants on February 8, 1939, served on plaintiffs, and on February 14, 1939, recorded, a notice of rescission of the conveyance. It was alleged that they had deposited with the clerk at the time they filed their original answer the sum of $3,000 for payment to plaintiffs for a reconveyance.

In the first proposed amendments presented in the law and motion department no attempt was made to allege fraud. Defendants had had more than seven months since the filing of their original answers in which to consider their defenses. The court at that time pointed out the insufficiency of the proposed answers in that connection, and it would appear that defendants shortly thereafter made the discovery that they had been deceived. Accordingly, the amendments tendered at the time of trial contained an additional paragraph reading as follows: "That plaintiffs herein never had any intention of doing any of the matters and things mentioned herein relative to holding said property for these defendants and conveying same to them as alleged herein, and their representations in that respect were false as they well knew." This paragraph constituted the only attempt made in the answers to allege a fraudulent purpose on the part of plaintiffs.

It is quite obvious that if these defenses were meritorious and they intended to rely upon them, defendants have suffered through loss of the right to prove them. It is not questioned that the defense of mental incompetency was sufficiently alleged. We shall assume, without deciding, that the bare allegation that a promise was made without intention to keep it would be sufficient to charge actual fraud, in the absence of any allegation that the promise was made with a fraudulent intent and purpose to induce the making of the conveyance.

Allowance of the amendments would have made it necessary for plaintiffs and intervener to take a continuance in order to prepare for trial of the new issues. This would have resulted in embarrassment and possible loss to them. Their title would have remained under a cloud for some additional time and this might easily have interfered with their oil development program. But as these defenses were not pressed, we need not consider them further.

There remained a third alleged defense, namely, that Dr. Symmes was suffering from great mental weakness which seriously impaired his business judgment, and that as a result thereof he conveyed away his property for a grossly inadequate consideration. Defendants endeavored to state a case falling within the rule which allows equitable relief in such cases. Typical situations calling for the application of the doctrine are to be found in Shaffer v. Security T. & S. Bank, 1935, 4 Cal.App.2d 707, 41 P.2d 948, and cases there cited, which are relied upon by defendants. These cases are of interest in our inquiry only because they point out essentials of a case calling for relief under the above rule which are conspicuously absent from defendants' pleaded case.

[1,2] If, therefore, this remaining defense was insufficient, there was no error in refusing permission to amend the answers. It would have been futile to receive proof of facts which were insufficient to constitute a defense to the action. Even had sufficient facts been pleaded to establish a good defense, if the new issues were such that allowance of the amendments would have interfered with a prompt trial of the case in a manner fair to all parties, refusal of the right to amend would not have been an abuse of discretion in the absence of a satisfactory excuse for the delay in making application to amend.

Upon either hypothesis the rulings must be sustained.

In denying leave to amend, the court ruled that the proposed pleading stated no valid grounds for rescission. But, as we have stated, a similar ruling was made at the close of the case. At that time certain evidence had been placed before the court by the defendants which, in our opinion, satisfactorily proved that the pleaded defense had no merit whatever. We shall therefore discuss the pleading and the proof together in judging whether defendants have suffered any injustice.

[3] In the trial plaintiffs introduced in evidence the deed of defendants to plaintiffs dated December 29, 1937. It recited that the deed was given and was accepted in full satisfaction of the trust deed indebtedness. This was a valuable consideration. Intervener introduced his oil lease and option to purchase dated, respectively, August 8, 1938, and August 3, 1938. Defendants then offered in evidence the deposition of plaintiff Arthur Davies, taken at their instance before they filed their answer. In this deposition Davies testified to four or five conversations with Dr. Symmes before the deed was executed, which we find it unnecessary to state except in substance. According to this witness, Dr. Symmes stated that he had been advised that he was suffering from cancer and that he was undergoing expensive treatment therefor; that he repeatedly and persistently requested Davies to take back the property and cancel the trust deed indebtedness; that Dr. Symmes stated emphatically that he wished to rid himself not only of the property itself but also of the nursery business which he had undertaken to conduct thereon and which he had found to be extremely burdensome. Other reasons of similar import were given. Davies testified in detail as to his repeated attempts to dissuade Dr. Symmes from his plans and to his own reluctance to accept the conveyance. In brief, his testimony, if unimpeached, dispelled any suspicion of bad faith on his part. Defendants also, for reasons best known to their counsel, called a witness Byrens, who testified that he had had several conversations with Dr. Symmes nearly a year after the date of the deed, in which he asked that Dr. and Mrs. Symmes execute statements to identify themselves as the grantors in the deed; that Dr. Symmes expressed his willingness to do so, stated that he had purchased the property from plaintiffs but could not "make the grade," no longer had any interest in the property, and that the statements would be executed when his wife returned from a visit. The statements were later found to be unnecessary. The testimony of these witnesses stood uncontradicted. Defendants also offered in evidence three letters written by Dr. Symmes and a notice of rescission signed by Dr. and Mrs. Symmes. The letters read as follows: "Sunday Night. My dear Mr. Davies: I am told by my physicians that I have a fighting chance to get well if I give up down here and get out, and can get rid of all worries. I now see no chance of ever paying for the Gardena property, neither can I depend on Mr. Lands to do so, if I am out of the picture. If you will take my deed for the property and all stationary fixtures thereon, I feel that I must face it and take my loss and get rid of worries. My treatments are almost prohibitive, and I'm losing ground fast,—almost a nervous wreck. May I please ask you to do this one kind act, at once. I shall then tell Lands he is welcome to all the potted plants, and for you and he to come to terms on rental of the property. You cannot lose, and it will help me out personally, and relieve my mind so that if the worst comes to the worst, my wife will be able to carry on without troubles at Gardena.

May I ask you to please make out the necessary papers and forward to us at once, for in so doing I feel that perhaps I can again have a chance. I thought I could carry on, but find I was mistaken. Please let me hear from you at once. Yours truly Dr. C. W. Symmes. I owe nothing save 33.90 to the Water Co. and 25.00 to Duncan, all other bills are paid, and these I will gladly pay you when you accept the deed."

"12/30/37. My dear Mr. Davies: Your letter with papers received this morning. I have gone before a notary with Mrs. Symmes and filled in the statement of identity, also signed the deed as directed. As to Mr. Lands, I will say that he has never entered into the picture as far as the land is concerned, consequently there can be no claim in any title. Any agreement I have had with him, as he put it himself, put him in the light of a hired hand without pay. I will say, however, that after we got into it and his wife quit work he has drawn on me to the extent of about $10.00 per week for living expenses, and this part I was never intended to do. I still wish him well, so if you can arrange with him satisfactorily to stay on, I shall give him my end of all potted plants,—his ½ of all expenses paid by me, and more,—cancel his personal debt to me in money advanced. What more can I do? All I ask is my $500.00 tractor from the place. I enclose $33.90 to the Water Co. which you will please see is paid to them direct. This is for pipe line on the N. end of the acreage which they installed. I shall write Mr. Lands regarding the Duncan $25.00 bill, and tell him that in view of the fact that I give him all these things, I think he should pay this bill. However, will you please see Mr. Duncan, and tell him that if Lands does not pay the bill quite soon, for him to send statement to me and I will pay same. I thank you for your kindness to me, and great consideration toward me in my late troubles, and I assure you I am going to make a gallant fight to get back on my feet. Yours very truly, Dr. C. W. Symmes."

"1/6/38. My dear Mr. Davies: So far Mr. Lands has not been in to see me; neither have I felt equal to call on him. Any arrangement you can make with him will be alright with me, as I feel the sooner I get this thing off my mind the quicker I can pull my nerves together and perhaps pull out of this. If it is going to help Lands in anyway and proper payments can be made with Lands for same, he can have the tractor back to work the ground. I leave it all up to you. Yours very truly, Dr. C. W. Symmes."

The notice of rescission signed by appellants February 8, 1939, was couched in legal phraseology and stated as reasons for the rescission mistake, duress, menace, fraud, undue influence, no consideration, insufficiency of consideration, and that the consideration failed in whole or in part. No reference was made therein to the alleged agreement to reconvey the property.

At the close of the evidence intervener was allowed to file a supplemental complaint alleging that he had tendered to plaintiffs $13,500, the price at which the land had been optioned to him by plaintiffs. Defendants were allowed to file their amended answer to the supplemental complaint in intervention, as theretofore proposed, under a stipulation that plaintiffs and intervener might move to strike out the special defenses pleaded therein. This course was followed and the court struck out all allegations which were not in the original answer. This ruling, as we shall point out, was not erroneous.

[4] Defendants endeavored to plead a case of deceit and imposition practiced upon Dr. Symmes, but in their pleading they went too far and destroyed their own theory. And what they failed to plead to exclude them from the doctrine they rely upon, they proceeded to prove. That doctrine has no application to the facts which defendants themselves developed. The letters of Dr. Symmes clearly showed that he was determined to rid himself of the property. They were devoid of any suggestion that it was to be held for the benefit of defendants and was to be reconveyed, or that Dr. Symmes wanted to get it back in any event. While not conclusive, they furnished strong proof of the fact that he did not rely upon or expect or even have in mind any reconveyance of the property. They expressed his purpose in making the deed as if it was intended to be an unqualified and unconditional conveyance of the land. He could not have more definitely stated his real purpose in disposing of the property than he did in his letters and other declarations. Certainly he acted spontaneously, willing, and advisedly, without confusion in his ideas or uncertainty in his purpose.

[5, 6] The fact that a man becomes worried upon being advised that he is suffering from a serious malady and sets about to rid himself of debt and annoying business responsibility in order that he may devote himself unreservedly to the restoration of his health does not indicate an impairment of his mentality. Upon the contrary, it shows something more than ordinary good sense. And when we consider the matter of consideration which Dr. Symmes received for his deed we must remember that he was not concerned with mere dollars. It was alleged, and evidence was offered by defendants to prove, that he was a man of wealth. He was concerned about his health. The nursery business which he had undertaken had proven expensive and it worried him. He rid himself of it for sufficient reasons; he recovered his health. Who can say that he was foolish or improvident or that the consideration which he received was grossly or at all inadequate?

[7] In the face of the written declarations of Dr. Symmes, and other evidence introduced by defendants, the court could scarcely have done otherwise than strike out the new matter which had not already been abandoned. How could it have been held that Dr. Symmes had been imposed upon or over-persuaded in a transaction which he conceived and practically forced upon plaintiffs? The trial judge thought that defendants not only pleaded but also proved their conveyance to have been given freely, understandingly, and for a sufficient consideration. That is the view of the case which we entertain. It is not at all a case calling for equitable relief. Either plaintiff Arthur Davies was a scoundrel practicing deceit upon a trusting friend or he was an accommodating friend seeking no advantage for himself. He could not have been both. Defendants, insinuating that he was the former, were at some pains in their pleading and proof to show that he was the latter. They must abide by the result.

We might rest our approval of the rulings upon the ground which we have stated but we prefer to go further. Let us suppose that sufficient facts had been alleged to show a case of imposition, such as defendants attempted to allege, or defenses of incompetency and actual fraud. In any of these events plaintiffs and intervener would have been obliged to ask for a continuance. They could not have been compelled to go to trial without ample time in which to prepare their case

[8, 9] There is much authority for the proposition that one seeking to amend under such circumstances must make a showing excusing any want of diligence in making the application, and that where he fails to do so, denial of the privilege of amending is not an abuse of discretion. Williams v. Youtz, 1918, 178 Cal. 107, 172 P. 383; Manha v. Union Fertilizer Co., 1907, 151 Cal. 581, 91 P. 393; Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Goldstein, 1938, 25 Cal.App.2d 37, 76 P.2d 545. Of course the fact that an amendment will necessitate a continuance does not necessarily furnish a sufficient reason for refusing the right to amend, but it does where there has been long and unexcused delay such as we are considering. Aside from the usual claim that counsel had been busy in other matters, the sole excuse was that counsel who filed the original answers believed them to be broad enough to permit defendants to prove grounds for rescission until he was advised by associate counsel shortly before the trial that they were insufficient for that purpose. From the proceedings which we have described it would appear to be somewhat more than doubtful that it was ever intended to rely seriously, or at all, on the defenses of fraud and incompetency. But if we take the explanation at its face value it will be apparent that it was planned from the beginning to prove these grounds for rescission without pleading them. Whether they were added as an afterthought or under a plan to take opposing counsel by surprise, we find ourselves in agreement with the views of the trial judge as to the insufficiency of the excuse offered for the delay. Lest it be thought that the muddled situation described must have resulted from youth and inexperience of counsel, we might add that no such contention is or could well be made upon the record.

[10-12] It is now contended that defendants should have been allowed to prove their defenses under a denial of plaintiffs' title and an allegation of title in themselves. They rely upon the rules stated in Sparrow v. Rhoades, 1888, 76 Cal. 208, 18 P. 245, 9 Am.St.Rep. 197; Bird v. Murphy, 1925, 72 Cal.App. 39, 236 P. 154, and like cases, that where it is sought to recover possession of property or to quiet title thereto, the defendant is not bound to anticipate the source of plaintiff's title and may prove, without pleading the fact, that it depends upon a void conveyance. This is an exception to the rule that fraud, undue influence, want of consideration, and like defenses must be pleaded. It rests upon the supposition that the defendant does not know, and it excuses him from ascertaining, the source of plaintiff's title before he answers. The effect of it is to permit proof of the void character of a conveyance without the framing of issues by comprehensive pleadings. Such a departure from established procedure is tolerated only through necessity and in exceptional cases. But the rule relied upon could have no application to the facts of the case before us. Defendants had purchased the land from plaintiffs and had reconveyed it to them. They knew that plaintiffs' title depended upon the latter deed, which they sought to rescind. They had the affirmative duty of proving the invalidity of their deed; otherwise they could not have defeated plaintiffs' title or established their own. See Barry v. Sutter, 1914, 26 Cal.App. 240, 146 P. 527. Under customary practice they would have filed a cross-complaint for rescission and proper issues would have been framed by the pleadings. But whether they proceeded by cross-complaint or by affirmative answer, they could not prove grounds for rescission without pleading them. Their deed was voidable at most. More v. Calkins, 1890, 85 Cal. 177, 24 P. 729.

[13-15] It is fundamental that whatever fraud constitutes an element of a cause of action or of an affirmative defense or is the foundation of a right sought to be established, it must be pleaded. Wetherly v. Straus, 1892, 93 Cal. 283, 28 P. 1045; Burris v. Kennedy, 1895, 108 Cal. 331, 41 P. 458; Estate of Yoell, 1913, 164 Cal. 540, 129 P. 999; Virginia, etc., Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 1907, 5 Cal.App. 256, 90 P. 48. It is equally true of the other alleged defences. The offered evidence was correctly excluded as being outside the issues, and the motion to strike portions of the answers was properly granted.

[16-17] Many of the findings are defective. They are to the general effect that allegations of the answers "which are in conflict with the foregoing findings are untrue." Appellants call our attention to the obvious insufficiency of these findings without making mention of the good ones. Nevertheless, we have read all of them and find specific and sufficient findings upon all material issues in addition to the faulty ones. This is enough to support the judgment. Turner v. Turner, 1921, 187 Cal. 632, 635, 203 P. 109.

There are no other points calling for discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 567

PEOPLE v. PALMER.

Crim. 3494.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 9, 1942.

Hearing Denied March 9, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐1142

Where clerk's transcript on appeal stated that motion for new trial was denied, District Court of Appeal was required to presume that such was the fact. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

2. Criminal law ⇐274

Record established that trial court, in prosecution for grand theft, did not abuse its discretion in refusing to vacate and set aside defendant's plea of guilty and to substitute therefor a plea of not guilty, on ground that, at time of entering plea, defendant was denied the right and benefit of counsel, that plea was not freely and understandingly entered, and that plea was result of a failure to settle a civil litigation. Pen.Code, § 1018.

3. Criminal law ⇐274

The statutory provision dealing with withdrawal of plea of guilty should only be utilized on a strong and convincing showing of the deprivation of legal rights by extrinsic causes. Pen.Code, § 1018.

4. Criminal law ⇐274

Evidence in civil action that holder of power of attorney, who had power to receive money and debts due the payee and to endorse checks, traced payee's name on back of check, so as to simulate her true signature, and that he cashed check and collected the amount thereof, raised at least substantial inferences pointing to "embezzlement" and did not show that trial court in grand theft prosecution abused its discretion in refusing to permit him to withdraw his plea of guilty, on ground that cogent, strong, and convincing evidence of his innocence was presented. Pen.Code, § 1018.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Embezzlement".

5. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)

The determination of a motion for new trial and the pronouncement of judgment in a criminal case are "procedural" in their nature and, in the absence of a miscarriage of justice, will not be disturbed on appeal, even though such proceedings took place after a lapse of the statutory time therefor. Pen.Code, §§ 1191, 1202.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Procedural".

6. Criminal law ⇐977(3)

The fact that judgment against one who pleaded guilty was not pronounced not more than two nor less than five days after entry of his plea of guilty, as required by statute, did not require reversal of conviction in view that requirement is procedural and that, following entry of plea of guilty, defendant fled from the state and was not apprehended until after a lapse of some twelve years. Pen.Code, §§ 1191, 1202.

7. Criminal law ⇐913(1), 1186(4)

The failure of a court to pronounce judgment within the limited time ordained by statute does not automatically entitle a defendant to a new trial, nor is jurisdiction voided by such delay in every case, but only in cases where a miscarriage of justice results. Pen.Code §§ 1191, 1202; Const. art. 6, § 4½.

8. Criminal law ⇐913(1)

One who pleaded guilty was not entitled to a new trial because of the unavailability of reporter's transcript of proceedings when judgment was pronounced, where defendant, after plea of guilty and before judgment was pronounced, fled from the state and was not returned until some 12 years later, reporter's transcript was not essential to disposition of issues raised on appeal, and plea of guilty was taken down by the clerk of the court, was entered in the minutes, and was before the District Court of Appeal in the clerk's transcript. Pen.Code, § 1017.

9. Jury ⇐29(4)

Where defendant, on plea of not guilty, was accorded a jury trial, and jury was impaneled to try him and was in process of so doing when defendant changed his plea to guilty, and on entry of plea of guilty, nothing remained for jury to pass on, defendant could not contend that he was denied the verdict of the jury on the question of his guilt or innocence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. A. Scott, Judge.

Arthur Palmer was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

See, also, 122 P.2d 114.

Hearing denied; HOUSER and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

Morris Lavine and Scheinman & Scheinman, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

On October 10, 1928, through an indictment returned by the Grand Jury of Los Angeles County, defendant was charged in five counts with the crime of grant theft, while an additional count alleged the commission by him of the crime of forgery. At the time of his arraignment on October 16, 1928, defendant waived reading of the indictment, and upon his motion the time for plea was continued until October 19. On the last-named date defendant entered his plea of not guilty, and the cause was set down for trial on November 19, 1928. For various causes and with defendant's consent, his trial date was continued several times until February 25, 1929, upon which date the matter was called for trial. The clerk's transcript reflects that at this time defendant was personally present in court with his counsel, N. Freedman and S. W. Thompson; that a jury was impaneled and sworn to try the cause; the indictment was read and defendant's plea of not guilty was stated to the jury. Thereupon, according to the clerk's transcript, the following transpired: "By leave of Court, the defendant withdraws his plea of 'Not Guilty' heretofore entered, regularly enters his plea of 'Guilty as charged in Count 1 of the indictment' and the pronouncing of judgment and sentence is set for February 28, 1929, at 9:30 A. M. Other counts are ordered off calendar. S. W. Thompson is allowed to withdraw as counsel for defendant. Defendant to remain on bail." When, pursuant to the foregoing, the case was again called for the purpose of pronouncing judgment and sentence, the defendant was not present. Thereupon his bond was declared forfeited and a bench warrant issued for his arrest.

Nothing more appears in the clerk's transcript for a period of more than twelve years, when on March 12, 1941, the defendant was personally present in court with counsel and asked permission to withdraw his plea of guilty theretofore entered. This application, made in the form of a motion, was denied. However, upon the request of the defendant, he was allowed to file an application for probation. The time for passing upon the application and pronouncing of judgment and sentence was continued from time to time until May 6, 1941. At that time the defendant made a motion for a new trial. His motion for leave to withdraw his plea of guilty and enter a not guilty plea was reconsidered and again denied. The application for probation was denied, and thereupon judgment of imprisonment in the state prison was pronounced. From the judgment of conviction; from what is designated "the failure of the trial court to pass on the motion for a new trial"; from an order denying defendant leave to withdraw his plea of guilty under section 1018 of the Penal Code and enter a plea of not guilty, and from the order denying defendant's motion after judgment requesting that such judgment be set aside, this appeal is prosecuted.

[1] Appellant's contention that the court failed or refused to rule upon his motion for a new trial is without merit. The clerk's transcript on appeal, which we have before us, shows the following as having occurred on May 6, 1941: "Defendant moves the Court for a new trial. Said motion is argued. * * * The Court orders that defendant's motion for a new trial be and the same is hereby denied." We must presume that in preparing the record on appeal official duty was regularly performed (Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1963, subd. 15), and the verity of such record is therefore binding upon us. People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 4 P. 773, 56 Am.Rep. 73; Brush v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 58 Cal.App. 501, 208 P. 997; Delijian v. Rosenburg, 134 Cal.App. 264, 25 P.2d 228.

It is next contended that appellant's plea of guilty should have been set aside pursuant to the provisions of section 1018 of the Penal Code and a plea of not guilty entered. In support of this claim it is urged:

"A. The appellant at the time of entering the plea was denied the right and benefit of counsel;

"B. His free will and judgment were overcome by extraneous circumstances;

"C. The plea was not freely and understandingly entered;

"D. The plea was the result of a failure to settle civil litigation;

"E. Cogent, strong and convincing evidence of appellant's innocence was presented."

It is argued that appellant was without the advice or benefit of counsel. In that regard, at the hearing of the motion to set aside the plea of guilty, the court took testimony. Defendant himself testified that at the time he pleaded guilty he had never read nor heard read the indictment; that several continuances had been had because of the pendency of negotiations to settle the civil liability upon the part of defendant to the complaining witness; that his attorney, Mr. Thompson, had not discussed the case with him nor with any of his witnesses, and that none of the latter were subpoenaed into court; that he had employed Attorney Freedman only on the evening before the jury was impaneled, and that the last-mentioned attorney was unfamiliar with the facts of his case. Appellant further testified that when his first attorney sought from the court leave to withdraw as counsel, the attorney stated in the presence of the jury that he lacked confidence in his client and that the latter was entirely undependable. All of these facts, appellant urges, show that his own free will and judgment were overcome and that because of his distress of body and mind begotten of his plight, he yielded to the suggestion of one of his attorneys that he enter a plea of guilty.

[2] Defendant's attorney, S. W. Thompson, however, testified that following the return of the indictment and when the grand jury transcript was delivered to him, he conferred with his client and thoroughly and completely discussed with him the nature of the criminal charges lodged against appellant, as well as the issues framed in a civil action brought by the complainant against him in connection with the transactions which formed the basis of the criminal charges. Attorney Thompson further testified that as the final date set for the trial approached he endeavored to contact appellant, but was unable to do so; that he sent for appellant and communicated with the latter's wife, but that appellant got in touch with him only two or three days before the trial date, at which time he advised appellant that no further continuances could be had and that the case must proceed to trial. The court was also advised of the fact that following the entry of his plea of guilty appellant fled the jurisdiction and for some twelve years remained a fugitive from justice. Under all the facts and circumstances here present, the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to vacate and set aside the plea of guilty and substitute therefor a plea of not guilty. The record supports neither the unwarranted attack made upon defendant's counsel, S. W. Thompson, nor appellant's contention that he was in a state of confusion, highly nervous and in an upset condition when he gave his consent to the change of his plea from not guilty to guilty.

[3] Section 1018 of the Penal Code is designed to purify and keep pure the administration of justice, and was never intended to enable the guilty to escape punishment. Appellant's claim that he entered his plea of guilty solely on the advice of his counsel representing him in the case avails him nothing, because this falls far short of being a fraudulently obtained plea. The facts in the instant case are not at all parallel to the situation disclosed in People v. Schwarz, 201 Cal. 309, 257 P. 71, relied upon by appellant. The provisions of section 1018 of the Penal Code should only be utilized upon a strong and convincing showing of the deprivation of legal rights by extrinsic causes. To hold otherwise would amount to validation and recognition of a rule that would prove most disastrous in its results so far as order and system in the administration of justice are concerned. The law zealously guards the right of an accused to a fair trial and as well to representation by counsel at all stages of the proceedings against him; but to hold that a defendant represented by able counsel may during his trial change his not guilty plea to that of guilty, flee from the court's jurisdiction, and after twelve years assert his innocence and be permitted to change his plea to not guilty after material witnesses may have died or their whereabouts be unknown, would be to countenance a practice that would reduce to mockery the administration of even and exact justice.

[4] We are not impressed by appellant's argument that strong and convincing proof of his innocence is provided by the decision of our Supreme Court in the case of Kiekhoefer v. United States Nat. Bank, 2 Cal.2d 98, 39 P.2d 807, 96 A.L.R. 1244. This was a civil action commenced by the complaining witness against the bank growing out of the use by appellant of a power of attorney given him by the plaintiff in the civil action. Instead of tending to prove appellant's innocence, we feel that the opinion in the civil case, as well as the facts therein narrated, indicate the contrary. The decision points out that appellant herein received a check out of escrow in the amount of $5,654.91, drawn by the bank in favor of the complaining witness herein. The check was delivered by Palmer, the appellant in the case at bar, who indorsed the same as follows: "Emma Martha Storz" (the name of the complaining witness at that time, she having thereafter remarried) "by Arthur Palmer, Attorney in Fact. Arthur Palmer." Bearing this indorsement, the check was presented by Palmer to the Bank of Italy in Pasadena. The bank, however, refused to accept or pay the check as thus indorsed. Appellant took the check out of the Bank of Italy, cancelled the indorsements then on the check by drawing lines through the same, and again presented the check to said bank with new indorsements thereon as follows:

"Pay to the order of Arthur Palmer Company,

"Emma Martha Storz,

"Pay to the order of Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association,

"Arthur Palmer Company."

Arthur Palmer Company was the name in which appellant Palmer carried on his business. The name "Emma Martha Storz" in the new indorsement had been written by Palmer himself. In fact, her name on said indorsement had been traced on the back of the check by Palmer so as to simulate the true signature of Emma Martha Storz. The bank cashed the check and gave Palmer credit for the amount thereof, and thereafter collected the same from the defendant bank upon which it was drawn. The holding in the case was simply that in an action to recover money paid on the alleged forged or illegal indorsement of a check, where plaintiff gave a power of attorney to an agent authorizing him to receive money and debts due plaintiff and indorse checks there was no principle, either legal or equitable, which would justify a recovery from the bank which paid the check upon such indorsement. The foregoing excerpts from the decision, coupled with a reading of the latter in its entirety, instead of establishing appellant's innocence, tend strongly to raise at least substantial inferences pointing to his guilt of embezzlement.

Instead of entering his plea of guilty by reason of any fraud, duress or other fact which might have affected or overreached his own will or judgment, we are impressed from a reading of the entire record before us that the trial court was justified in assuming that the motive that influenced appellant to enter such guilty plea was his realization of guilt, coupled with the fact that further continuance of his trial was refused by the court, and that by admitting his guilt he would be afforded an opportunity to flee as he did from the jurisdiction of the court.

[5-7] A reversal is urged by appellant on the additional ground that the judgment against him was not pronounced not more than two nor less than five days after the entry of his plea of guilty. Pen.Code, secs. 1191, 1202. It is conceded that following the entry of his plea of guilty in 1929 appellant fled from California and was not apprehended until his arrest in New York for another crime, and after serving a term of imprisonment therefor he was returned to this state by the authorities after a lapse of some twelve years from the date of entry of his plea of guilty in the California court. It is true, as contended by appellant, that the law provides that judgment must be pronounced within a prescribed time, but it has been held that the determination of a motion for a new trial and the pronouncement of judgment in a criminal case are procedural in their nature, and in the absence of a miscarriage of justice will not be disturbed on appeal even though such proceedings took place after a lapse of the statutory time therefor. People v. Pollock, 31 Cal.App.2d 747, 761, 89 P.2d 128. We have no hesitancy in saying that there is no miscarriage of justice in the present case, and that the delay complained of in the matter of pronouncing judgment does not constitute reversible error. There is further justification for so holding, and that is because appellant, during the time intervening between the entry of his guilty plea and the pronouncement of judgment, by his own acts evaded the court, and by his willful conduct in fleeing he himself prevented the imposition of sentence within the time provided by law. Such being the case, he will not be permitted to reap an advantage from his own unlawful act. Palmquist v. State, 30 Fla. 73, 11 So. 521; O'Steen v. State, 92 Fla. 1062, 111 So. 725. It has been repeatedly held in this state that the failure of the court to pronounce judgment within the limited time ordained by section 1191 of the Penal Code does not automatically entitle defendant to a new trial pursuant to the provisions of section 1202 of the same code, nor is jurisdiction voided by such delay in every case, but only in cases where a miscarriage of justice results. Const., art. VI, sec. 4½; People v. Zuvela, 191 Cal. 223, 215 P. 907; People v. Farber, 19 Cal. App.2d 189, 64 P.2d 1138; People v. Rubens, 11 Cal.App.2d 576, 54 P.2d 98, 1107; People v. Stroff, 134 Cal.App. 670, 26 P.2d 315; People v. Miller, 130 Cal.App. 191, 19 P.2d 814; People v. Carter, 130 Cal. App. 95, 19 P.2d 843; People v. Howard, 10 Cal.App.2d 258, 52 P.2d 283; 97 A.L.R. 805, note.

[8] Equally without merit is appellant's contention that he is entitled to a new trial because of the unavailability of the reporter's transcript of the proceedings had on February 25, 1929. It appears that the reporter destroyed his notes some five years after making them, and also that the reporter died within the twelve-year period of appellant's absence from the state. The reporter's transcript is not essential to the disposition of the issues raised on this appeal. Defendant's plea of guilty was taken down by the clerk of the court, entered in the minutes, and is now before us in the clerk's transcript. Section 1017 of the Penal Code requires only that the plea be entered in the minutes and that it need not be taken down in shorthand by the reporter unless so ordered by the court.

[9] Finally, appellant contends that he was denied the verdict of a jury on the question of his guilt or innocence. This contention is answered by the record, which shows that upon his plea of not guilty appellant was accorded a jury trial. Indeed, a jury was impaneled to try him and was in the process of so doing when he changed his plea to guilty, thereby removing the triable issue raised by his plea of not guilty. Upon the entry of the guilty plea nothing remained for the jury to pass upon, for it is only by a plea of not guilty that the material allegations of the indictment or information are put in issue for trial and determination by the jury, or the court in the event of a waiver of the jury.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and all orders appealed from are, and each is, affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 579

PEOPLE v. PALMER.

Crim. 3519.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 9, 1942.

Hearing Denied March 9, 1942.

Criminal law ⇐1023(12)

Though an appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate judgment is ordinarily authorized by statute providing that an appeal may be taken from an order after judgment, which affects the substantial rights of defendant, such an order is not appealable where the motion or application merely asks the court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on the same facts. Pen. Code § 1237, subd. 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. A. Scott, Judge.

Arthur Palmer was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

Morris Lavine and Scheinman & Scheinman, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion after judgment to vacate such judgment in the above-entitled cause. We have this day filed an opinion in the case of People v. Arthur Palmer, 122 P.2d 109, in which an appeal was taken from the judgment. An examination of the record in the instant case discloses that the issues raised on this appeal were in fact raised on the appeal from the judgment.

It is appellant's contention that this appeal is authorized by subdivision 3 of section 1237 of the Penal Code, which provides that an appeal may be taken from an order after judgment which affects the substantial rights of the defendant. Ordinarily this is true, but it is also well established that an order made after judgment is not appealable where the motion or application merely asks the court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on the same facts. In De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 P. 345, 349, 32 L.R.A. 82, 53 Am.St.Rep. 165, it is said that this is so, because to permit such an appeal "would be virtually allowing two appeals from the same ruling, and would, in some cases, have the effect of extending the time for appealing, contrary to the intent of the statute." See, also, Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 79 P. 527, and Alpers v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 565, 79 P. 171.

If an appellate court were compelled to treat an appeal from an order made after judgment with the same force and effect as one from the final judgment, a convicted defendant could wait several years after his trial until the witnesses for the people had died or moved away, and then proceed to make a motion to set aside the judgment, and if the conviction were reversed and a new trial ordered the proper administration of justice would be seriously threatened. The Penal Code definitely fixes the time for an appeal from the judgment. To allow an appeal from an order denying a motion to set aside or modify the final judgment where, as in the instant case, such appeal is based upon errors and rulings which might properly be considered and which were as a matter of fact considered upon the appeal from the judgment, would in fact amount in criminal appeals to removing entirely the time limitation mentioned. We cannot conceive that such was the legislative intent.

This court being without jurisdiction to entertain the instant appeal, it is ordered that the same be, and it is, dismissed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 528

ARMSTRONG v. SMITH.

Civ. 11725.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 6, 1942.

1. Contracts ⇐168

Where plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract whereby plaintiff undertook to construct a dwelling house for defendant, the law implied a promise on the part of defendant to permit the plaintiff to build and according to the details of the contract.

2. Venue ⇐7

Under statute relating to venue in a contract action, a contract action may properly be tried in only two counties, namely, the county in which the defendant resides, and the county in which the contract was made. Code Civ.Proc. § 395(1).

3. Venue ⇐7

Venue statute provision dealing with venue of an action founded on a contract requires that all actions arising on contracts shall be tried in the county in which the defendant resides, or in which the contract was made, unless the defendant has contracted specially and in writing as to the county in which his obligation is to be performed, in which event such county is also a proper county for the trial of the action. Code Civ.Proc. § 395(1).

4. Venue ⇐7

As regards question of venue, the obligation of a contract is incident to its making, is incurred at the time the contract is made, and follows the contract until the contract is extinguished.

5. Contracts ⇐168

The law will come to the assistance of an express contract in order to give it enforceability where under the circumstances it ought to be enforced, but not so with a special contract, in assistance of which nothing will be implied.

6. Venue ⇐7

In using the words "special contract" within the venue statute the legislature must have in mind some contract other than one ordinarily and usually used in everyday transactions of business life, otherwise the word "special" could have no significance, and need not be inserted. Code Civ.Proc. § 395(1).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Special Contract".

7. Venue ⇐7

Before an action arising on a contract may be brought under venue statute in county where the obligation forming the basis of the suit is performable, the contract must specifically state the place of performance of the obligation. Code Civ.Proc. § 395(1).

8. Statutes ⇐186

One of the cardinal rules to be applied in construing a statute is that the interpretation must be based on the language used, since a court has no power to rewrite a statute to make it conform to an intention not expressed. Code Civ.Proc. § 1858.

9. Statutes ⇐188, 206

In construing a statute, a strained construction should not be placed on its words, and the construction should always be reasonable and according to the common understanding of the language used, with a view to giving effect to all provisions if possible. Code Civ.Proc. § 1858.

10. Venue ⇐7

Where plaintiff agreed to build a house for defendant in Alameda county and defendant agreed to pay a stipulated price, and there were no express stipulations in the contract as to where any of its covenants were to be performed and defendant resided in San Mateo county, an action for defendant's breach of implied obligation not to interfere with plaintiff's performance of the contract was not maintainable in Alameda county under the statute fixing the venue of contract actions in the county in which defendant resides or in which the contract was made unless defendant has contracted specially as to the county in which the obligation is to be performed. Code Civ.Proc. § 395(1).

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; S. Victor Wagler, Judge.

Action by J. R. Armstrong against William Smith to recover for alleged breach of an implied obligation arising under building contract. From an order denying motion for a change of venue to the county of defendant's residence, the defendant appeals.

Order reversed.

Maurice R. Carey and John A. Gorfinkel, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Myron Harris, of Oakland, for respondent.

JONES, Justice pro tem.

In this case the appeal is from an order denying a motion for a change of venue to the county of the defendant's residence.

On the 5th of January, 1938, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a contract whereby the plaintiff undertook to construct a multiple dwelling house for the defendant on a lot in the city of Oakland, county of Alameda. The contract, in a form usually employed by builders, was prepared and executed by the parties in San Francisco. At the time the action was brought the defendant resided in the county of San Mateo. There are no express stipulations in the contract as to where any of its covenants are to be performed, except that the plaintiff so bound himself to build on the lot in Alameda County.

[1] Against this obligation the law implied a promise on the part of the defendant to so permit him to build and according to the details of the contract. Gray v. Bekins, 186 Cal. 389, 199 P. 767.

The plaintiff commenced an action in the Superior Court of Alameda County on November 25th, 1940, seeking to recover damages for a breach of the contract. In paragraph IV of his complaint he alleges that although he, plaintiff, is ready and able to perform, "plaintiff has been prevented from so doing by the neglect, failure and refusal of the defendant to perform said contract on his part and by the refusal of the defendant to allow plaintiff to further perform the same on his part." The defendant demurred to the complaint, and gave notice of a motion for a change of place of trial to the county of his residence. This notice was supported by proper affidavits. The motion came on regularly for hearing and was denied, and it is from this order that the defendant appeals.

The breach alleged is that of an implied obligation arising under the contract. By its terms the plaintiff agreed to build a house for the defendant in Alameda County for which the defendant agreed to pay a stipulated price. This much was expressly agreed to. In addition certain implied obligations arose out of the contract, each of the parties impliedly agreeing not to interfere with full performance by the other. It is upon the alleged breach of the defendant's obligation in this respect that plaintiff seeks to recover.

The appeal calls for an interpretation of section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Subd. (1) of said section, the only part with which we are here concerned, reads as follows: "In all other cases, except as in this section otherwise provided, and subject to the power of the court to transfer actions or proceedings as provided in this title, the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action, is the proper county for the trial of the action. If the action be for injury to person, or to personal property, or for death from wrongful act, or negligence, either the county where the injury occurs, or where the injury causing death occurs, or the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action, shall be a proper county for the trial of the action. When a defendant has contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county, either the county where such obligation is to be performed, or in which the contract in fact was entered into, or the county in which the defendant, or any such defendant, resides at the commencement of the action, shall be a proper county for the trial of an action founded on such obligation, and the county in which such obligation is incurred shall be deemed to be the county in which it is to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary. If none of the defendants reside in the State, or, if residing in the State, and the county in which they reside is unknown to the plaintiff, the action may be tried in any county which the plaintiff may designate in his complaint, and if the defendant is about to depart from the State, such action may be tried in any county where either of the parties reside, or where service is had. If any person is improperly joined as a defendant, or has been made a defendant solely for the purpose of having the action tried in the county, city and county, township, city or town where he resides, his residence must not be considered in determining the proper place for the trial of the action."

That portion of the said subdivision dealing with the venue of actions arising upon contract and which we are called upon to interpret is the third sentence thereof

which reads: "When a defendant has contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county, either the county where such obligation is to be performed, or in which the contract in fact was entered into, or the county in which the defendant, or any such defendant, resides at the commencement of the action, shall be a proper county for the trial of an action founded on such obligation, and the county in which such obligation is incurred shall be deemed to be the county in which it is to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary."

If it were provided only that when a defendant has contracted to perform an obligation in some particular county, the county in which it is to be performed, or the county in which the contract was entered into, or the county in which the defendant resides, shall be a proper county for the trial of an action upon an obligation growing out of the contract, no difficulty would be presented. In such a case either one of the three counties mentioned would be a proper county for the trial of such an action.

[2] But the legislature did not stop there. It added a limitation, and the limitation which it added is this: "the county in which such obligation is incurred shall be deemed to be the county in which it is to be performed." The effect of the limitation is to cut down the number of counties in which an action may properly be tried to two, namely, the county in which the defendant resides, and the county in which the contract was made.

Having set up the limitation, the legislature created an exception to it, providing that if it be specially contracted in writing as to the county of performance, such county is also a proper county for the trial of an action. Under conditions where the exception is effective, the number of proper counties goes back to three.

[3] No great consequence is to be attached to the general limitation of the section that "When a defendant has contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county," the other provisions are to apply. Obviously, an existing obligation is performable at some place. If it is of such character that it is to be, or may be, performed in different counties no different situation is created than if it is to be performed at a particular place. The express condition of the statute is that unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary the county in which the obligation is incurred is the venue of an action arising out of it. What the legislature has in substance said is that all actions arising on contract shall be tried in the county in which the defendant resides, or in which the contract was made, unless the defendant has contracted specially and in writing as to the county in which his obligation is to be performed, in which event such county is also a proper county for the trial of the action.

It is suggested by the respondent that since the breach of the obligation made the basis of the action occurred in Alameda County, it follows that the obligation relied on was incurred there. The obligation of a contract as distinguished from the contract itself, has been variously defined by the courts of the different states, including our own, but all to the same point. Of such definitions that found in Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 124, 92 Am.Dec. 56, is appropriate to the contention made by the respondent. The court there said: "'The obligation of a contract is a legal, not a mere moral obligation: it is the law which binds a party to perform his undertaking. The obligation does not inhere or subsist in the contract itself, proprio vigore, but in the law applicable to the contract.' 1st Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 652, and authorities there cited. When the parties entered into the contract now before the Court which the plaintiff seeks to enforce, what was the legal obligation of the defendant? His legal obligation was, to do and perform, just what the laws of the land, applicable to the contract, required him to do and perform, at the time the contract was made, in accordance with its terms and stipulations: that was the exact measure of his legal obligation at the time the contract was made; nothing more, nothing less. The defendant's legal obligation was to perform his contract, as the laws of the land, applicable to that contract, required him to perform it, at the time it was made. That was the extent of his legal obligation to the plaintiff, and just to that extent the plaintiff had the legal right to have it performed, in order to maintain the integrity of the legal obligation of the defendant's contract. If it was not the existing law of the State, applicable to the contract at the time it was made, which created and defined the defendant's legal obligation to perform it, in accordance with its terms and stipulations, what is it that does create and define his obligation to perform it? If there had been no existing law applicable to the contract, prescribed by the supreme power of the State, at the time it was made, creating and defining the defendant's obligation to perform it, then he would have incurred no other than a mere moral obligation, over which human tribunals have no jurisdiction. It therefore necessarily follows, that the existing law applicable to the contract, prescribed by the supreme power of the State, at the time the contract was made, creates and defines the defendant's legal obligation to perform it, in accordance with its terms and stipulations. 'A perfect right is that which is accompanied by the right of compelling those who refuse to fulfil the correspondent obligation. A perfect obligation is that which gives to the opposite party the right of compulsion.' Vattel, 62. The defendant's obligation to perform his contract in accordance with its terms, was a perfect obligation, because the plaintiff, at the time the contract was made, had the legal right, under the then existing law of the State, to have compelled its performance. The defendant's obligation to perform his contract was just what that existing law made it, just what that existing law required, and would have compelled to be done for its performance, in behalf of the plaintiff, the other party to it. The defendant's obligation to perform his contract, under the then existing law, was perfect, and the plaintiff's right to have that obligation performed as prescribed by that existing law, was also a perfect right."

[4] The obligation of a contract is incident to its making. It is incurred at the time the contract is made and follows it until the contract is extinguished. The obligation arises as soon as the contract takes breath and may be breached at any time while it has life. While it is the law, in conjunction with the contract, which casts the obligation, the law does not wait until it is breached to cast it. This is done when the contract is made. So with the contract before us, all obligations arising under it were incurred at the time and in the county in which it was made.

Of primary importance is the question as to what kind of a contract the legislature intended when it used the term "special contract." In Gulick v. Justice's Court, 101 Cal.App. 619, 281 P. 1031, 1032, a construction has been placed upon the term as it was used in a similar statute. In that case the defendant incurred an indebtedness to the plaintiff in that action in the township of Indio, in Riverside County. The defendant gave to the plaintiff a check dated at Los Angeles, in Los Angeles County, and payable there, in settlement of his obligation. Before this check reached the bank upon which it was drawn, payment was stopped by the defendant. Plaintiff filed suit in Indio Township where the indebtedness was incurred, alleging nonpayment on the check. The demurrer of the defendant to the complaint was overruled, and he then sought in the superior court a writ of prohibition against the respondent court upon the ground among others that the venue of the action lay in Los Angeles County. In this respect it was urged by the defendant that the check constituted a special contract in writing payable and to be performed in Los Angeles, and not in the township of Indio where the obligation was incurred. Reliance was placed upon section 832 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it then stood. This section provided: "Actions, Where Must Be Commenced. Actions in justices' courts must be commenced, and, subject to the right to change the place of trial, as in this chapter provided, must be tried: * * * 7. When a person has contracted to perform an obligation at a particular place, and resides in another county, township, or city—in the township or city in which such obligation is to be performed, or in which he resides; and the township or city in which the obligation is incurred is deemed to be the township or city in which it is to be performed, unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary."

The legislature apparently borrowed the last clause of subd. 7 of section 832 and inserted it in section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is the section which we are now called upon to interpret, with only enough change to make it apply to a county instead of a township. This was probably done for the purpose of securing uniformity in procedure and to obviate possible confusion between the trial of cases in the justices' and superior courts.

In the Gulick case it was held by the trial court that the check sued on did not constitute a special contract in writing within the meaning of the statute, and that the action was properly commenced in the township in which the obligation was incurred. The judgment was affirmed by the district court of appeal on appeal, and a petition to have the cause heard in the Supreme Court was denied by that court.

[5] A special contract has been defined in other jurisdictions as one in which there is expressed particular stipulations with respect to the obligations of the parties, and which, if omitted, the law will not supply. Forester v. Forester, 10 Ind.App. 680, 38 N.E. 426; Jackson v. Creek, 47 Ind.App. 541, 94 N.E. 416. The law will come to the assistance of an express contract in order to give it enforceability where under the circumstances it ought to be enforced, but not so with a special contract. Nothing will be implied in its assistance. This distinction between an express contract and a special contract is pointed out in Pence v. Beckman, 11 Ind.App. 263, 39 N.E. 169, 54 Am.St.Rep. 505. It was there held that under the Indiana Code, following the common law rule, recovery might be had upon an averment of an express contract although an implied contract is proven, and for the reason that an implied obligation may arise upon an express contract but never on one which is special. This distinction is also made in Indianapolis C. T. Co. v. Dalton, 43 Ind.App. 330, 87 N.E. 552, 554, where the holding is that a complaint may declare upon an express contract and a recovery be had upon an implied promise, but it cannot declare upon a special contract and recover upon an implied promise. The court there said, quoting from Forester v. Forester, supra: "'An express contract is one whose terms are uttered or stated in words or writing. An implied contract is a matter of inference or deduction. * * * A special contract is one with peculiar provisions or stipulations not found in the ordinary contract relating to the same subject-matter. These provisions are such which, if omitted from the ordinary contract, the law will never supply. * * * An express contract may or may not be special. But a special contract is always express.'"

[6, 7] As the court stated in Gulick v. Justice's Court, supra: "In using the words 'Special Contract' * * * the Legislature must have had in mind some contract other than one ordinarily and usually used in every-day transactions of business life, otherwise the word 'Special' could have no significance, and need not have been inserted in the section." But we do not understand that the court here intended to say that there should be a separate contract special in its nature upon the same subject matter before the statute would apply, but that if there is embodied in the agreement giving rise to the action an express stipulation with respect to the obligation in question, the requirements of the statute are met. It is our opinion that before an action may be brought under section 395, supra, in the county where the obligation forming the basis of the suit is performable, the contract must specifically state the place of performance of such obligation. If the contract so states, then the provision as to place of performance is both express and special.

[8-10] One of the cardinal rules to be applied in construing a statute is that the interpretation must be based on the language used. The court has no power to rewrite a statute to make it conform to an intention not expressed. As is said in Seaboard Acceptance Corp. v. Shay, 214 Cal. 361, 5 P.2d 882, 884: "It is elementary that there can be no intent in a statute not expressed in its words; that the intention of the Legislature must be determined from the language of the statute. Ex parte Goodrich, 160 Cal. 410, 117 P. 451, Ann. Cas.1913A, 56; In re Application of Monrovia Evening Post, 199 Cal. 263, 248 P. 1017." A strained construction should not, however, be placed upon its words. The interpretation should always be reasonable and according to the common understanding of the language used, with a view to giving effect to all of its provisions if possible. This rule finds legislative expression in section 1858 of the Code of Civil Procedure, wherein it is provided: "In the construction of a statute or instrument, the office of the judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained thereon, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted; and where there are several provisions or particulars, such a construction is, if possible, to be adopted as will give effect to all." A statute so interpreted is to be applied to the facts as presented. If the parties have only impliedly agreed to a place of performance when the statute says that they should have specially agreed before the remedy sought may be obtained, no redress may be had. The court is powerless to redraft either the statute or their contract and do aught but apply the law to the facts as it finds them.

Sight must not be lost of the fact that on this appeal we are dealing solely with a question of venue. The enforceability of the contract is not in question, nor are any of the issues tendered by the complaint.

The nature of the proceeding excludes all questions except as to whether Alameda County is a proper county for the trial of the action. The place of performance of the defendant's obligation sued on being implied, and not specially contracted, the county in which the obligation was incurred and the county of the defendant's residence are the only proper counties for the trial of the action.

The order appealed from is reversed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 500

HOLMAN v. STOCKTON SAVINGS & LOAN BANK et al.

Civ. 6692.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 3, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 3, 1942.

1. Contracts ⇐92

Senile dementia does not render one incapable of executing contracts or transacting business.

2. Contracts ⇐99(3)
Reformation of Instruments ⇐45(1)

Evidence supported finding that aged widow was mentally competent and capable of understanding nature of the transactions, so as not to be entitled to cancel or reform certain instruments executed by her in connection with her indebtedness to defendant bank on ground of mental incompetency

3. Fraud ⇐50, 58(1)

Fraud must always be proved by convincing evidence and is never presumed.

4. Evidence ⇐142(1)

In action by aged widow for damages alleged to have been sustained as result of sale of shares of stock in defendant bank, where stock was not listed and had no established market value, evidence with reference to other sales of stock of the bank was admissible on question of value.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1050(1)

In action by aged widow for damages alleged to have been sustained as result of sale of shares of stock in defendant bank, even if the admission of evidence with reference to other sales of stock of the bank was not proper on question of value, the error in admitting such evidence was not prejudicial, where record contained other evidence sufficient to sustain finding that fair and actual value was approximately the price paid therefor.

6. Banks and banking ⇐227(3)
Reformation of Instruments ⇐45(1)

Evidence supported finding that defendant bank did not make any secret profits out of transactions with aged widow in settlement of her indebtedness to defendant bank, which indebtedness she had incurred in her effort to render financial assistance to her children, and that defendant bank was not guilty of any sharp practice or fraud in the transaction, and hence, even though a confidential relationship existed between widow and bank, widow was not entitled to cancel or reform instruments executed by her in the settlement or to recover damages allegedly sustained as result of sale of certain shares of stock in defendant bank at suggestion of defendant bank.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1184

Where it came to attention of District Court of Appeal that appellant had died since argument and submission of the cause, judgment would be ordered filed "nunc pro tunc" as of date of the submission.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Nunc Pro Tunc".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; M. G. Woodward, Judge.

Action by Hattie Holman, an incompetent person, etc., against Stockton Savings & Loan Bank and others for cancellation or reformation of instruments, together with injunctive relief and damages sustained as result of sale of shares of stock. From a judgment for defendants, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Ira B. Langdon, of Stockton, for appellant.

Rutherford, Jacobs, Cavalero & Dietrich, Newton Rutherford, D. R. Jacobs, Philip Cavalero, and Stephen Dietrich, all of Stockton, for respondents.

STEEL, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the respondents (defendants in the court below) and presents squarely the question as to whether the findings and judgment are supported by the record. The suit, equitable in its nature, was instituted by plaintiff, a widow of the age of 85 years, wherein she sought a cancellation or reformation of certain instruments executed in connection with her indebtedness to the defendant bank, together with injunctive relief and damages alleged to have been sustained as a result of the sale of certain shares of stock. It is alleged that the defendants entered into a conspiracy to unlawfully secure possession, title and control of the property of plaintiff, and that between the years of 1924 and 1938 they did so obtain all of plaintiff's property. That in so doing the defendant bank and its agents and officers used the plaintiff's three children, the defendants George Holman, Charles Holman and Hattie G. Holman as tools or agents in furtherance of such fraudulent scheme to obtain said property.

The record discloses that Mrs. Hattie Holman, plaintiff and appellant herein, had been a lifelong resident of San Joaquin County, and became a widow in 1910; that for a great number of years members of her family had been stockholders and otherwise connected with the defendant bank. At the time she became a widow in 1910 it appears that Mrs. Holman received from her husband's estate property of a value in excess of $100,000, and that this property increased in value to approximately $180,000 in 1924, when the transactions resulting in this litigation are alleged to have commenced. Her property then consisted of stock in the defendant bank, real estate in the city of Stockton, and other property.

Substantially the following is a general résumé of the various financial transactions complained of: The record shows that in May, 1924, the plaintiff and appellant, Mrs. Hattie Holman, executed her promissory note in the sum of $8,000 in favor of the defendant bank, and thereupon instructed the bank, through its assistant cashier, Mr. Holmes, who handled the transaction, to deposit the proceeds thereof to the account of George and Leland Holman, her sons. With reference to this transaction, it is urged on behalf of appellant that the bank was unauthorized to deposit the proceeds of this note to her sons' account. However, the testimony of Mr. Holmes shows that it was appellant's instruction that the money be so deposited. It further appears that the defendant Charles Holman, one of the sons of appellant, was the owner of a dairy ranch situated in San Joaquin County, which was encumbered by a trust deed securing a note of $50,000, and that early in 1925, a notice of default and intention to sell was filed; that at the request and suggestion of the defendant George Holman, a brother of Charles, the defendant bank promised to loan George the necessary money with which to purchase the ranch at the price of $52,400 upon the understanding that George and his wife Elsie would execute a trust deed thereon securing a note in the principal sum of $45,000 (this amount being the maximum loan permitted under the bank's appraisement) and execute an additional note with the appellant here as co-maker, for the balance of the purchase price amounting to $7,400. This transaction was concluded accordingly in July, 1925, and George Holman thereafter operated the ranch for several years without making any profit, and in fact at a considerable loss, he having had to borrow money on many occasions from the defendant bank with which to meet the current taxes, interest, and other operating expenses. These advances were evidenced by notes which were also signed by the appellant as co-maker. In 1935 foreclosure proceedings were instituted by the bank, and the ranch was finally deeded to the bank by George and his wife Elsie in September of that year in satisfaction of their outstanding indebtedness. According to the bank's records it wrote off $9,000 as a net result of this deed of trust loan on the ranch property of George. It appears that during the period that George Holman operated the ranch the appellant not only executed numerous notes in favor of the bank as co-maker with her son George, but she did in many instances execute notes individually, the proceeds of which were deposited directly to her own account.

In December, 1931, she owed the bank $27,500 on direct loans and $32,400 as guarantor, or a total indebtedness of $59,900. During 1932 her guaranteed obligations increased by renewal of the notes comprising the same, including an additional advance of $3,600, and an additional note of $3,000, the proceeds of which were deposited to the account of George Holman, making a total guaranteed indebtedness of $39,000. During the same year and up to December, 1932, appellant's direct indebtedness increased from said $27,500 to the sum of $30,200. It will thus be noted that in December, 1932, the total liability of appellant to the defendant bank was in the principal sum of $69,200. It will be recalled that the original loan made by defendant bank to George Holman with which to purchase the ranch and which was secured by the trust deed thereon was made upon a percentage basis of the appraised value of the ranch. The subsequent loans were advances made by the bank to George and his wife as evidenced by the several notes which his mother, the appellant herein, guaranteed in the aggregate sum of $39,000, and it is shown that they were so made by the bank solely upon the security of the appellant's guarantee and not that of the property itself or George and his wife. This appears definite even though the notes recite, as is customary, that they are secured by the deed of trust. With this picture before it of $69,200 of unsecured indebtedness of appellant, the bank, through its vice-president, Mr. Eberhardt, one of the respondents here, sent a credit memorandum to appellant showing the then present condition of her account, and stating it was necessary that the indebtedness be secured. The bank suggested that appellant obtain a loan of $18,000 on 267 shares of the bank's stock owned by appellant and apply the proceeds thereof to her indebtedness, thereby reducing it to the sum of $51,200, and further that this latter amount be secured by executing a deed of trust upon certain city property of appellant known as the United States Hotel, and also the assignment of a certain note and deed of trust owned by appellant and referred to as the Williamson note and deed of trust in the sum of $30,000.

In this connection it appears that following several conversations between Eberhardt, appellant, and her daughter Hattie G. Holman, the suggested plan of refinancing was accepted and accordingly appellant pledged her stock consisting of 267 shares to one A. W. Simpson for a loan of $18,000, the proceeds of which were applied upon certain of the outstanding notes of appellant, thereby reducing her total indebtedness from $69,200 to $51,200, which latter amount consisted of $12,200 of her direct indebtedness and $39,000 in notes which she had theretofore guaranteed for her son George. Shortly thereafter in January, 1933, pursuant to the plan suggested and agreed upon, appellant executed her note to the defendant bank in the principal sum of $51,200, and as security therefor executed the deed of trust upon the hotel property and assigned to the bank the Williamson note and deed of trust. In due course the notes in the principal sum of $39,000, which appellant had guaranteed for her son George were endorsed to her by the bank and delivered to her daughter for her.

It may be observed that appellant, by reason of advanced age as well as her physical condition, seldom left her home, and that most of her business transactions were carried on by telephone, correspondence and by and through her daughter Hattie. She was called as a witness at the trial herein, and it is apparent from her testimony that her memory had at that time failed to the extent that she had no comprehension of what was taking place.

In January, 1934, a Mr. Francis Cutting, engaged in real estate brokerage business in Stockton, became the agent of appellant, and thereafter until 1937 actively cared for her properties, collected rents, obtained tenants, and in general transacted such business matters as related to the property and affairs of appellant. It appears that during the latter part of 1934 Mr. Cutting conferred with appellant at her home with reference to selling the 267 shares of stock which she had theretofore pledged. Appellant said she would like to sell the stock, and asked Mr. Cutting if he thought he could sell it. He told her he would try, and after interviewing several persons who he thought might be interested, but who were not, he advised appellant accordingly, and suggested if she would put a definite selling price upon the stock it might help. Appellant then placed the selling price of $25,000 for the stock; shortly thereafter Cutting contacted the defendant Eberhardt, who, after some negotiations, made an offer of $24,000 for the stock, which offer Cutting submitted to appellant, who in turn told him to go ahead and take it and close the transaction.

Additional loans were made by the bank to appellant during the years 1933 and 1934, and in June, 1934, the defendant bank, pursuant to the assignment which they had, foreclosed the Williamson trust deed, buying the property in for and on behalf of appellant. Thereupon appellant executed several renewal notes representing the said additional loans made in 1933 and 1934, as well as a new note in the principal sum of $2,200, and as security therefor appellant executed a deed of trust upon the property which had just been foreclosed upon, and which trust deed was given as additional security for the balance of all outstanding indebtedness to the bank. This transaction in effect merely substantiated the new deed of trust in the place of the assignment of the former Williamson trust deed, together with the further advances which made the total indebtedness now approximately $60,000.

The record discloses that on or about December 11, 1936, appellant again renewed her notes, and at this time the total of her indebtedness had reached the sum of $79,396.68; she executed two notes, one in the principal sum of $70,000 and another in the principal sum of $9,396.68 (accumulated interest) together with a new deed of trust upon the United States Hotel property. Shortly prior to this transaction the appellant had assigned to the bank the rentals from this property with a temporary arrangement for the bank to pay her $75 per month for living expenses and to meet monthly payments to a building and loan association.

In the forepart of 1938 an offer was received for the purchase of the United States Hotel property together with the furnishings at a figure of $55,000. The furnishings were owned by Mr. and Mrs. George Holman, who insisted upon receiving $7,500 for them. The bank, through Mr. Eberhardt, maintained that no such allowance for the furnishings could be considered as they were not worth more than $2,500. Subsequently the prospective purchaser offered $52,250 for the property without the furnishings, and the bank, under pressure somewhat by the federal and state bank examiners, who were insistent that the loan be placed in a bankable condition, strongly urged and recommended the sale, the consummation of which would have materially reduced appellant's indebtedness and assured her of a net monthly income from the remaining property. Being unable to convince appellant of the advisability of such sale, and after correspondence had passed between them wherein the bank had stated its willingness to assist her but that since the loan was unbankable in its present condition (the bank having been required to write off approximately $22,000) there would be no other alternative, in the event the sale was not made, but to foreclose under the deed of trust. The offer of purchase was not accepted by appellant, and accordingly the bank instituted the present foreclosure proceedings by filing a notice of default in July, 1938.

The record here is voluminous—the opening brief itself comprises over 500 pages, and the trial of the case occupied some five weeks. After submission thereof the trial court made full and complete findings in favor of the respondents and against the contentions of appellant, which findings covered all of the material issues presented by the pleadings. Appellant attacks the findings as lacking evidentiary support, and urges as grounds for a reversal of the judgment that the evidence establishes incompetency of appellant at all times over the period of years during which the various transactions herein related occurred; that the defendants occupied a fiduciary relation toward the appellant; that appellant was induced to execute the various notes, deeds of trust, and the sale of stock, by the exercise of fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, undue influence, and other wrongful acts of the defendants; that appellant had no independent advice, and that the evidence is without serious conflict and preponderates in appellant's favor upon the main issues.

The principal witnesses testifying in support of appellant's incompetency were her children named herein as defendants, and a nurse who attended her in 1935. An examination of this testimony discloses that in the opinion of the several witnesses appellant was incompetent during most of the time here under consideration. The reasons given as the basis for such opinion do not appear to be of much weight. It was admitted by some of the witnesses, and in particular appellant's daughter Hattie, that her mother always signed her checks and understood business transactions when thoroughly explained to her. In one instance concerning a check, the witness was asked:

"Q. And your mother wanted to know whether it was to be charged to the house, or whoever the payee would be? A. Yes, sir. I wrote that out for her and she signed it; that is my handwriting (indicating).

"Q. And your mother wanted to know where the money was going? A. Why certainly. Anyone wants to know where their money is going."

And again the witness testifying in relation to the pledge of the stock, was asked by the court:

"Q. You mentioned bank stock at the time you handed her that attached assignment? A. Yes.

"Q. And explained to her that she was assigning her stock? A. That is correct, yes. But I had to tell her a good many times to explain it.

"Q. Yes. Did she appear to understand it after you explained it several times? A. Oh, about four or five times I had to tell her, then she finally understood it.

"Q. She finally understood it was for a loan? A. That is correct."

George Holman testified that in his opinion his mother was incompetent, giving as some of the reasons therefor that she had hidden a note and some papers under a mattress and had hidden a jelly sandwich under her pillow, and also because she did not tell him about a loan she had made from the building and loan association. The rest of the testimony on this subject runs along the same line, and opposed to this we have the testimony of many disinterested witnesses testifying that she was sane and rational at all times during the period in controversy. Some of these witnesses were Mr. Cutting, who acted as her business agent; appellant's sister, Mrs. Mattie Smith, who had visited back and forth with appellant at frequent intervals and conversed with her many times over the telephone; Mrs. Edna Grupe, a sister-in-law, who had known appellant thirty-eight years, and had visited with her continuously, many times at the home of appellant as well as meeting her at the home of relatives. Also the testimony of Emil Gumpert, who acted as attorney for appellant on an occasion in 1937, and conversed with her, who testified that he did not observe anything irrational in her appearance during the conversation. Dr. Fred J. Couzelman, called by appellant as an expert on mental cases, testified he had examined appellant in January, 1939, which it appears was during the course of the trial, and found her suffering from senile dementia, defined by the witness as old senile decay,—second childhood, and that this condition had probably been coming on gradually for several years.

[1] The law in this state is clear that senile dementia does not render one incapable of executing contracts or transacting business. Gosnell v. Lloyd, 215 Cal. 244, 10 P.2d 45; Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 128 P. 932; Rollins v. Smith, 72 Cal.App. 773, 238 P. 171.

[2] An examination of the record compels the conclusion that there is ample evidence to support the court's finding of mental competency and capability of understanding the nature of all transactions which appellant had with the defendants.

The court found "that the defendant children of appellant occupied a confidential relationship toward plaintiff, their mother," which finding is not questioned. The court also made a finding "that plaintiff had and reposed in defendants and each of them confidence and belief." It is appellant's contention that this is a finding that defendant Eberhardt and defendant bank occupied a fiduciary relationship of trust and confidence toward appellant. The court further found in this connection that at no time did the defendant bank, Eberhardt or Simpson assume maangement of plaintiff's business, and "that the relationship between the defendant bank and plaintiff was and is that of debtor and creditor, except that prior to the sale of said 267 shares of stock in 1934 plaintiff was a stockholder in defendant bank."

Irrespective of the conflict in the findings, if any there be on the question of confidential relationship between the bank and appellant, we are satisfied from the record that the evidence would warrant a finding, technically at least, that a confidential relationship existed, that is to say, appellant had confidence in the bank and its officers, due no doubt in a large measure to the fact that she, as well as several members of her family, had long been closely identified with the defendant bank.

However, the evidence shows, and the court has found, that the defendant bank and its officers have never assumed the management of appellant's property, her affairs being handled by herself with the independent advice of members of her immediate family and for a period by Mr. Cutting, her agent, and also at times from her counsel. A large portion of the indebtedness was incurred as early as 1932 and prior to the time the bank had obtained any security from the appellant whatsoever.

[3] The rule that fraud must always be proved by convincing evidence and is never presumed, is so well established in this state that it seems unnecessary to cite authorities. However, in Estate of Mallory, 99 Cal.App. 96, 278 P. 488, 490, it is said: "An essential element of the rule is that one person has suffered some injury through the abuse of confidence by another, and that fact must be alleged and proved. It must be made to appear that the relationship was used to obtain an unfair advantage or that confidence was violated. Dimond v. Sanderson, 103 Cal. 97, 37 P. 189; Cole v. Wolfskill, 49 Cal. App. 52, 192 P. 549."

And in the later case of Original Mining & Milling Co. v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, 220 Cal. 152, at page 165, 30 P.2d 47, 52, the court in discussing the duty with reference to drawing inferences, says: "'If there be two inferences equally reasonable and equally susceptible of being drawn from the proved facts, the one favoring fair dealing and the other favoring corrupt practice, it is the express duty of the court or jury to draw the inference favorable to fair dealing. (Citing authorities.) For fraud must always be proved, so that when the plaintiff's case goes no further than to establish a state of facts from which the inference of fraud may or may not be reasonably drawn, he has failed to establish his charge by a preponderance of the evidence, and it becomes the duty of court or jury, as has been said, to find in favor of innocence and uprightness.' Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. 791, 799, 158 P. 753, 756."

There is no evidence or suggestion of any secret profits having been made by the bank, and all business transactions had with the appellant appear to have been entirely fair and open.

[4, 5] It is argued that the purchase of appellant's stock by the defendant Eberhardt was induced by fraud, misrepresentation and undue influence and at a price far below its actual value. It is contended that evidence was improperly admitted with reference to other sales of stock of the defendant bank on the question of value. The stock was not listed and had no established market value and the rule appears to be that in such cases evidence as to its actual value should not be closely restricted. People v. Schwarz, 78 Cal.App. 561, 248 P. 990; Peek v. Steinberg, 163 Cal. 127, 124 P. 834. At any rate the record contains expert as well as other evidence amply sufficient to sustain the finding that the fair and actual value was approximately the price paid therefor.

[6] With reference to the facts concerning the sale of stock we have hereinbefore related the circumstances giving rise to and surrounding this sale, and we are unable to discover any suggestion of fraud or sharp practice inflicted upon appellant by any one concerned in the transaction.

We are not unmindful of the distress of the appellant as a result of this unfortunate financial reverse, but it seems apparent that it was her desire to render whatever financial assistance she could to her children, and in particular to her son George and his wife, in their ranch operations, even though in so doing it jeopardized her own property to the extent that she lost it. This is not unnatural and frequently happens. Other points are urged but further discussion appears unnecessary.

We conclude that the findings and judgment of the trial court are amply supported by the evidence, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

[7] Since the argument and submission of this cause, it has come to the attention of the court that appellant, Mrs. Hattie Holman, has died. It is ordered, therefore, that this judgment be filed nunc pro tunc as to the date of submission, to-wit, January 6, 1942. Estate of Randall, 194 Cal. 725, 230 P. 445; Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 86 P. 695, 9 Ann.Cas. 795; 2 Cal.Jur. 974.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

HATCH v. CALKINS et al.

Civ. 11775.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 3, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 5, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 3, 1942.

1. Evidence ⇐82

Where a judicial record is not conclusive, it is presumed that it correctly sets forth the rights of the parties. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 17.

2. Judgment ⇐855(1)

On motion for leave to enforce judgment after five years under statute, evidence was sufficient for trial court to find that judgment had not been paid as contended by defendant. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

3. Judgment ⇐855(1)

That judgment sought to be enforced was more than 30 years old, and that defendant by reason of plaintiff's delay was deprived of the testimony of two deceased persons to prove his defense that the judgment had been paid, should be considered in determining whether plaintiff was barred by laches from having judgment enforced. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

4. Action ⇐63

Lapse of time will not bar relief under the doctrine of "laches", where circumstances exist which excuse the delay and render it inequitable to interpose the bar.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Laches".

5. Appeal and error ⇐949
Equity ⇐84

What constitutes an excuse for an apparently unreasonable delay in determining whether relief is barred by laches depends on the circumstances of the particular case and rests in the sound discretion of the chancellor, and the conclusion reached by him will not ordinarily be disturbed on appeal.

6. Judgment ⇐855(1)

On a motion for leave to enforce a judgment more than 30 years old which on its face showed that it had not been paid and satisfied, the chancellor did not abuse his discretion under the evidence in not applying the doctrine of laches. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

7. Appeal and error ⇐931(6)

Where a hearing was had before the trial court, and the memorandum decision of the trial court recited that its decision was based on the competent portion of affidavits introduced by the parties on the question whether plaintiff was barred by his laches from enforcing a judgment, it would be presumed on appeal that the trial court based its ruling on competent and not incompetent evidence. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

8. Evidence ⇐207(1), 208(2)

Excerpts from the pleadings in another action showing that owner of land had agreed to sell a lot to defendant under a contract of purchase and evidence that the court ordered judgment to be entered reciting that owner conveyed lot to defendant's mother-in-law as his assignee, and that she conveyed lot to defendant's wife, were admissible as proof of one link in defendant's title, even if they did not show conclusively that defendant had assigned his contract to hinder his creditors.

9. Judgment ⇐855(1)

An action to recover damages for breach of contract because of defendants' failure to redeem a certificate of stock, where trial court, in its judgment, ordered plaintiff to deliver certificate and awarded him judgment for balance due on contract, was an "action at law" to recover amount specified in contract, plaintiff's remedy at law was complete, and he had no occasion to apply to an equity court for relief by way of specific performance, as against contention that action was one in specific performance and that plaintiff was not entitled to relief of enforcing judgment because he failed to show that certificate was delivered. Civ. Code, § 3302.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Action at Law".

10. Specific performance ⇐114(1)

A complaint, which did not plead facts showing a mutuality of remedy, did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for specific performance.

11. Judgment ⇐855(1)

The trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to the granting of any relief on plaintiff's motion for leave to enforce a judgment after five years under statute on ground that each statement in affidavit made in support of motion was hearsay, where only one statement was hearsay, and objection was not based solely on that one statement. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

12. Trial ⇐76

Where defendant made no objection to any one of various documents as each was offered in evidence on plaintiff's motion for leave to enofrce a judgment after five years under statute, and plaintiff then rested, defendant's objection thereupon made to the granting of any relief because each statement in affidavit in support of motion was hearsay, if it was an objection, came too late. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Robert L. McWilliams, Judge.

Action by N. E. Scofield against Willard P. Calkins and W. F. Wilkie for breach of contract, wherein a joint and several judgment was entered against defendants. Plaintiff having died, Frank O. Hatch, as administrator of the estate of N. E. Scofield, deceased, obtained an order to show cause why leave to enforce the judgment should not be granted, and, from an order granting the administrator's motion for leave to enforce the judgment after five years, W. F. Wilkie appeals, defendant Calkins also having died.

Affirmed.

Cushing & Cushing and Everett S. Layman, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert E. Hatch, of San Francisco, Lercara & Nelle, of Oakland, and Charles H. McDonald and Carl Conradi, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

Motion for leave to enforce judgment after five years under Code Civ.Proc. sec. 685. Defendant appeals from the order granting said motion.

Prior to November 14, 1906, a corporation had been formed, Calkins Newspaper Syndicate. Willard P. Calkins was president and W. F. Wilkie was secretary. On the date last mentioned the corporation sold to N. E. Scofield 7,000 shares. As a part of the transaction the following instrument was executed:

"Truckee Nov. 14, 1906

"Should N. E. Scofield desire it, and give us at least 10 days notice to that effect, we agree to redeem 7000 shares of the Calkins Newspaper Syndicate stock on July 1st, 1907, paying him $7000 therefor, together with any dividend that may be declared.

"W. F. Wilkie
"Willard P. Calkins."

On June 18, 1907, said notice was given and the stock was tendered but Wilkie and Calkins did not pay any sum except $1,966.75. On February 3, 1909, N. E. Scofield filed an action for breach of contract. Defendants failed to appear at the trial though they had filed an answer. On May 27, 1911, a joint and several judgment was entered against them, providing that the plaintiff should have judgment for $5,591.43 plus costs. Scofield died in 1912; his wife and defendant Calkins died in 1929. On July 12, 1940, the administrator of Scofield's estate obtained an order to show cause why leave to enforce the judgment should not be granted. Defendant has appealed from the order granting plaintiff's motion.

[1, 2] The defendant contends that the judgment has been paid. He bases that contention on the assertion that there is, under the facts, a presumption to that effect. Gaines v. Miller, 111 U.S. 395, 4 S.Ct. 426, 28 L.Ed. 466. Conceding that such is the rule in some jurisdictions, it is not shown to be the rule in this state. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1959. If such presumption exists it is not conclusive. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1962. However, assuming for the purposes of this decision that the rule obtains in this state it is not determinative. It is an admitted fact that the defendant W. F. Wilkie never paid the judgment. If it was ever paid, it was paid by defendant Willard P. Calkins. If he paid it he had a claim against his codefendant for contribution. If he ever had such claim it is presumed he would have asserted it. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1963, subd. 4. That statute provides it is presumed that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns. But Calkins never asserted that he had such a claim. The record does not show on its face the judgment was paid nor that it has been satisfied. It is presumed that the record is complete. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1963, subd. 17. That is, it is presumed that a judicial record, when not conclusive, does still correctly determine or set forth the rights of the parties. Moreover, the record does not show that Willard P. Calkins at any time owned any property except his holdings in the Calkins Newspaper Syndicate. That corporation was declared bankrupt May 3, 1909. Mrs. Calkins obtained a divorce from her husband and was awarded alimony. In a proceeding in that action in 1909, Mr. Calkins testified he had no assets. On May 3, 1909, or prior thereto, he left San Francisco for the Orient and the defendant, W. F. Wilkie testified that he never heard of his whereabouts after that date. This action was commenced February 3, 1909. Judgment was entered May 27, 1911. Manifestly the trial court was authorized to weigh the conflicting presumptions and to hold that the evidence just recited showed the judgment had not been paid and in support of the order appealed from we must assume that it so held.

[3-6] In his second point the defendant Wilkie contends the plaintiff is barred by his laches. He admits he has not paid the judgment but he asserts it is now over thirty years old, and, by reason of the delay of the plaintiff, the defendant has been deprived of the testimony of W. P. Calkins and N. E. Scofield to prove his defense, to-wit, that the judgment has been paid and he argues that it will be inequitable to enforce the judgment against him. Riley v. Blacker, 51 Mont. 364, 152 P. 758. No doubt such facts should be considered in determining the application of the doctrine of laches. But there is also another rule that is applicable. In 21 C.J. 237, "Equity," sec. 230, the author says: "Lapse of time will not bar relief where circumstances exist which excuse the delay and render it inequitable to interpose the bar. There is no absolute rule as to what constitutes an excuse for an apparently unreasonable delay. It depends on the circumstances of the particular case and rests in the sound discretion of the chancellor, and the conclusion reached by him will not ordinarily be disturbed on appeal." Bearing in mind that the chancellor has found the facts against the defendant and that the question is before this court on appeal to be reviewed, the question before us is whether the chancellor abused his discretion in not applying the doctrine. We think it is clear that it may not be said, as a matter of law, that he abused his discretion. Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 42, 78 P. 467; Miller v. Ash, 156 Cal. 544, 105 P. 600; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 474, 111 P. 360; Taber v. Bailey, 22 Cal. App. 617, 135 P. 975. In Miller v. Ash, supra, the principles involved were closely the same. In 1862 Joseph Read and Catherine Read died leaving two children, Mrs. Miller and a brother, Robert Read. The defendant William Ash was appointed their guardian. A claim existed in favor of the minors against the estate of R. J. Reynolds, deceased. In 1863 the guardian compromised the claim for $4,000 and filed a receipt for that sum among the papers in the estate of R. J. Reynolds. The guardian never filed an account in the guardianship proceedings until the year 1906. Shortly thereafter he died. Robert Read died in October, 1905, leaving three sons surviving him. After the death of Ash, Mrs. Miller and the representatives of the estate of Robert Read commenced an action to compel an accounting by the representatives of the estate of Ash. It was claimed that the proceeding was barred by the laches of the plaintiff. That claim was carefully examined by the court and it was held that the doctrine of laches was not applicable as against the written receipt of Ash. So in the instant case we think it is clear that the doctrine is not applicable as against the judgment showing on its face that it has not been paid and has not been satisfied.

[7] To support his contention that the plaintiff was barred by his laches, defendant introduced in evidence his own affidavit. It contains about sixty folios. Many allegations were made on information and belief. It contains numerous allegations of the places of residence, from time to time, of N. E. Scofield, of his wife, of W. P. Calkins, and of W. F. Wilkie. It contains numerous allegations of the occupations of, and the properties owned by W. F. Wilkie. And it contains numerous allegations of what N. E. Scofield knew, or should have known, from time to time, regarding said facts. Furthermore it contained arguments to the effect, and defendant now argues, that the plaintiff and his decedent were guilty of laches. To rebut the allegations of the defendant, the plaintiff offered several affidavits which were received in whole or in part. Some were expressly limited by the trial court. At this time the defendant quotes passages showing certain allegations were made on information and belief and contends he was prejudiced by such allegations. The record does not show that the trial court based its ruling on incompetent evidence. The memorandum decision of the trial court recites that its decision was based on the competent portion of said affidavits. As the hearing was had before the court it will be presumed that the court based its ruling on competent and not incompetent evidence. Roth v. Thomson, 40 Cal.App. 208, 216, 180 P. 656; Watt v. Copeland, 92 Cal.App. 161, 170, 267 P. 928; Ericson v. Steiner, 119 Cal.App. 305, 308, 6 P.2d 298; Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Stowell, 6 Cal.App.2d 373, 378, 44 P.2d 392. Furthermore an examination of the affidavits discloses that some of the passages complained of were not objectionable for the purpose for which they were offered. Hester v. Western Life & Accident Co., 67 Mont. 286, 215 P. 508, 509; 20 Am.Jur. 404 "Evidence," sec. 457.

[8] Over the objections of the defendant, the plaintiff introduced in evidence excerpts from the pleadings in an action entitled Brownell v. All Persons. They showed that in 1904 Brownell placed on sale a tract of land near 17th Avenue and K Street in San Francisco; that the owner sold lots therein; among others the owner agreed to sell lot No. 5 to defendant under a contract of purchase. The complaint was filed May 4, 1909. On June 10, 1909, this defendant, W. F. Wilkie, and others, filed an answer admitting said contract agreement. On September 16, 1909, the court ordered a judgment entered which recited that on May 20, 1909, Brownell conveyed lot No. 5 to Laura E. Buckman as assignee of W. F. Wilkie. Laura E. Buckman was his mother-in-law. On July 7, 1911, she conveyed said lot to Elizabeth E. Wilkie, the defendant's wife. That deed was recorded April 19, 1918. The defendant asserts that the decree was an insinuation that W. F. Wilkie assigned his contract to hinder his creditors and that the decree was not sufficient, standing alone, to prove that fact. But the plaintiff was not bound to prove all of his case in one item. The evidence was proof of one link in defendant's title. No motion to strike was made because the evidence was not connected. The evidence was admissible and the objection went only to its weight.

[9, 10] As hereinabove set forth this action (No. 21,160, Superior Court records) was an action brought to recover damages for breach of contract because of the failure of the defendants to redeem the above-mentioned certificate of stock. In its judgment the trial court ordered N. E. Scofield to deliver the stock and awarded him judgment for the amount of the balance due on the contract. This defendant claims the action was one in specific performance and claims this plaintiff failed to show that the certificate was delivered and therefore he was not entitled to relief. We find no merit in the point. The plaintiff's action was clearly one at law to recover the amount specified in the contract. Civ.Code, sec. 3302; Dickinson v. Zubiate Mining Co., 11 Cal.App. 656, 106 P. 123. His remedy at law being complete he had no occasion to apply to a court of equity for relief under an action for specific performance. Furthermore an examination of the complaint shows it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for specific performance because it fails to plead facts showing a mutuality of remedy. 23 Cal.Jur. 447.

[11, 12] When the plaintiff's motion came on for a hearing he introduced in evidence, of the records and files in action No. 21,160: (1) The complaint; (2) affidavit for attachment; (3) writ for attachment; (4) demurrer; (5) return on writ; (6) answer of defendants; (7) notice of trial; (8) findings; and (9) decree. He also introduced (1) the order to show cause why a writ of execution should not issue; and (2) the affidavit of Frank O. Hatch made in support of his motion. As each was offered no objection was made to any one of said documents. The plaintiff then rested. Thereupon the defendant objected to the granting of any relief because "each statement in the affidavit" of Frank O. Hatch was hearsay. The objection was overruled and he now assigns that ruling as error. It is a sufficient answer to state that "each statement in the affidavit" was not hearsay and that only one statement was hearsay. The objection was not based solely on that one statement, it was too broad, and the trial court did not err in overruling the objection. Furthermore the objection, if it can be called that, came too late.

The defendant also claims that the plaintiff did not prove facts sufficient. It will suffice to state that that claim is not an open question in this state. Doehla v. Phillips, 151 Cal. 488, 91 P. 330. At page 495 of 151 Cal., at page 333 of 91 P. the court said: "We see no force whatever in the contention that in making the order for the issuance of the execution, under the circumstances here appearing, the lower court was guilty of an abuse of the discretion confided to it. Admittedly the judgment, which was for money loaned to the appellant, had never been satisfied in whole or in part, and no reason whatever appeared why, in equity and good conscience, he should not be compelled to pay the same. The failure of plaintiff to earlier enforce the judgment which appellant should and could have at any time voluntarily paid was entirely without prejudice to any of his legal rights, and did not render the granting of the order and abuse of discretion. Under such circumstances it would appear that the exercise of a sound discretion would require the enforcement of the judgment. * * * What we have said upon the claim as to abuse of discretion sufficiently disposes of the claim that plaintiff was not entitled to the remedy afforded by section 685, Code Civ.Proc., for the collection of his judgment, by reason of laches." See, also, 24 Cal.Law Review 226.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 479

BERTELSEN et al. v. BERTELSON.

Civ. 12007.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 2, 1942.

1. Quieting title ⇐43

Under statute providing that statement of any new matter in answer in avoidance or constituting a defense or counterclaim must on trial be deemed controverted by opposite party, where defendant in quiet title action denied ownership in plaintiffs and asserted ownership in himself but did not inform plaintiff that he was relying on a deed purporting to have been executed by attorney in fact, plaintiffs were authorized to present any defense they had to the new matter alleged by defendant. Code Civ.Proc. § 462.

2. Principal and agent ⇐152(4)

Where defendant in quiet title action relied on a deed purporting to have been executed by an attorney in fact, plaintiff's claim that attorney in fact attempted to make a deed of gift in violation of terms of power of attorney and in fraud of principal, if established, was a bar to defendant's claim.

3. Principal and agent ⇐152(4)

The power of attorney to plat, sell, contract for the sale of, and convey lands tenements, and hereditaments; to sign, seal, execute, acknowledge, and deliver all deeds, leases, assignments, releases, and discharges, covenant, indentures, contracts, and agreements of every kind, and all other instruments necessary and proper in the due course of business, was "special power of attorney" and a deed not executed in pursuance of the power could not pass title.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Special Power of Attorney".

4. Evidence ⇐432

Where defendant in quiet title action relied on a deed purporting to have been executed by attorney in fact, plaintiffs, in showing that attorney, in violation of terms of power of attorney and in fraud of principal, attempted to make deed of gift, were not bound by consideration recited in the deed but were entitled to show all the facts and to show that deed was in truth a gift deed.

5. Evidence ⇐432

Where defendant in quiet title action relied on a deed purporting to have been executed by an attorney in fact and plaintiff claimed that deed was gift deed in violation of the terms of power of attorney and in fraud of principal, testimony that principal did not in presence of brother receive any remittance from the defendant was admissible to show that deed was made without consideration.

6. Quieting title ⇐44(3)

Where defendant in quiet title actior relied on deed purporting to have been executed by an attorney in fact and plaintiffs claimed that deed was gift deed in violation of power of attorney and in fraud of principal, only slight evidence was required to prove plaintiff's theory.

7. Principal and agent ⇐190(3)
Quieting title ⇐44(3)

Where defendant in quiet title action claimed under deed purporting to have been executed by attorney in fact and plaintiff claimed that deed was a gift deed in violation of the power of attorney, uncontradicted testimony of principal's brother that principal did not in his presence receive any remittance from the defendant, and that defendant did not tender himself as a witness, sustained finding that no consideration was paid for the deed by defendant or any one for him but that the deed was voluntary, since trial court could assume that the brother testified truthfully or defendant would have contradicted him.

8. Principal and agent ⇐190(3)
Quieting title ⇐44(3)

In action to quiet title wherein plaintiff contended that deed under which defendant claimed and which recited a consideration of $10 was a gift deed in violation of special power of attorney, evidence that property was of value of over $8,000 and that principal did not in the presence of brother receive any remittance from the defendant established "prima facie" that deed was a gift deed or a deed for a nominal sum and conveyed no title, since the "deed for a nominal sum" and a "gift deed" are in effect the same.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Deed for a Nominal Sum", "Gift Deed", and "Prima Facie".

9. Principal and agent ⇐103(10)

Under a power of attorney, attorney in fact is not authorized to make conveyance without consideration or for a consideration of love and affection, or a merely nominal consideration nor for a consideration running to the agent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Action to quiet title by George Bertelsen and others against Ray W. Bertelson. From a judgment for the plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Combs & Murphine and Lee Combs, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. W. Falkner, of El Monte, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

In this action to quiet title the trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiffs and from the judgment entered thereon the defendant Ray W. Bertelson has appealed.

The plaintiffs pleaded their action in the ordinary form to quiet title to certain lots located in the county of Los Angeles. The defendant Ray W. Bertelson appeared and answered. In his answer he inserted certain denials, made some admissions, and then alleged "* * * that he now is and during all times mentioned in plaintiffs' complaint has been and was prior to the commencement of this action the owner in fee simple of said real property hereinbefore described; admits that this answering defendant claims and has an interest in the real property hereinbefore described adverse to plaintiffs herein. * * *"

On the trial both parties claimed to deraign title from Christian Bertelsen, a brother of the plaintiff George Bertelsen and an uncle of the defendant Ray W. Bertelson.

The plaintiffs introduced evidence showing ownership in Christian Bertelsen, that he died testate in Los Angeles County, that his will was probated in said county and a decree of distribution was entered awarding to Hans Bertelsen, a brother, various parcels of land, including the parcels described in the plaintiffs' complaint. The plaintiffs also introduced evidence that thereafter Hans Bertelsen died testate in Los Angeles County and after proceedings duly had a decree of distribution was entered awarding various parcels of land including the lots described in plaintiffs' complaint to the plaintiff George Bertelsen, a brother. Except as herein noted no question regarding the title of the plaintiffs is presented in the record.

In support of his claim the defendant introduced evidence showing that on the 31st day of March, 1903, Hans Bertelsen executed a power of attorney to his brother B. Bertelson. At the time that document was executed the principal resided at Holstein, Iowa. However the power of attorney was acknowledged before a notary public on the same day in the county of Pierce, State of Washington. The defendant also offered in evidence a deed dated the 18th day of January, 1938, by said attorney in fact, conveying the parcels in suit to his son, the defendant. The deed was signed Hans Bertelsen by B. Bertelson his attorney in fact. It recited that it was made in consideration of $10. The power of attorney recited that it authorized the attorney "To plat, sell, contract for the sale of, and convey lands, tenements and hereditaments; to sign, seal, execute, acknowledge, and deliver all deeds, leases, assignments, releases and discharges, covenants, indentures, contracts and agreements of every nature and kind, and all other instruments in writing which he may deem necessary and proper in the due course of business." It contained no other authorization to make any other kind of a transfer.

The defendant Ray W. Bertelson resided at Tacoma, Washington. The deed made to him by B. Bertelson, the attorney in fact of Hans Bertelsen, was made at Tacoma. The plaintiff George Bertelsen at the same time resided with Hans Bertelsen, his brother, at 1501 South Marguerita, Alhambra, California, and, during the last illness of his brother, George was acting as his servitor and secretary. After the defendant had rested the plaintiff George Bertelsen was called as a witness in his own behalf and testified that between the 18th day of January, 1938, the date of defendant's deed, and the 30th day of January, 1938, the date of the death of Hans Bertelsen, the latter did not receive any remittances from Tacoma, Washington.

[1-4] Before proceeding the condition of the pleadings and the issues before the trial court should be noted. As recited above the plaintiffs alleged an ordinary action to quiet title. The defendant admitted many of the allegations but denied ownership in the plaintiffs and asserted ownership in himself. The plaintiffs were not informed as to what documents the defendant would rely on as showing his claim. When on the trial it transpired that the defendant was relying upon the deed purporting to be executed by B. Bertelson as attorney in fact, the statute, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 462, authorized the plaintiffs to present any defense they had to such new matter. Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 P. 630; Wolf v. Gall, 176 Cal. 787, 169 P. 1017. As one of their defenses to the claim of the defendant it was clearly the theory of the plaintiffs that in violation of the terms of the power of attorney and in fraud of Hans Bertelsen, the principal, B. Bertelson attempted to make a deed of gift to the defendant. If the plaintiffs could establish that theory it was a complete defense to the claim of the defendant. Randall v. Duff, 79 Cal. 115, 125, 19 P. 532, 20 P. 610, 3 L.R.A. 754, 756; Alcorn v. Buschke, 133 Cal. 655, 66 P. 15; Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296, 312, 11 P. 820. The power of attorney was special and if the deed was not executed in pursuance of the power it could pass no title. Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 354, 367; Alcorn v. Buschke, supra, 133 Cal. 657, 66 P. 15; Brown v. Laird, 134 Or. 150, 291 P. 352, 73 A.L.R. 877, note 884. As shown by the cited cases such defense sounds in equity. In presenting that defense the plaintiffs were not bound by the consideration recited in the defendant's deed but were entitled to show all of the facts. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 532, 533, 17 P. 689, 7 Am.St.Rep. 189. They were not limited by the recital in the deed that the consideration was $10. Black Eagle Oil Co. v. Belcher, 22 Cal.App. 258, 263, 133 P. 1153. On the contrary they were entitled to show that the deed was in truth and in fact a gift deed. Treat v. Treat, 170 Cal. 329, 336, 150 P. 53, 57. Bearing the foregoing rules in mind, we will now pass to a consideration of the specific points presented by the defendant.

[5, 6] He complains because the trial court, over his objection and exception, allowed the plaintiff George Bertelsen to testify that his brother, Hans Bertelsen, did not in his presence receive any remittance from the defendant. We find no merit in the point. The evidence was not conclusive but it was clearly pertinent to the replication of the plaintiffs. The latter were attempting to prove that the deed was made without any consideration. The plaintiffs were offering the best evidence they had. Having the negative position only slight proof was required of them. 10 Cal.Jur. 1158.

[7] Closely allied with the last point the defendant contends that the trial court erred in making a finding "That no consideration or other thing of value was paid for said deed by said defendant or anyone for him, but that said deed was wholly voluntary." He asserts that said finding was unsupported by any evidence, presumption, or inference. We think those assertions are not supported by the record. We have just cited the oral testimony of the plaintiff George Bertelsen. When he had given that testimony the defendant, according to the statement of his attorney, was in Los Angeles and "available" as a witness. However he did not come into the courtroom and tender himself as a witness. He remained absent and now claims to rely on presumptions and inferences. They are not helpful to him. Under the facts above recited the trial court was at liberty to assume that George Bertelsen had testified to the truth or that the defendant would have come into the courtroom and contradicted him. Bone v. Hayes, 154 Cal. 759, 765, 99 P. 172.

[8, 9] When the parties rested as recited above the plaintiffs had proved a prima facie case. Furthermore there was evidence before the court that the property in suit was of a value of over $8000. The consideration recited in defendant's deed was $10. That was a mere nominal sum. But a gift deed and a deed for a nominal sum are in effect the same. Hanrick v. Patrick, 119 U.S. 156, 172, 7 S.Ct. 147, 30 L.Ed. 396; Huntsman v. Huntsman, 56 Utah 609, 192 P. 368, 370; Peck v. Vandenberg, 30 Cal. 11, 62; Salmon v. Wilson, 41 Cal. 595, 604. As to the authority of an attorney in fact, acting under a power conferred for the benefit of his principal, to make an absolute gift of the property, or convey it away without substantial consideration, we doubt if there is any conflict whatever among the authorities. Mechem, Agency (2d Ed.) sec. 783; 2 Am.Jur. 116; 2 C.J.S., Agency, § 114, p. 1332; 1 Cal.Jur. 758. In 2 C.J.S., Agency, § 114, p. 1332, the author says: "* * * nor does it [a power of attorney] authorize a conveyance without consideration, or for a consideration of love and affection, or a merely nominal consideration, or for a consideration running to the agent." The text is supported by Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 354; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 533, 557; Huntsman v. Huntsman, supra; Brown v. Laird, 134 Or. 150, 291 P. 352, 73 A.L.R. 877, and note 884. It follows that, whether the deed to the defendant was made as a gift or merely for a nominal sum, it conveyed no title.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 463

METROPOLITAN WATER DIST. OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA v. ADAMS et al.

SAME v. HOLMES et al.

L. A. 17511.

Supreme Court of California.
Feb. 11, 1942.

As Modified Feb. 19 and 20, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐824

The constitutional provision that the concurrence of four justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank, although guaranteeing the right to oral argument in matters on the calendar in open session of the Supreme Court, and the concurrence of four members of the court who were present at the argument in pronouncing judgment, does not entitle parties to oral argument in all matters passed upon by the Supreme Court in bank. Const. art. 6, § 2.

2. Courts ⇐102(1)

The granting of a rehearing in Supreme Court was not a pronouncement of "judgment" within the contemplation of constitutional provision, making the concurrence of four justices present at the argument necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank, nor a "judgment" as defined by the Code of Civil Procedure. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 577, 1003; Const. art. 6, § 2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judgment".

3. Appeal and error ⇐831

The Supreme Court has inherent power to revise, modify, and correct its judgments so long as they are under its control and may, in the exercise of such power, grant a rehearing on application of the parties or on its own motion.

4. Courts ⇐101

The justices entitled to act on matters considered at executive sessions of the Supreme Court are the regular members of the court, except such as may be disqualified or unable to act thereon, and, if a full complement of qualified members is not available, then such justices as may be duly assigned to the court, provided that in no event shall there be more than seven justices acting on a particular matter.

5. Appeal and error ⇐831

The fact that a justice of the District Court of Appeal, assigned pro tempore to the Supreme Court to "assist court", participated in pronouncement of judgment in a matter in which he heard the oral argument, did not disqualify a regular justice of the Supreme Court, who was not present at the oral argument and original submission of the case, from signing the order granting a rehearing. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 577, 1003; Const. art. 6, §§ 1a, 2.

6. Judges ⇐25(2)

The assignment, always temporary, of a justice of the District Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court, does not deprive a regularly constituted member of the Supreme Court of his constitutional functions, when he is able, ready, and willing to act and no disqualification exists. Const. art. 6, § 1a.

7. Judges ⇐24

The Constitution does not prevent a justice of the Supreme Court, either regular or pro tempore, who has not heard the argument, from participating in the pronouncement of a judgment, if four justices who were present at the argument have also participated, or if oral argument has been waived by submission without argument, or if the constitutional requirement of concurrence of four justices present at the argument is waived by stipulation of the parties or otherwise. Const. art. 6, § 2.

8. Appeal and error ⇐831

The regular members of the Supreme Court and such justices pro tempore as are duly assigned to the court and are not disqualified, but not more than seven in all, are competent to act on a petition for rehearing, whether they were present at the oral argument or not. Const. art. 6, §§ 1a, 2.

9. Courts ⇐102(1)

Setting aside the submission of a cause in the Supreme Court is a matter requiring court action, and the vote of four of the justices constituting the court at the time the order is made is necessary to its effectiveness.

10. Courts ⇐102(1)

Where a case was duly transferred to the Supreme Court for hearing and determination, the parties were entitled to a judgment therein by a duly constituted court, but they had no right to a decision by any particular judge or group of judges.

11. Appeal and error ⇐831

The practice of the United States Supreme Court of refusing to grant a rehearing unless a member of the court, concurring in the majority opinion, desires such reconsideration, is a rule of "judicial policy" and works no compulsion on courts of other jurisdictions to adopt it.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judicial Policy".

12. Appeal and error ⇐831

The granting of a rehearing in the Supreme Court after it had previously affirmed a judgment, from which plaintiff had appealed, involved no question of the deprivation of any right of the defendants protected by the federal Constitution, since there is no such "vested right" in a judgment in the party in whose favor it is rendered as to preclude the re-examination and vacation of the judgment in the ordinary mode provided by law. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 5, 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Vested Right".

13. Constitutional law ⇐315

The practice of state courts in the matter of re-examination and vacation of judgments in ordinary mode provided by law is a matter of state concern, and, if reasonable opportunity to be heard is afforded the litigants thereunder, no federal constitutional guaranties are violated. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 5, 14.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

On rehearing and motion to set aside order granting a rehearing.

Motion to set aside order granting rehearing denied, and former opinion, affirming judgments below, modified to the extent that such judgments below are modified in accordance with stipulations among the parties, and as so modified, affirmed.

For prior opinions, see 116 P.2d 7, 100 P.2d 357, and 99 P.2d 659.

James H. Howard, Charles C. Cooper, Jr., Arthur A. Weber, Donald M. Keith, Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, and Vincent Morgan, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

T. P. Wittschen, of Oakland, and J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Roy W. Dowds, Asst. Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, amici curiæ on behalf of appellant.

John W. Preston, of Los Angeles, Miguel Estudillo, of Riverside, Oliver O. Clark, of Los Angeles, and C. L. McFarland, of Riverside, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

This is a motion to set aside an order granting a petition for a rehearing in the above entitled cause and to direct the issuance of a remittitur forthwith.

The proceeding is one in eminent domain. A judgment in condemnation was entered by the Superior Court in Riverside County. On appeal by the plaintiff district the judgment was reversed by the District Court of Appeal. 99 P.2d 659. A petition by the defendants to have the cause heard in this court was granted and it was thereupon transferred to this court for hearing and determination. The appeal was first argued at Los Angeles on June 6, 1940. The late Chief Justice Waste and Justice Houser were absent from the session, and Presiding Justice John M. York of the District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division One, and Justice Homer R. Spence of the District Court of Appeal, First District, Division Two, as justices pro tempore, sat with the remaining justices under assignment by the chairman of the Judicial Council. After oral argument the cause was submitted for decision. The submission was vacated on December 2, 1940, and the cause was again set down for argument, which was held in Los Angeles on April 8, 1941. At that session there were present Chief Justice Gibson, Justices Shenk, Curtis, Edmonds, Carter, Traynor, and the late Presiding Justice John F. Pullen of the District Court of Appeal, Third District, sitting pro tempore under assignment by the chairman of the Judicial Council. Following oral argument the cause was again submitted. On August 4, 1941, a judgment of affirmance was filed, upon an opinion written by Justice Carter and concurred in by the Chief Justice, and Justices Traynor and Pullen. 116 P.2d 7. Justices Shenk, Curtis and Edmonds dissented. On August 22, 1941, a petition for a rehearing was filed by the plaintiff district. In their answer to the petition for a rehearing the defendants raised the point and vigorously contended that "Justice pro tem. Pullen and not Justice Houser must sit in the disposition of the petition for rehearing." Justice Pullen was not present when the petition for a rehearing was considered and acted upon. Justice Houser was present and participated in such consideration. The point was decided adversely to the defendants' contention and on September 3, 1941, an order granting the petition for a rehearing was signed by Justices Shenk, Curtis, Edmonds and Houser, and was filed in the office of the clerk of this court at Los Angeles during the regular session of the court in that city, at which session all of the regular members of the court were in attendance. On October 14, 1941, the defendants filed a notice of the present motion to set aside the order granting the petition for a rehearing and to direct the issuance of a remittitur forthwith. The notice specified that the motion would be made on the ground that the order of September 3d granting the rehearing was irregular and void for the asserted reason that it did not have the assent of four justices of this court who were qualified to give such assent and that in consequence thereof the judgment of August 4th became final on September 3, 1941.

By an amendment of the defendants' notice of motion, filed on November 4, 1941, the grounds of the motion were enlarged by adding the contention that under the Constitution of the United States, and particularly the fifth and the fourteenth amendments, they were guaranteed the right, after oral argument and decision by this court to have any petition for rehearing determined by the justices of the court who constituted the court at the time of oral argument, submission and decision of the cause, in the absence of any disqualification or incapacity of said justices to act in the matter, and that a denial of the asserted right would deprive them of a property right in said decision contrary to the aforesaid provisions of the federal Constitution. The motion was orally argued before the court in bank on November 7, 1941.

The order of the chairman of the Judicial Council appointing Justice Pullen as a justice pro tempore was addressed to him, was dated March 27, 1941, and assigned him "to sit as a justice of the Supreme Court of the State of California, to assist said Court from April 1 to May 15, 1941, and thereafter to act as such until all matters submitted to you therein shall have been disposed of by you."

Briefly, then, it is the contention of the defendants that since Justice Houser was not present at the oral argument on April 8, 1941, he was not authorized to sign the order granting the rehearing and that said order was and is therefore void and of no effect. Put in another way, the contention is that a majority of the justices who constituted the court at the time of oral argument must concur in any valid order granting a rehearing.

Section 2 of article VI of our state Constitution provides among other things: "The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and six Associate Justices. The Court may sit in departments and in bank, and shall always be open for the transaction of business. * * * The Chief Justice may convene the Court in bank at any time, and shall be the presiding Justice of the Court when so convened. The concurrence of four Justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank * * * to render a judgment a concurrence of four Judges shall be necessary. In the determination of causes, all decisions of the Court in bank or in departments shall be given in writing, and the grounds of the decision shall be stated."

[1, 2] The foregoing quotation contains the only reference to argument in causes pending before the court. In its application the right to oral argument in matters on the calendar in open sessions of the court has always been accorded and the necessity for the concurrence of four members of the court who were present at the argument in pronouncing judgment in the cause has always been scrupulously adhered to and enforced. This right was accorded the parties in the present case and four members of the court who were present at the argument concurred in the pronouncement of the judgment. When this had been done the requirements of the Constitution were fulfilled. But from the constitutional provision concerning argument it does not follow that the parties are entitled to oral argument in all matters passed upon by the court in bank. When not conducting an open session, the court is convened in executive sessions at least two each week. At these sessions numerous matters are ruled upon, such as applications for writs, petitions for transfer from the District Courts of Appeal, and petitions for rehearing of our own decisions. These matters are disposed of by order of at least four members of the court, but no oral argument thereon is provided for by the Constitution or otherwise permitted and no grounds for the rulings are stated in writing, except in very rare cases in the discretion of the court. The petition for a rehearing in the present case was one of those matters. The action thereon was not to "pronounce a judgment" as contemplated by the constitutional provision above quoted, but was a ruling on the question whether there should be a re-consideration of a judgment theretofore pronounced to the end that further argument be had, if desired, and a judgment thereafter pronounced in all respects as required by the Constitution. A judgment is defined by the code as "the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding." Sec. 577, Code Civ.Proc.; 14 Cal.Jur. 852. It is "the law's last word in a judicial controversy." 30 Am.Jur. 821. Such was the judgment of August 4, 1941, in the present matter, subject, however, to the power of the court to order a rehearing. Such an order is not a judgment. Section 1003 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Every direction of a court, judge, or justice, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment, is denominated an order."

[3] There is no express provision of the Constitution or in the statutes for a rehearing of a cause in bank. It is, however, an essential ingredient of jurisdiction. This court has inherent power to revise, modify, and correct its judgments so long as they are under its control and may, in the exercise of that power, grant rehearings on applications of the parties or on its own motion. In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 21 P. 976, 22 P. 742, 1028, 6 L.R.A. 594. Nor is there any provision of the Constitution or the statutes as to when a judgment in bank shall become final. Section 45 of the Code of Civil Procedure from 1880 (Amendments to the Code of Civil Procedure 1880, p. 24) until its repeal in 1901, Stats.1901, p. 118, purported to provide that judgments of the court in bank should become final, "unless within thirty days after such judgment an order be made in writing, signed by five justices, granting a rehearing." But said section was declared unconstitutional in In re Jessup, supra, in 1889. Since December 19, 1928, the rules of court, as promulgated by the Judicial Council, have provided: "Unless otherwise specially ordered, or a rehearing be granted, judgments of the Supreme Court in bank become final at the end of the thirtieth day after the date of pronouncement." Rule XXX, 213 Cal., p. lvii.

[4] The justices entitled to act on matters considered at executive sessions are the regular members of the court except such as may be disqualified or unable to act thereon; and if a full complement of the qualified members be not available, then such justice or justices as may be duly assigned to the court, provided that in no event shall there be more than seven justices acting on a particular matter.

But the defendants insist that Justice Houser had no authority to join in ordering a rehearing because of the form of the order assigning Justice Pullen to the court. It will be noted that he was assigned pursuant to the Judicial Council amendment to the Constitution in 1926 (sec. 1a, art. VI) to "assist the court." He was not assigned "to act for a judge who is disqualified or unable to act, or to sit and hold court where a vacancy in the office of judge has occurred."

[5, 6] The order assigning Justice Pullen fixed the time of his service as "from April 1st to May 15, 1941", and it is true that the order assigned him "thereafter to act as such until all matters submitted" to him "therein shall have been disposed of" by him. But the application for a rehearing had never been submitted to him. The matter of the pronouncement of judgment had been submitted to him and he had acted on the matter so submitted. But the question whether the judgment should be set aside and further consideration be given to the appeal in accordance with the showing made by the plaintiff district in its petition for a rehearing was a question separate from and independent of the question of the prior pronouncement of judgment. The question whether a rehearing should be granted was, as above stated, presented to the court with its regular membership participating, and Justice Houser had the power to act on the matter unless disqualified. No disqualification, constitutional, statutory or otherwise, has been shown. The assignment, always temporary, of a justice of the District Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court, does not and can not deprive a regularly constituted member of the Supreme Court of his constitutional functions, when he is able, ready and willing to act and no disqualification exists.

A situation identical in principle was presented to this court in Reeve v. Colusa

Gas & Electric Co., 151 Cal. 29, 91 P. 802. There the plaintiff-respondent moved the court to set aside an order granting a rehearing and to issue a remittitur in accordance with the judgment of the court in bank theretofore made. The case had been first decided in Department Two upon an opinion reversing the judgment for the plaintiff, Justices Henshaw, McFarland and Lorigan joining in the decision. The decision in department was vacated and a rehearing in bank was ordered. At the time the case came on for hearing in bank Justice Sloss deemed himself disqualified and Justice McFarland was ill and unable to be present. In order to secure a full bench for the consideration of the case, the court, under the authority of section 4 of article VI of the Constitution, as amended in 1904, selected from the justices of the District Court of Appeal of the First District, Justice Cooper to act in the place of Justice Sloss, and Presiding Justice Harrison to act in place of Justice McFarland. The cause was orally argued before the court in bank as thus constituted, after which the judgment was affirmed by a decision in which Justices Shaw, Angellotti, Harrison and Chief Justice Beatty concurred, and from which Justices Henshaw, Lorigan and Cooper dissented. The defendant-appellant then filed a petition for a rehearing. At the time this petition came on for determination Justice McFarland had recovered his health and was again able to act, and was present, ready and willing to act on the matter of granting or denying the petition. Justice Harrison was also present, ready and willing to act in the matter and offered to act thereon, if the court so desired. Thereupon it was decided by the justices of the Supreme Court, all of the members being present, that Justice McFarland and not Justice Harrison should participate in the petition for a rehearing, and that, as the disqualification of Justice Sloss was of a continuing nature, Justice Cooper should continue to act in the case. The court as thus constituted then took up the petition for a rehearing and the same was granted by four of the justices, namely, Justices Henshaw, Lorigan and McFarland of the Supreme Court and Justice Cooper of the District Court of Appeal, sitting pro tempore. After the expiration of thirty days following the pronouncement of the judgment the plaintiff moved the court to set aside the order upon the ground that Justice McFarland should not have acted in the matter. The motion to vacate was made on the principal ground that the power of Justice Harrison to act in the case continued until the judgment upon that hearing had become final, or until vacated by a valid order granting a rehearing within thirty days; that until that period had elapsed Justice Harrison's power in the case, so long as he continued qualified, ready and willing to act, was exclusive, and hence that the order granting the rehearing was void because it was made by only three justices qualified and competent to act in the matter. It was held in that case that the merits of the motion would not be inquired into for the reason that inasmuch as the court had theretofore decided that Justice McFarland and not Justice Harrison should participate, said ruling had become the law of the case. Attention was directed to the salutary effect of the application of the rule of law of the case for the reason that if the motion to vacate should be granted, no further consideration could be given to the petition for rehearing notwithstanding the fact that if Justice Harrison had participated it could not be said that he would have been averse to granting it. The Reeve case cannot be distinguished from the matter at bar. There is, however, no necessity for thus strictly applying the doctrine of the law of the case in the present matter, although the propriety of its application is just as apparent if not clearer here than in the Reeve case. There the question of the right of Justice McFarland to participate arose within the thirty day period on the court's own motion, without notice to the parties. Here the question arose on objection of the defendants before the petition for rehearing was granted, and may therefore be said to have been litigated. The two cases are the same on the facts and are parallel in principle. A more extended reference to the Reeve case is found in the case of Fay v. District Court of Appeal, 200 Cal. 522, 533, 254 P. 896.

The defendants criticize the Reeve case, first, on the asserted ground that by the holding therein this court nullified the provisions of section 2 of article VI of the Constitution, which requires the concurrence of four justices present at the argument to pronounce a judgment in bank. The answer is that the defendants, as heretofore pointed out, have misconstrued the nature of the matter before the court in which Justice Houser participated, for in acting thereon the court was not pronouncing judgment. No oral argument is required or permitted on the consideration of a petition for rehearing. The order thereon is not subject to petition for rehearing and no written opinion is required, as in the case of a judgment duly pronounced.

It is then contended by the defendants that the Reeve case should not apply because the law with reference to the assignment of judges has been so changed as to provide that those justices who are present at the oral argument have the exclusive power and right to act on any matter that may arise in the case after the pronouncement of judgment. This is not so, first, because the change in the law does not expressly or impliedly so provide, and secondly, because the essential functions of a justice pro tempore selected by the court to act pursuant to the 1904 amendment to section 4 of article VI of the Constitution are not, so far as the present matter is concerned, any different from those of a justice pro tempore assigned to the Supreme Court by the chairman of the Judicial Council pursuant to section 1a of article VI of the Constitution, adopted in 1926. It is true that the occasions for an assignment were enlarged by the later amendment. Theretofore a justice selected by the court itself could act only in the place of a justice of the court who was disqualified or unable to act. Under the 1926 amendment a justice pro tempore may also be assigned to assist a court whose calendar is congested and to sit and hold court when a vacancy in the office of judge has occurred. The enlargement of the occasions for the assignment of justices pro tempore by the Judicial Council amendment left the essential functions of the judge or justice after he has been duly assigned the same as before that amendment. Fay v. District Court of Appeal, supra.

[7, 8] Furthermore, there is no provision of the Constitution which would prevent a justice of the court, either regular or pro tempore, who had not heard the argument from participating in the pronouncement of a judgment (1) if four justices who were present at the argument have also participated or (2) if oral argument has been waived by submission without oral argument (see Philbrook v. Newman, 148 Cal. 172, 178, 82 P. 772), or (3) if the constitutional requirement of concurrence of four justices present at the argument be waived by stipulation of the parties or otherwise. See Blanc v. Bowman, 22 Cal. 23, 24; Luco v. De Toro, 88 Cal. 26, 25 P. 983, 11 L.R.A. 543; Niles v. Edwards, 95 Cal. 41, 30 P. 134. In 1891 this court said in the Luco case at page 28 of 88 Cal., at page 983 of 25 P., 11 L.R.A. 543: "The rule has always been with respect to petitions for rehearings that as many justices as are necessary to pronounce the judgment must concur in granting a rehearing, or the petition will be denied." It is significant that the phrase "as many justices," and not, "as many of the justices who were present at the argument," was used. It may be said with equal assurance and certainty that the rule has always been that the regular members of the court and such justices pro tempore as are duly assigned to the court and are not disqualified, but not more than seven in all, are competent to act on a petition for rehearing whether they were present at the oral argument or not. This rule has not been questioned since the Reeve case, so far as we have been able to ascertain, and the defendants have not cited an instance to the contrary.

[9, 10] The position of the defendants therefore reduces itself to this: That whenever a cause is submitted to a "panel," as they call it, of justices constituting the court at the time a cause is orally argued and submitted, the individual justices who compose that "panel" are the only justices qualified to act thereafter in any matter affecting that cause until a judgment pronounced therein has become final; and that when justices pro tempore are a part of that constituent membership they and they only are the persons who may act in any matter thus arising thereafter, to the exclusion of any regular member of the court who may be present, and ready and willing to act in such matter. If this argument should prevail it would lead to the following untenable conclusions: that Justices York and Spence, who were present at the oral argument on June 6, 1940, should have acted to the exclusion of Chief Justice Waste, had he been living, and Justice Houser, when the order of submission was set aside December 2, 1940; that on the re-argument on April 8, 1941, Justices York and Spence should have acted to the exclusion of a regular member of the court and of Justice Pullen, and that they would have to act on the present motion. But, say the defendants, the order setting aside the submission could have been made by the Chief Justice alone. Again the defendants are laboring under a misapprehension. The matter of setting aside the submission of the cause has always been considered as one requiring court action, and the vote of four of the justices constituting the court at the time the order is made as necessary to its effectiveness. This is the uniform practice. It is safe to say that no order setting aside a submission has otherwise heretofore been made. The parties, of course, have the constitutional right to a judgment herein by a duly constituted court, but they have no right, constitutional or otherwise, to a decision by any particular judge or group of judges.

The defendants cite, in support of their theory, the opinion of this court appended to the opinion and order of the District Court of Appeal affirming the judgment of conviction in the case of People v. Ruef, 14 Cal.App. 576, 621, 114 P. 48, 54, wherein it was held on a motion to set aside an order granting a hearing in this court, that Justice Henshaw was disqualified from acting on the petition for a hearing because of his absence from the state at the time the order purporting to grant the same was made, and that as only three other members of the court had signed the order the same was ineffective to transfer the cause to this court. The court stated at page 630 of 14 Cal.App., at page 53 of 114 P.: "The moment Justice Henshaw left the state, in view of the authorities already referred to, he became unable to exercise any judicial function as a justice of the Supreme Court, in this state or out of it, and this disability continued during the whole period of his absence." The ruling in that case was obviously correct but no such situation is here presented.

[11] There is nothing in the cases in other jurisdictions, relied upon by the defendants, that is controlling. They cite cases following the practice in the United States Supreme Court to the effect that no rehearing will be granted unless a member of the court concurring in the majority opinion desires such reconsideration. That rule is one of judicial policy and works no compulsion on courts of other jurisdictions to adopt it, and involves no fundamental rights. Cases in other states, such as Cordner v. Cordner, 91 Utah 474, 64 P.2d 828; Woodbury v. Dorman, 15 Minn. 341, 15 Gil. 274; and Gas Products Co. v. Rankin, 63 Mont. 372, 207 P. 993, 24 A.L.R. 294, also cited by the defendants, likewise reflect policies in state practice with which we are not here concerned, at least to the extent that they should be adopted in preference to a practice in this state under which the courts and litigants have proceeded with apparent general satisfaction.

[12, 13] No question of the deprivation of any right of the defendants protected by the federal Constitution is properly involved. In granting the rehearing this court, by a majority of its qualified members, was merely exercising its power of control over litigation pending before it and before final determination. No judgment finally determining the rights of the litigants has as yet passed beyond the control of the court. The cause is still pending. The court up to this time has deprived the litigants of nothing. When a judgment has been pronounced and has become final and not until then have any rights of the defendants, constitutional or otherwise, been unduly disturbed. There is no such vested right in a judgment in the party in whose favor it is rendered as to preclude its re-examination and vacation in the ordinary modes provided by law. Garrison v. City of New York, 88 U.S. 196, 21 Wall. 196, 22 L.Ed. 612. The practice of the state courts in such matters is a matter of state concern and if reasonable opportunity to be heard be afforded the litigants thereunder no federal constitutional guarantees are violated. Freeland v. Williams, 131 U.S. 405, 417, 9 S.Ct. 763, 33 L.Ed. 193; King v. West Virginia, 216 U.S. 92, 93, 100, 30 S.Ct. 225, 54 L.Ed. 396.

The motion is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

PER CURIAM.

Pursuant to the stipulation on file herein among the parties to the appeals in the above entitled causes, the judgments appealed from are hereby modified in accordance with said stipulation, and as so modified said judgments are affirmed without costs to any party to said appeals either in the trial court or on appeal. Upon the going down of the remittitur the trial court is directed to enter the judgments as so modified. Also pursuant to said stipulation the remittitur shall issue forthwith.

19 Cal.2d 553

EAGLE OIL & REFINING CO., Inc., v. PRENTICE et al.

L. A. 18055.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 18, 1942.

1. Judgment ⇐181

The issue to be determined by trial court in considering a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment is whether defendant has presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue or defense, and not to pass upon or determine the issue itself or the true facts in the case. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

2. Judgment ⇐185

Affidavits filed on behalf of defendant in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment under statute should be liberally construed to the end that defendant will not be summarily deprived of the full hearing available at a trial of the action and rights incident thereto, and affidavits of plaintiff in support of motion should be strictly construed. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

3. Judgment ⇐178

The procedure authorized by statute respecting a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment is drastic and should be used with caution in order that it may not become a substitute for existing methods in the determination of issues of fact. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

4. Judgment ⇐185

Facts alleged in affidavits of the party against whom a motion for summary judgment under statute is made must be accepted as true, and such affidavits, to be sufficient, need not be composed wholly of strictly evidentiary facts. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

5. Judgment ⇐185

In action to recover balance due on an account for goods sold, allegations of answer and defendant's affidavits submitted in opposition to plaintiff's motion for summary judgment of the existence of an agreement whereby defendant agreed to give security for payments on account and plaintiff agreed to accept payments in monthly installments, the first of which was not due when action was commenced, and that defendant had performed agreement presented triable "issues of fact", notwithstanding that some allegations in affidavits were in nature of conclusions, and hence it was error to grant the motion. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Issue of Fact".

6. Judgment ⇐186

On plaintiff's motion to strike out the answer and for summary judgment under statute, defendant's pleadings were to be given a liberal construction. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

7. Judgment ⇐186

It is not the purpose of procedure under statute respecting a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment to test sufficiency of pleadings. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

8. Judgment ⇐186

Whether defendant's letter to plaintiff respecting an agreement relating to payments by defendant on an account showed that plaintiff did not regard a mortgage allegedly executed by defendant as being given to secure account could not be considered in determining whether a triable issue of fact was raised by defendant's affidavits submitted in opposition to plaintiff's motion for summary judgment in action to recover a balance allegedly due on account. Code Civ. Proc. § 437c.

9. Judgment ⇐185

Where defendant's affidavits submitted in opposition to plaintiff's motion for summary judgment in action to recover balance allegedly due on an account otherwise presented triable issues of fact and showed that an agreement was made and accepted by plaintiff whereby defendant was to pay account in monthly installments, plaintiff could not justify order granting motion on theory that defendant's affidavit alleging existence of agreement showed no more than an offer by defendant to give security for account in return for a right to pay it in installments. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Action by the Eagle Oil and Refining Company, Incorporated, against B. H. Prentice and another to recover for goods sold and delivered. From a summary judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

For prior opinion, see 114 P.2d 382.

B. H. Prentice in pro. per. for appellant.

Cobb, Campbell & Kelley, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a summary judgment for the sum of $2,879.87, together with interest and costs entered against him pursuant to section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Plaintiff's complaint was in two counts, one a common count for goods sold and delivered of the value of $32,364.44, of which it was alleged $29,484.57 had been paid, and the other, the balance due on a book account. Both involved the same indebtedness. Defendant filed an unverified answer in which he denied the indebtedness averred in the first count and as to the second count pleaded: "Denies that defendant is indebted to plaintiff upon an open book account in the sum of $2,879.87. Furthermore, defendant denies that there is any sum now due, owing and unpaid which defendant has not offered to be paid." As a separate defense defendant pleaded that on May 13, 1939, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff accepted a mortgage which provided that it was security for products to be delivered by plaintiff to defendant not exceeding $3,000, and also a further agreement of July 13, 1939, between plaintiff and defendant that any obligation owed by the latter to the former was to be discharged at the rate of $200 per month.

Plaintiff made a motion to strike defendant's answer and for entry of judgment for $2,879.87 under section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure. When the motion came on for hearing defendant filed a verified amended answer the same in substance as the original. The motion was granted and defendant appeals from the judgment thereupon entered.

Section 437c, prior to its amendment in 1939, provided that with respect to actions on certain claims as follows: "* * * if it is claimed that there is no defense to the action, on motion of the plaintiff, after notice of the time and place thereof in writing served on the answering defendant at least ten days before such motion, supported by affidavit of any person or persons having knowledge of the facts, the answer may be stricken out and judgment may be entered, in the discretion of the court, unless the defendant, by affidavit or affidavits shall show such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to entitle him to defend."

[1, 2] At the outset it should be observed that there are several pertinent fundamental principles which should be observed in the application of and procedure under section 437c. The issue to be determined by the trial court in consideration of a motion thereunder is whether or not defendant has presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue or defense, and not to pass upon or determine the issue itself, that is, the true facts in the case. Walsh v. Walsh, 18 Cal.2d 439, 116 P.2d 62; Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles v. Cryer, 39 Cal.App.2d 757, 104 P.2d 66; McComsey v. Leaf, 36 Cal.App. 2d 132, 97 P.2d 242; Kelly v. Liddicoat, 35 Cal.App.2d 559, 96 P.2d 186; Shea v. Leonis, 29 Cal.App.2d 184, 84 P.2d 277; Bank of America, etc., Ass'n v. Casady, 15 Cal.App.2d 163, 59 P.2d 444; Gardenswartz v. Equitable Life Assur. Society, 23 Cal. App.2d Supp. 745, 68 P.2d 322; Krieger v. Dennie, 123 Cal.App., Supp., 777, 10 P.2d 820; Cowan Oil & Refining Co. v. Miley Petroleum Corp., 112 Cal.App., Supp. 773, 295 P. 504. If that were not true controversial issues of fact would be tried upon affidavits by the court and not a jury. Because the procedure is summary and presented on affidavits without the benefit of cross-examination, a trial by jury and opportunity to observe the demeanor of witnesses in giving their testimony, the affidavits filed on behalf of the defendant should be liberally construed to the end that he will not be summarily deprived of the full hearing available at a trial of the action and the rights incident thereto.

[3] The procedure is drastic and should be used with caution in order that it may not become a substitute for existing methods in the determination of issues of fact. See Walsh v. Walsh, supra.

[4] For these reasons it may further be said that the affidavits of the moving party, the plaintiff in this case, should be strictly construed and those of his opponent liberally construed. McComsey v. Leaf, supra; Fuller v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Ltd., of Perth, Scotland, 224 Wis. 603, 272 N.W. 839; see 13 So.Cal.Law Rev. 523. And in this connection it may be further observed that the better rule is that the facts alleged in the affidavits of the party against whom the motion is made must be accepted as true, and that such affidavits to be sufficient need not necessarily be composed wholly of strictly evidentiary facts. McComsey v. Leaf, supra.

With these rules in mind we turn to the facts here presented. It appears from plaintiff's affidavit that on or about March 1, 1939, Nelson, an officer of plaintiff corporation, discussed an arrangement with defendant with reference to the purchase by defendant of the products sold by plaintiff, which plaintiff "agreed to sell at their established * * * prices with the agreement that said merchandise was to be paid for upon delivery." Defendant denies that the arrangement was for payment on delivery and alleges that a credit was agreed upon whereby payments were to be made on receipt of invoices by mail. Plaintiff commenced delivery of its products on March 9, 1939, and continued thereafter until July 13, 1939; and invoices were presented to defendant showing the products delivered and price charged; attached to plaintiff's affidavit is a copy of the account. Plaintiff states that defendant made no objection to the account of the transactions, and that the prices charged were the reasonable and agreed value of the products. Defendant denies those statements and avers "that objections were made to said account at various times, and particularly at a certain conference with said Nelson on or about July 13, 1939, and that plaintiff stated that affiant's objections were proper and well taken and that proper credit would be given affiant which credit never has been given to affiant's account." On June 17, 1939, plaintiff sent a letter to defendant advising him that the prices being charged for the gasoline purchased by him were not enough, that it could not continue to supply the product, that the quantity purchased by defendant was not sufficient, that the account must be paid in full at this time, and demanding payment of $3,163.81, the amount claimed due as of June 16, 1939. In reply defendant sent a letter to plaintiff on July 3, 1939, in which defendant referred to the plaintiff's letter and a conversation of June 27, 1939, and stated: "* * * it is with considerable regret that we must inform you that thus far we have been unable to assist you. In order that there might be no question as to what our situation is, we, after having gone over the matter quite thoroughly, do not believe that it would be possible to pay to you the entire sum of $3,000.00 in the next few days as requested by yourselves. We have, however, shown our good intentions by mailing you a check on account and presume that if your patience holds out that we will be continuing to do this from time to time until we have either wiped out the entire account in this matter, or until we have arranged with some other refinery to carry our gasoline purchase account for us on terms somewhat similar to that which we have with you. You may be assured that we will do all that can be reasonably expected of us to liquidate this account as soon as possible. We have no desire to pay interest to you on the sum involved." It is alleged in plaintiff's affidavit that in May, 1939, defendant requested plaintiff to accept as security for the payment of $2,000 of the account, a trust deed on Los Angeles County property, and that plaintiff returned the proffered note and trust deed; that also a mortgage in which it was recited that it was security for $3,000 instead of $2,000 was returned because not properly executed, and that plaintiff would not accept it as credit on the account; that a conference was had at the request of defendant to arrange a form of payment of the account; that plaintiff did not agree to accept the mortgage or to accept payment of the account in installments; that it made no agreement, such as alleged in defendant's answer to accept payments of $200 per month on the account. On the other hand with respect to the credit arrangement for the payment of the account, defendant states in his affidavit that he denies "that in May, 1939, he asked or requested plaintiff, or the said H. F. Nelson (president of plaintiff), to accept a trust deed upon the real property described in the affidavit of said H. F. Nelson, as security for a note of $2000.00 to be credited upon affiant's account with plaintiff:

"Affiant alleges said H. F. Nelson, during the said month of May, 1939, demanded of affiant that the said account be paid and at said time; pursuant to such demands, affiant did on or about May 13, 1939, pay to plaintiff the sum of $2889.73 in cash to apply on the account and agreed to and did pay to plaintiff within twenty days thereafter the entire balance of the amount of the account; that at that time a new agreement was entered into between affiant and plaintiff respecting future purchases and payment thereof, and by which agreement affiant was to execute and deliver to plaintiff a mortgage upon the above referred to real property, and containing the terms of said agreement, as security for future purchases of merchandise not exceeding the sum of $3000.00. * * *

"Affiant denies that the said sum of $3000.00, represented in said mortgage, was to be credited upon his account, but alleges that such sum was the maximum amount for which it was to be security for future purchases. * * *

"Affiant alleges that on or about the 13th of July, 1939, he and plaintiff entered into another, separate and subsequent agreement in respect to the security for said account and the payments to be made thereon; that the terms of the latter agreement were that affiant was to make a minimum payment of $200.00 each month thereafter starting August 15, 1939, and continuing until the account, including interest on the unpaid monthly balances at the rate of six percent per annum was paid and that plaintiff agreed to prepare a trust deed upon said real property and in accordance with such agreement and this affiant agreed to execute the same, which trust deed was to be security for payments to be made under said agreement. * * *

"Affiant alleges that at the time when due and in strict compliance with the terms of payment of the last mentioned agreement he tendered to plaintiff the first installment of $200.00, but that plaintiff refused to accept same, as shown by the letter of Messrs. Cobb, Campbell and Kelley under date of August 22, 1939, a copy of which is attached hereto and by reference thereto made a part hereof;

"Affiant alleges that he has at all times herein mentioned, and is now ready, able and willing to comply with and carry out all of the terms of said last mentioned agreement, both as to the security and as to the payments to be made thereunder; and further alleges that said agreement is not in default insofar as he is concerned; affiant denies that he ever, at any time, asked or requested plaintiff or any of its officers for a conference to be had toward working out a form of payment of said account;

"Affiant alleges that plaintiff has not complied with the provisions of said agreement, or the last mentioned previous agreement, and that plaintiff has attempted to breach and repudiate the same, and has breached and repudiated the same."

As corroborative of the credit arrangement of July 13, 1939, defendant also filed the affidavit of N. Fisher who was present at the conference on that date. It also appears that on July 13, 1939, defendant wrote to plaintiff with reference to the agreement of that date. Defendant sent a check for $200 to plaintiff which plaintiff's counsel returned on August 22, 1939, for the reason "that you (defendant) make the same conditional upon the same being under some agreement which Eagle Oil & Refining Company, Inc. dispute as having ever been entered into." (Emphasis added.)

Although it may well be argued that defendant's affidavits could have been more carefully drawn, we are satisfied that under the rule of liberal construction they establish the existence of factual issues existing between plaintiff and defendant which must be determined at a trial. It is not necessary on this appeal to discuss all of the factual issues that may have been shown to exist, inasmuch as it is clear that at least one was presented which would constitute a defense to plaintiff's action.

[5] Defendant asserts that an agreement was made on July 13, 1939, whereby the account between him and plaintiff would be discharged in monthly installments of $200 a month commencing on August 15, 1939, and that security would be given by the defendant for the payment thereof. Plaintiff commenced its action on July 25, 1939, three weeks before the first payment would become due. The consideration received by plaintiff for its agreement to accept payment on a time basis was the agreement by defendant to give security for the payments. Defendant suffered a detriment thereby inasmuch as he was not compelled to give such security. Defendant states in his affidavit that he has performed the agreement. It is obvious that such an agreement if established would be a defense to plaintiff's action as there would be no debt due when the action was commenced. There is therefore presented a triable issue of fact, a defense on the merits to plaintiff's action based upon the existence of that agreement.

[6, 7] Plaintiff refers to the defendant's pleadings as being insufficient to raise that agreement as a defense. In his verified answer defendant alleged: "Furthermore, that on July 13, 1939, plaintiff entered into a further agreement with defendant, respecting the payment of any sum owing plaintiff by defendant, that one of the requirements of said agreement was the payment to plaintiff by defendant of the minimum sum of Two Hundred ($200.00) Dollars per month. Furthermore defendant alleges that all such payment or payments which are now due to plaintiff on this agreement have been paid." In the procedure here involved a liberal construction must be given to the pleadings as well as the affidavits of the party against whom the motion is made, both being given attention. Plaintiff did not demur to the answer. It is not the purpose of the procedure under section 437c to test the sufficiency of the pleadings. It is stated in Kelly v. Liddicoat, 35 Cal.App.2d 559, 562, 96 P.2d 186, 188:

"'* * * That section provides an entirely new procedure, as far as the Codes of our state are concerned, the purpose of which is to eliminate all issues which have no basis in fact, no matter how well they may be pleaded in form. Under it, an answer may be stricken out, even though a perfect defense may be stated therein, unless the defendant by his affidavits shows facts to substantiate the defense.' And in Perlman v. Perlman, 235 App.Div. 313, 257 N.Y.S. 48, 50, the court, expressing the same thought conversely, said with respect to summary judgments: 'Even though the pleading itself be deemed insufficient, the motion must be denied if the affidavits show facts sufficient to constitute a defense entitling the pleader to defend. Curry v. Mackenzie, 239 N.Y. 267, 146 N.E. 375. * * *'" The same remarks are true with respect to the asserted negative pregnant in defendant's denial of the indebtedness pleaded in the second count in plaintiff's complaint.

Plaintiff asserts that defendant's affidavits contain nothing but conclusions of fact and law and are thus insufficient. As we have seen it is not necessary that the averments be rigidly restricted to evidentiary matter. It may be that some of the allegations or statements are somewhat in the nature of conclusions, but we are satisfied that facts within the knowledge of the affiants and to which they are competent to testify, are set forth with sufficient particularity, and from which it appears that a bona fide defense to the action exists. This is especially true when we are mindful of the rule of liberal construction applicable to cases of this character.

[8] It is also suggested that the letter, to which reference has heretofore been made, written by defendant to plaintiff on July 3, 1939, shows that plaintiff did not regard the mortgage as being given to secure the account or that credit had been thereby extended, as no mention was made of those circumstances. But even if that were true, it still leaves a triable issue as to the existence of the later agreement of July 13, 1939. Furthermore, those matters are merely instances of a conflict in the evidence to be resolved in determining the issues, and not on the proposition of whether in truth an issue of fact exists.

[9] Plaintiff also claims that defendant's affidavit alleging the agreement of July 13, 1939, shows nothing more than an offer by defendant to give security for the account in return for the right to pay it in monthly installments, but it is apparent from defendant's affidavits that an agreement was entered into which was accepted by, and was therefore binding upon plaintiff. Since on the motion for a summary judgment the facts alleged in his affidavits must be accepted as true, it cannot be said that defendant has not interposed a meritorious defense to the action.

Unless the procedure under section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure is given a much broader scope than is contemplated or justified, the circumstances here present do not furnish a proper case for the application of that section.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 562

KUPFER v. BRAWNER et al.

L. A. 17766.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 19, 1942.

1. Judgment ⇐407(4)

In action to set aside a prior judgment rendered against plaintiff in joint debtor proceedings, plaintiff could not object that judgment was invalid because based on a cause of action different from that on which judgment against plaintiff's copartner was based, since if there was any error in the judgment rendered, it was an error committed in the exercise of the court's discretion, and could have been corrected only on appeal from the judgment or on other timely and direct attack thereon. Code Civ.Proc. § 989 et seq.; §§ 992–994.

2. Certiorari ⇐64(2)

Though "certiorari" is a direct attack it does not serve as a review of error committed in the exercise of jurisdiction, but opens to investigation only the evidence bearing on the fact of jurisdiction.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Certiorari".

3. Judgment ⇐461(3)

In action to set aside a prior judgment rendered against plaintiff in joint debtor proceedings, wherein plaintiff claimed payment in full and discharge of former judgment against plaintiff's copartner prior to joint debtor proceedings, on ground that assignee of judgment, in purchasing judgment, was in fact acting for plaintiff's copartner, evidence sustained finding that assignee purchased the judgment with his own funds and on his own behalf. Code Civ.Proc. § 989 et seq.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles E. Haas, Judge.

Action by A. M. Kupfer against William H. Brawner and others to set aside a prior judgment rendered against the plaintiff in joint debtor proceedings. From a judgment in favor of the defendants, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Baldwin Robertson and Russell Breckenridge, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles W. Fourl, of Los Angeles, in pro. per. and for respondent Eustace.

Caryl Warner, of Los Angeles, for respondent Brawner.

SHENK, Justice.

The plaintiff appealed from a judgment for the defendants in an action to set aside a prior judgment rendered against the plaintiff in joint debtor proceedings taken pursuant to section 989 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The facts in this controversy are undisputed and present the question whether the trial court correctly concluded that the judgment entered against the plaintiff in said joint debtor proceedings was valid and enforceable.

In April, 1934, Oil Tool Exchange, Inc., obtained a judgment against Katie M. Eustace in the sum of $6,284 for rental of certain oil drilling equipment. In the action in which that judgment was rendered A. M. Kupfer, the plaintiff herein and copartner of Eustace, was also named as a defendant, but he was not served with summons. The action proceeded to judgment against Eustace alone. That judgment was assigned to Fourl, who assigned to Brawner. Subsequently joint debtor proceedings were commenced against Kupfer in which he appeared and interposed various defenses. Judgment was rendered against him on March 9, 1937, in the sum of $3,225. Kupfer did not appeal from that judgment and it became final. The present action to have said judgment set aside was commenced in January, 1939.

Section 989 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When a judgment is recovered against one or more of several persons, jointly indebted upon an obligation, by proceeding as provided in section 414 of this code, those who were not originally served with the summons, and did not appear in the action, may be summoned to appear before the court in which such judgment is entered to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment, in the same manner as though they had been originally served with the summons." After provision for the issuance and service of summons, it is provided in sections 992 and 993 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the defendant may answer and deny the judgment or set up any defense arising subsequently, or deny his liability on the obligation by reason of any defense existing at the commencement of the action in which the judgment was rendered. Section 994 provides that the issues may be tried as in other cases, but that if the defendant denies his liability on the obligation, any verdict against him must not exceed the amount remaining unsatisfied in the original judgment with interest.

[1] There was no contention in the trial of the present action, and none is now made that the court in the joint debtor proceedings did not have jurisdiction of the parties, including the plaintiff herein as defendant, and of the subject matter. As the first ground of alleged invalidity of the prior judgment the plaintiff contends that the court based its judgment on a cause of action different from that on which the judgment against Eustace was based, namely, on a cause of action for the reasonable rental value of the oil drilling equipment, rather than on the express contract rate of rental. The objection could appropriately have been made by the plaintiff on an appeal from the judgment entered against him. But he took no appeal therefrom. The objections that he now raises are such as must be deemed to have been adjudicated in the joint debtor proceedings. If there was any error in the judgment rendered in those proceedings, it was an error committed in the exercise of the court's jurisdiction, which could have been corrected only on an appeal from the judgment or other timely and direct attack thereon; but the judgment, having become final, is not subject to review in another action for error committed in the exercise of the court's jurisdiction. Gray v. Hall, 203 Cal. 306, 265 P. 246; Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 649, 670, 242 P. 725; Lake v. Bonynge, 161 Cal. 120, 118 P. 535; Le Mesnager v. Variel, 144 Cal. 463, 77 P. 988, 103 Am.St.Rep. 91; Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 51 P. 38; Blondeau v. Snyder, 95 Cal. 521, 31 P. 591; Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 26 P. 1074, 23 Am.St. Rep. 491; In re Gardiner's Estate, 45 Cal. App.2d 559, 114 P.2d 643.

In Gray v. Hall, supra, 203 Cal. at page 314, 265 P. at page 251, it was said: "The court having acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, its judgment is not void for the mere erroneous decision on a question of law, however important that question may have been in contemplation of the rights of the parties in the original action. A judgment is never absolutely void if the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the person of the defendant no matter how erroneous it may be." It was also there recognized that the judgment is not necessarily vulnerable even though the error appears in the judgment roll.

"There must be an end to litigation and the question as to the correctness of the rulings of the court upon matters within its jurisdiction are reviewable only by the appellate tribunal." Le Mesnager v. Variel, supra, 144 Cal. at page 465, 77 P. at page 989, 103 Am.St.Rep. 91. "In other words, it is not the result reached which determines whether or not the judgment is void, but the power or authority which we call 'jurisdiction,' and which lies behind the mere conclusion that determines the question." Crew v. Pratt, supra, 119 Cal. at page 151, 51 P. at page 43.

The plaintiff relies on cases where the question of the "validity" of the judgment was being considered in connection with an appeal from the judgment, such as Baar v. Smith, 201 Cal. 87, 255 P. 827; Stearns Ranchos Co. v. McDowell, 134 Cal. 562, 66 P. 724; Cooper v. Burch, 140 Cal. 548, 74 P. 37. None of these cases would justify a conclusion that the prior judgment must be declared void. Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 42, 47, 40 P. 24, 48 Am.St. Rep. 110; Le Mesnager v. Variel, supra, 144 Cal. at page 467, 77 P. 988, 103 Am. St.Rep. 91.

[2] The case of Texas Co. v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 5 Cal.2d 35, 53 P.2d 127, 131, does not aid the plaintiff. That decision recognizes that a judgment void on its face, "is simply a nullity and can be neither a basis nor evidence of any right whatever." In that case the court was considering the effect of a lease entered into pursuant to purported authority under an order which had been annulled in a prior action. Nor is the case of Mannix v. Superior Court, 133 Cal.App. 740, 24 P.2d 507, of any assistance to the plaintiff. That case involved a proceeding in certiorari to review the superior court's judgment for the plaintiff in an action originally brought in the justice's court. While certiorari is a direct attack (Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 185, 149 P. 35), it does not serve as a review of error committed in the exercise of jurisdiction, but opens to investigation only the evidence bearing on the fact of jurisdiction.

The court in the joint debtor proceedings had jurisdiction to try the issue of Kupfer's liability on the judgment and in the absence of any showing of fraud or mistake and none is here made, its determination thereon to the extent noted is conclusive in this action.

[3] By second and third causes of action the plaintiff alleged facts purporting to show payment in full and discharge of the former judgment prior to the joint debtor proceedings, and that if he was liable on said judgment it was for contribution only. The plaintiff's claim in this respect is that Fourl, as assignee of the judgment creditor, was in fact acting for Eustace and that Brawner was a dummy for Fourl, and the sum paid by Fourl as the purported purchase price of the judgment therefore constituted a satisfaction of the judgment.

Those defenses were within the issue of liability and were either interposed or were available to Kupfer in the joint debtor proceedings. They were also tried in the present action and on sufficient evidence the court found that Fourl purchased the judgment with his own funds and on his own behalf. The record supports the findings and judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 566

KUPFER v. MACDONALD et al.

L. A. 17767.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 19, 1942.

1. Judgment ⇐405

In action to set aside an allegedly void judgment rendered against plaintiff in prior action against plaintiff and third person on labor claims, objection that some of the labor claims did not name plaintiff as well as third person as employer, could not be raised, where court in prior action had jurisdiction of subject matter and plaintiff who appeared and answered complaint, the judgment against plaintiff became final, and there was no showing that plaintiff was prevented either by fraud or mistake from making full and complete defense in prior action.

2. Judgment ⇐447(1)

A necessary condition to the allowance of relief from a judgment claimed to be void for extrinsic fraud was that plaintiff seeking such relief show that he had a defense on the merits to the action in which the judgment was rendered and where he failed to make such showing, he was not entitled to have judgment set aside on such ground.

3. Judgment ⇐461(3)

In action to set aside an allegedly void judgment rendered against plaintiff in prior action against plaintiff and third person on labor claims, wherein plaintiff contended that judgment in prior action was wholly satisfied by payment by third person of a lesser sum than the judgment, evidence supported finding that payment of the lesser sum did not operate as a satisfaction of the judgment, but that the sum was in fact paid by third person's assignee on the assignee's own account as the purchase price of the judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles E. Haas, Judge.

Action by A. M. Kupfer against Frank C. MacDonald, as chief, etc., and others to set aside as void a judgment rendered against the plaintiff in another action. From a judgment in favor of the defendants, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Baldwin Robertson and Russell Breckenridge, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Leo L. Schaumer and E. A. Lackmann, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Labor Com'r.

Charles W. Fourl, of Los Angeles, for respondents Eustace and Levinson.

SHENK, Justice.

The plaintiff brought this action to set aside as void a judgment rendered against him in another action wherein no appeal had been taken from the judgment and the same had become final. Judgment was entered for the defendants and the plaintiff has appealed.

The judgment in the former action was rendered in favor of the Labor Commissioner of the State of California in an action brought by him in 1933 as assignee of labor claimants against Kupfer and Eustace. The judgment was for $803.19 and represented the amounts found to be due from the defendants on wage claims of the several assignors of the plaintiff in that action plus interest thereon and costs. In the present action it is alleged that the judgment was wholly satisfied by the payment by Eustace of the sum of $400 to the labor claimants, and that after such payment an assignment of the judgment was taken by Fourl, but in behalf of Kupfer's co-judgment debtor, Eustace. The grounds of the plaintiff's right to relief are alleged to be, first, that there had been full satisfaction of the judgment by virtue of the payment of $400 to the Labor Commission for the claimants; second, that extrinsic fraud was committed in the action in which the judgment was rendered whereby Kupfer was prevented by the plaintiff therein from making a defense claimed to be available to him in that action, based on alleged false representations to Kupfer by the Labor Commissioner that assignments of the labor claims to him included claims against Kupfer, as employer; third, that purported assignments successively to Fourl, Martin and Levinson of the judgment after satisfaction thereof as aforesaid were a nullity; and fourth, that Fourl was acting for Eustace in the purported purchase of the judgment for $400 and in such event, the liability of Kupfer was for contribution only and not for the full amount of the judgment.

The trial court found that the allegations of assignment of the labor claims to the Labor Commissioner in the action brought by him were not false; that no deception was practiced upon Kupfer; that he was not prevented from making a full defense in said action; that Eustace did not purchase the judgment in favor of the labor claimants, but that Fourl purchased their claims and the judgment with his own funds and for his own account for the sum of $400; and that Eustace did not satisfy the judgment by payment of any funds.

[1] The plaintiff on this appeal contends that the evidence shows, as a matter of law, that a case of extrinsic fraud or mistake was presented to the trial court which rendered the judgment for the labor claimants void. He bases that contention on some evidence that the assignments to the Labor Commissioner by the labor claimants did not name him as well as Eustace as an employer. Whether or not he was named as an employer in those assignments is not a question which can be litigated after the judgment in that action has become final. The court in that action had jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the defendant Kupfer, plaintiff herein. Kupfer appeared, answered the complaint and denied liability. Any question of the truth or falsity of the allegations of the assignment or otherwise as against him, or of the legal capacity of the Labor Commission to sue in the action, were issues which must be deemed to have been determined in that action and are concluded by the judgment therein. Kupfer v. Brawner, Cal.Sup., 122 P.2d 268. There was no evidence at the trial of the present action that the plaintiff (defendant in the prior action) was prevented either by fraud or mistake from making a full and complete defense to the claim of liability as against him.

[2] Furthermore, the plaintiff does not contend that he was not liable on the labor claims or that he had a meritorious defense in the prior action. It is a necessary condition to the allowance of relief from a judgment claimed to be void for extrinsic fraud that the party seeking such relief show that he had a defense to the action on the merits. Swallow v. Tungsten Products Co., 205 Cal. 207, 220, 270 P. 366. Pursuant to that rule the plaintiff should have alleged and proved facts establishing that he was not liable on the claims for wages which were assigned to the Labor Commissioner, even though he was not named as an employer in the assignments thereof. Having failed to make such a showing he was also on that ground in no position to insist that the prior judgment be declared void.

[3] The plaintiff contends that the evidence does not support the finding that the payment of $400 in satisfaction of the labor claims did not operate as a satisfaction of the judgment and that said sum was paid by Fourl on his own account and from his own funds as the purchase price of the judgment. He places his main reliance on a letter which was written by the attorney for the Labor Commissioner and addressed to the labor claimants setting forth an alleged offer by "Katie M. Eustace for the full settlement of the judgment obtained by this department against her—of which your claim is a part—in the sum of $400.00." The letter was admitted in evidence over the defendant's objection on the ground that it was hearsay. Whatever effect the letter might have it could not overcome the evidence supporting the finding.

There is nothing in the record to warrant the conclusion that the trial court's findings on the issues of satisfaction and ownership of the judgment were erroneous.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 639

DE HART et al. v. ALLEN.

Civ. 11653.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 10, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 9, 1942.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇐49(2)

Where defendant leased premises for bootlegging purposes for a term ending in 1936, and in November, 1933, after repeal of the prohibition amendment, gave notice that he would not continue longer and, with the lessor's consent, assigned the lease, and the assignee paid the full rent for only two months and vacated in February, 1934, the evidence, though weak, warranted the trial court in inferring that defendant intended to abandon the lease when he made the assignment to an irresponsible assignee, and therefore supported a finding that defendant rather than the assignee abandoned, but did not support the finding that the abandonment was in December, 1933, as regards the right to recover damages for breach of the lease.

2. Appeal and error ⇐882(5)

The lessor's heirs, suing for damages for breach of the lease, could not contend that a denial based only on lack of information and not also on lack of belief was insufficient to raise an issue under their allegation of notice of intention to relet for defendant's benefit, where the case was tried on the parties' understanding that the denials were sufficient and that the issue was raised, and evidence on that subject was taken without objection.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇐195(2)

Where the lessee assigned the lease in November and the assignee vacated in the following February, the institution of three successive actions against the lessee for rent due for February to May could not be deemed sufficient notice of intention to relet for the lessee's benefit, where the premises remained vacant until October, when the lessor's heirs leased them for one-half of the former monthly rental and for a term extending beyond the term of the original lease.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇐195(2)

A lease entitling the lessor to relet and hold the lessee for any deficiency if the lessee defaulted or abandoned the premises did not dispense with notice to the lessee of an intention to relet for his benefit if the lessor desired to hold the lessee liable for damages for breach of the lease.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇐194(2)

Evidence that premises were leased for bootlegging purposes for twice the reasonable rental and that the lessee, on repeal of the prohibition amendment, gave notice of intention to quit, whereupon the lessor or the lessor's heirs consented to an assignment of the lease and satisfied a chattel mortgage securing the rent, and, when the assignee vacated in February after having paid less than three months' rent, brought three successive actions against the lessee for rent due for February to May, held to show that the lessor's heirs intended to surrender the lease when ultimately taking possession in October without notice to either the lessee or assignee, and reletting at the reasonable rental value for a term extending beyond the original.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇐49(2)

The lessor's heirs were not precluded from suing the lessee for damages for breach of the lease, on the theory that they had elected to keep the original lease alive, after abandonment by the assignee, by bringing three successive actions against the lessee for monthly rentals, before the heirs took possession and relet the premises.

7. Landlord and tenant ⇐49(2), 227

An action by the lessor against the lessee for damages for breach of the lease by abandoning the premises can not accrue until the term expires, though actions for rent may be maintained previously.

8. Election of remedies ⇐1

The doctrine of election of remedies rests on the principle of estoppel, and there can be no estoppel unless the two remedies are inconsistent and repugnant, and unless unfair or unjust detriment would result from the exercise of both.

9. Judgment ⇐713(2)

In an action against the lessee for damages for breach of a lease of premises for bootlegging purposes, the legality of the lease, and the claim that the lessee was relieved of liability by satisfaction of a chattel mortgage which he had given as security for rent, were res judicata by virtue of judgments recovered in the municipal court in actions for rent, since such defenses, whether actually presented or not, could have been raised therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; I. M. Golden, Judge.

Action by Rosemond T. De Hart and others against Joe Allen for damages for breach of a lease. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Hearing denied; EDMONDS and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

Ernest Spagnoli and Walter F. Lynch, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Carl E. Day and Abraham Setzer, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

In an action for damages for breach of a lease plaintiffs had judgment from which the defendant has appealed.

Prior to July 3, 1931, the defendant leased premises from the predecessor in interest of these plaintiffs for the purpose of conducting a "bootleg place" for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor. On that date he offered to renew the lease for the same purpose and the then owner agreed to these terms and entered into a written lease with the defendant whereby she let the premises for a period of five years ending August 1, 1936, at a monthly rental of $250. In November, 1933, following the repeal of the constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor, defendant informed the lessor that he would abandon the business in which he was engaged and, with the written consent of the lessor, he assigned the lease to one Gammons and took from the lessor a satisfaction of a chattel mortgage which defendant had given as security for the payment of rentals due under the lease. The full rent for December, 1933, and January 1934, was paid, but Gammons paid but $50 for February, 1934, and vacated the premises during that month. At sometime during this period the lessor deceased and the plaintiffs herein succeeded as heirs to the interest. We therefore refer to them interchangeably as plaintiffs, lessors and landlords. After the default of Gammons the plaintiffs sued defendant in three separate actions in the municipal court for the rents due for February to May inclusive and secured judgments, which have been paid except that for the month of May. The premises remained vacant until October, 1934, when the plaintiffs re-entered and executed a new lease to a third party at a monthly rental of $125 for a term of years extending beyond the term of the lease to defendant.

The present action was commenced after the termination of the original lease and sought recovery for the loss of rents for the months of June to September, 1934, inclusive, at the charge fixed in the lease, and for the remainder of the term at $125 a month. Judgment went for plaintiffs on this basis for the months of August and September, 1934, and for the sum of $125 for the following months of the unexpired term.

[1] The appellant urges five separate grounds for a reversal of this judgment, some of which are divided into separate points of attack. We will endeavor to treat them in the manner stated. It is argued that there is a failure of proof of the allegations of the complaint because the appellant is charged with abandonment and the evidence shows that the assignee of the lessee abandoned. The appellant relies upon the evidence that the lessor gave her written consent to the assignment of the lease and that he had retired by agreement long prior to the actual abandonment of the lease; also that the full rental was paid for at least two months by the assignee and accepted by the lessor. But the respondents answer that the appellant in fact abandoned the lease prior to the assignment when he gave notice that he would not continue longer, but was going into the brewery business. They argued that consent to the assignment was forced upon them by these circumstances and was not freely and voluntarily given. The trial court found that the allegations of the complaint were true —that in December, 1933, the appellant "repudiated said lease and abandoned said premises." Though respondents' evidence is extremely weak, we are not able to say that the trial court could not draw the inference from all the facts and circumstances that appellant did in fact intend to abandon the lease when he made the assignment to an irresponsible assignee, and that such assignment was but a subterfuge to enable appellant to withdraw from the premises. But the undisputed evidence is that the premises were not abandoned at the time found by the trial court, either by the lessee or by the assignee, that the assignee was then in possession with the consent of the lessor who received the full rent called for under the lease for two months after the alleged date of abandonment.

It is argued that there was a surrender of the original lease because of respondents' failure to give notice to the assignee or to the original lessee of their intention to relet the premises for their benefit. The complaint alleged that the respondents notified appellant in writing, on July 18, 1934, that they would relet the premises for the benefit of appellant and hold him for any deficiency in rent. The trial court found the allegation true. Appellant contends that the finding finds no support in the evidence. He points to the testimony of one of the respondents when asked if she gave such notice to appellant. She answered, "No." When asked if she gave such notice to the assignee of appellant she answered, "You will have to take that up with * * *" (her agents). When the agent was called and asked the same question he answered, "I personally did not." He was instructed to examine the books of the agency and to report back to the court if they disclosed that such notices were given. He failed to report to the court, and no other witness testified that any such notice was given to the appellant, or to his assignee in possession, and no evidence of such notice was produced. Respondents apparently concede that this is a correct statement of the record because they do not pretend that any evidence was taken in support of the finding. Their answer is broken into several heads in the nature of excuses for failure to prove the facts alleged which follow the direct statement that such proof was not necessary.

[2] First it is argued that, since the denial of the allegation was in this form: "not having any information sufficient wherewith to answer" the allegation must be deemed admitted, because the denial was not based upon lack of belief as well as lack of information. Cases are cited holding that such a denial is insufficient, but they are not applicable here because the case was tried on the understanding of the parties that the denials were sufficient to raise the issue; that the issue was in fact raised; and the evidence on that subject was taken without objection.

[3] Next it is argued that the institution of the three successive suits for rent against Allen in the municipal court was sufficient notice. These suits were brought to recover rent for the months of February, April and May, 1934. The only record of any of these actions which appears in the transcript is the reporter's transcript in case No. 63,309 which discloses that a trial was had in March, 1934. It does not appear when the other actions were tried, but the parties agree that they were brought to recover rents due for April and May of that year. The premises were relet in October 1, 1934, and that, presumably, is the date when the respondents took possession and asserted the right to hold appellant in damages. We are unable to follow respondents' argument that these actions were proof of the notice alleged in paragraph 5 of their complaint. To the contrary they would appear to be notice to appellant that respondents still held him to be primarily liable under the lease and that they had no intention of retaking the premises or of releasing him from any of the obligations under the lease.

[4] Finally it is argued that under the specific terms of the lease no notice was necessary. Portions of the lease are cited providing that if the lessee should default or abandon the premises "it shall be optional with the lessor to relet the said premises" and hold the lessee for any deficiency. Cases are then cited to the general purport that, when the lease specifically so provides, the lessor may take possession upon the default and abandonment of the lessee and maintain an action for the difference between the rent fixed in the lease and the sum received from a reletting. There is no quarrel with respondents on this score. The rule of these cases is freely admitted, but none has any application to the point at issue which is the failure to give notice.

Before discussing the cases cited by appellant on this point it is well to restate these pertinent facts: In December, 1933, the respondents gave their consent in writing to the assignment of the lease to Gammons: thereafter they accepted rents for three months paid either by Gammons, or in his behalf; they then sued appellant for three succeeding months' rent on his primary liability; in October, 1934, they reentered, without demand or notice to either Allen or Gammons, and relet the premises to a third party for a period beyond the term of the original lease. The case of Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 27 P. 369, 25 Am.St.Rep. 145, is closely related in its facts. There the plaintiff leased to defendants for five years, defendants took possession and paid rent for eight months, when they abandoned. Two months later, without notice, plaintiff took possession and relet for a new term of five years, which ran beyond the original term. In the action for damages because of the abandonment it was held that these acts of the lessor constituted an acceptance of the surrender of the lease. At page 514 of 90 Cal., at page 371 of 27 P., 25 Am.St.Rep. 145, the court says: "In taking possession, the landlord did not announce his intention to continue to hold the tenants. He relet without notifying the defendants that he should do so on their account. He relet for a period longer than the remainder of their term, thus showing plainly that he was acting in his own right, and not as their self-constituted agent. Under such circumstances, he cannot say that he did not accept the surrender."

The rule of the case is followed in Rehkopf v. Wirz, 31 Cal.App. 695, 696, 161 P. 285, 286, where it is said: "But a lessor who chooses to follow that course must in some manner give the lessee information that he is accepting such possession for the benefit of the tenant and not in his own right and for his own benefit. If the lessor takes possession of property delivered to him by his tenant and does so unqualifiedly, he thereby releases the tenant." These cases are cited with approval in Bernard v. Renard, 175 Cal. 230, 233, 165 P. 694, 3 A.L.R. 1076, and we have been directed to no authority holding to the contrary.

[5] A close examination of the record here shows that the respondents fully intended to surrender the lease when they took possession in October, 1934. The undisputed evidence is that the premises were leased at an excessive rental for the purpose of conducting a place for the sale of "bootleg" liquor; that the reasonable rental for the premises was $125 a month, or just one-half of that called for in the lease; that, when the prohibition amendment was repealed and "bootlegging" was no longer profitable, appellant told the lessors that he would have to quit; that the lessors thereupon voluntarily accepted a new tenant, and released appellant's chattel mortgage which was their only security for payment of the rent; that, when the new tenant failed to pay the rent, the lessors were forced to sue the appellant for three successive months. With these difficulties confronting them the lessors, in October, 1934, relet the premises for a rental of $125 a month, which was the reasonable rental value of the premises, and gave no indication of an intention to hold appellant to his liability under the lease until this action was filed in January, 1940. The respondents do not controvert any of these facts, nor do they deny that, after accepting the rent for the first three months following the assignment to Gammons, they no longer treated him as a party to the lease, gave him no notice of their reentry and reletting, and have not joined him as a party in this proceeding.

Because of these facts, and under the rule of the cases cited, the judgment must be reversed, and, as a new trial must follow, it becomes necessary to refer to some of the other questions raised in order that the trial may be confined to the proper limits.

[6-8] The lessors were not precluded from maintaining this action because they "elected to keep the original lease alive by having sued for rents after the assignee, not the lessee, abandoned." The three actions brought for rent were all commenced before the lessors took possession and relet the premises. They were the only form of action which could have been maintained at that time. This action for damages could not accrue until the term of the lease expired. Phillips-Hollman, Inc., v. Peerless Stages, Inc., 210 Cal. 253, 258, 291 P. 178; Dickinson v. Electric Corporation, 10 Cal.App.2d 207, 210, 51 P.2d 205. There can be no election of remedies when there is but one remedy available. This doctrine rests upon the principle of estoppel, and unless the two remedies are inconsistent and repugnant, and unless unfair or unjust detriment would result from the exercise of both, there can be no estoppel. Baumann v. Harrison, 46 Cal.App.2d 84, 115 P.2d 530.

[9] The question of the legality of the lease because its consideration was for an illegal purpose and against law and public policy is foreclosed by the judgments in the municipal court. Those actions rested upon the lease and the defense of its invalidity was a proper defense. Even though it does not appear that the defense was raised, it could have been, and the issue must here be deemed as res judicata. Price v. Sixth Dist. Agricultural Ass'n, 201 Cal. 502, 511, 258 P. 387; Andrews v. Reidy, 7 Cal.2d 366, 371, 60 P.2d 832; 15 Cal.Jur. p. 144. English v. English, 9 Cal.

2d 358, 70 P.2d 625, 128 A.L.R. 467; upon which appellant so strongly relies, is explained in Sutphin v. Speik, 15 Cal.2d 195, 99 P.2d 652, 101 P.2d 497, as an exception to the general rule and limited to default judgments. It has no application here because the former judgments were all actions upon the same contract, or primary liability, which forms the basis of the cause of action in this proceeding.

All that is said on this point applies equally to the defense now raised that the appellant was relieved of all liability under the lease by respondents' satisfaction of the chattel mortgage which he had given as security for payment of the rent charges.

The question of the bar of the statute of limitations as to the sum of $500 representing rent due for the months of August and September, 1934, does not need to be decided. The argument of respondents rests upon the claimed defect in the answer which pleaded section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure as a bar, without designating the particular subdivision of the section applicable. This may be cleared by proper amendment of the answer if the appellant should then deem the issue to possess merit.

Other questions raised do not require discussion.

The judgment is reversed.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 664

BALESTREIRI v. ARQUES.

Civ. 11852.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 11, 1942.

1. Maritime liens ⚖40

Where defendant had made repairs on a vessel for which he had not been paid and owner in defendant's presence told plaintiff, who was buying an interest in the vessel, that there were no liens on the vessel, and defendant remained silent and knowingly permitted plaintiff to act in reliance upon such representation, defendant was "estopped" to assert possessory lien for such repairs against plaintiff. Civ.Code, § 3051; Code Civ.Proc. § 1962, subd. 3.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

2. Judgment ⚖476

Where owner of vessel took vessel from lien claimant and on complaint of lien claimant was convicted of grand theft, sentence for which was suspended and probation granted, owner's subsequent action for declaratory relief to determine whether such lien existed was not barred as a "collateral attack" upon a judgment which had become final by reason of failure to appeal, since upon suspension of sentence and granting of probation there could be no "final judgment" and an appeal was precluded.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Collateral Attack" and "Final Judgment".

3. Judgment ⚖648

A party to a criminal proceeding is not precluded from raising in a subsequent civil case an issue raised and determined in the criminal proceeding and from having the court in such civil case render an independent judgment upon such issue.

4. Judgment ⚖648

Where owner of vessel was convicted of grand theft because he took vessel from one who claimed possessory lien against it, in owner's subsequent civil suit for declaratory relief to determine existence of lien, the issue of the existence of the lien was not "res judicata", since there were different parties to each proceeding.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

5. Appeal and error ⚖173(2)

Where existence of a lien claimed by defendant on a vessel was the issue at the trial in suit for declaratory relief, defendant could not, on appeal, for the first time urge the existence of another lien as a basis for reversal of a judgment against him.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Warren V. Tryon, Judge Assigned.

Suit by G. Balestreiri against D. J. Arques for declaratory relief to determine whether a lien existed on a vessel, wherein defendant asserted a lien for repairs. From a judgment that no lien existed, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Erwin C. Easton and George Olshausen, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

William B. Acton, Charles H. Brennan, and O'Brien, Dibert & Acton, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

In this action for declaratory relief, judgment was entered decreeing that defendant Arques had no possessory lien on the vessel "St. Mary" at the time that plaintiff took possession thereof on September 23, 1935. Defendant Arques alone appeals from said judgment and he will be hereinafter referred to as "defendant."

The parties dwell at length upon the background of this litigation but the essential facts may be briefly stated. The vessel in question was originally a towboat which belonged to one Coughlin and was named the "Oregon." In 1933, she ran upon a submerged pile in the Oakland Estuary and stove a hole in her bottom. She was patched and towed to the mud flats in Richardson Bay where she lay for some time. In 1934 she was taken to the shipyard of defendant in Sausalito and was repaired. The repairs were completed and a bill was presented but Coughlin was unable to make payment. Some time passed and in the spring of 1935, Coughlin and defendant agreed that the vessel should be sold. Plaintiff learned that the vessel was for sale and he inspected it with the thought that it might be converted into a purse seiner. Discussions took place between plaintiff, defendant, Coughlin and others at defendant's shipyard. Defendant represented that the vessel could be made into a purse seiner and Coughlin told plaintiff that if plaintiff could finance the necessary work he would transfer to plaintiff a half interest in the vessel. Plaintiff brought a representative of a marine engine company to the shipyard. Further discussions were had and said representative recommended that an engine costing about $18,000 should be installed. During said discussions, neither defendant nor Coughlin made any mention of the repairs which had been made by defendant for Coughlin in 1934 below the water line of said vessel. At one point in the discussions plaintiff asked Coughlin and defendant if Coughlin owed any money on the boat and Coughlin answered "that he didn't owe a dime on the boat—there was no lien." Defendant made no reply. Thereafter plaintiff entered into an agreement with Coughlin and the latter transferred to plaintiff a half interest in the boat with the knowledge of defendant.

In June, 1935, plaintiff, defendant and Coughlin met at the shipyard and a written agreement was entered into by the three men by which defendant agreed to do certain work on the hull of the boat for $4,300, of which $1,000 was to be paid on the execution of the agreement, $1,000 on July 1, and the balance was to be paid by notes over a period of time. The work was to be completed within thirty days after delivery of the engine. The engine was delivered on August 16. The two $1,000 payments were made as agreed. While the work was progressing plaintiff and Coughlin incorporated the Sardine Fishing Company and transferred the vessel to said corporation.

On September 20, 1935, and after the time agreed upon for the completion of the work had expired, a dispute arose when defendant made a claim for certain alleged "extras". The agreed work had not then been fully completed. Plaintiff was advised that the vessel could not leave the shipyard and that defendant would not complete the agreed work until the bill for extras had been approved. Plaintiff had arranged for other work to be done on the boat in San Francisco and was anxious to get all work completed as the fishing season had begun on August 15. Plaintiff offered to arbitrate the matter and to put up a bond to protect defendant against any valid claim but plaintiff refused to approve the bill for the alleged extras.

On September 23, 1935, plaintiff advised defendant that he was coming over to take the vessel to San Francisco on the afternoon high tide. A heated discussion followed plaintiff's arrival at the shipyard, but plaintiff finally took the boat during defendant's temporary absence. Thereupon defendant's counsel filed a libel in admiralty covering all claims for the 1935 repairs. Plaintiff filed a bond for the release of the vessel and at the time of the approval thereof, mention was first made to plaintiff of an alleged claim for 1934 repairs.

Defendant then caused the arrest of plaintiff on a charge of grand theft upon the theory that plaintiff had wrongfully taken the vessel from the possession of defendant in violation of defendant's alleged possessory lien. People v. Cain, 7 Cal.App. 163, 93 P. 1037. Plaintiff was held to answer and was subsequently tried by a jury in the Superior Court of Marin County. The jury found him guilty but recommended leniency. The trial court granted probation upon condition that plaintiff give a bond securing defendant "against any detriment or loss for or on account of any valid claim of possessory lien which Donlon J. Arques may have had for money due him on the day the 'St. Mary' was taken from his possession, for work done or materials furnished said vessel." At the suggestion of the trial judge in the criminal proceeding, this action for declaratory relief was commenced by plaintiff shortly thereafter.

Plaintiff alleged the essential facts above set forth. He further alleged that the money alleged to be due to defendant was owing by Coughlin and not by plaintiff; that he did not know and could not ascertain "what lien, if any, said Arques had against said vessel on said September 23rd, 1935, nor the amount of any such lien"; that Coughlin, in the presence of defendant and with the knowledge and acquiescence of defendant, had represented to plaintiff that there were no liens of any kind against said vessel; and that plaintiff had acted in reliance upon said representation. Plaintiff prayed that the court enter a judgment "consistent with the rights of the parties hereto and determine amongst other things what liens, if any, existed in favor of said Arques against said vessel, on said 23rd of September, 1935."

Upon the trial, the only claim of lien asserted by defendant was the claim of lien arising out of the 1934 repairs. In his reply brief defendant states that "Coughlin was the sole debtor on that claim; that was the only claim involved in the criminal proceeding." In this action, the trial court found among other things that any money due defendant for repairs made in 1934 when said vessel was known as the "Oregon" was due from Coughlin and not from plaintiff; that Coughlin, in the presence of defendant and with the knowledge and acquiescence of defendant, had represented to plaintiff that there were no liens of any kind against said vessel in June, 1935; and that plaintiff had acted in reliance upon said representation. The trial court thereupon decreed, "That on said September 23, 1935, defendant, D. J. Arques, had no possessory lien on the vessel 'St. Mary' for work done thereon prior to July 1, 1934, and when defendant, J. H. Coughlin, was the sole owner thereof and said vessel was known as the 'Oregon';" and that plaintiff was not liable for said 1934 repairs.

[1] Defendant contends that the judgment is "contrary to law, and the evidence and the facts found." He points to the evidence and findings showing that defendant had made the 1934 repairs and had not been paid therefor. He therefore claims that he was entitled to a possessory lien on the vessel citing Civil Code, section 3051, and United States of Mexico v. Rask, 118 Cal.App. 21, at page 45 and following, 4 P.2d 981. It appears unnecessary to discuss plaintiff's contention that no possessory lien could have resulted from the making of the repairs to the vessel under the circumstances. Assuming, without deciding, that such possessory lien did result from the making of the 1934 repairs, it appears entirely clear under the evidence and findings that defendant was estopped to assert such lien against plaintiff by reason of his conduct in knowingly permitting plaintiff to act in reliance upon the representation that no such lien existed at the time that plaintiff entered into his agreement with Coughlin and entered into his agreement for the 1935 repairs with defendant. Code of Civ.Proc. sec. 1962, subd. 3; Jaekle v. Halton, 25 Cal. App.2d 706, 78 P.2d 441; Shull v. Doerr, 110 Cal.App. 613, 294 P. 464; 19 Am.Jur. 667; 10 Cal.Jur. 625, et seq.

[2-4] Defendant further contends that "The trial court violated the uniform law of this state herein, to-wit: It collaterally attacked and set aside a final judgment." The so-called "final judgment" to which defendant refers is the order granting probation to plaintiff in the criminal proceedings. Defendant points to the fact that plaintiff took no appeal therefrom and he claims that said "final judgment" was necessarily based upon and conclusively established the existence of a possessory lien and that the judgment herein is a "collateral attack" upon said judgment of the Superior Court of Marin County. We find no merit in defendant's contention. The Superior Court of Marin County suspended the imposition of sentence and granted probation to plaintiff. There was therefore no "final judgment" of conviction and plaintiff had no right of appeal. In re Phillips, 17 Cal.2d 55, 109 P.2d 344, 132 A.L.R. 644. But even assuming that there had been a "final judgment" of conviction in the criminal proceeding, we know of no rule of law which would have prevented plaintiff from again raising, in a subsequent civil action between himself and defendant, any issues previously presented and passed upon in the criminal proceeding and having the court, in the subsequent civil action, render its independent judgment upon such issue. The issues previously determined in the criminal proceeding were not res judicata because the parties to the civil action were different from the parties to the criminal proceeding (15 Cal.Jur. 114, sec. 178; 30 Am.Jur. 1002, sec. 290) and no question of collateral attack was involved. People v. Majado, 22 Cal.App. 2d 323, 70 P.2d 1015, cited by defendant, involved a second criminal prosecution of the defendant for failure to provide for his minor child and the same parties were involved on both prosecutions.

Finally, defendant contends that plaintiff "was liable whether he has been convicted of a felony or not or whether he knew of appellant's rights or not." Defendant cites and relies upon the rules relating to conversion as stated in Byer v. Canadian Bank of Commerce, 8 Cal.2d 297, at page 300, 65 P.2d 67. But here plaintiff was not defending his act of taking possession of the vessel merely upon the ground of his ignorance of defendant's alleged rights. Plaintiff was claiming that his ignorance of defendant's alleged rights was the result of conduct on the part of defendant which estopped defendant from asserting said alleged rights against plaintiff. The rules stated in the cited case are therefore not in point here.

[5] In conclusion, it should be stated that it is suggested in defendant's briefs that, in any event, defendant had a possessory lien on September 23, 1935, by reason of the 1935 repairs. This claim was admittedly not presented in the criminal proceeding nor was it presented in the trial of this action. The parties proceeded upon the theory that the only issue to be determined by the trial court was what possessory lien, if any, defendant had on September 23, 1935, by reason of the 1934 repairs. This is made clear by the opening statement of defendant's counsel where he stated to the trial court that defendant claimed a possessory lien on September 23, 1935, by reason of the 1934 repairs as set forth in paragraph two of the complaint and "that is all we claim under." Perhaps defendant's failure to assert a claim of possessory lien by reason of the 1935 repairs may be explained by the fact that he had previously filed a libel in admiralty based upon said 1935 repairs or by the fact that all cash payments provided for in the written agreement for said 1935 repairs had been made by plaintiff to defendant and the balance of the agreed price was to be paid over a period of time, or by the fact that defendant had failed to complete the work within the time provided in the written agreement. At any rate, defendant may not now change the theory upon which the cause was presented to the trial court in order to obtain a reversal of the judgment on this appeal. Ernst v. Searle, 218 Cal. 233, 235, 240, 22 P.2d 715; 2 Cal. Jur. 237, sec. 68.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 694

DARCY v. MOORE et al.

Civ. 11961.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 13, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐1075

Under statute, no duty is imposed on controller and assistant controller to authorize payment of the reporter's transcript until ordered to do so by the trial court, and no such order can properly be made until the reporter has performed his services. Code Civ.Proc. § 274.

2. Criminal law ⇐1104(7)

Special demand for additional transcript and order made pursuant thereto were ineffectual, where demand was not filed within five days after giving notice of appeal, as required by court rule, but that fact did not excuse reporter's refusal to furnish additional transcript under original and timely demand for additional transcript. Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 2, § 7.

3. Criminal law ⇐1104(3)

Proceedings on voir dire examination of prospective jurors in perjury prosecution furnish a legal basis for assignment of error, and court's rulings are within scope of statute dealing with duties of phonographic reporters for superior courts, and defendant is entitled to a transcript thereof, for purposes of appeal, provided the correctness of any ruling might serve as a proper ground of appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 269; Pen.Code, § 1059.

4. Jury ⇐79(3)

The right of a defendant in a criminal prosecution to a fair and impartial jury does not give the defendant the right to have any particular juror or jurors sit in his case.

5. Criminal law ⇐1166½(8)

The erroneous disallowance of a challenge to jury panel for cause in a criminal prosecution is harmless, if it does not appear that an objectionable juror was forced on the defendant.

6. Criminal law ⇐1035(5)

If a defendant in a criminal prosecution did not exhaust his peremptory challenges to jury panel, he cannot complain of error in disallowance of a challenge for cause.

7. Criminal law ⇐1166½(8)

The single fact that erroneous denial of challenges to jury panel for cause may compel defendant to exercise peremptory challenges on such jurors, thereby reducing his peremptory challenges to that extent, does not constitute ground for reversal.

8. Criminal law ⇐1104(3)

Defendant in perjury prosecution was not prejudiced by exclusion of veniremen excused on stipulation after examination on voir dire, those eliminated on challenges for cause by the people and by defendant, and those excused peremptorily by the people, some of them after being unsuccessfully challenged for cause, and hence was not entitled to a transcript of the voir dire examination of any of such veniremen. Code Civ. Proc. § 269; Pen.Code, § 1059.

9. Criminal law ⇐1104(3)

Where defendant in perjury prosecution requested and was denied additional peremptory challenges on voir dire examination, he was entitled to urge on appeal the disallowance of challenge for cause to juror who was forced on defendant after defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges and to that end was entitled to a transcript of that juror's voir dire examination, and also a transcript of the voir dire examination of two veniremen who defendant subsequently excused peremptorily. Code Civ.Proc. § 269; Pen.Code, § 1059.

Mandamus proceeding by Sam Darcy against Charles Moore, phonographic reporter, Harold J. Boyd, controller, and Harry Ross, assistant controller, to compel Charles Moore to furnish additional portions of transcript and to compel Harold J. Boyd and Harry Ross to pay for the additional portions of the transcript. On demurrer by Harold J. Boyd and Harry Ross.

Demurrer sustained, and peremptory writ issued against Charles Moore.

Andersen & Resner, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg, Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents Boyd and Ross.

KNIGHT, Justice.

The petitioner, Sam Darcy, was found guilty by a jury in the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco of the crime of perjury; and after the denial of motions for arrest of judgment and new trial pronouncement of judgment was suspended and he was released on probation. Thereupon he gave notice of appeal, and certified transcripts on appeal have been filed by the clerk and the phonographic reporter. The clerk's transcript was filed herein on October 15, 1941, and the reporter's transcript on November 4, 1941. The latter contains approximately 900 pages and covers the trial court proceedings, including the testimony, had and taken subsequent to the impanelment of the jury. The transcript was served on counsel for petitioner on October 29, 1941, and certified by the trial judge on November 4, 1941. On the following day petitioner filed this proceeding in mandamus. The question presented thereby is whether petitioner is entitled to have transcribed also and made part of the reporter's transcript the proceedings relating to his challenge to the panel of jurors, and the voir dire examination of "all prospective jurors and jurors," together with all objections thereto and rulings of the court thereon. The relief sought by the petition for the writ is that the respondent Charles Moore, phonographic reporter of the trial court, be compelled to furnish the additional portions of the transcript above mentioned, and that the respondents Harold J. Boyd and Harry Ross, controller and assistant controller, respectively, of said city and county, be compelled to pay the reporter for said additional portions of the transcript.

[1] The respondents Boyd and Ross filed a demurrer to the petition for the writ, one of the grounds thereof being that as to them the petition fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It is apparent that upon that ground the demurrer should be sustained without leave to amend, for as shown by section 274 of the Code of Civil Procedure there is no duty imposed upon them to authorize the payment of a reporter's transcript until ordered so to do by the trial court, and obviously no such order can properly be made until the reporter has performed his services.

The respondent Moore has not appeared in person or by attorney; nor has he filed any sort of a pleading in opposition to the granting of the peremptory writ; consequently, in order to determine whether legal justification exists for his failure to furnish the additional transcript, or any portion thereof, it has been necessary to examine the state of the record as it is disclosed by the transcripts on file, as well as to consider the uncontroverted allegations of the petition for the writ.

It appears therefrom that the controversy arises out of the following situation: The challenge to the panel and the exceptions thereto were in writing. The issues raised thereby were heard on July 14, 1941, and the challenge was denied on July 15th. The impanelment of the jury began on July 16th, continued up to and including July 25th, on which date the jury was completed and sworn to try the cause. The introduction of testimony began on July 26th and the verdict finding the petitioner guilty was returned on August 6th. Section 7 of rule II of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal provides in part that within five days after the giving of notice of appeal an appellant must file an application to the trial court stating the general grounds of appeal, the points on which he relies and designate what portions of the phonographic reporter's notes it will be necessary to have transcribed to fairly present the points relied upon; that within two days thereafter the court shall make an order directing the reporter to transcribe such portions of his notes as in the court's opinion are necessary to fairly and fully present the points relied upon; and that if within the two days the court fails to make the order, the notes requested shall be transcribed without such order.

The notice of appeal herein was given on September 18, 1941, and on the same day petitioner filed a statement of grounds of appeal and a request for a transcript. Among the fifteen grounds of appeal stated were that the trial court committed error in overruling petitioner's challenge to the panel and in overruling his challenges for cause to individual jurors; and he demanded a transcription of the phonographic notes covering "the entire record," including "all testimony taken on the challenge to the entire panel, together with the voir dire examination. * * " The trial court failed to make any order in response to such demand; and on October 8th, which it will be noted was twenty days after the filing of the notice of appeal, petitioner filed a "Special Demand for Phonographic Transcript on Voir Dire of Jury" wherein he demanded "a full and complete copy of the phonographic transcript of all the proceedings in the above entitled cause having to do with the examination of prospective jurors and jurors, together with all the objections and rulings of the court thereon; and also for a transcript of the proceedings on the matter of challenges to the entire jury panel." Thereupon and on the same day Judge George W. Schonfeld, the trial judge, made and signed an order " * * that said matters described in said Special Demand be transcribed and written up by * * * the shorthand reporter * * * as demanded by defendant."

The petition for the writ of mandamus is based entirely upon said "Special Demand" and the order made pursuant thereto, no reference being made to the original demand filed on September 18th; and in this connection the petition goes on to allege that subsequent to the making of said order of October 8th "Hon. Frank Deasy, the Presiding Judge of said Superior Court, ex parte, countermanded and cancelled said order for said transcription"; and that thereupon the phonographic reporter refused to comply with said order for the reason that on account of Judge Deasy's ex parte order the controller and the assistant controller refused to authorize the payment of the additional transcript. Neither a copy of Judge Deasy's order, nor the substance of any portion of it, is set forth in the record, nor does it anywhere appear whether said order was in writing, nor under what circumstances it was made.

[2] It is evident that the second or so-called "Special Demand" for transcript and the order made pursuant thereto are ineffectual for any purpose, because said demand was not filed within five days after the giving of the notice of appeal. People v. Estrada, 24 Cal.App.2d 341, 74 P.2d 1084; People v. Lewis, 219 Cal. 410, 27 P.2d 73; People v. Nichols, 114 Cal.App. 136, 299 P. 752; People v. Schroeder, 112 Cal. App. 550, 297 P. 105. But such fact does not serve as legal excuse for refusing to furnish the additional transcript for the reason that the original statement of the grounds of appeal and demand for transcript filed September 18th are legally sufficient to comply with the requirements of said rule, and include the subject matter at issue.

[3] At the oral argument the point was made in opposition to the issuance of the writ that a transcription of the additional portions of the record demanded would cover "matter or material other than that reported by said reporter as prescribed in paragraph one of section 269" of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that therefore in no event would the cost of the transcription constitute a legal charge against the city and county. Code Civ. Proc., § 274. Section 269 provides, however, that among the matters required to be reported are "the rulings of the court"; and since the proceedings relating to challenges to the panel and to individual jurors take place, and the trial court's rulings thereon are made, after the commencement of and during the course of the trial, it would seem clear that such proceedings and rulings fall within the scope of the provisions of said section 269; and that therefore an appellant is entitled to a transcript thereof, provided the correctness of any such ruling may serve as a proper ground of appeal.

An adverse ruling on a challenge to the panel doubtless constitutes legal basis for an assignment of error, for if the assignment be sustained it may call for reversal of the judgment. It follows that petitioner is entitled to a transcript of the proceedings relating to the denial of his challenge to the panel. However, such a challenge "can be founded only on a material departure from the forms prescribed in respect to the drawing and return of the jury in civil actions, or on the intentional omission of the sheriff to summon one or more of the jurors drawn", Penal Code, § 1059; and the clerk's transcript filed herein contains a copy of the written challenge interposed by petitioner, the affidavit in support thereof, and the objections to the challenge filed by the district attorney; also the trial court's rulings thereon. Consequently the reporter's transcript should include only such evidence and proceedings as are not set forth in the clerk's transcript.

[4-7] As to the demand for a transcription of the voir dire examination of "all prospective jurors and jurors," it is well settled that the right of a defendant to a fair and impartial jury does not give him the right to have any particular juror or jurors sit in his case (15 Cal.Jur. 324; 8 Cal.Jur. 608; People v. Howard, 211 Cal.

322, 295 P. 333, 71 A.L.R. 1385; People v. Shannon, 203 Cal. 139, 263 P. 522; People v. Rambaud, 78 Cal.App. 685, 248 P. 954); and that the erroneous disallowance of a challenge for cause is harmless if it does not appear that an objectionable juror was forced upon the defendant. People v. Schafer, 161 Cal. 573, 119 P. 920. If he had not exhausted his peremptory challenges he cannot complain of the error, for, if he afterwards peremptorily challenged the objectionable juror he is not prejudiced; and if he did not do so, he cannot complain of an error, the injurious effects of which he has suffered, if at all, only by reason of his acquiescence in or failure to avoid it when he had the means and opportunity to do so. 8 Cal.Jur. 609. Nor does the single fact that the denial of challenges for cause may compel the defendant to exercise his peremptory challenges upon such jurors, thereby reducing his peremptory challenges to that extent, constitute ground for reversal. People v. Craig, 196 Cal. 19, 235 P. 721. As stated, in order to constitute legal basis for assignment of prejudicial error it must appear that an objectionable juror was forced upon the defendant; that is to say, it must appear that he has not only exhausted all of his peremptory challenges, but that he has in some appropriate manner manifested his dissatisfaction with the jury as completed. People v. Schafer, supra; People v. Kromphold, 172 Cal. 512, 157 P. 599; People v. Craig, supra; People v. Rambaud, supra.

[8] The clerk's transcript filed herein discloses the following situation: Numerous veniremen were excused on stipulation after examination on voir dire; others were eliminated on challenges for cause by the People and by the petitioner; and ten were excused peremptorily by the People, some of them after being unsuccessfully challenged for cause. Obviously petitioner is not entitled to a transcription of the voir dire examination of any of the above-mentioned veniremen, because he was in no manner prejudiced by their exclusion. The clerk's transcript further shows that the trial court held disqualified and excused all but three of the veniremen challenged for cause by petitioner, and that petitioner exercised eight of the ten peremptory challenges allowed him by law against veniremen who had not been challenged by him for cause. The three veniremen unsuccessfully challenged by him for cause were Joseph F. Hart, Mrs. Louise Cook, and Miss Elsie Burnett; and subsequently Mr. Hart and Mrs. Cook were excused by petitioner peremptorily. His tenth peremptory challenge was exercised against Mrs. Cook; whereupon he requested the allowance of additional peremptory challenges, but his request was denied. Thereafter but one additional venireman was examined on voir dire, and he was passed by both sides without any objections being made as to his qualifications. "Thereupon," so the clerk's transcript recites, "the following twelve talesmen having been favorably passed by respective counsel, and no objections or further challenges made thereto, were sworn and impanelled as the jury to try the said cause. * * *"

[9] Since petitioner requested and was denied additional peremptory challenges, he is entitled to urge on appeal the point of the alleged erroneous disallowance of his challenge for cause to the single juror who was forced upon him after he had exhausted his peremptory challenges, namely, Miss Burnett, and to that end is entitled to a transcript of her voir dire examination. But whether in any event the denial of his challenges for cause to veniremen Joseph F. Hart and Mrs. Cook, whom he subsequently excused peremptorily, could have operated to his prejudice presents a question which should be considered and determined on the hearing of the merits of the appeal; therefore in order that the point may be fairly and fully presented, it would seem that a transcription of the voir dire examination of those two veniremen should also be included in the reporter's transcript.

In accordance with the views above expressed, it is ordered that the demurrer of the respondents Boyd and Ross be and the same is hereby sustained without leave to amend, and that a peremptory writ of mandate issue against the respondent Moore directing him to furnish an additional transcript containing (1) all testimony and proceedings had or taken in the trial court (not included in the clerk's transcript) relating to the hearing and determination of the challenge to the panel; (2) the voir dire examination of Miss Elsie Burnett, Joseph F. Hart, and Mrs. Louise Cook.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

JOHNSTON et al. v. LANDUCCI.

Civ. 2689.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 18, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 16, 1942.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇐214(4)

In determining whether an assignment of purchaser's interest in a contract to purchase land, which was expressly made subject to approval of original vendors, was effective to pass any interest in the contract without vendors' approval so as to constitute consideration for a note given by assignee to assignor secured by an assignment of assignee's land contract interest in other land, the language of the assignment must be considered in connection with contract provision forbidding an assignment without consent of the vendors.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇐214(2)

Contract to purchase land may be assigned in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, but where contract expressly provides otherwise, the intention of the parties will be enforced by the court.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇐214(2)

A provision of contract to purchase land, prohibiting the assignment of contract, may be waived by the express agreement or by the conduct of the parties.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇐76(3), 104

Where a lease of realty contains a covenant not to assign, a breach of such covenant renders the assignment voidable and not void, the lessor having an option to forfeit the lease which must be exercised according to law.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇐112(1)

Where lessor fails to exercise his option to forfeit lease for breach of covenant therein contained not to assign the lease, and permits the assignee to act to his prejudice, lessor is "estopped" from forfeiting the lease, but where lessor does not in any manner consent to assignment, the assignment is not effective.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

6. Vendor and purchaser ⇐214(2)

Assignment by purchaser of his interest in contract to purchase land, which expressly prohibited assignment without vendor's consent, conveyed nothing to assignee in the absence of vendor's consent, but all the interest of the purchaser under such contract remained the property of purchaser, since requirement of the approval of original vendor constituted a restriction as to when and under what circumstances the assignment should take effect and operate as a transfer.

7. Vendor and purchaser ⇐214(4)

Where assignment of purchaser's interest in contract to purchase land, which expressly prohibited assignment thereof without the consent of vendor, was ineffective to convey any interest to assignee because made without original vendor's consent, such assignment constituted no "consideration" for note given by assignee to assignor secured by an assignment of assignee's land contract interest in other land.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Consideration".

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by E. E. Johnston and others against Olive Landucci to quiet title to realty, wherein the defendant filed a cross-complaint claiming an equitable lien upon a portion of the realty. From a judgment quieting plaintiff's title subject to defendant's lien upon a portion of the realty and foreclosing the lien, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment reversed.

David E. Peckinpah and L. N. Barber, both of Fresno, for appellants.

G. L. Aynesworth and Samuel F. Hollins, both of Fresno, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action to quiet title to certain land in Fresno County. The defendant filed a cross-complaint claiming an equitable lien upon a portion of the property through an assignment from Arthur F. Johnston as security for a note for $9,000 given by Arthur F. Johnston to A. E. Landucci. Want of consideration for the note and assignment was set up as a defense to the cross-complaint. The court found that this note was executed and delivered in consideration of an assignment from Landucci to Arthur F. Johnston of another contract for the purchase of certain lands in Merced County. A judgment was entered quieting the plaintiff's title but subject to defendant and cross-complainant's lien upon a portion of the property and foreclosing that lien. From this judgment the plaintiffs have appealed.

The appellants are husband and wife, and Arthur F. Johnston is their adult son. In 1928, E. E. Johnston and Arthur F. Johnston purchased on contract from Miller & Lux certain real property in Fresno County, of which the land here involved and ordered to be sold is the east one-half. In 1931, these vendees, by written agreement, divided their interests in the land thus being purchased and agreed that E. E. Johnston should take the west half and Arthur F. Johnston the east half. In 1938, the purchase payments having been completed, Miller & Lux deeded the entire property to E. E. Johnston and Arthur F. Johnston. On February 27, 1939, Arthur F. Johnston quitclaimed his interest in the property to his mother, Viola Johnston.

In the meantime, and on February 2, 1931, A. E. Landucci purchased on an instalment contract from Miller & Lux certain land in Merced County. On that same day, Landucci entered into a written contract to sell that land on somewhat different terms to Arthur F. Johnston, who took possession and farmed the land that year.

In November, 1931, Arthur F. Johnston found himself unable to finance the farming of the Merced land and to make the payments called for by his contract with Landucci for the purchase of that land. About that time he entered into an escrow for the purpose of trading his interest in the Merced land for a building in the city of Fresno, owned by one Imperatrice. That deal finally fell through and that trade was never completed. For the purposes of that trade, however, Arthur F. Johnston desired to obtain an assignment from Landucci to himself of the contract under which Landucci was purchasing the Merced property. To this end he made an arrangement with Landucci in November, 1931, whereby Landucci delivered to him the contract under which Landucci was purchasing the Merced land from Miller & Lux together with a form of assignment thereof, as hereinafter described, and Arthur F. Johnston executed and delivered to Landucci a note for $9,000 and, as security therefor, an assignment of Johnston's interest in the land in Fresno County.

The contract under which Landucci was purchasing the Merced land from Miller & Lux contained this provision: "Neither this contract nor any interest therein shall be assignable without the written consent of the seller." Attached to this contract is a form of assignment which was signed by Landucci and acknowledged by him on November 25, 1931. It purports to assign all of Landucci's right, title and interest in the contract, including the right to demand and receive a deed, to Arthur F. Johnston, followed by the words "This assignment is subject to the approval of Miller & Lux, Incorporated." It appears that this contract and this assignment were delivered to Arthur F. Johnston on November 25, 1931, and at the same time the note and assignment of the other contract, as security therefor, were delivered by Arthur F. Johnston to Landucci's attorney. The consent of Miller & Lux to the assignment from Landucci to Arthur F. Johnston, which is attached to the contract for the Merced land, was never obtained and, so far as the record here shows, nothing further was done toward performing or completing the terms of that contract. Landucci died on May 9, 1932, and his widow, the respondent herein, has succeeded to his interest so far as material here. While the $9,000 note was payable in five annual instalments, the first of which came due on December 1, 1932, no attempt to collect any part thereof was made prior to the filing of the cross-complaint in this action, which action was filed on March 24, 1939.

[1] The appellants' sole contention is that there was no consideration for the $9,000 note and the security therefor, and that the court's finding to the effect that a good consideration for said note existed in the execution and delivery by Landucci to Arthur F. Johnston of an assignment of the contract under which Landucci was purchasing the Merced land from Miller & Lux is without support in the evidence or in law. The respondent contends, on the other hand, that this assignment, although made "subject to the approval of" the original vendor, was not a conditional assignment and did not create a condition precedent or subsequent, or constitute a covenant on the part of Landucci to procure the approval of the vendor to such a transfer; that this was a completed and effective assignment which, with the delivery of the instruments, transferred Landucci's interest in the land to Johnston; and that the qualifying words in the assignment did not make it ineffective, but merely imposed a burden which was assumed by the assignee. There is no evidence of any consideration for this note other than the execution and delivery of the purported assignment to Johnston of Landucci's interest in this contract, and no other consideration was found by the trial court. The question is squarely presented, therefore, as to the legal effect of the language used in that assignment and as to whether the same became effective or passed any interest to Johnston. If that assignment did not become effective, Johnston neither received anything nor assumed the burden of obtaining the approval of the vendor. The language of this assignment must, moreover, be considered in connection with the provision of the contract itself, forbidding an assignment without the consent of the seller.

[2-5] While contracts of this nature may be assigned in the absence of any agreement to the contrary it has long been recognized that this is not true where the contract expressly provides otherwise, in which case the intention of the parties will be enforced by the courts. La Rue v. Groezinger, 84 Cal. 281, 24 P. 42, 18 Am. St.Rep. 179. Of course such a provision may be waived by the express agreement or by the conduct of the parties. Davis v. Rawhide Gold Min. Co., 15 Cal.App. 108, 113 P. 898. With respect to leases of real property it is well settled that a breach of a covenant not to assign the lease makes an assignment voidable and not void, the lessor having an option as to whether he will forfeit the lease, which option he must exercise according to law. Buchanan v. Banta, 204 Cal. 73, 266 P. 547. Where the lessor fails to exercise this option and permits the assignee to act to his prejudice the lessor is estopped from forfeiting the lease. Standard Oil Co. v. Woolner, 113 Cal.App. 66, 298 P. 77. However, where the landlord does not in any manner consent, the assignment is not effective. Farnum v. Hefner, 92 Cal. 542, 28 P. 602.

[6] In contracts for the sale and purchase of real estate the validity of a covenant forbidding an assignment without the consent of the seller has been generally recognized. Shively v. Semi-Tropic L. & W. Co., 99 Cal. 259, 33 P. 848; Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 128 P. 751; Laguna Land, etc., Co. v. Greenwood, 92 Cal.App. 570, 268 P. 699. It logically follows that the attempted assignment of such a contract is ineffective and conveys nothing to the assignee in the absence of the consent of the vendor, or of matters of estoppel by reason of which his formal consent becomes unnecessary. This has been recognized in at least two cases in this state. In Los Angeles, etc., Bank v. Northrup, 120 Cal.App. 677, 8 P.2d 528, where a vendor had attempted to sell his interest in a contract which provided that no assignment thereof should be valid in the absence of the written consent of the vendor, and where such consent had not been obtained, it was held that the purported assignment was not valid and that the assignee had acquired no rights thereunder. The effect of the holding there made is that the assignment was ineffective for any purpose and conveyed nothing to the assignee. The case of Whitten v. Young, 14 Cal.App.2d 299, 58 P.2d 167, involving a lease and option to purchase, is to the same effect, it being pointed out that the record disclosed no rights which had accrued to the claimant in the absence of the consent which was required. Where a contract is assigned in violation of a clause forbidding such assignment the contract still remains the property of the assignor. Burck v. Taylor, 152 U.S. 634, 14 S.Ct. 696, 38 L.Ed. 578.

[7] Applying these rules to the instant case it must be held that the contract under which Landucci was purchasing the Merced County Land, and all interests of the vendee under such contract, remained the property of Landucci, and that Johnston received nothing by virtue of the purported assignment. Similarly, Landucci suffered no detriment because he still owned the contract and all rights thereunder. The assignment was never completed. This would have been the legal effect if Landucci had executed an absolute assignment. Instead of doing this, he made his assignment "subject to the approval" of the vendor. This rather clearly indicates an attempt to comply with the requirement of the contract rather than an intention to make a complete assignment in disregard thereof. In other words, the wording of the assignment, reasonably construed, constitutes a limitation upon when the assignment shall become effective rather than a mere exception as to the amount of interest which is to be conveyed, or the setting forth of a burden which is to be assumed by the assignee. It is not a condition or covenant as to something that is immediately assumed by the assignee, but it is a restriction or limitation as to when and under what circumstances the assignment itself shall take effect and shall operate as a transfer. Under the circumstances here appearing this assignment was incomplete and never became effective. It follows that the court's findings to the effect that the assignment of this contract was valid, and that it constituted a good consideration for the note in question, are not supported by the evidence.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 720

PEOPLE v. SMITH.

Cr. 3529.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied March 19, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐1159(4)

In prosecution for violating the statute regarding crimes against children, testimony of eight-year-old prosecuting witness regarding time consumed in walking to place where crime took place was not so highly improbable as to be unbelievable so as to render it insufficient to support the conviction, where it did not appear from the record that the witness made more than an estimate of time. Pen.Code, § 288.

2. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

Verdict of jury supported by evidence must prevail in absence of prejudicial error.

3. Infants ⇐20

Evidence supported conviction for violation of statute penalizing crimes against children. Pen.Code, § 288.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

Alexander Smith was convicted of violating the statute regarding crimes against children, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and R. S. McLaughlin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Appellant was found guilty by a jury of two counts of violating section 288 of the Penal Code and appeals from the judgment that followed.

[1] The alleged victim was a girl of the age of eight years. The sole contention on appeal is, in the words of appellant, that the girl's story is "so highly improbable as to be unbelievable" and hence is insufficient as a matter of law to support the judgment.

Defendant, who, it appears from the record, had been injured, had not completely recovered and according to one of the arguments relied on was "sick and crippled." The record reveals that appellant was a neighbor of the victim and on the day in question met her in a nearby store where he bought her some ice cream. According to the child, they walked down the road and eventually stopped in a ravine where the alleged acts took place.

It is appellant's contention that the story is untrue principally because the distance over a country road was too far and too difficult to have been traveled by a man in a "sick and crippled" condition; that is, according to appellant's argument 2½ miles in 1½ hours. Appellant arrives at these figures by a process of calculation, the details of which need not be recited. It is sufficient to note that it does not appear from the record that the little girl made more than an estimate of time.

[2, 3] The defendant testified at the trial and the jury, which had the advantages incident to its opportunity, heard and saw all of the witnesses. That its verdict must prevail in the absence of prejudicial error, is too well settled to require citation of authority. There are no such errors in the record. Moreover, from an unprejudiced standpoint, the record refutes appellant's contention that the testimony of the prosecutrix is "so inherently improbable as to amount to no evidence of guilt whatsoever."

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 722

KNICKERBOCKER v. REDLANDS HIGH SCHOOL DIST. et al.

Civ. 2941.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Schools and school districts ⇐141(5)

Written notice of dismissal of probationary school teacher provided for by statute is "mandatory". School Code, § 5.681.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory".

2. Schools and school districts ⇐141(5)

The serving of written notice of dismissal of probationary school teacher is purely "ministerial". School Code, § 5.681.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Ministerial".

3. Schools and school districts ⇐141(5)

Board of trustees of school district had a right to decide not to re-employ probationary school teacher without giving her an opportunity to be heard.

4. Schools and school districts ⇐20

The fundamental purpose of legislation regulating education is based on the consideration of the welfare and best interests of the child and must not be lost sight of by court in construing statutes dealing with the educational system.

5. Schools and school districts ⇐141(5)

A deliberate decision of board of trustees of school district not to re-employ probationary school teacher would not be set aside by a construction of statute providing for the giving of notice of dismissal which construction was not required by language of statute. School Code, § 5.681.

6. Schools and school districts ⇐141(5)

Where board of trustees unanimously adopted resolution not to re-employ probationary school teacher and authorized superintendent of high school district who was the chief executive officer of the board to send notice of termination to the teacher and superintendent wrote a letter to the teacher advising her of the action taken by the board, superintendent's letter was sufficient "notice in writing" under the Code by the governing board to the probationary school teacher that her services would not be required for the ensuing year. School Code, §§ 5.500, 5.681.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Notice in Writing".

7. Schools and school districts ⇐57

Generally notice of a special meeting of board of trustees of school district may be "waived" by the persons entitled to receive it, since notice is for benefit of members of board rather than public and where all members of board are present and participate in a special meeting they may take official action notwithstanding irregularity or insufficiency of notice of special meeting.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

8. Schools and school districts ⇐57

Where there were two vacancies in board of trustees of school district and notice of special meeting of board of trustees was not given as required by statute but three trustees attended special meeting and unanimously adopted resolution not to re-employ probationary school teacher, meeting was not invalid because of failure to give notice or because of fact that there were only three trustees in office at time of meeting and resolution adopted by the board was effective to terminate the employment of the probationary teacher. School Code §§ 2.1092, 5.681.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank A. Leonard, Judge.

Proceeding for writ of mandate by Lulu Knickerbocker against Redlands High School District and others. From a judgment for the defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Fred A. Wilson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Jerome B. Kavanaugh, of San Bernardino, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner and appellant filed a petition for a writ of mandate ordering the respondent Board of Trustees of Redlands High School District to restore petitioner to the position of an employee of said district as a teacher of commercial subjects in said high school, and to permit her to perform her duties as such employee for the school year of 1940-1941, and also to pay petitioner the salary accrued for the school year 1940-1941.

The respondent board of trustees filed an answer setting forth that petitioner was served with a notice of termination of employment in the manner provided by the School Code of California and that she ceased to be an employee of respondent district prior to the school year 1940-1941.

The trial court found substantially that until the first day of July, 1940, respondents Cope, Hentschke and Cole constituted the Board of Trustees of Redlands High School District; that on April 30, 1940, at a meeting of said board of trustees, all members of said board being present, and having been notified of said meeting, the purpose for which said meeting was called being known and acquiesced in by all members of said board, a resolution was adopted by the unanimous vote of said board that the services of appellant as a teacher for said Redlands High School District would not be required for the ensuing school year 1940-1941; that said board of trustees at said meeting authorized and directed John Branigan, Superintendent of Redlands High School District, to send said notice of termination of employment of appellant and that the same was sent to appellant by registered mail and was received by her prior to the 15th day of May, 1940. The trial court further found that appellant was not and never had been a permanent employee of the Redlands High School District and that said district was not indebted to appellant in any amount. From said findings of fact the trial court concluded that a writ of mandate should be denied, and judgment in favor of respondent was entered in accordance with said findings and this appeal is from said judgment.

Appellant makes two points upon this appeal: (1) that the governing board of respondent district did not give notice in writing to appellant as provided in section 5.681 of the School Code and hence the attempted dismissal of appellant was ineffectual; (2) that the meeting of respondent board at which the action to dismiss appellant was taken was not a legal meeting of said board.

Under section 5.500 of the School Code, a probationary teacher will acquire the status of a permanent teacher at the end of three years unless, as provided in section 5.681 of the same code, on or before the 15th day of May in any year the governing board gives notice in writing to the probationary employee that his or her services will not be required for the ensuing year.

The full text of said section 5.681 is as follows:

"Time to give notice of dismissal: Manner of service. On or before the fifteenth day of May in any year the governing board may give notice in writing to a probationary employee that his services will not be required for the ensuing year.

"Such notice shall be deemed sufficient and complete when delivered in person to such employee by the clerk or secretary of the governing board of the school district or deposited in the United States registered mail with postage prepaid, addressed to such employee at his last known place of address."

[1] It may be taken as settled by our courts that the written notice provided for in said section 5.681 is mandatory. Darby v. Biggs School District, 15 Cal.App.2d 218, 59 P.2d 167, and cases therein cited.

[2] It is likewise settled that the serving of the notice provided for in the second paragraph of section 5.681 is purely ministerial. Steele v. Board of Trustees, 121 Cal.App. 419, 9 P.2d 217. In the case at bar the only writing received by petitioner was a letter from the superintendent of the Redlands High School District, reading as follows:

"Redlands Public Schools.
"John Branigan, Superintendent.
"Redlands, California, April 30th, 1940.

"Mrs. Lulu Knickerbocker,
"105 Center Street,
"Redlands, California.
"Dear Mrs. Knickerbocker:

"At a special meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Redlands High School District, with all members present, held this 30th day of April, 1940, at 11:00 A. M., at its regular meeting place, the High School Auditorium Building of Redlands High School, the Board this day pursuant to Section 5.681 of Article 4 of Chapter 7, page 305, School Code of the State of California, of the year 1937, did unanimously pass a motion to the effect that they give you this notice in writing that your services for the school year 1940-1941 and subsequent years will no longer be needed.

"This notice according to the foregoing section shall be deemed sufficient and complete when deposited in the United States registered mail with postage prepaid, addressed to you at your last known place of residence, viz. 105 Center Street, Redlands, California.

"Very sincerely yours,
"John Branigan, Superintendent of Schools."

Counsel for appellant and petitioner contends that inasmuch as this letter to petitioner was written on the letterhead of "John Branigan, Superintendent," was sent by registered mail in an envelope returnable to "John Branigan, Superintendent of Schools," and was signed "John Branigan, Superintendent of Schools," it is a letter from the superintendent and is not a notice by the board.

The trial court found that the board "authorized and directed John Branigan, Superintendent of Redlands High School District, to send said notice of termination of employment" and that "said notice of termination of employment of petitioner herein by the Board of Trustees of the Redlands High School District" was mailed to and received by petitioner prior to May 15, 1940.

Appellant contends further that even if it should be held that the board of trustees intended to authorize the superintendent to give the notice, it still fails to meet the requirement of the statute that the board shall give the notice.

Appellant cites section 4319 of the Political Code, which provides that "'Notice' includes all papers and orders (except process) required to be served in any proceeding before any court, board, or officer, or when required by law to be served independently of such proceeding."

Appellant also quotes the following language from Williams v. Bergin, 108 Cal. 166, at page 171, 41 P. 287, at page 288:

"Notice, when required by a statute, is not the equivalent of knowledge, and the supervisors gain jurisdiction to act upon the appeal only by giving the notice that the statute requires, and in the manner that is required, and not by the fact that the parties interested may have knowledge of their intended action. The term 'notice' of itself imports that the information given thereby comes from an authentic source, and is to be directed to some one who is to act or refrain from acting in consequence of the information contained in the notice. See Fry v. Bennett, 7 Abb.Prac. [352], 355; Minard v. Douglas County, 9 Ore. [206], 210. A notice which, by its terms, is directed to A is ineffectual as a notice to B, even though it is delivered to B and he is thereby informed of its contents."

Appellant also cites In re Central Irrigation District, 117 Cal. 382, 49 P. 354, and a number of cases from other states holding to the same effect as Williams v. Bergin, supra. These cases deal with the formation of street improvement districts and other proceedings wherein the statutory notice required was a necessary step in the proceedings in order to acquire jurisdiction.

These authorities, so strongly relied upon by appellant, are not applicable to the case at bar, where the notice required is merely notice of an act that has already taken place and not a notice of a meeting at which action was to be taken.

[3-5] Appellant argues further that the statute in question must be strictly construed because, to quote the language of appellant, "the tenure of a teacher—the continuance of her employment—constitutes a valuable personal right, the forfeiture of which is effected only when the governing board has given written notice of dismissal." However, in the case at bar appellant was only a probationary teacher and the board of trustees had the right to decide not to reemploy her without giving her an opportunity to be heard. Section 5.681 was enacted no more for the protection of teachers than for the maintenance of the efficiency of our school system. The whole system of legislation regulating the educational machinery is based upon the consideration of the welfare and best interests of the children. The proper regulation of tenure in office and other rights of teachers were also properly considered and regulated, but the fundamental purpose and primary object of the legislature was the consideration of the welfare of the children. This fundamental purpose must not be lost sight of by courts in the construction of legislation dealing with our educational system. In the case at bar, appellant had no more right to acquire permanent tenure than the board of trustees had to decide that she should not be reemployed, and in the construction of section 5.681 the deliberate decision of the school board not to reemploy appellant should not be set aside by a construction of section 5.681 that is not required by its language.

[6] In the case at bar the court found that the board of trustees unanimously adopted a resolution not to reemploy appellant and authorized the superintendent of said high school district to send notice of termination of employment to appellant, and the court further found that notice of termination was sent by registered mail to appellant and received by her prior to May 15, 1940. The text of the letter sent to appellant is herein set forth and we are of the opinion that the court below correctly concluded that said letter, so sent by the superintendent of Redlands High School District, who, under section 2.95 of the School Code, was the chief executive officer of the board, was a sufficient notice in writing by the governing board to appellant, probationary employee, that her services would not be required for the ensuing year.

In the case of Steele v. Board of Trustees of Pittsburg Public Schools, 121 Cal. App. 419, at page 422, 9 P.2d 217 at page 218, the court said:

"The clerk of a board of trustees of a school district is an officer. See School Code, §§ 2.20 to 2.94. Spreckels v. Graham, 194 Cal. 516, 529, 228 P. 1040. The act of serving a notice is purely ministerial. Couthway v. Berghaus, 25 Ala. 393; Eldridge v. Holway, 18 Ill. 446; 46 C.J. 927. Whether the clerk is an officer or merely an agent, he has the right to delegate the performance of that ministerial act. 46 C. J. 1033; Civ.Code, § 2349. It follows that the service of the notice met every call of the statute.

"The petitioners contend that, as the statute named the clerk as the person to serve the notice and as the statute is mandatory, no one else could legally perform the act. That contention is too narrow even under rules of strict construction. By virtue of article 1, § 22, of the Constitution of California, all the provisions of that instrument are mandatory. But no one would contend that the governor must in person take his messages to the Legislature (article 5, § 10), or in person take a vetoed bill to the house in which it originated (article 4, § 16). Nor would it be claimed that an owner must in person file a notice of completion or a mechanic must in person file for record his claim of lien (Code Civ.Proc. § 1187); nor that the plaintiff must in person file his notice of pendency of action (Code Civ.Proc. § 409). But all of these statutes are to be strictly followed. A more stringent rule was hardly intended to apply to school trustees, the great majority of whom are horny-handed sons of toil." See also, Salmon v. Allen, 1 Cal.App.2d 115, 36 P.2d 153; Fleming v. Board of Trustees, 112 Cal.App. 225, 296 P. 925.

The remaining point raised by appellant is that the meeting of the respondent board of trustees, at which the action not to reemploy appellant was taken, was not a legal meeting of said board, and that, therefore, the resolution adopted was ineffective.

The court below found that at the time of said meeting there were only three members of the board of trustees, there being two vacancies, and that "on the 30th day of April, 1940, * * * all members of said Board of Trustees being present and having been notified of said meeting, the purposes for which said meeting was called being known and acquiesced in by all members of the Board of Trustees" the resolution in question was unanimously adopted. It is not claimed that this finding is not supported by the record, but the appellant contends that said meeting was a special meeting and was not called in compliance with section 2.1092 of the School Code, which reads as follows:

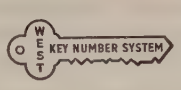
"Special meetings may be held at the call of the president of the board. Upon the request, in writing, signed by a majority of any board, the president of the board shall call a meeting thereof. Of all special meetings of any board, the members thereof shall have at least two days notice, issued and served by the clerk thereof. At special meetings no business shall be transacted other than that specified in the call therefor."

Respondents, in reply, admit that the action was taken at a special meeting but contend that the unanimous action of the board of trustees at a special meeting, regardless of the type of notice given, is valid and binding. Respondents admit that the notice as required by said section 2.1092 of the School Code was not given to the members of the board of trustees, but respondents contend that any irregularity in reference to the giving of notice of the special meeting was waived by the fact that all of the board members were present, and particularly inasmuch as all of the board members discussed the question of the termination of employment of petitioner.

We have been unable to find any California decision upon this precise point but the contention of respondents seems to be supported by the great weight of authority, and appellant has cited no case holding to the contrary.

[7] The general rule regarding the waiving of notice of a special meeting of a board of trustees of a school district, where all members are present and participate, is found in 56 Corpus Juris, at page 337, section 210, wherein it is stated:

"Such notice is, however, for the benefit of the members of the board rather than that of the public, and so, even where it is required by statute to be given, it may be waived by the persons entitled to receive it; and where all the members of a board are present and participate in a meeting thereof they may take official action, and the fact that no notice of such meeting was given, or no formal call was issued, or that the notice or call was irregular or insufficient, is immaterial to the validity of the proceedings."



The above-quoted text is supported by the following cases: Center Hill School District v. Hunt, 194 Ark. 1145, 110 S.W. 2d 523; State v. Tucker, 39 N.D. 106, 166 N.W. 820; Rice v. Bradley County School District, 109 Ark. 125, 159 S.W. 29; Decker v. School District No. 2, 101 Mo.App. 115, 74 S.W. 390; Wysong v. Board of Education, 86 W.Va. 57, 102 S.E. 733; Hlavka v. Common School District, 192 Minn. 169, 255 N.W. 820

[8] We do not regard as serious the fact that there were only three trustees in office at the time of the meeting, whereas the law provides for a board of five members. The action taken was unanimous and would have constituted the action of a majority of the board even if there had been five members in office at the time. If a special meeting of the board could not be held in this case, it would mean that a special meeting of the board of trustees of a school district could never be held if there was a vacancy on the board. Such a construction is, in our opinion, neither reasonable nor sound, and it is only fair to state that it is not urged seriously by appellant.

From the foregoing we conclude that the court below correctly decided that at a legal meeting of the Board of Trustees of Redlands High School District said board adopted a resolution that the services of appellant would be no longer required, and that notice to that effect was given in writing to appellant in conformity with section 5.681 of the School Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 647

JONES et al. v. BAYLEY et al.

Civ. 11740.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 10, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⇐246(60)

Where defendant motorist testified fully concerning the accident involved in action by pedestrian for personal injuries, requested instructions on presumption that automobile was driven in a lawful and proper manner were properly refused.

2. Automobiles ⇐246(58)

In action by pedestrian for injuries resulting from being struck by automobile where the evidence would not support a finding that pedestrian's eyesight was not normal when wearing his glasses as he admittedly was at the time of the accident and would support a finding that the hearing in pedestrian's right ear was to some indefinite extent impaired but there was no impairment of hearing in the other ear and no evidence which would support a finding that pedestrian's ability to hear was substantially or at all impaired, refusal of requested instruction concerning the degree of care to be exercised by one whose faculties are impaired was proper.

3. Automobiles ⇐222, 246(34)

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by automobile requested instruction that one whose faculties are impaired is required to exercise care sufficient to make good the defects and that one whose hearing is defective is for that reason required to exercise greater care and caution for his own protection than would be required of one whose hearing is normal was properly refused as not accurately stating the law and as tending to mislead or confuse the jury.

4. Automobiles ⇐246(4)

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by an automobile the jury were properly instructed that "negligence" is failure to use ordinary care and that "ordinary care" is that care which persons of ordinary prudence exercise in the management of their own affairs.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence" and "Ordinary Care".

5. Negligence ⇐86, 141(4)

A person with faculties impaired is held to the same degree of care and no higher than the degree of care required of ordinary person and hence is bound to use that care which a person of ordinary prudence with faculties so impaired would use in the same circumstances, which may require a more alert use of his other faculties to reach the standard of ordinary care and the jury might well be so instructed in the proper case, but after defining ordinary care to the jury it would be misleading to instruct them without explanation or qualification that a person with impaired faculties is required to exercise greater care which the jury might reasonably understand to mean greater than ordinary care as defined in the instructions.

6. Automobiles ⇐246(60)
Trial ⇐261

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, requested instructions that place where accident happened was to be conclusively presumed to be outside of the business or residence district unless otherwise proved and that the prima facie speed limit on a highway outside of a residence or business district was 45 miles an hour and that at the place where the accident occurred the speed limit was 45 miles an hour, were properly refused as incomplete and as tending to confuse or mislead the jury. Vehicle Code §§ 511, 513, St. 1935, pp. 176, 177.

7. Trial ⇐261

An appellant cannot complain of the failure to give a proposed instruction which is incomplete, meaningless or misleading, and no duty is imposed on the court to reframe or recast such proposed instruction to correctly state law.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1046(5)

Where police report was properly excluded from evidence, court's criticism of police department's insistence upon not leaving original reports with court was not prejudicial, particularly where court stated to officer in presence of jury that nothing detrimental to the officer was intended and instructed the jury to disregard in arriving at their verdict any comments court had made in the course of the trial which might seem to indicate any opinion as to the weight of any testimony or the credibility of any witness.

9. Appeal and error ⇐201(2), 719(1)

Where there was no objection made to remarks of court, nor assignment of error, nor request to admonish jury to disregard court's remarks, error, if any, was not available on appeal.

10. Appeal and error ⇐1032(1)

The fact of prejudice must be clear to warrant an appellate court in overruling trial judge's conclusion that no prejudice resulted from trial court's remark in presence of jury.

11. Appeal and error ⇐201(2), 719(1), 1046(5)

Where court in excluding alleged admission by defendant stated that counsel's belief that defendant would not have admitted liability unless she really felt liable might possibly be true, the statement was not prejudicial and was not saved for review where no objection or assignment of error was made and there was no request for admonition of jury.

12. Appeal and error ⇐1060(1)

Prejudice may result from any reference to insurance in an action for damages but a litigant is entitled to a fair and impartial jury and the rule permitting counsel to ask in good faith whether a prospective juror is interested in a particular insurance company or in any insurance company has been established as a rule of necessity, but counsel must take pains to propound such questions in such a manner as not to convey unnecessarily the impression that the defendant is in fact so insured.

13. Trial ⇐108½

It is "misconduct" on part of counsel for plaintiff in personal injury action to frame questions that go beyond what is reasonably necessary to serve the legitimate purpose of eliciting facts he is entitled to adduce in order to secure a jury free from bias or prejudice, if it is also apparent that the questions may fairly be said to have the effect of serving the illegitimate purpose of prejudicing the jury by fixing in their minds the idea that defendant is protected by insurance against liability for negligence.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

14. Trial ⇐108½

In pedestrian's action for injuries sustained when struck by automobile driven by army officer's wife, questions asked of prospective jurors who were or had been engaged in insurance business or who were wives of persons so engaged relative to writing of insurance covering army officers and questions whether defendants' attorneys had handled any litigation arising out of such insurance business did not unreasonably bring subject matter of insurance before jury.

15. Appeal and error ⇐230

An attorney cannot ordinarily without objection secretly nurse an unspecified error through the trial with the idea that it will constitute insurance against a possible defeat, and it is only where error is aggravated and incurable that the point may be saved where it is not timely made in the trial court.

16. Witnesses ⇐387

It is always proper for the purpose of discrediting a witness by his own admissions to interrogate him on cross-examination as to prior inconsistent statements without calling attention to time, place, circumstances and persons present.

17. Trial ⇐127

Cross-examination of defendant concerning alleged admission to person asking for report of accident and failure to have such person testify could not be said to have been in "bad faith" for sole purpose of insinuating to jury that defendant was insured where it was proved on motion for a new trial that certain person was in fact an insurance adjuster and had told counsel for plaintiff of such admission and failure to call the adjuster was readily explained by reason of his adverse interest and position.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Bad Faith".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge Assigned.

Action by Eugene Jones, a minor, etc., and another against Ada Bayley and another for injuries received when struck by an automobile driven by the named defendant. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Cooley, Crowley & Supple, Leighton M. Bledsoe, and Norman S. Menifee, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

John J. Taheny, of San Francisco, and Edmund Scott, of Redwood City, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

Defendants, husband and wife, appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs after a jury verdict allowing damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff Eugene Jones as a result of being struck by an automobile driven by defendant wife. Appellants make no claim that the damages allowed were excessive and concede that the evidence supports the verdict. Their claim on appeal is that the evidence was sharply conflicting and indeed preponderated in their favor, and that for this reason the alleged errors which they specify as grounds of appeal must be held to have been prejudicial. It will suffice to show the sharp conflict in the evidence that plaintiffs' theory was that young Jones was struck while crossing the street in a legally established cross-walk and defendants' theory was that he suddenly "lunged" in front of the automobile at a point 60 feet away from the cross-walk, and that either theory finds ample support in the testimony.

Appellants claim that the court was in error in refusing to give certain instructions requested by them. These instructions cover three separate subjects:

[1] 1. Appellants requested certain instructions on the presumption that the automobile of the defendants was driven in a lawful and proper manner. They rely largely in support of their claim that it was error to refuse these instructions upon Westberg v. Willde, 14 Cal.2d 360, 94 P.2d 590. The case on this point is against their contention. Mrs. Bayley, the driver of the automobile, was a witness in her own behalf and testified fully to her version of the accident. In Westberg v. Willde, supra, the court said at page 367 of 14 Cal.2d, at page 594 of 94 P.2d:

"We think it well to state here that in our opinion there is a substantial difference in the situation before a court where the question of the plaintiff's negligence is in issue, and both plaintiff and his witnesses testified to all his acts and conduct at the time of his alleged negligence, from a situation where the acts and conduct of a decedent are the issues before the court. In the first instance, all possible facts both in favor of and against the alleged negligence of the plaintiff are before the court, and it is difficult for us to perceive how any presumption as to his conduct can add to or detract from this evidence. Surely if this evidence conclusively supports the claim that he was negligent, then, according to our decisions cited above, the presumption as to his conduct has been dispelled. On the other hand, if the plaintiff has testified respecting his acts and conduct, and his testimony and that of his witnesses showed that he used ordinary care for his safety, an instruction to that effect would not be of any assistance to him; but if such evidence did not clearly and unmistakably clear him of the charge of negligence, then an instruction which would place his testimony in a more favorable light than it would be without such instruction would seem to be uncalled for, if not improper. In such a case the giving of any instruction as to the presumption of plaintiff's conduct would seem to be of doubtful propriety."

Upon the authority of Westberg v. Willde the District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, said in Stevenson v. Fleming, 47 Cal.App.2d 225, at page 233, 117 P.2d 717, at page 721:

"Defendant's instruction number eighteen, wherein the jury was told that each party was entitled to the presumption that every person takes ordinary care of his own concerns and that he obeys the law, § 1963, subd. 4, Code Civ.Proc., should not have been given. Such an instruction may be proper under given circumstances in a death case but should not be given in a case where all the parties are alive and testify and all facts are placed before the jury by the testimony of the parties and the witnesses."

The question which has troubled our courts so long as to when it is proper and when improper to give the jury an instruction covering this presumption is definitely settled in Westberg v. Willde, supra, and the dividing line clearly marked and pointed out. It is to be hoped, for the benefit of trial courts and counsel, that the opinion of our Supreme Court in that case has laid for all time the ghost of doubt that for so long has haunted this particular question.

2. Appellant proposed the following instruction which was refused by the court:

"One whose faculties are impaired is required to exercise care sufficient to make good the defects and one whose hearing is defective is for that reason required to exercise greater care and caution for his own protection than would be required of one whose hearing is normal."

The only evidence in the entire case to which this instruction could have been directed is here quoted:

"Q. Were you wearing glasses at the time of the accident? A. Yes.

"Q. They were not in thicker rims? A. No.

"Q. How long have you worn glasses? A. Oh, I would say roughly twelve years.

"Q. Are you near-sighted? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Are those thick lenses you are wearing there? A. Pretty thick.

"Q. They are not bi-focals, are they? A. No, sir.

"Q. How long before this accident happened had it been since you had had your eyes examined? A. I couldn't say; within a month before.

"Q. Had you had new glasses a month before the accident? A. No, just a check up.

"Q. They made no change in your glasses at that time? A. No.

"Q. Was it recommended that you make a change? A. No, sir.

"Q. Before this accident happened, you had an impediment of hearing in your right ear, had you not? A. Yes.

"Q. How long had you had that? A. For quite a while, ever since I had mastoid.

"Q. You had a mastoid operation, did you? A. Yes.

"Q. How long ago? A. About thirteen years.

"Q. So the hearing in your right ear is bad, is it? A. Not as bad as it was.

"Q. Now, your left ear, how is the hearing in that? A. Good. * * *

"Q. At the time of this accident, was your hearing as good as it has been in the courtroom here; at the time of the accident, was it as good as it has been in the courtroom here? A. My hearing is all right.

"Q. I say at the time of the accident, could you hear noises as well as you have been able to hear people talk in the courtroom here? A. Yes."

[2] This evidence is quoted in full to show how insubstantial is the claim of error in this regard. The evidence would not support a finding that the injured plaintiff's eyesight was not normal when wearing his glasses, as, he admittedly was at the time of this accident; and while it would support a finding that the hearing in his right ear was to some indefinite extent impaired, there was no impairment of hearing in the other ear, and no evidence which would support a finding that his ability to hear was substantially or at all impaired by whatever indeterminate impairment may have existed in the one ear.

[3] These observations sufficiently dispose of this specification, but it may be well to add that if the facts had justified the giving of an instruction on the quantum of care required of a person with impaired faculties the instruction as proposed did not accurately state the law and might well have misled or confused the jury.

[4, 5] The jury was properly instructed that negligence is failure to use ordinary care and that ordinary care is that care which persons of ordinary prudence exercise in the management of their own affairs. A person with faculties impaired is held to the same degree of care and no higher. He is bound to use that care which a person of ordinary prudence with faculties so impaired would use in the same circumstances. 45 C.J. 996–7; 5 Am.Jur. 765; Keith v. Worcester & B. V. St. R. Co., 196 Mass. 478, 82 N.E. 680, 14 L.R.A.,N.S., 648. This may require a more alert use of his other faculties to reach the standard of ordinary care, and the jury might well be so instructed in a proper case, but after defining ordinary care to the jury it would be misleading to instruct them without explanation or qualification that a person with impaired faculties "is required to exercise greater care," which the jury might reasonably understand to mean greater than "ordinary care" as defined in the instructions.

There is nothing in Armstrong v. Day, 103 Cal.App. 465, 284 P. 1083, in conflict with this conclusion. There the instructions on the subject were held properly refused and the court did not pass upon their form. While some of the language of the proposed instruction is taken from the opinion of the court in Armstrong v. Day, and some from other language appearing in Furtado v. Bird, 26 Cal.App. 152, 160, 146 P. 58, it has been often pointed out "that the text of a decision is not necessarily sound as an instruction to be given to the jury." McGeorge v. Charles Nelson Co., 107 Cal.App. 148, 290 P. 75, 77; Rosander v. Market St. R. Co., 89 Cal.App. 710, 718, 265 P. 536; People v. Russell, 80 Cal.App. 243, 245, 251 P. 699; Lincoln v. Williams, 119 Cal.App. 498, 502, 6 P.2d 563; Soares v. Barson, 12 Cal.App.2d 582, 585, 55 P.2d 1283.

3. Appellants proposed an instruction that the place where the accident happened was to be conclusively presumed to be outside of a business or residence district unless otherwise proved, together with two instructions in the following language:

"The prima facie speed limit on a highway outside of a residence or business district is forty-five (45) miles an hour."

"You are instructed that at the place where this accident occurred the speed limit was forty-five (45) miles an hour."

[6] As proposed, the instructions were incomplete and might well have been either confusing or misleading to the jury. The pertinent statutory law is found in sections 511 and 513 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, pp. 176, 177. The provisions applicable to a civil case are:

"511. The speed of any vehicle upon a highway not in excess of the limits specified in this section is lawful unless clearly proved to be in violation of the basic rule declared in section 510 hereof. * * *

"The prima facie limits referred to above are as follows [followed by specifications in miles per hour for different situations]."

"513. In any civil action proof of speed in excess of any prima facie limit declared in section 511 hereof at a particular time and place shall not establish negligence as a matter of law but in all such actions it shall be necessary to establish as a fact that the operation of a vehicle at such excess speed constituted negligence."

To tell the jury that the "speed limit" or the "prima facie speed limit" at the time and place of the accident is forty-five miles an hour gives them no legal guide for use in their deliberations. Such an instruction is meaningless standing alone. The legal effect of driving within the speed limit is explained in the first sentence of section 511 quoted above. The legal effect of exceeding the speed limit is explained in section 513. No instruction given by the court and none requested by appellants embodied or included the provisions of either. From the bald and unexplained instructions proposed the jury might well have erroneously concluded that if appellants' car was being operated at less than forty-five miles per hour, i. e., within the "speed limit" or the "prima facie speed limit," the driving of the car at that speed could not be found to be negligence.

[7] It is axiomatic that an appellant cannot complain of the failure to give a proposed instruction which is incomplete, meaningless or misleading, and no duty is imposed on the court to reframe or recast such a proposed instruction to correctly state the law. Nelson v. Southern Pacific Co., 8 Cal.2d 648, 653, 67 P.2d 682.

A number of cases have been cited to us by appellants on this subject. In none of them was it held error to refuse to give a proposed instruction on the speed limit which did not embody an explanation of the legal effect to be given to the speed limit under the pertinent provisions of the Vehicle Code. In some of the cases the giving of an instruction on the speed limit was held proper, but in no case has it been expressly held proper to give such an instruction in the absence of an explanation of the legal effect of driving within or in excess of the limit prescribed.

As an example, in Cavalli v. Luckett, 40 Cal.App.2d 250, at page 256, 104 P.2d 708 at page 711, one of the cases chiefly relied on by appellants, the court says:

"The provisions of the basic speed law and the first paragraph of section 511 were sufficiently covered by other instructions. * * *"

The case therefore cannot be considered as authority for the giving of an instruction on the prima facie speed limit without explaining its effect under the first sentence of section 511.

Appellants argue that the trial judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in certain remarks made by him when a police officer was on the stand. The officer stated that his captain had instructed him not to leave the report of the accident in court, whereupon the following colloquy occurred:

"The Court. It's a funny thing, you may never leave anything in the Superior Court, and yet the first time one of you police get hurt you run for the Judge of the Superior Court. I don't know whether to keep this report or not. You know I have threatened some time to take them, and either put you in jail or hold it and see where I get. This might be a good time to do it. If one of you counsel will side with me I will.

"A. This has to come back by me.

"The Court. The point I am making is this, that every time the bank or anyone else comes in here with documents, they do not want to leave them, but they go down and file a will downstairs or leave deeds, but these police reports, I don't know, I think it is sometimes the smaller things in life that receive the greatest amount of attention and sometimes people lose the greatest things by looking at the smaller things.

"A. I will try to bring a copy next time, Judge.

"The Court. Well, we will have to have the original. In other words, that's one of the difficulties we have in our form of government; one department thinks it's a little superior to the other, and if you want to get anything from one department you have to bring suit to get it. * * *

"Mr. Bledsoe. This report is a public record, isn't it? * * *

"The Court. No, I don't think it is."

As the officer was leaving the stand the trial judge said:

"Thank you very much. I don't want you to think, officer, that I think anything detrimental of you or anything of that sort. I did not mean to say that at all."

[8] In so far as any of the quoted remarks of the court might have been considered as casting any reflection on the weight or importance of the police report as evidence, if they could bear such a construction, it would seem to be sufficient to point out that the police report was not admitted in evidence and appellants do not claim that it was admissible. In so far as it is claimed that the remarks might be construed as a reflection on the character of the witness or the weight to be given to his testimony we do not think that anything said by the court can be so construed. His remarks were directed to a system and to the orders of the witness' superior and not at all to the witness' own conduct. Some of them might better have been left unsaid but we do not believe that they could in any respect have prejudiced appellants with the jury.

[9, 10] It is to be noted further: 1. That there was no objection, assignment of error or request to the court to admonish the jury to disregard the remarks. The error, if any, is therefore not available to appellants on appeal. In re Estate of Golden, 4 Cal.2d 300, 310, 311, 48 P.2d 962; Hughes v. Hartman, 206 Cal. 199, 206, 273 P. 560. 2. The trial court in effect did admonish the jury in his remark addressed to the witness as he was leaving the stand that the court did not think or mean anything detrimental to the witness. 3. The trial court fully instructed the jury to disregard in arriving at their verdict any comments that he had made in the course of the trial which might seem to them to indicate any opinion as to the weight of any testimony or the credibility of any witness. 4. The trial court in denying a new trial again passed upon the question of prejudice and the fact of prejudice must be clear to warrant an appellate court in overruling his conclusion that no prejudice resulted. Lafargue v. United Railroads, 183 Cal. 720, 192 P. 538; Levens v. Stocco, 5 Cal.App.2d 693, 695, 43 P.2d 357. 5. The lack of any objection, specification of error, request for admonition or even comment by counsel lends credibility to respondents' claim that the court's remarks were made in a jocular way, which of course the cold record cannot show, and regarded by all as a mere pleasantry. Dawson v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 82 Cal.App. 141, 153, 255 P. 215.

[11] Upon cross-examination appellant Ada Bayley was asked, if she did not state in a conversation with the injured boy's mother "that you were very sorry and hoped that they collected $10,000 from you?" Objection was made and in the course of a running argument counsel for respondent said:

"I do not think she would express a desire unless she really felt liable."

The trial judge replied:

"Incidentally, that might be true, possibly later on."

The matter was then dropped and counsel proceeded to examine on another question. No objection, assignment of error or request for admonition was asked and everything said of the colloquy between the court and the police officer applies equally to this remark of the court. In addition the court's remark was trivial, in the course of a running argument, and if evidence on the subject had been introduced, which it was not, the court's remark in our judgment was correct. Such a statement if made by a defendant might well be construed by the jury as an admission of liability.

Finally the appellants argue that the matter of insurance was unnecessarily and prejudicially brought before the jury on voir dire examination of the jurors and in cross-examination of Mrs. Bayley.

The only claimed prejudicial questions asked on voir dire were asked of prospective jurors who were or had been engaged in the insurance business or of women whose husbands were or had been so engaged.

[12, 13] We may take the following statement from Robinson v. Wada, 10 Cal. App.2d 5, 51 P.2d 171, 172, a case relied upon by appellants, as fairly stating the limits of proper examination on the subject of insurance on voir dire:

"While the probable prejudice resulting from any reference to insurance in an action for damages is universally recognized, it is likewise recognized that a plaintiff is entitled to a fair and impartial jury. Therefore the rule permitting counsel to ask in good faith whether a prospective juror is interested in a particular insurance company or in any insurance company has been established as a rule of necessity. The authorities, however, have quite definitely limited the scope of the examination along this line. * * * [Then quoting from Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal.App. 420, 183 P. 171]. 'But counsel must take pains to propound such questions in such a manner as not unnecessarily to convey the impression that the defendant is in fact so insured. It is misconduct on the part of counsel for plaintiff in such actions so to frame his question that it goes beyond what is reasonably necessary to serve the legitimate purpose of eliciting the facts he is entitled to adduce in order to secure a jury free from bias or prejudice, if it is also apparent that the question may fairly be said to have the effect of serving the illegitimate purpose of prejudicing the jury by fixing in their minds the idea that the defendant is protected by insurance against liability for negligence.'"

[14] It was stated by counsel for appellants on the voir dire examination of some of the prospective jurors that appellant Alvin J. Bayley, who was not present in court, was a colonel in the army. Of the first prospective juror who stated that he was an insurance broker counsel for respondents asked:

"Did you ever place any insurance for a company insuring military men, I believe it is United Service Insurance Company of Texas?"

If the description "Insuring military men" was unnecessarily injected into the question it would at least come dangerously close to an infringement of the rule announced in Robinson v. Wada, supra. On the question of the good faith and necessity of this description "insuring military men" the trial court had before it on motion for new trial an affidavit of one Fred West from which it appears that the true name of the company was not "United Service Insurance Company of Texas" but "United Service Automobile Association." If, as we must assume the trial court decided on motion for new trial, counsel for respondents were not certain of the correct name of the company and in good faith added the description "insuring military men" to make the designation of the company more certain we cannot say that the question in the form put was not reasonably necessary or unnecessarily suggested that the defendants were insured.

A prospective woman juror whose husband was in the insurance business was asked of her husband, "Do you know whether he handles insurance or places insurance for army officers?" The question seems to us proper and not unnecessarily to suggest that defendants were insured. A grocer's wife might properly be asked: "Does your husband sell groceries to army officers?" where one of the defendants was an army officer. The reasonable necessity of the question being the test it seems that an insurance broker might equally be asked if he sells insurance to army officers.

Several prospective jurors in the insurance business were asked whether the firm of Cooley, Crowley and Supple had handled any litigation arising out of their insurance business. Other questions were asked as to whether the prospective jurors had done any investigating or adjusting of claims. The first line of questions were properly addressed to the possible business relations or relation of attorney and client between the prospective jurors and defendants' attorneys. It is stretching an inference too far to argue that the inquiry whether the attorneys might have represented prospective jurors in litigation arising from their insurance business suggests that they must be representing an insurance company in the pending litigation. The propriety of the second line of questions is readily apparent. A man who had investigated and adjusted insurance claims might easily be biased in favor of defendants.

[15] It is to be remarked that during the entire voir dire examination counsel for appellants sat by without interposing a single objection to any question now complained of. Ordinarily an attorney cannot without objection secretly nurse an unspecified error through the trial with the idea that it will constitute insurance against a possible defeat. It is only where error is aggravated and incurable that the point may be saved where it is not timely made in the trial court. Gray v. Robinson, 33 Cal.App.2d 177, 183, 91 P.2d 194; Kershaw v. Tilbury, 214 Cal. 679, 691, 8 P.2d 109.

On cross-examination appellant Ada Bayley was asked:

"Q. Do you remember that a man named Fred West came down to see you, who had his office at 114 Sansome Street in San Francisco, and he asked you for a report of the accident? A. Yes, he did.

"Q. Didn't you tell him that the boy ran or came from behind an automobile going in the opposite direction?"

Thereupon there was objection and argument and the witness finally gave a negative answer. It is now claimed that this examination was not in good faith because West was not called as an impeaching witness and that the sole purpose was to insinuate to the jury that defendants were insured.

[16] "It is always proper, for the purpose of discrediting a witness by his own admissions, to interrogate him, on cross-examination, as to prior inconsistent statements without calling attention to time, place, circumstances and persons present." People v. Campos, 10 Cal.App.2d 310, 317, 52 P.2d 251, 254; 27 Cal.Jur. 159, 160.

[17] On the question of good faith respondents' counsel filed an affidavit on motion for new trial which recited that Fred West, who is an insurance adjuster, had told affiant that he had interviewed Mrs. Bayley and could show that plaintiff came from behind a car going in the opposite direction. With these facts in mind it was proper for respondents' counsel to put the question to Mrs. Bayley if she had not made such a statement to West in an effort to get an admission for her to that effect. His failure to call West is readily explained by West's adverse interest and position. It is straying far afield to argue that reference in a question to a man named West "who had his office at 114 Sansome Street" and asked "for a report of the accident" was calculated to inform the jury that defendants were insured. The question was a proper preliminary question for the inquiry about the alleged contradictory statement.

In this opinion, we have carefully considered every claim of error made by appellants. Finding no error the judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 633

GHIGLIONE v. AMERICAN TRUST CO.

Civ. 11630.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 10, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 12, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 9, 1942.

1. Banks and banking ⇐227(3)

Evidence sustained judgment against bank in favor of its depositor on ground that bank's branch manager fraudulently induced depositor to sign withdrawal slips on representation that secured loans were being made in behalf of the depositor.

2. Banks and banking ⇐227(2)

In action for damages resulting from alleged action of bank's branch manager in fraudulently inducing depositor to sign withdrawal slips, testimony of the depositor explaining the purported withdrawals was admissible for that purpose.

3. Principal and agent ⇐124(1)

Whether an agent is acting under actual or ostensible authority of his principal is a "question of fact" which may be covered by direct evidence or by reasonable inferences drawn from facts proved.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

4. Principal and agent ⇐158

A principal who puts an agent in a position which enables the agent while apparently acting within his authority to commit a fraud on third persons is subject to liability to such third persons for the fraud.

5. Banks and banking ⇐112

In determining liability of bank for alleged fraud of its branch manager in inducing depositor to sign withdrawal slips, the depositor was not foreclosed by any secret or undisclosed instructions which the bank might have given to the manager.

6. Banks and banking ⇐228

Whether bank's branch manager had apparent authority to accept withdrawal slips from depositor, to pay depositor's bills and prepare documents for depositor's signature so as to render the bank liable for any fraudulent action by the manager was for jury.

7. Banks and banking ⇐112

Where suggestions of bank's branch manager concerning making of personal loans by bank's depositor were made as friendly gestures of good will and business accommodations and no fee was charged for them, the depositor was not charged with "notice" that acts of manager were beyond the scope of his authority, so as to be precluded from recovering from bank for alleged fraud of the manager on ground that the suggestions would put the bank in the loan brokerage business contrary to law.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Notice".

8. Appeal and error ⇐971(3)
Witnesses ⇐267

Cross-examination of a witness is within discretion of the trial court and the reviewing court will not interfere except upon a showing that the discretion has been abused to the prejudice of the appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; S. Victor Wagler, Judge.

Action by Angelo Ghiglione against the American Trust Company for damages allegedly resulting from fraud of defendant's branch manager in inducing plaintiff to sign withdrawal slips. From an adverse judgment, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Pierce & Sherwin, of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued for the recovery of money upon a complaint containing three counts and had judgment on a verdict based upon the second and third counts, which sounded in fraud.

The defendant is a banking corporation maintaining a branch office in the city of Alameda where it has carried on the ordinary commercial and savings bank activities, including the drafting of documents and collecting notes for its customers and crediting the collections to the accounts of its clients. The plaintiff was the owner of considerable real property and was in the habit of dealing in real property and making loans thereon. For a number of years before the acts hereafter mentioned he maintained a savings account with the Alameda branch, but did not carry a commercial account. He is an Italian by birth, who had retired after a successful experience as a vegetable grower. He could read English a little, but could not write, except to sign his name.

Sometime before 1931 the plaintiff met Lloyd Smith, the manager of the branch bank, and the two became very close friends. The plaintiff went to Italy in 1930 for a visit and, before leaving, gave Smith a general power of attorney under which the latter withdrew $3,000 from the plaintiff's account which he loaned to his own mother. This sum was in large part repaid, and plaintiff did not learn of the transaction until some years later. During all the time plaintiff was dealing with Smith he placed full confidence in him in his relation with the bank, signed the power of attorney, withdrawal slips, and other papers, without question, and permitted the bank to draw cashier's checks and withdrawal slips for him with which the bank paid his taxes and other bills. As to the power of attorney given to Smith the plaintiff testified he thought he had "signed a paper for the bank to take care of everything when I am gone."

The second cause of action pleaded rests upon the alleged fraud of defendant's agent in inducing the plaintiff to consent to the withdrawal of $4,700 from his account for the purpose of making a loan to an unidentified person. The plaintiff testified that Smith came to his house on the morning of January 6, 1936, and told plaintiff that he knew of a woman who desired to borrow $4,700 to be secured by good bonds worth about $10,000. Smith stated that the bank could not make the loan because the woman wanted to borrow the money for a period in excess of one year and hence he was bringing it to plaintiff as a good client of the bank. Smith further stated that plaintiff would be able to obtain 6 per cent interest instead of the 2 per cent which the bank paid; he further remarked that if any bond depreciated in value "we sell it before they go too low" and that "he" would have all the papers prepared. Plaintiff testified that he agreed to the transaction, signed a withdrawal slip for $4,700, left it with Smith, and the withdrawal was made on January 8, 1936. Smith later told plaintiff that "everything was O. K." but plaintiff did not ask the name of the borrower and did not see the note. Plaintiff testified that he relied on these representations and did not discover their falsity until November, 1938, when Smith was arrested for certain defalcations.

The second transaction is pleaded as the third cause of action in the complaint in which plaintiff sought recovery of $3,250 representing $2,000 noted as withdrawn from his account on December 5, 1936, and $1,250 noted as withdrawn on February 24, 1938. Plaintiff testified that, about seven or eight months after the transaction alleged in the previous count, Smith came to his house and stated that he knew of a person who desired to make a $3,750 real estate loan; Smith made approximately the same representations as he had previously made regarding the security, interest and safety of the loan. Plaintiff testified that in reliance on such representations he signed a withdrawal slip for $3,750 which he handed to Smith, but defendant's records showed that such withdrawal was not made at any time near that date. Plaintiff relies on the withdrawal of $2,000 on December 5, 1936, and the charge against his account of $1,250 on February 24, 1938, which money he testified was not received by him. The defendant introduced testimony showing that a $2,000 deposit and a $3,250 withdrawal was made on February 24, 1938, for which it held plaintiff's receipt but the latter testified that he had not consummated such a transaction. Testimony of defendant's employees was offered to the effect that the bank did not make loans for others. Defendant's motions for nonsuit and a directed verdict were denied, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $8,546.94. The court denied defendant's motions for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial. Defendant appeals from the judgment entered upon the verdict in favor of plaintiff.

[1, 2] The grounds of the appeal rest upon the claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and that the trial court erred in limiting the cross-examination of respondent. The first point is based upon the statement that appellant's records, respondent's passbook, and the receipts make a prima facie case of payment of the two items questioned in the third count, and upon the statement that respondent produced no evidence that Smith received the money for the purpose of making a loan for respondent, or that the withdrawals were connected with Smith's representations regarding the proposed loan of $3,750. If this were a correct statement of the record there would be no difficulty in accepting appellant's position as sound. But the appellant has overlooked certain essential facts and circumstances which are of sufficient weight to support the inference which we must assume the jury drew in reaching its verdict. Thus the respondent testified that seven or eight months after the bond transaction Smith approached him with the same representations theretofore made and suggested that he loan $3,750 from his account upon certain real property. Smith volunteered to make up the necessary papers, and later told respondent at the bank that everything was "O. K." Respondent testified that he had no recollection of signing the withdrawal slip for $2,000 on December 5, 1936, that no cashier's check was drawn for that amount, that he did not receive that sum then or at any other time, that, since January, 1936, he did not at any time withdraw more than $300 in cash. The records of appellant show that, on February 24, 1938, respondent's balance was $2,866, that he then withdrew $3,250 and on the same day deposited $2,000. Respondent denied that he made either the withdrawal or the deposit at that time. The appellant did not call Smith or any other witness to explain these obvious discrepancies in its records, and did not controvert in any particular the plain and simple story of respondent. His testimony explaining these receipts, or purported withdrawals was of course admissible for that purpose. 10 Cal. Jur. 923 et seq. From all these circumstances the jury might have inferred that the books and records being under Smith's direct control and management did not present a full and true picture of these transactions.

Appellant does not seriously contend that the evidence is insufficient to prove the transaction alleged in the second count. It cites the evidence of the receipt for $4,700 signed by respondent, but his testimony clearly explains that. There was no evidence of any character which would tend to controvert respondent's direct testimony that he did not at any time while a depositor with appellant personally withdraw such large sum from the bank.

[3] The real issue urged by the appellant is that the respondent failed to show that the bank was liable for the fraudulent act of its employee. The argument is that, as matter of law, the acts complained of were outside of the actual and ostensible authority of the employee. The question whether an agent is acting under the actual or ostensible authority of his principal is one of fact which may be covered by direct evidence of the fact or by reasonable inferences drawn from the facts proved. Here it may be conceded that there is no evidence of actual authority. The respondent contends that he has met the requirements by proof of an apparent or ostensible authority.

[4] The liability of the principal under such circumstances is well stated in section 261 of the Restatement of the Law of Agency, which reads, in part: "A principal who puts an agent in a position that enables the agent, while apparently acting within his authority, to commit a fraud upon third persons is subject to liability to such third persons for the fraud."

In support of his contention that the bank had clothed its manager with authority to conduct for its customers business transactions including loans to third parties, the respondent relies upon the evidence showing that, in accord with the usual custom, the manager was authorized to take money and documents from a depositor for the purpose of starting an escrow or trust, to receive and carry out the escrow instructions. It was shown that for a period of years the bank manager had carried out respondent's instructions for the payment of his taxes and other obligations for which service the bank had accepted a nominal fee. The bank supplied its manager with printed forms and prepared notes to assist its manager in rendering a service to its customers in drafting notes given in connection with transactions between its customers. The appellant relies upon the testimony of some of its employees that it was no part of the bank's business to make loans for others. But it does not controvert the showing of the well-established custom and practice of the appellant to permit the manager to accept withdrawal slips for money deposited in the savings accounts and to transmit funds to another upon the instructions of the depositor.

[5, 6] In a matter of this kind the customer of the bank is not foreclosed by the secret or undisclosed instructions which the principal might have given its agent. The question whether the authority was apparent is one of fact to be determined by all the circumstances, and, upon the facts here presented, the jury was fully justified in concluding that the local manager was acting for his principal when he accepted the withdrawal slips, paid respondent's bills, and prepared the numerous documents for respondent's signature. The case thus comes squarely within the rule cited and is supported by National Bank, etc., v. Whitney, 40 Cal.App. 276, 283, 180 P. 845; Lange v. Curtin, 11 Cal.App.2d 161, 169, 53 P.2d 185; National Bank, etc., v. Whitney, 181 Cal. 202, 205, 183 P. 789, 8 A.L.R. 298; Rutherford v. Rideout Bank, 11 Cal.2d 479, 484, 80 P.2d 978, 117 A.L.R. 383.

[7] We cannot follow appellant's theory that the respondent should be charged with notice that the acts of the agent were beyond the scope of his authority because they would put the bank in the loan brokerage business, contrary to law. We find no evidence that respondent was charged a fee for the suggestions that loans be made. To the contrary it appears that these suggestions were made as friendly gestures of good will and business accommodations, and that they were accepted as such by respondent.

[8] The argument that the appellant was unduly limited in its cross-examination of the respondent is not impressive. It is said that this examination was conducted to show that the respondent had a bad memory, and thus cast doubt upon his direct testimony. It has been said frequently that the conduct of the cross-examination of a witness is within the discretion of the trial court, and that the appellate court will not interfere except upon a showing that such discretion has been abused to the prejudice of the appellant. Grimbley v. Harrold, 125 Cal. 24, 32, 57 P. 558, 73 Am.St.Rep. 19; 27 Cal.Jur. "Witnesses," sec. 76.

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 702

JONES et al. v. HEINRICH.

Civ. 6449.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 13, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐867(2)

On defendant's appeal from an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, where the order was general in form and did not specify insufficiency of the evidence as one of the grounds thereof, the Court of Appeal would limit its consideration to the errors in law allegedly committed in granting the motion. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

2. Automobiles ⇐245(43, 72)

In an action for the death of a pedestrian crossing a three-lane highway from west to east and struck by a northbound automobile which had allegedly turned into the middle lane to pass behind the pedestrian who, after entering the easterly lane, stepped backward into the middle lane, where there was testimony that skid marks measured 87½ feet, and evidence as to the speed of the automobile was conflicting, the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were for the jury.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1066

In an action for the death of a pedestrian, an instruction as to the care required of the defendant motorist if suddenly confronted with unexpected and imminent danger was prejudicially erroneous in omitting the qualification that defendant must not have been placed in a position of such danger through any fault or negligence on his part.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)
Automobiles ⇐246(60)

In an action for the death of a pedestrian, a requested instruction that at the outset each party was entitled to the presumptions that every person takes ordinary care of his own concerns and obeys the law should not have extended the presumption to the defendant motorist, who testified as to his actions, though the giving of such an instruction is not necessarily prejudicial error.

5. Automobiles ⇐246(60)

Plaintiffs suing for the death of a pedestrian were entitled to an instruction giving the pedestrian the benefit of a presumption that she exercised ordinary care and obeyed the law, especially where the only eyewitnesses were the defendant motorist and his relatives, who testified as to the pedestrian's conduct; such presumption being in itself a species of evidence and the only available evidence tending to refute the claim of contributory negligence.

6. Automobiles ⇐246(58)

An instruction on the last clear chance doctrine was properly refused, where it did not appear that the deceased pedestrian was in a position of peril when first observed by the defendant motorist or that defendant knew or should have known that the pedestrian would not continue on her way across the highway; the pedestrian not being in a position of peril until she stepped backward into the path of defendant's automobile, who then applied his brakes with full force.

7. Appeal and error ⇐978(1)

In determining whether the giving or refusal of certain instructions has operated prejudicially, much is committed to the discretion of the trial court, whose conclusion will not be disturbed unless abuse of discretion appears.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Francis Jones and others against Fred C. Heinrich, for wrongful death of a pedestrian struck by defendant's automobile. From an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial after verdict and judgment for defendant, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Honey & Mayall, of Stockton, for appellant.

Neumiller & Ditz and Dudley W. Sheppard, all of Stockton, for respondents.

STEEL, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the defendant from an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial after judgment entered, upon the verdict of the jury, in favor of the defendant.

[1] The order granting a new trial was general in form and did not specify insufficiency of the evidence as one of the grounds upon which it was based (Code of Civil Procedure, section 657), therefore we will limit our consideration to the errors in law alleged to have been committed by the trial court in granting the motion.

[2] While appellant urged that the evidence shows contributory negligence upon the part of plaintiffs' decedent, as a matter of law, and is insufficient as a matter of law, to show any negligent act upon the part of defendant which would sustain a finding of negligence against him, we are satisfied from an examination of the record that the evidence presents questions of fact rather than law. The principal question presented upon this appeal involves the giving and the refusal to give certain instructions, it being the contention of the respondents that such alleged error was sufficient to warrant the court in granting a new trial. Preliminary to considering this question we will set forth so much of the evidence as is necessary to an understanding and discussion of the factual situation.

The action here arises out of an automobile-pedestrian accident occuring on McKinley Avenue, a few blocks south of the city limits of the city of Stockton, and in which plaintiffs' decedent Mrs. James Francis was struck and killed by an automobile driven by the defendant Fred C. Heinrich.

McKinley Avenue runs north and south, and is intersected near the scene of the accident by Eighth and Ninth Streets running easterly and westerly at right angles to McKinley Avenue, which streets do not continue directly across McKinley Avenue but have a defined jog or offset between their entrance to and their departure from McKinley Avenue. The decedent with her daughter and son-in-law had arrived from Reno, and were stopping in an auto court on the easterly side of McKinley Avenue, and on the evening of their arrival shortly after eight o'clock, the decedent left the auto camp, crossed McKinley Avenue to a fruit stand, made a purchase, and after returning to the cabin decided she wanted some oranges, so again crossed the street to the fruit stand, and it was on this second trip that the accident occurred. The highway is what may be referred to as a three-lane highway, approximately 78 feet in width with two white lines marking the center lane used for passing. The defendant Heinrich, accompanied by his wife, son, father-in-law, mother-in-law and nephew were traveling north on the highway; it appears that there were no vehicles approaching within a quarter of a mile or more, and that shortly prior to the accident the defendant had slowed down to 25 or 30 miles per hour according to his testimony, they having then entered the residential district, the speed limit of which, according to the posted signs, was 25 miles per hour. It is the testimony of the defendant that he was traveling at this speed when he first saw Mrs. Francis, that his lights were on low, and that he could see from 75 to 100 feet ahead, and that when he first saw the decedent she was walking east or from his left, and was stepping across the most easterly white line into his lane of traffic; that she was then about 45 or 50 feet from him; that he put on his brakes slowly, not with the intention of stopping, and turned to his left into the center lane to pass behind her, and when about ten feet from her put on his brakes hard as she stepped backwards into his new lane of travel. At this time he was traveling about 15 miles per hour. He struck the decedent with the right front of his car between the fender and the light, the car coming to rest with the right front wheel on her body. He then released his brakes and moved forward to the north about 8 feet and stopped his car. The defendant, his son and father-in-law, seated in the front seat of defendant's car, were the only eye witnesses to what occurred.

The highway patrol officers who arrived at the scene very shortly after the accident were called as witnesses by the plaintiffs, and testified that the defendant had stated he was traveling between 30 and 35 miles per hour at the time of the accident; that they had measured the skid marks of the defendant's car and found them to be 87 feet 6 inches in length, and that the point where the car came to a stop on the body of decedent was 34 feet beyond the end of the skid marks. The officers placed the point of impact in the southerly unmarked crosswalk of Ninth Street and the point where the body came to rest at a point in the intersection of Ninth Street and the highway or McKinley Avenue. There is evidence also that the Auto Court lights on one side of the highway and the fruit store lights on the other side spread out over the highway where the accident happened.

[3] The foregoing is a summary of the evidence relating to the happening of the accident. The defendant requested and the court gave the following instruction on the doctrine of imminent peril, which the respondents urged as error in support of their motion for a new trial: "If you find from the evidence in this case that the defendant Fred C. Heinrich was suddenly confronted with unexpected and imminent danger, either to himself or to another, then he was not expected nor required to use the same judgment and prudence that would have been required of him in the exercise of ordinary care in calmer and more deliberate moments. His duty was to exercise only that amount of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise if confronted with the same unexpected danger under the same circumstances."

It will be observed that the instruction omits the qualification that the defendant Heinrich must not have been placed in a position of unexpected and imminent danger through any fault or negligence on his part. Plaintiffs requested and the court gave an instruction with reference to the imminent peril doctrine as applied to the decedent which contained the limitation "without fault or negligence on her part." Thus it will be seen that the instruction complained of was doubly prejudicial to the plaintiffs as the defendant was given the benefit of the rule, if confronted with sudden danger, while the plaintiffs were not. Appellant contends that other given instructions on the question of negligence cure the error, if any, in the instruction complained of, citing authorities in support thereof. However, under the facts in the instant case, which disclose the main issue to be the question of negligence and contributory negligence, and to which the instruction was particularly applicable, the omission of the limitation was prejudicially erroneous to the plaintiffs' case. Gootar v. Levin, 109 Cal.App. 703, 293 P. 706; Howard v. Worthington, 50 Cal.App. 556, 195 P. 709; Stealey v. Chessum, 123 Cal.App. 446, 449, 11 P.2d 428.

[4, 5] Plaintiffs requested and the court refused to give the following instruction on the question of due care, and in support of their motion for a new trial urged such refusal as error: "At the outset of this trial, each party was entitled to the presumptions of law that every person takes ordinary care of his own concerns and that he obeys the law. These presumptions are a form of prima facie evidence and will support findings in accordance therewith, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. When there is other evidence that conflicts with such a presumption, it is the jury's duty to weigh that evidence against the presumption (and any evidence that may support the presumption), to determine which, if either, preponderates. Such deliberations, of course, shall be related to, and in accordance with, my instructions on the burden of proof."

While the offered instruction should not have extended the presumption to the defendant who was present in court and testified with reference to his actions, the giving of it under such circumstances is generally held not to constitute prejudicial error. Rogers v. Interstate Transit Co., 212 Cal. 36, 297 P. 884; Tuttle v. Crawford, 8 Cal.2d 126, 63 P.2d 1128.

Plaintiffs were entitled to an instruction giving the decedent the benefit of such presumption, especially so in a situation such as in the instant case where the plaintiffs could produce no eye witnesses as to what occurred, and there were none other than the defendant and his relatives who occupied the car with him and who testified to the facts with reference to the conduct of decedent in crossing the street. Under the circumstances, this presumption which is in itself a species of evidence and the only bit of evidence available to the plaintiffs which would tend to refute the claim of the defendant that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, should have been before the jury in their deliberations. We conclude it was error not to have given it. Westberg v. Willde, 14 Cal.2d 360, 94 P.2d 590; Ellison v. Lang Transportation Co., 12 Cal.2d 355, 84 P.2d 510; Stealey v. Chessum, supra.

[6] The plaintiffs and respondents contend that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction upon the doctrine of "last clear chance" which they requested. An examination of the evidence indicates that it does not include all of the elements necessary to an application of the doctrine, —for instance it does not appear that when the decedent was first observed by the defendant she was in a position of peril or that he knew, or should have known by the exercise of ordinary care, that she would not continue on her way across the highway. Until the moment she stepped back she was not in a position of peril, and it was then defendant applied his brakes full force. We think the court properly refused to instruct the jury on this doctrine.

[7] The rule has long been established that much is committed to the discretion of the trial court in determining whether the giving or refusal to give certain instructions has operated prejudicially and its conclusion will not be disturbed unless it appears that such discretion has been abused.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

TUTTLE, J., and THOMPSON, Acting P. J. concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 15

DAZEY v. DAZEY et al.

Civ. 13265.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Bastards ⇐3

At common law, the child of a married woman was conclusively presumed to be legitimate if begot while her husband, unless impotent, was "within the four seas;" that is, within the jurisdiction of the kingdom of England.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Within the Four Seas".

2. Bastards ⇐3

The presumption that a child born of a married woman is legitimate is not rebutted by circumstances which only create doubt, but it may be wholly removed by sufficient evidence showing that husband was incompetent, entirely absent, so as to have no intercourse with the mother, entirely absent at period during which child must, in the course of nature, have been begotten, or only present under such circumstances as afford clear and satisfactory proof that there was no sexual intercourse. Civ.Code, § 193; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1962, 1963.

3. Bastards ⇐5

The rule permitting presumption of legitimacy to be rebutted by proper and sufficient evidence, does not allow either parent to testify to the fact of nonaccess during cohabitation. Civ.Code, § 193; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1962, 1963.

4. Bastards ⇐3

A fully developed child which was born 225 days after date of marriage would be deemed a legitimate child of the marriage, in view of policy of law to declare a child legitimate when it can fairly be done. Civ. Code, § 193; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1962, 1963.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Benjamin J. Scheinman, Judge.

Suit by Walter Kendall Dazey, a minor, etc., against George K. Dazey and another, to determine which of two individuals was the father of the minor. From the judgment, the minor appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Joseph Scott and Leo B. Ward, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jerry Giesler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

The complaint was filed by a guardian ad litem, the grandfather of a five year old child, and upon the subsequent death of said guardian ad litem, his wife was appointed by the court to succeed him. Facts are alleged upon which the plaintiff prays that the court determine which of two individuals is the father of the child. These two individuals we will refer to as husband No. 1 and husband No. 2.

Husband No. 1 lived with the mother of the child for several years, until the marriage was terminated by a final decree of divorce September 14, 1933. October 11, 1934, the mother and husband No. 2 were married. May 24, 1935, the child was born —225 days or seven months and fifteen days after the date of the second marriage. October 3, 1935, the mother died.

The complaint alleges that when born the child was mature; that husband No. 2 has since remarried and that he and his present wife have instituted proceedings in the juvenile court with a view toward adopting the child. The complaint also contains allegations on information and belief; that husband No. 1 is the father of the child and that husband No. 2 is not; that the mother stated to the grandfather before she died that husband No. 2 was not the father of the child; and allegations of cohabitation between husband No. 1 and the mother within a period of 264 days before the child was born.

Our codes (Civil Code, section 193; Code of Civil Procedure, sections 1962, 1963) set forth an indisputable presumption that a child born in lawful wedlock of a wife cohabiting with her husband is legitimate. In construing these code sections our courts have held that there are certain exceptions manifestly proper to be made.

[1] The common law rule was that the child of a married woman was conclusively presumed to be legitimate if begotten while her husband was within four seas—that is, within the jurisdiction of the kingdom of England—unless the husband was impotent. Estate of Mills, 1902, 137 Cal. 298, at page 304, 70 P. 91, 92 Am.St.Rep. 175.

[2, 3] In the concluding paragraph of the case just cited our Supreme Court has stated the modern exceptions to the rule of conclusive presumption as follows: "The modern rule was stated by Lord Langsdale in Hargrave v. Hargrave, 9 Beav. 552, as follows: 'A child born of a married woman is in the first instance presumed to be legitimate. The presumption thus established by law is not to be rebutted by circumstances which only create doubt and suspicion, but it may be wholly removed by proper and sufficient evidence showing that the husband was (1) incompetent; (2) entirely absent, so as to have no intercourse or communication of any kind with the mother; (3) entirely absent at the period during which the child must, in the course of nature, have been begotten; or (4) only present under such circumstances as afford clear and satisfactory proof that there was no sexual intercourse.' And the same rule is supported by the authorities in this country. Shuman v. Shuman, 83 Wis. 250, 254, 53 N.W. 455; Thayer on Evidence, appendix A, p. 540; 2 Lewis's Greenleaf on Evidence, section 150. But the above rule does not allow either of the parents to testify to the fact of non-access during cohabitation. Nor is the rule inconsistent with the conclusive presumption that a child begotten and born while the husband and wife are living together as such, and the husband not impotent, is legitimate."

This rule is repeated and approved and applied in Estate of Walker, 1917, 176 Cal. 402, 168 P. 689, 691. In that case the court in its opinion quotes, in part, the language of Lord Langsdale in the Hargrave case, supra, as follows: "'It is, however, very difficult to conclude against the legitimacy in cases where there is no disability and where some society or communication is continued between husband and wife during the time in question, so as to have afforded opportunities for sexual intercourse; and in cases where such opportunities have occurred and in which any one of two or more men may have been the father, whatever probabilities may exist, no evidence can be admitted to show that any man other than the husband may have been or probably was the father of the wife's child.'"

Again, in Estate of Walker, 1919, 180 Cal. 478, 181 P. 792, the Hargrave case is referred to, and on page 491 of the reported decision in 180 Cal., page 797 of 181 P., the Supreme Court states the California rule applied to the facts in that case as follows: "* * * the true rule in America, as well as England, is, we believe, that if it is possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father (that is, if there was coition and no impotency), no inquiry will be permitted into the probabilities of the case one way or the other, but the presumption of legitimacy is conclusive."

In Estate of McNamara, 1919, 181 Cal. 82, 183 P. 552, 7 A.L.R. 313, the Supreme Court affirmed the rule as stated; but in applying it held that a period of gestation of 304 days was greater than is usual or normal, and that, therefore, the presumption which we are discussing was not applicable.

In Anderson v. Anderson, 1931, 214 Cal. 414, 5 P.2d 881, the court held that a mature child born at the end of a period of gestation of 3½ months (105 days) was not within the usual or normal period of gestation, and that the presumption did not apply.

To apply the facts alleged in the complaint in this case becomes much more difficult than to ascertain and to state the rule involved. In the mysteries of birth, and of life, and of death, Mother Nature follows no exact pattern. In dealing with man's length of life, the Bible speaks of three score years and ten as but an approximate average; our life expectancy tables are but averages. Living men and women and children are, within limitations, each different from the other. Indeed, no two of us are, or ever have been, exactly alike. When we deal with mankind, there is no fixed standard of height or weight or conduct, or time. And so, in dealing with the mystery of the beginning of mortal life, we find no fixed number of days from conception to birth.

In California it was held in the McNamara case that 304 days was too long to be within the usual and normal period of gestation, and it was held in the Anderson case that 3½ months (105 days) was too short.

What is meant by the words "period of gestation"? Here we have an apparent misnomer. The word "gestation" is defined by the dictionary as being the period of time in which a woman carries a fetus in her womb, from conception to birth. But, as used in all medical authorities this phrase does not mean the actual number of days from conception to birth. One cannot take the date of birth as a starting point and count backwards so many days and say that a child was conceived on any particular date, even within limitations of as much as sixty days. The average period of gestation which the medical term connotes is from 270 to 290 days from the last menstrual period of the mother. As a medico-legal term this phrase does not mean now, nor has it ever meant, that "length of gestation" is from 270 to 290 days from the date of conception to the date of birth of a child.

"The actual duration of pregnancy is not yet known, but ordinarily two hundred and eighty days, or ten lunar months, elapse between the commencement of the last menstrual flow and the onset of labor, though a considerable number of children are born shortly before or after the expiration of that period." Williams' Obstetrics, Sixth Edition, page 163.

In the case at bar, in considering the possible natural length of gestation of this child, we must take the 225 days alleged in the complaint as elapsing from the date of marriage to the date of birth, and we must add an additional 25 days at least, making a total possible and natural period of gestation of 250 days. This is so because we must assume that conception of the child took place on the night of the marriage (Estate of McNamara, supra, 181 Cal. at page 88, 183 P. 552, 7 A.L.R. 313); we must also assume that this child was conceived just before the end of the mother's recurrent monthly menstrual period of 28 days. "But," says someone, "you are computing from a time 25 days before marriage of this mother. How can that be?" The answer is that we are applying an empirical measure of time, and it is the measure which we are using which extends the possible and natural number of days, to a time before the date of the marriage. To illustrate: If this lady, believing she was pregnant, had gone to her doctor to inquire the probable date of birth of the child, the doctor would have used 280 days from her last menstrual period, regardless of the date of the marriage, and he would (if it were 25 days before the marriage) have computed from that earlier date. The whole matter is discussed in DeLee's Principles and Practice of Obstetrics, Fourth Edition, page 25:

"It is important to know the time pregnancy begins, but, unfortunately, we are in a position as yet only to guess at the exact date. The knowledge is wanted in order to determine the day of confinement and the actual length of human gestation for practical reasons, for the scientific study of the development of the ovum in the uterus, and for medico-legal processes in the question of legitimacy of a child or its paternity. All the points on which such a determination could rest are uncertain, as: (1) The date of the fruitful coitus (the woman's word must be accepted); (2) the date the ovum left the ovary, and whether it was fertilizable or not; (3) how long it takes the ovum to reach the tube and uterus; (4) how long it takes the spermatozoids to reach the ovum; (5) how long the fertilized ovum rests before it begins to germinate—all unknown factors. * * *

"It is customary to reckon the length of pregnancy as nine calendar months, or ten lunar months, two hundred and eighty days' duration, dating from the first day of the last menstruation. Clinical experience shows that most labors occur at this time. If Reichert's theory is true for the majority of cases, one will have to conclude that the normal length of pregnancy is two hundred and fifty-two days, and this is contradicted by the length of time occurring from the date of a single insemination to labor, i. e., two hundred and seventy-two days, which is the average of a large number of authentic cases. Further, if the theory that the ovum from the first menses missed is fertilized is the true theory, the majority of women ought to have a period of amenorrhea of three hundred and eight days instead of two hundred and eighty days, during which time they considered themselves pregnant. But we know that in the great majority of cases the period of amenorrhea is of only two hundred and eighty days' duration. Therefore unless we are willing to admit that pregnancy lasts only two hundred and fifty-two days, we must concede that the majority of conceptions occur at the time around the last menses present."

This author also plainly states that if we compute the period from fruitful coition to birth, it varies from 220 days to 330 days ("Principles and Practice of Obstetrics," Sixth Edition, chapter 5, page 120, by Joseph B. DeLee, A.M., M.D., Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology, Emeritus, University of Chicago, Consultant in Obstetrics, Chicago Lying-In Hospital and Dispensary; Consultant in Obstetrics, Chicago Maternity Center): "The most reliable datum from which to estimate the beginning is the date of fruitful coition, and, reckoning from this day, pregnancy has been found to vary from two hundred and twenty to three hundred and thirty days, the average being two hundred and seventy days. * * * From time immemorial women have reckoned two hundred and eighty days, ten lunar months, or nine calendar months, from the first day of the last period as the length of normal gestation, and for practical purposes this may be accepted, because in the majority of cases it holds true, but one must remember and admit the exceptions. No doubt some children require a longer time in the uterus for full development than others. Some seeds in favorable soil grow faster than others. The writer has delivered children that were carried eight months that were as matured as full-term infants, and also in one case, he delivered a child weighing three and one-half pounds which was fully three weeks over term. Heyn had a case of two hundred and twenty-nine days' pregnancy, with child of 2980 gm. and 50 cm. length." [About 6½ pounds.]

There is an allegation in the complaint that this child was a mature child when born. This, however, is entirely consistent with the usual and normal period of pregnancy which we have been discussing, subject to natural variants always present. In construing the application of section 194, Civil Code, in paternity cases, our Supreme Court held in the McNamara case, supra, that a reasonable construction of the word "month" meant a period of thirty days. Using thirty days as one month for the purpose of computing length of gestation in this case, we find that a period of 250 days is the equivalent of eight months and ten days. All medical writers agree that it is not at all unusual for a mature child to be born at eight months.

[4] Having discussed two methods of computing the period of gestation, we conclude that, using either method, the fact that 225 days elapsed from the date of marriage to the birth of the child does not require us to hold, as a matter of law, that in this case the time of gestation was so short as to be abnormal, or contrary to the usual operation of the laws of nature. Therefore, the trial court properly applied the indisputable presumption prescribed by our code to the facts alleged in the complaint, and the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained without leave to amend. This conclusion is made easier for us because it is the policy of the law to declare children legitimate when it can be fairly done. Unless the law plainly points to that end, a conclusion in favor of illegitimacy will not be declared. Estate of Wood, 137 Cal. 129, 69 P. 900.

There is no necessity of discussing the arguments in the brief relative to whether the guardian ad litem has the power to bring the action, or whether there was abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in not giving the plaintiff an opportunity to amend his complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

AZEVEDO et al. v. AZEVEDO et al.

Civ. 6622.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 13, 1942.

Rehearing Granted March 13, 1942.

1. Limitation of actions ⇐24(4)

Where defendants bought livestock, farming machinery, etc., under written conditional sales contract which was to be performed within three years and agreed to credit amount received from any sales of the property by defendants, on the conditional sales contract, an action for an accounting for failure to credit amounts received for sales made by defendants was an "action on the contract" and, when brought more than four years after defendants made the sales and more than four years after date when the conditional sales contract was required to be performed, was barred by the four-year statute of limitation. Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Action on the Contract".

2. Limitation of actions ⇐102(2)

Where defendants bought livestock, farming machinery, etc., under conditional sales contract and agreed to credit any amounts received from sales of any of the property by the defendants, the alleged existence of confidential and fiduciary relationship between the defendants and the conditional seller, who was defendant's father, did not establish existence of a "voluntary trust" as claimed by plaintiffs, who contended that limitation on action for accounting for their failure to credit amounts received for sales of the property made by them did not commence to run until time of repudiation of the alleged trust. Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1; Civ.Code, §§ 2216, 2219, 2221, 2222.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Voluntary Trust".

3. Trusts ⇐1, 21(2), 38

The essential elements of a "voluntary trust" are intention to create trust, subject matter of the trust, the purpose of the trust, the beneficiary of the trust, and the acceptance of the trust by the trustee, and the instrument containing trust must indicate with reasonable certainty each of the essential elements. Civ.Code §§ 2221, 2222.

4. Limitation of actions ⇐102(8)

In the case of an involuntary trust, limitation begins to run on the doing of the wrongful act by which the trust was created. Civ.Code, § 2223.

CURLER, Justice pro tem., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Aylette R. Cotton, Judge.

Action by Howard Azevedo, as administrator, etc., and another, against Antone Azevedo, Jr., and another, for an accounting for an amount due pursuant to provisions of a contract. From judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Cross & Brandt, of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. E. McCurdy, of San Mateo, and J. W. Coleberd, of South San Francisco, for respondents.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This action was commenced to compel an accounting arising out of a written contract. At the close of plaintiffs' case the court granted a motion for nonsuit upon the following grounds:

1. That plaintiffs had failed to prove sufficient facts to entitle them to a judgment;

2. That the action was barred by section 337, subdivision 1; section 338, subdivision 4; section 339, subdivision 1; and section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure;

3. That recovery was barred by laches.

The appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit.

The facts proven may be summarized as follows: Prior to February 8, 1926, the Azevedo family lived near Half Moon Bay. Antone V. Azevedo was the father. The mother was named Anna. The two sons are the defendants in this action. They were all engaged in extensive farming activities. Evidently with an intention to retire from active management, the father, on said date, executed with his sons an instrument which was a conditional sales contract. By the terms of the agreement Antone V. Azevedo agreed to sell to Antone Azevedo, Jr., and Frank Azevedo, and they agreed to buy, 90 head of cattle, more or less, 12 horses and colts, certain hogs and other livestock, dairying and farming machinery, implements, tools and utensils, dairying business, interests in the leaseholds belonging or appertaining to the ranches upon which the personal property was located, for the sum of $8400. Title to all of the property was retained by the vendor, Antone V. Azevedo, until such time as all of the property had been paid for in full by the vendees. Payment in full for the property was to be made within three years after the date of the agreement. In addition to the usual provisions contained in a conditional sales agreement, there were the clauses which read as follows:

"That all net profits made and received from the operation and conducting of the same are to be paid annually and on or before the first day of November of each year, to said party of the first part, and be applied on account of the purchase price of said personal property. * * *

"It is further understood and agreed that title to all of said personal property shall remain in the party of the first part until he has been paid the full purchase price thereof, and that should it be to the interest of the parties hereto, that some of said personal property, such as cattle and hogs, should be sold, that the same may be sold, but that the entire sale price thereof shall be paid to the party of the first part and apply on account of the balance due under this agreement."

In the complaint which was filed on March 31, 1938, it is alleged that after the making of the agreement, Antone V. Azevedo assigned to his wife Annie Azevedo, (also known as Anna Azevedo), all of his right, title and interest in and to said agreement and the personal property therein described, together with all moneys due, or to become due, by virtue of said agreement; that on the 4th day of July 1937, Annie Azevedo died; that the plaintiffs are the duly appointed, qualified and acting administrator and administratrix, respectively, of the estate of Annie Azevedo; that Antone V. Azevedo and Annie Azevedo were the father and mother, respectively of the defendants; that in pursuance of the agreement, the property mentioned therein was delivered to, and accepted by defendants on or about the date of the agreement; and that ever since, they have been, and now are, in possession of the same, except what they have sold; that defendants have sold various articles of property mentioned in the agreement, and have been paid therefor, amounting in all to approximately $8,400; that they have paid on account of this sum only $2,765; that a demand has been made on defendants for an accounting, which they have refused to make; and it is prayed that defendants be ordered to account to plaintiffs, and that defendants be ordered to pay over to plaintiffs the amount ascertained to be due by said accounting. Defendants admitted in their answer, the execution of the agreement; the death of Annie Azevedo, the appointment and qualification of plaintiffs as administrator and administratrix, respectively, of her estate; that Antone V. Azevedo and Annie Azevedo were the father and mother, respectively, of defendants; the delivery to defendants by Antone V. Azevedo of the property mentioned in the agreement, the demand for the accounting, and that they had refused to give the same. The remaining allegations of the complaint were denied. Defendants set up as defenses the statute of limitations, alleging that the action was barred by subdivision 1 of section 337, by subdivision 4 of section 338, by subdivision 1 of section 339, and by the provisions of section 343, all of the Code of Civil Procedure. In addition, they set up the defense of laches.

Evidence produced by plaintiffs showed that respondents had, in 1926, sold a number of head of livestock, and some equipment, for which no credit had been given the vendor upon the purchase price, and no account had ever been rendered. Except for the bar of the statute of limitations, plaintiffs established a prima facie case.

[1] As we view the action, it is brought to recover upon the contract. Respondents agreed therein to credit the amount received from such sales upon the purchase price, and failed to do so. Judgment is prayed for the amount which may be found due. Section 337, subdivision 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which fixed a four year limitation upon actions founded upon instruments in writing, is therefore applicable and bars recovery. This would be true whether or not the Statute began to run when such sales were made, or at the end of the three years allowed in the contract for performance. More than four years elapsed before the action was commenced, whichever starting-point is adopted.

It is earnestly contended by appellants that the action is brought to enforce a voluntary trust, and that the action is not barred because it did not commence to run until the time of the repudiation. They rely upon the following sections of the Civil Code:

"2216. A voluntary trust is an obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another."

"2219. Everyone who voluntarily assumes a relation of personal confidence with another is deemed a trustee, within the meaning of this chapter, not only as to the person who reposes such confidence, but also as to all persons of whose affairs he thus acquires information which was given to such person in the like confidence, or over whose affairs he, by such confidence, obtains any control."

[2] They urge, in attempting to establish a trust, that the relations between father and sons were proven to have been both confidential and fiduciary. Assuming that the existence of such relations may be inferred from the evidence, such proof does not make out a voluntary trust. Parties under such circumstances may contract in the same manner, and under the same legal principles, as others who have no relationship of the character mentioned, and the statute of limitations relating to written instruments, is applicable. The failure to apply the proceeds from the sale upon the purchase price was, nevertheless, nothing more than a breach of contract. If the question of fraud, deceit, or undue influence were involved, the contention would have some merit. No such issues are involved. Furthermore, section 2221 of the Civil Code provides: "Subject to the provisions of section eight hundred and fifty-two, a voluntary trust is created, as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty: 1. An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust, and, 2. The subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust."

[3] In Dingwell v. Seymour, 91 Cal. App. 483, at page 508, 267 P. 327, at page 337, it is said: "The five essential elements of every valid, voluntary trust are: (1) The intention to create the trust; (2) the subject-matter of the trust; (3) the purpose of the trust; (4) the beneficiary of the trust; and (5) the acceptance of the trust by the trustee. The deed or instrument containing the trust must indicate with reasonable certainty each and every one of these essential elements. Sections 2221 and 2222, Civ.Code."

We think that the proofs fail to establish a voluntary trust. If any trust relation appears at all in the proof, it would be an involuntary one. As stated in section 2223 of the Civil Code: "One who wrongfully detains a thing is an involuntary trustee thereof, for the benefit of the owner."

[4] In that event, the action would be barred because "the period of limitation begins to run upon the doing of the wrongful act by which the trust was created." 25 Cal.Jur. 274, sec. 135. The wrong, if any, consisted in failing to account for sales of property described in the contract.

In view of what we have said, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the question of laches.

The court did not err in granting the motion for nonsuit, and accordingly, the judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., concurred.

CURLER, Justice pro tem. (dissenting). I dissent. The prevailing opinion is based on the theory that this action is brought to recover on a contract—that respondents had agreed to pay the amount received from sales to the vendor, and had failed to do so. In other words, when respondents sold something, possession of which had been turned over to them under the conditional sales contract, and received the money therefor, the vendor accepted their credit in place of the article sold. With this I am unable to agree. It is my view that in making sales, respondents were acting as agents of the vendor. They had no title, the same being reserved in the vendor. Therefore, they could only have been acting as agents in conveying title of the vendor to the purchasers—and this they were authorized to do by the terms of the contract. Had it been the intention of the parties, that when respondents made a sale, the amount received from same was simply a debt due from them to the vendor, there would have been no meaning to the provision in the contract that title was retained in the vendor. Title retention was the vendor's security, and if he had been willing to accept the credit of the respondents without security, he would not have bothered with a conditional sales agreement, but would have sold them the articles unconditionally and accepted their credit. If the intention of the agreement was that respondents, in making sales, were the agents of the vendor and were to hold the money received in trust, to be delivered to him, then respondents were trustees of a voluntary trust, and the statute of limitations would not commence to run until a repudiation of the trust was brought to the notice of the equitable owner. 25 Cal.Jur. 271, 272, and cases cited therein. There was no repudiation here until a demand for an accounting was refused by respondents just shortly before the action was commenced.

Sections 2216, 2219, and 2221 of the Civil Code, quoted in the prevailing opinion, set out the requirements of a voluntary trust. In brief, section 2219, supra, provides that "Everyone who voluntarily assumes a relation of personal confidence with another is deemed a trustee * * ". Section 2216, supra, provides that: "A voluntary trust is an obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another"; and section 2221, supra, provides that: " * * a voluntary trust is created, as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty: 1. An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust, and, 2. The subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust." Applying these sections to the present case, it appears that by section 2219 of the Civil Code, when respondents undertook to act as agent in selling the personal property, said sales being authorized by the agreement, they became trustees of the money which they were authorized to receive, but which the agreement provided belonged to Antone V. Azevedo. By the provisions of section 2216 of the Civil Code, this was a voluntary trust because it arose out of a personal confidence reposed in respondents, both by reason of their being the sons of Antone V. Azevedo, and also by reason of the relation of principal and agent. The agreement gave respondents the right to make sales but imposed upon them the duty of turning the money over to Antone V. Azevedo, and by signing this agreement and making the sales therein authorized, respondents voluntarily accepted the relation of principal and agent. Under the provisions of section 2221 of the Civil Code, Antone V. Azevedo became trustor of the trust by placing his personal property in the possession of the respondents, with title reserved in himself, but permitting sales to be made, and indicating in the agreement that any moneys collected from sales should be held for his account. The subject of the trust was the money to be received from sales; the purpose of the trust was to permit respondents to sell personal property which, through obsolescence or old age, would have been to their detriment to retain; and the beneficiary of the trust was Antone V. Azevedo, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns. (The contract expressly states that it shall bind and inure the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of the respective parties.)

The prevailing opinion cites the case of Dingwell v. Seymour, 91 Cal.App. 483, at page 508, 267 P. 327, at page 337, as laying down the test of a voluntary trust. That case states: "The five essential elements of every valid, voluntary trust are: (1) The intention to create the trust; (2) the subject matter of the trust; (3) the purpose of the trust; (4) the beneficiary of the trust; and (5) the acceptance of the trust by the trustee. The deed or instrument containing the trust must indicate with reasonable certainty each and every one of these essential elements. Sections 2221 and 2222, Civ. Code."

The use of the words "deed or instrument" in the case might indicate that it was the court's opinion that a voluntary trust could only be created by a written instrument. The court was there dealing with a trust created by a written instrument, and unquestionably had that in mind, but the court, unfortunately, did not limit the language to voluntary trusts created by an instrument in writing and those dealing with realty, which must be created by an instrument in writing. Voluntary or express trusts concerning anything except realty may be created by an oral agreement. 25 Cal.Jur. 154, and cases therein cited. In the case of Dingwell v. Seymour, supra, the court, in stating that all five elements must appear in the deed or instrument, cites sections 2221 and 2222 of the Civil Code, as its only authority for that statement. However, each of those sections expressly provides that a voluntary trust is created by any words or acts indicating the requisite elements of the trust. Hence, the statute anticipates and provides that at least some of the elements of the trust may be found in the acts of the parties.

In conclusion, it is my opinion that the true rule in cases of the type now before the court is set forth in the case of Allsopp v. Joshua Hendy Machine Works, 5 Cal. App. 228, at page 234, 90 P. 39 at page 42, where the court quotes with approval the following: "As long as the relation of principal and agent continues there is a privity between the parties, and there is nothing to set the statute in operation as to claims and accounts between them. The position of the agent is that of a trustee, and claims against him are governed by a rule similar to that controlling trustees. The assertion by the agent of an adverse right, or his failure to discharge a duty to his principal arising out of his agency, does not set the statute in motion until called to the attention of the principal, or until he knows, or with reasonable diligence might have known, thereof."

BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAV. ASS'N v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Civ. 13207.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 18, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 10, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 16, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐870(2)

Trial court's action in granting plaintiffs leave to amend their first two causes of action after appellate court had upheld sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend as to first two causes of action but had reversed judgment of dismissal upon ground that other counts of complaint stated a cause of action, could be reviewed on appeal from a final judgment ending action although of itself the order was not appealable under statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

2. Certiorari ⇐5(1)

Generally, even if an order is not appealable, certiorari will not lie if the effect of the order can be reviewed and nullified by an appeal from the final judgment. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

3. Certiorari ⇐4, 5(1), 28(1)

The conditions on which a certiorari can be granted are separate and concurrent and there must be an excess of jurisdiction by an inferior tribunal, no appeal and no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in order to afford a remedy by certiorari by statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 1068.

4. Certiorari ⇐5(1)

Where there is a direct appeal from order of an inferior court under statute, certiorari will not lie. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 963, 1068.

5. Certiorari ⇐5(1)

In determining whether certiorari should be granted to review an order of an inferior tribunal from which there is no direct appeal, the question to be determined is whether a review on appeal from the final judgment would nullify effect of the order. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 963, 1068.

6. Pleading ⇐204(3)

Where complaint was in four counts, defendant was entitled to demur generally, in separate paragraphs, not only to the entire complaint but to each separate count thereof and was entitled to a ruling on the demurrer according to its merits. Code Civ. Proc. § 431.

7. Pleading ⇐216(1), 220

Where defendant demurred generally to entire complaint and to each of four counts thereof, each separate count of the complaint was required to be considered separately and the number of counts contained in complaint did not affect the ruling on demurrer to any single count. Code Civ. Proc. § 431.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1201(4)

Where defendant demurred generally to entire complaint and to each of four counts thereof, and trial court sustained demurrer, and reviewing court upheld sustaining of demurrer as to two counts but required reversal of judgment of dismissal on ground that remaining counts stated cause of action, decision on appeal had effect of finally disposing of the first two counts and on return of the case to the trial court, it was without authority to proceed further as to the first two counts and was without jurisdiction to grant further amendment thereto.

9. Appeal and error ⇐1201(4)

Where reviewing court upheld sustaining of demurrer without leave to amend as to first two counts of complaint but reversed judgment of dismissal on ground that other counts of complaint stated cause of action, reviewing court was without power to direct trial court to allow plaintiff to amend the counts of the complaint to which demurrer was properly sustained, since decision reversing judgment of dismissal was necessarily limited to sufficient counts of complaint and direction to allow plaintiff to amend complaint could not be interpreted as applying to any but counts held to be sufficient.

10. Certiorari ⇐5(2)

Where reviewing court upheld sustaining of a demurrer, without leave to amend as to first two counts of complaint but reversed judgment of dismissal on ground that other counts of complaint stated cause of action, certiorari would lie to review order of trial court granting permission to amend first two counts of complaint, since it would be unconscionable to compel defendant to submit to trial and await final outcome before obtaining redress for unwarranted reopening of litigation in face of valid judgment disposing of it.

On rehearing.

Previous decision adhered to.

Prior opinion, 117 P.2d 733.

Edmund Nelson, G. L. Berrey, Freston & Files, and James A. McLaughlin, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Mitchell, Silberberg, Roth & Knupp and Livingston & Livingston, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Upon rehearing and a reconsideration of the questions involved, no good reason has been found to alter the decision of this court previously rendered herein. However, in order to point out more clearly the reasons for the decision it is advisable to revise to some extent the former opinion [117 P.2d 733, 734].

"By this proceeding petitioner seeks a review of an order of the superior court permitting an amendment as to the first two causes of action set forth in a first amended complaint in an action entitled Herbert Hellman Aronson, et al, v. Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association, et al, L. A. Superior Court No, 409371, brought against petitioner for an alleged conversion of certain shares of bank stock. The complaint in question consisted of four counts, each based upon a separate alleged conversion of stock, and the order granting plaintiffs leave to amend their first two counts was made upon motion of plaintiffs therefor after a general demurrer to the entire complaint had been sustained without leave to amend further, the action had been dismissed, an appeal had been taken from the judgment of dismissal, and the appellate court had upheld the sustaining of the demurrer without leave to amend as to the first two counts of the complaint but had reversed the judgment of dismissal upon the ground that the third and fourth counts of the complaint stated a cause of action. See Aronson v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 42 Cal.App.2d 710, 109 P.2d 1001, 1007." In the opinion there handed down the appellate court pointed out: "The instant action is the second such between the same parties and for the same cause. A general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint in the first action was sustained without leave to amend, the cause was dismissed and the judgment of dismissal was affirmed by the Supreme Court of this state on October 4, 1937, the opinion being reported in Aronson v. Bank of America, etc., Assn., 9 Cal.2d 640, 72 P.2d 548. The facts which form the basis of appellants' complaint are briefly summarized in that opinion. * * * Before the affirmance of the judgment in the former action and on November 28, 1936, the present action was commenced by appellants and the complaint therein was thereafter amended on June 18, 1937, and again on May 21, 1938, after which respondent bank put in an appearance and interposed its demurrer." [42 Cal.App.2d 710, 109 P.2d 1003]

"In its opinion the appellate court stated: 'It should be mentioned in passing that the complaint is far from a model of pleading and is in no sense concise. It is clear, however, that no attempt has been made to set out more than one cause of action in each count.

" 'In view of the fact that the allegations of the first and second counts of the complaint reveal a situation wherein no cause of action would lie against respondent bank or its predecessor the trial court did not err in refusing to grant leave to plaintiffs to amend those counts, but for the reasons above given the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the third and fourth counts and in dismissing the action.

" 'The judgment of dismissal is therefore reversed with directions to the trial court to grant appellants leave to file an amended complaint if they are so advised.'

"Respondent contends that the effect of the judgment of reversal was to vacate the order sustaining the demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint and to place the action in exactly the same situation it occupied before there was any ruling on the demurrer. Respondent also contends that certiorari will not lie in the present instance because the question here presented may be reviewed upon an appeal from a final judgment in the action now pending." It is also argued that the error, if any, committed by the trial court in permitting the amendment to the first and second causes of action in the complaint was merely one committed within the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court and did not constitute an act in excess of jurisdiction.

[1, 2] "It is undoubtedly true that the propriety of the trial court's action in granting plaintiffs leave to amend their first two causes of action, after reversal of the judgment of dismissal, could be reviewed on an appeal from a final judgment in the action; although of itself the order in question is not an appealable order under section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It has been generally held that even if the order in question is not appealable, certiorari will not lie if the effect of the order can be reviewed and nullified by an appeal from the final judgment. Bryant v. Superior Court, 16 Cal. App.2d 556, 562, 61 P.2d 483; Hughson v. Superior Court, 120 Cal.App. 658, 8 P.2d 227. But in Bottoms v. Superior Court, 82 Cal.App. 764, 777, 256 P. 422, the trial court had vacated an order granting a continuance. The continuance had been granted on the ground that one of counsel was a member of the legislature attending a session thereof. Certiorari was sought to review the order vacating the order of continuance. It was held that while such an order would be reviewable on appeal from a final judgment in the action, the circumstances obviously required a more speedy and adequate remedy. It should be noted that the Bottoms case presented a situation where the effect of the order in question could not be nullified on an appeal from the final judgment. The continuance having been vacated and the action having been tried, the party aggrieved could be afforded no real remedy on an appeal from the final judgment. It could hardly be said that justice would be done by reversing the final judgment and remanding the cause to be tried all over again because the trial court had refused a continuance.

"Bryant v. Superior Court, supra, was concerned with the review of an order vacating orders allowing claims against an estate. At page 562 of 16 Cal.App.2d at page 486 of 61 P.2d, in that case the court stated: 'The order under review is not an appealable order. (Cases cited.) It has been held that even so, if the effect of an order can be reviewed and nullified by an appeal from the judgment, certiorari will not lie. (Citing Hughson v. Superior Court, supra.) Relying on this principle of law, respondents claim that petitioners have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, as they can again present their claim to one of the judges of the superior court for allowance; if disallowed in whole or in part, a suit to enforce the claim may be prosecuted, and, if an adverse judgment is had, an appeal lies therefrom. Prior to the order vacating these claims, they stood as acknowledged debts against the estate. The approval of a claim against an estate is prima facie evidence of its validity, and the burden of showing invalidity is cast upon those who contest it. (Citing authority.) It is apparent, therefore, that the effect of the order vacating the orders allowing the claims cannot be reviewed or nullified by the method suggested by respondents.'

"In Stanton v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 478, at p. 490, 261 P. 1001, at page 1005, a case having to do with the review of a void order setting aside a judgment, it is said: 'To require review to be by appeal of every unauthorized order or judgment attacking the proceedings by which the regular judgment was given and made would seriously embarrass, if not destroy, the efficiency of our whole legal system.'

[3-5] "Section 1068 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a writ of review may be granted when jurisdiction has been exceeded 'and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy'. The conditions on which such a writ may be granted have been held to be separate and concurrent. See Monterey Club v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.App.2d 351, 112 P.2d 321.

Accordingly, in order to afford a remedy by certiorari under the code, two requisite elements must be present, aside from that of excess of jurisdiction, namely: (a) No appeal; (b) No other plain, speedy and adequate remedy. Where there is a direct appeal from the order in question under section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, certiorari will not lie in any event. Stoddard v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. 303, 41 P. 278; Monterey Club v. Superior Court, supra.

Likewise, as already seen from the authorities heretofore cited, certiorari will not lie if the effect of the order can be reviewed and nullified on an appeal from the judgment, even though the order itself is not appealable. * * *

"Bottoms v. Superior Court and Bryant v. Superior Court furnish examples of instances in which a subsequent review on appeal would not nullify the effect of the order in question."

[6, 7] In the instant situation, respondent concedes that if counts I and II of the complaint constituted the only counts then the decision on appeal would have ended the matter and plaintiffs would not then have been privileged to return to the trial court and apply for permission to make further amendment. But, according to respondent, because the complaint contained two additional counts which were held good on appeal, requiring a reversal of the judgment of dismissal, the plaintiffs were given an opportunity to make another effort to propose a good amendment to the insufficient counts. Respondent claims that the demurrer was to the complaint as a whole and not to each separate count thereof, but the record reveals this to be untrue. Petitioner, in separate paragraphs, demurred generally not only to the entire complaint but to each separate count thereof as well. The demurrer was in proper form to reach not only the complaint as a whole but each separate count thereof. Petitioner was entitled to so demur (Sec. 431, Code of Civil Procedure) and was entitled to a ruling on the demurrer according to its merits. See Wigman v. Superior Court, 74 Cal.App. 132, 239 P. 427. To this end, each separate count of the complaint must be considered separately; and the number of counts contained in a complaint cannot affect the ruling upon a demurrer to any single count. It follows, therefore, that the effect of sustaining a demurrer to any separate count of a complaint is the same, whether the complaint contains one count or a hundred. If the decision on appeal, to the effect that petitioner's demurrer to the first two counts of the complaint was properly sustained without leave to amend, would have finally disposed of those counts had they been the only counts in the complaint, such a ruling would likewise constitute a final disposition of the matter even where the complaint contained other counts held to be good. Respondent's argument to the contrary is without foundation.

[8] Since the decision on appeal from the judgment of dismissal had the effect of finally disposing of the first two counts of the complaint, upon the return of the case to the trial court that court was without authority to proceed further as to the first two counts and was thus without jurisdiction to grant a further amendment thereto. See Anderson v. Great Republic Life Insurance Co., 41 Cal.App.2d 181, 106 P. 2d 75; and see Fortenbury v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 405, 106 P.2d 411, as to the meaning of the term "jurisdiction" in modern jurisprudence.

[9] Moreover, the appellate court was without power to direct the trial court to allow plaintiffs to amend the counts of their complaint to which petitioner's demurrer was held properly sustained. The appellate court, having determined that the demurrer to the first two counts was properly sustained without leave to amend, had no other course than to affirm the judgment as to those two counts. It could not, under the circumstances, reverse the judgment as to those counts in order to allow plaintiffs to amend. Mulford v. Cohn, 18 Cal. 42, 46; People v. Jackson, 24 Cal. 630; Davie v. Board of Regents, 66 Cal.App. 693, 702, 227 P. 243; Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 284; Sutter v. City and County of San Francisco, 36 Cal. 112, 117. The decision on appeal reversing the judgment of dismissal was therefore necessarily limited to the sufficient counts of the complaint and the direction to allow plaintiffs to amend their complaint could not be interpreted as applying to any but the counts of the complaint held to be sufficient.

[10] The order of the trial court allowing the amendment of the first two counts of the complaint, after the ruling sustaining demurrers thereto without leave to amend had been upheld on appeal is no different in principle than an order allowing an amendment of a complaint and the reopening of a case after a final judgment upon the merits had been so upheld. In such a situation it would manifestly destroy the efficiency of the legal system to compel a defendant to submit to a second trial and a second appeal before the unwarranted action of the court could be reviewed. Throughout its argument respondent ignores the fact that here an appeal had already been had and the question finally determined. It would be unconscionable to say in such case that the unsuccessful party had the right to return to the trial court notwithstanding, start in all over again, and compel the prevailing party to submit to a trial and await the final outcome thereof before obtaining redress for the unwarranted reopening of litigation in the face of a valid judgment disposing of the same. If such action were permitted every lawsuit could be perpetual. Under the circumstances here presented substantial justice requires a review of the matter upon certiorari.

It follows from the foregoing that the order of the trial court granting permission to amend the first two counts of the complaint in the pending action, after the sustaining of a demurrer thereto had been upheld on appeal, was void. Accordingly, the order of the trial court purporting to grant plaintiffs leave to amend the first two counts of their complaint should be and the same is therefore annulled.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 707

IRVINE et al. v. SACRAMENTO & SAN JOAQUIN DRAINAGE DIST. et al.

Civ. 6437.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 14, 1942.

Action ⇐6

An action for a declaratory judgment regarding rights of drainage district bondholders could not be maintained against governmental agencies such as the drainage district and the State Reclamation Board. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; George L. Jones, Judge.

Action by James Irvine and others against the Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage District and others for declaratory relief regarding rights of bondholders. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

W. Coburn Cook, of Turlock, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Ralph H. Cowing, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

PARKER, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered after an order sustaining defendants' demurrer to a second amended complaint. The action was commenced against a large number of defendants other than those named in the title. The only questions presented on this appeal, however, are between plaintiffs, appellants, and the defendants Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District and the State Reclamation Board.

The complaint in much detail sets forth the organization of Reclamation District No. 784, its subsequent history and the unhappy ending of the dreams surrounding the enterprise.

It summarizes that unforgettable era sometimes referred to as the Depression and by way of sidelight appear the many plans outlined from the beginning of the district, namely, the proposed improvements, the issuance of bonds and the levying of assessments; then the efforts of the landowners to repay the bonds, the delinquencies occurring and finally the sales.

The complaint stresses the abandoned hopes of that never-to-be-forgotten man, the bondholder, whose tragic plight is accentuated by his loneliness, and who, after all relief legislation was enacted and moratoria expired, is left pondering ways and means to recoup his loss; and he is the complainant here.

The complaint presents fully the proceedings had in this particular district resulting in delinquent sales, the acquisition by the various officers of large holdings as trustees, etc., and finally recites that in the process of reclamation legislation the defendants named, in some capacity, whether as a sovereign agency or otherwise, took over certain parcels of land held in trust as aforesaid. It is claimed, and it seems quite apparent, that a controversy arises between the parties named which is of a nature requiring judicial determination declaring the rights and liabilities of all parties concerned. The action is maintained under section 1060 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Defendants interposed demurrers which were, by the court, sustained, and leave to amend was denied.

The one point involved on this appeal is whether an action for declaratory relief may or may not be brought against the state or any of its political agencies or subdivisions.

It is conceded that the action is one seeking declaratory relief and it is further conceded by all sides that the defendants and respondents here are governmental agencies of the State of California.

At the time the within case was submitted there seemed to be little direct authority on the question in California. There were persuasive authorities from other jurisdictions supporting the position of the respondents, and the general theory, as expounded by the law writers, seemed in accord therewith. However, since the submission, the point has been decided expressly in the case of Bayshore Sanitary District v. County of San Mateo, 48 Cal. App.2d 337, 119 P.2d 752. The ruling distinctly and affirmatively determines that the action provided for in section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an action for declaratory relief, does not lie against the state or any of its political subdivisions or agencies.

The judgment is affirmed.

TUTTLE, J., and THOMPSON, Acting P. J., concurred.

PARKHURST v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 13335.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 11, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 10, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 9, 1942.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐939

Where the circumstances attending the act of commission or omission are such as to evince a reckless disregard for the safety of others and a willingness to inflict injury complained of, such actions amount to serious and "willful misconduct" within Workmen's Compensation Act authorizing additional compensation, since "serious misconduct" means conduct which the employer either knew or ought to have known to be conduct likely to jeopardize the safety of his employees.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Serious Misconduct" and "Willful Misconduct".

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐1674

In employee's proceeding for additional compensation because of serious and willful misconduct of employer in knowingly failing to furnish fresh and pure drinking water to employees, evidence sustained industrial accident commission's finding that employees were exposed to entamoebic histolytica as a result of and in course of employment, that by reason thereof employee contracted amoebic dysentery, and that the facilities furnished the employees for drinking water were in violation of state health statutes. St.1917, p. 1517; St.1915, p. 815.

3. Workmen's compensation ⇐1674

In employee's proceeding for additional compensation because of serious and willful misconduct of employer in knowingly failing to furnish fresh and pure drinking water to employees, evidence sustained industrial accident commission's finding that employee complained to superintendent and managing superintendent of employer concerning drinking water. St.1917, p. 1517; St.1915, p. 815.

4. Workmen's compensation ⇐1674

In employee's proceeding for additional compensation because of serious and willful misconduct of employer in knowingly failing to furnish fresh and pure drinking water to employees, evidence was insufficient to sustain finding that employer did not have knowledge that drinking water, or facilities for distributing drinking water, was capable of producing amoebic dysentery or was otherwise dangerous to the health of its employees. St.1917, p. 1517; St.1915, p. 815.

5. Workmen's compensation ⇐1939

The action of the industrial accident commission based on conflicting evidence or on slight evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

6. Workmen's compensation ⇐1177

The industrial accident commission is without jurisdiction to act where there is a total absence of evidence to support its finding.

7. Workmen's compensation ⇐941

Where employer continued to furnish impure water, unmistakably deleterious to health of its employees, after complaint had been made to employer and it had knowledge thereof, the industrial accident commission had duty to determine as a matter of law that the action of the employer constituted "serious and willful misconduct" and to award additional compensation to employee sustaining injury because thereof. St.1917, p. 1517; St.1915, p. 815.

8. Workmen's compensation ⇐941

Where subcontractor furnished impure water unmistakably deleterious to health of its employees, the subcontractor could not escape liability under Workmen's Compensation Act for additional compensation to injured employee, on theory that the general contractor undertook to furnish drinking water and facilities for its distribution. St. 1917, p. 1517; St.1915, p. 815.

9. Workmen's compensation ⇐939

An employer cannot absolve himself of his responsibility to properly protect his employees by relying upon the agreement of someone else, general contractor or otherwise, to perform that duty for the employer.

10. Workmen's compensation ⇐941

Where subcontractor's employee sustained injury because subcontractor furnished impure drinking water unmistakably deleterious to health of employee, the employee's only recourse under the Workmen's Compensation Act was against the subcontractor for neglect in affording proper protection, since there was no duty under the act imposed upon the general contractor to safeguard the subcontractor's employee. St. 1917, p. 1517; St.1915, p. 815.

11. Workmen's compensation ⇐941

An employer, a subcontractor, could not accept facilities of general contractor who undertook to furnish drinking water and facilities for its distribution and escape liability when later confronted with ensuing consequences because the water furnished was impure and unmistakably deleterious to the health of employee. St.1917, p. 1517; St. 1915, p. 815.

12. Workmen's compensation ⇐1674

In employee's proceeding for additional compensation for injury caused by serious and willful misconduct of employer, a subcontractor, in failing to furnish fresh and pure drinking water, evidence did not sustain determination of industrial accident commission that the subcontractor's acceptance and use of drinking water and facilities for its distribution which were installed by the general contractor did not constitute "serious and willful misconduct". St.1917, p. 1517; St.1915, p. 815.

13. Workmen's compensation ⇐11

The Workmen's Compensation Act is founded on sound public policy and with the objective of protecting workmen against economic insecurity.

Proceeding by William R. Parkhurst, employee, to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission denying additional compensation against J. Phillip Murphy Corporation, employer.

Award annulled.

William J. Currer, Jr., of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and J. Gould, both of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

WHITE, Justice.

Petitioner, William R. Parkhurst, seeks to have reviewed a decision of the Industrial Accident Commission wherein he was denied additional compensation by reason of his claim that his disability resulted from serious and willful misconduct on the part of his employer. The facts are not in serious dispute, and as gathered from the record are that the P. J. Walker Company contracted for the construction of certain buildings and equipment at Camarillo, California. Gilmore Fabricators, Inc., by subcontract agreed to furnish and install all structural steel on the job for P. J. Walker Company. By an additional subcontract with Gilmore Fabricators, Inc., respondent J. Phillip Murphy Corporation undertook to install all structural iron work on the job, using therein materials fabricated by the Gilmore Fabricators, Inc.

Early in the year 1938 Mr. J. Phillip Murphy, owner of a majority of the stock of the corporation bearing his name and president and general manager thereof, went to the scene of the work. While there, Mr. Murphy noticed that the water for drinking purposes was furnished to the men on the job by means of a common dipper and bucket, and the men drank the water from the dipper by dipping it in the bucket and not by pouring. Mr. Murphy made no inquiry as to this, nor as to the ultimate source of the supply of drinking water. It does appear, however, that on one of his visits to the job he himself drank some of the water, and he at all times denied any knowledge that the same was in any manner inimical to health.

Work was started on the job in the year 1938. The water used by the workmen was piped to the job by the general contractor, P. J. Walker Company, by attaching the water line to the job to a pipe which connected the irrigation pump and a large uncovered irrigation reservoir. The water system was so connected that when a certain valve near the irrigation reservoir was opened water from the reservoir ran back through the irrigation pipe to the connecting pipe and thence to the outlets on the job. The irrigation system was so interconnected that whenever irrigation was in progress a certain amount of water from the open reservoir was siphoned back to the water supply on the job. The reservoir in question was simply an open reservoir for raising the water on the ranch surrounding the job to the highest point to facilitate irrigation. It was used by boys in the neighborhood and others as a swimming pool.

On or about June 12, 1938, petitioner was employed by respondent J. Phillip Murphy Corporation to work on the job at Camarillo as a journeyman ironworker. About June 17th, the caretaker of the ranch surrounding the job opened the valve of the reservoir and irrigated the ranch; and thereafter the caretaker proceeded to irrigate the ranch practically every Saturday and Sunday throughout the summer months. In doing this, water was siphoned from the reservoir into the water supply on the job, so that such water drawn and furnished the men on the job was polluted and contaminated by the water from the reservoir. On the job water boys drew water from taps located near the toilets on the job into buckets which were then carried to the men, who drank from a dipper used in common by all of them, by dipping the water from the buckets. The taps referred to were located just ouside the building housing the toilets, and were used by men coming from the toilets for the purpose of washing their hands. The evidence indicates that the toilets were not kept in a particularly sanitary condition, and several times overflowed, thereby creating a more or less unsanitary condition. The men on the job washed at the faucets from which water was drawn for drinking purposes, and in so doing placed their hands upon the faucets. Virgil Smith, superintendent and managing representative of respondent J. Phillip Murphy Corporation, was in charge of all the men and the work of such corporation on the job. From the inception of the work at Camarillo the men employed by respondent J. Phillip Murphy Corporation and others complained to said Virgil Smith, as their superintendent and the managing representative of respondent, concerning the water, and told him that it gave them diarrhea; that it had a foul odor and taste and was not fit to drink. No other water for drinking purposes was available at any place at or near the job which could be used by the respondent corporation's employees. However, nothing was done about the matter, and the men continued, by reason of necessity, to drink the water as furnished.

Approximately two weeks after petitioner commenced work on the Camarillo job, he began to notice a diarrheic condition, which was at first mild, and which he dismissed in his own mind as something which would probably disappear. Other men on the job had the same difficulty to a greater or lesser degree. Some of the employees refused to drink the water furnished, and carried other liquids which they consumed. At first it appears petitioner did not attribute his diarrheic condition to the water, but such condition became progressively worse, while he and other men continued to complain to the superintendent, Smith, concerning the water. Nothing was done about the matter until some time in September, 1938, when the public health authorities ordered casks installed and that the water be distributed by pouring into individual drinking cups, in conformity with the law. Stats. 1917, p. 1517, Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 6259; Stats. 1915, p. 815, Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 4725. Examination by the public health authorities of the water indicated that it was contaminated with fecal material.

Petitioner's condition grew steadily worse until January 19, 1939, when he was no longer able to carry on his duties as an ironworker and was forced to stop work. Some four or five months intervened before the doctors finally succeeded in establishing the nature and cause of petitioner's illness, which was diagnosed as amoebic dysentery.

From the record it appears that during the time work progressed on the job, and while petitioner was there employed, some 200 to 300 other men were on the job, and at the hearing before respondent commission numerous witnesses testified that various complaints, including cramps and diarrheic conditions, resulted from consuming the water supplied. Expert testimony produced at the hearing established that entamoeba histolytica, the disease germ which causes amoebic dysentery, can exist and multiply only in the human body, and that such disease is usually contracted by the drinking of impure water or water infected by the amoebae. Evidence was also introduced that a single person who is a carrier or has the disease can by infecting the water supply cause an epidemic among all persons drinking the water so contaminated. Water may be contaminated with entamoeba histolytica by contact with the fingers or by contact with fecal material.

Following a hearing had before respondent commission, the latter made two sets of findings and awards, the first of which was made on the issue of normal compensation and determined that "said employee during said period of employment was exposed to entamoeba histolytica, as the result of and in the course of his employment, and contracted an amoebic dysentery." Based thereon, the commission made its award in favor of petitioner for normal compensation benefits. This award is not under attack, and it is conceded that respondent corporation paid and continues to pay petitioner the normal compensation awarded. On the issue of serious and willful misconduct, respondent commission on September 16, 1939, made its findings and award in favor of petitioner, reading in part as follows: "The injury herein was proximately caused by the serious and willful misconduct of the employer in knowingly failing to furnish fresh and pure drinking water to his employees as required by Chapter 485, Statutes of 1915, and the indemnity herein is increased fifty per cent, payable by said employer to the applicant herein." Thereafter respondent J. Phillip Murphy Corporation regularly and duly filed a petition for rehearing, and respondent commission made its order that the findings and award on the issue of serious and willful misconduct of the employer be revoked and rescinded, and on rehearing substituted therefor new findings against petitioner on the issue of serious and willful misconduct, coupled with an award in favor of respondent Murphy Corporation upon such issue. The last-named findings include the following:

"2. The employee during his period of employment was exposed to entamoeba histolytica, as a result of and in the course of his employment, and contracted an amoebic dysentery.

"3. The exposure referred to in Finding 2 hereof was through the drinking water which the employee was furnished during the time that he was employed at his work. * * *

"5. By reason of the nature of the work of J. Phillip Murphy Corporation, a corporation, it is customary for this corporation to commence operations after the work of a general contractor is in progress, and facilities for the care and comfort of all employees engaged in the work have been installed by the general contractor. It is the policy and custom of J. Phillip Murphy Corporation to accept and use for its workmen, the drinking water and the method and facilities for its distribution that have been installed and are in use by the general contractor. In the instance and time mentioned, such facilities, including the provisions for drinking water and its distribution, had been installed by P. J. Walker Company, a corporation, and were in use before J. Phillip Murphy Corporation placed any of its own employees on the job.

"6. The facilities for the distribution of drinking water to workmen which were furnished by P. J. Walker Company, did not provide for the furnishing of drinking water in individual cups and there was no compliance with Statutes of 1915, page 815, Deering Act, 4725, and Statutes of 1917, page 1517, Deering Act, 6259.

"7. After defendant commenced work as subcontractor as aforesaid, and prior to the commencement of the employment of the said applicant, Mr. J. Phillip Murphy went to the scene of the work together with a representative of P. J. Walker Company and the Gilmore Fabricators, Inc., another subcontractor, for the purpose of inspecting the site and progress of the work. At the time he was there, the said J. Phillip Murphy noticed that the water for drinking purposes was furnished to the men on the job by means of a common dipper and bucket, and that the men on the job drank from the dipper by dipping it into the bucket and not by pouring. The said J. Phillip Murphy made no inquiry as to the ultimate source of the water supply and at no time made any attempt to furnish his employees, including the applicant, with pure, fresh drinking water.

"8. One Virgil Smith was an employee and the Superintendent and Managing Representative of defendant J. Phillip Murphy Corporation in charge of all of the men and work of said defendant, J. Phillip Murphy Corporation, on said job during all times mentioned herein. From the commencement of the work at Camarillo the men employed by defendant J. Phillip Murphy Corporation and others, complained to said Virgil Smith as their Superintendent and Managing Representative of defendant, of the drinking water furnished. Said employees, including applicant William R. Parkhurst, and others, complained to said Virgil Smith that the drinking water on this job had a foul odor and taste and that its use apparently caused diarrhea. Said Virgil Smith said in effect that he realized the water was bad, but no other was available. * * *

"10. No officer or representative of J. Phillip Murphy Corporation, a corporation, had any knowledge either actual or constructive, that the drinking water or the facilities for distributing the drinking water furnished to its employees on this job, was capable of producing amoebic dysentery, or was otherwise dangerous to the health of its employees."

[1] From a reading of the foregoing résumé of the commission's findings, it is at once apparent that the commission took the position that respondent J. Phillip Murphy Corporation was absolved of any serious and willful misconduct charged against it because "it is the policy and custom of J. Phillip Murphy Corporation to accept and use for its workmen the drinking water and the method and facilities for its distribution that have been installed and are in use by the general contractor." We shall first give consideration to the question of whether or not the furnishing of drinking water of the type and in the manner presented by the instant case amounted to serious and willful misconduct. We are prepared to hold that when the circumstances attending the act of commission or omission are such as to "evince a reckless disregard for the safety of others and a willingness to inflict the injury complained of," such actions amount to "willful" misconduct. "Serious" misconduct we take to mean "conduct which the employer either knew, or ought to have known, if he had turned his mind to the matter, to be conduct likely to jeopardize the safety of his employees." E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 184 Cal. 180, 188, 189, 193 P. 105, 16 A.L.R. 611.

[2-6] Upon substantial evidence the commission found not only that the employee and his fellow employees on the job were exposed to entamoebic histolytica as a result of and in the course of employment and that by reason thereof petitioner contracted amoebic dysentery, but further found that the facilities furnished the employees for drinking the water were in direct violation of the mandate of state health statutes above referred to. In addition thereto, the commission found, and the evidence supports the finding, that from the very commencement of the work at Camarillo the men employed by respondent Murphy Corporation, including petitioner herein, complained to the superintendent and managing representative of respondent corporation concerning the drinking water supplied them, advising such superintendent that "the drinking water on this job had a foul odor and taste and that its use apparently caused diarrhea"; that to such remonstrances the superintendent replied, in effect, "that he realized the water was bad, but no other was available." In the face of the foregoing, respondent commission, however, made a further finding that no officer or representative of respondent corporation "had any knowledge either actual or constructive, that the drinking water or the facilities for distributing the drinking water furnished to its employees on this job, was capable of producing amoebic dysentery, or was otherwise dangerous to the health of its employees." In view of the previously narrated findings, and particularly the finding of constant complaints having been made by the employees to respondent Murphy Corporation's superintendent concerning the drinking water furnished on the job from the very inception, all of which are supported by competent and substantial evidence the last-quoted finding cannot be sustained because the record is barren of any evidence to support it. As has been frequently held, the action of the commission based on conflicting evidence or on slight evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal. On the other hand, the commission is without jurisdiction to act when and where there is a total absence of evidence to support its findings. Furthermore, we are not prepared to hold that respondent Murphy Corporation's superintendent on the job is not to be charged with knowledge of conditions which contravene health regulations contained in the statutes of this state.

[7] In all other cases with which we are familiar the problem of serious and willful misconduct occurs in connection with a dispute as to whether there is evidence to support such a finding and conclusion of the commission. Unlike them, the converse of that question is presented in the within appeal. Here the findings are such that we are required to determine whether the commission, in the face of certain findings, has by virtue of its jurisdiction any alternative than to conclude that serious and willful misconduct must follow, as a matter of law, from certain findings. In continuing to furnish impure water, unmistakably deleterious to the health of its employees, after complaint was made to the employer and it had knowledge thereof, as found by the commission, it became the duty of the latter to determine as a matter of law that the facts so found constituted serious and willful misconduct and to make an award accordingly.

[8-11] Respondent commission, however, seeks to sustain its award in favor of Murphy Corporation on the issue of serious and willful misconduct on the ground that "in accordance with custom and agreement, and, indeed, with the exigencies of the situation, the P. J. Walker Company, the general contractor, undertook to furnish drinking water and facilities for its distribution, and that the company had actually fulfilled its undertaking prior to the time the J. Phillip Murphy Corporation commenced its part of the work. When the J. Phillip Murphy Corporation came on the job, the water facilities then installed and in use were serving approximately 300 men without apparent distress to any one. * * *" The latter part of this contention is refuted by the positive and direct testimony that from the very commencement of respondent J. Phillip Murphy's Corporation's activities on the job petitioner herein and his fellow employees constantly complained not only regarding the taste and odor of the water, but of the diarrheic effects thereof. Concerning the first part of the quoted claim of the commission, we have no hesitancy in holding that an employer cannot absolve himself of his responsibility to properly protect his employees by relying upon the agreement of someone else, general contractor or otherwise, to perform that duty for him. The primary obligation to afford protection for petitioner rested upon his employer, respondent J. Phillip Murphy Corporation. The employee's only recourse under the Workmen's Compensation Act was against his employer, for neglect in affording such protection. The terms of the act impose no duty upon the general contractor to safeguard the subcontractor's employees, nor do they give petitioner herein any recourse against the general contractor, because the two did not stand in the relationship of employer and employee to each other. The employer cannot accept the facilities of the general contractor under the circumstances above described and escape the liabilities when later confronted with the ensuing consequences.

[12, 13] The conclusion of law arrived at by the commission reads as follows: "The acceptance and use by J. Phillip Murphy Corporation, a corporation, of the drinking water and the facilities for its distribution which were installed and in use by the general contractor, P. J. Walker Company, a corporation, before J. Phillip Murphy Corporation placed any of its own men on the work does not constitute serious and willful misconduct." This conclusion and the award based thereon in favor of respondent corporation are not supported by either competent evidence or the findings. As stated by this court in Moquin v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 33 Cal.App. 2d 511, 517, 92 P.2d 413, "The law under which the respondent commission functions in cases like this is founded upon sound public policy and with the objective of protecting, in a proper case, a workman against economic insecurity."

For the foregoing reasons the award is annulled.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 626

POMONA CEMETERY ASS'N v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

Civ. 11892.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 10, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 9, 1942.

1. Cemeteries ⇐15

Generally, the transfer of a cemetery lot does not convey title but merely an interest to be used exclusively for the purpose of burial.

2. Taxation ⇐245

The distinction between an assessment on physical property and upon interment rights is not important in determining claim of exemption under constitutional provision that property used exclusively for burial of human dead, except as used or held for profit, shall be free from taxation. Const. art. 13, § 1b.

3. Taxation ⇐245

Where cemetery association was a nonprofit organization, personal property consisting of office furniture, equipment for upkeep of grounds, convenience in making burials, etc., some of which were used on all portions of the cemetery regardless of present or future interment, was exempt from taxation. Const. art. 13, § 1b.

4. Taxation ⇐245

Under constitutional provision that "all property" used or held exclusively for the burial of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property, except as used or held for profit, shall be free from taxation, it is immaterial whether the property is real, personal or mixed in character since the provision refers to that property exclusively used or held for permanent deposit of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property. Const. art. 13, § 1b.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "All Property".

5. Taxation ⇐245

Unsold lots, crypts, or niches owned by nonprofit cemetery association were "held exclusively for burial" within constitutional provision exempting all property used or held exclusively for burial from taxation as against contention that the quoted phrase applied only to right of interment after transfer by the association to purchasers since the controlling factor was not whether a particular person, group or association held an exclusive right to a specific plot or space used or intended to be used for burial but whether the property was held exclusively for that purpose. Const. art. 13, § 1b.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Held Exclusively for Burial".

6. Taxation ⇐245

Under constitutional provision exempting from taxation all property used or held exclusively for burial, the word "exclusively" does not refer to persons using or holding rights of interment as against contention that no plot or niche is used exclusively for burial until it has been transferred to a person who devotes it to that purpose. Const. art. 13, § 1b.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Exclusively".

7. Taxation ⇐245

In constitutional provision exempting from taxation all property used or held exclusively for burial, the word "used" may refer to the property employed as a burial place for the human dead whereas "held" refers to property that has been prepared, made available, maintained or offered for sale for burial purposes. Const. art. 13, § 1b.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Used" and "Held".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William J. Palmer, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Pomona Cemetery Association, a nonprofit cemetery association, against the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles and others to compel the cancellation of assessments. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Gordon Boller, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Allard, Whyte & Brownsberger, of Pomona and Holbrook & Tarr and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

This appeal is from a judgment in favor of petitioner, a non-profit association engaged in conducting a cemetery, in a proceeding in which it sought a writ of mandate commanding the respondents—Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles and its several members—to cancel assessments theretofore levied upon the property of petitioner used in conducting said cemetery, and also commanding the county counsel to consent thereto in writing.

The property includes five contiguous parcels. The trial court found that one had not been platted, improved or developed in any manner as a burial ground, and that it was not enclosed as part of the cemetery. The taxability of this parcel was upheld. As to the other four, it found that at the time of the levy of the assessments they were and at all times since have been used and held exclusively for the burial of the human dead; that no part thereof has ever been used for profit, and that such parcels thus come within the exemption provided in section 1b of art. XIII of the state Constitution, which reads as follows: "All property used or held exclusively for the burial or other permanent deposit of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or such dead, except as used or held for profit, shall be free from taxation and local assessment."

The county assessor in assessing some portions of the land and improvements belonging to the cemetery association adopted the following method: In the case of the land intended for burial purposes, although in most cases the lots or rights to interment were scattered and not contiguous, he placed a value upon such as were undisposed of by the association based upon the proportion of such lots to the total area; in connection with a new mausoleum, a value was placed upon the building and site based upon the percentage which the content of the unsold crypts and niches therein bore to the total cubical content of the building, notwithstanding some of them were owned by one Hughes, who received as his sole compensation for the erection and construction of the building the right to dispose of interment rights and privileges therein. The assessment on an old mausoleum, one wing of which is used for the purpose of cremation and to house tools and equipment, was arrived at in a similar manner, the value of its site having been previously declared by court decision to be exempt. The site of a joint office and public lavatory building was assessed, as were the improvements thereon, office equipment and certain "merchandise." The cemetery equipment, consisting of trucks, power mowers, casket lowering devices and materials used by the association in connection with the care and maintenance of the entire cemetery, was assessed upon a percentage basis, the foundation of which was the proportion which the unsold interment rights bore to the entire cemetery. The cemetery association questions the propriety of the assessment of this outdoor equipment, but the action is to cancel the entire assessment.

In justification of the judgment canceling the assessments and taxes specifically set forth in the findings, the association contends that the description of the property assessed is insufficient and incomplete; that assessments indivisibly combine property admittedly exempt and that claimed to be taxable; that the assessment of the lands and improvements could not be enforced by a tax sale; that the assessment of the entire unsold space in the new mausoleum to the association was improper in that Hughes, the builder, held the right to dispose of a large portion of interment rights therein; that the exempt character of a portion of the property involved on this appeal has been previously determined and is res judicata between the parties, and finally, that the unsold lots, crypts and niches were used or held exclusively for purposes embraced within the constitutional exemption. A goodly portion of the arguments by the county are also directed to the above points, but the main question for determination on this appeal is, as stated by appellants, "whether grave sites and mausoleum space and personal property held by a cemetery corporation for sale, but with the anticipation that any purchasers will use or will hold for burial purposes can, while it yet continues the property of and in the hands of the cemetery corporation, constitute 'property used or held exclusively for the burial or other permanent deposit of the human dead,' and whether personal property in common use as to both sold and unsold grave space constitutes property 'used or held for the burial or other permanent deposit of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or such dead.'"

Appellants' first contention is that a particular finding of the trial court which is in the language of the constitutional provision is a conclusion of law or a finding of ultimate fact, and is at variance with the conclusions drawn from specific facts found. On this appeal, for the purpose of considering all the facts and circumstances relative to the main question, we will assume that such finding does not preclude consideration of whether property of the nature shown by the specific findings is in law exempt.

The association contends that the assessment was of physical property. The appellants claim that it was of the easement of privilege of interment, and that there was no direct finding against the taxability of a right of interment held for sale. The findings recognized that it was the right to bury, in the form of an easement, that was conveyed or offered for sale, but the record shows that the answer to the petition treated the assessment as one on physical property, and included allegations of proceedings before the Board of Supervisors. The description as set forth in the judgment refers to "unsold portions" of four distinct parcels, with assessed valuation placed upon "Land" and "Imps." Under the circumstances, neither the findings nor the judgment is inadequate or insufficient to determine the merits of the appeal.

[1, 2] The general rule is that the transfer of a cemetery lot does not convey title, but merely an interest to be used exclusively for the purpose indicated, namely, burial. Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n v. Powell, 210 Cal. 121, 291 P. 397, 71 A.L.R. 310. The distinction between an assessment on physical property and upon interment rights is not important in determining a particular claim of exemption. It is the right of interment which gives the space value, since the dedicated land may not be used for other than cemetery purposes. It was this value which the assessor sought to reach, although he actually placed the assessment on the land, improvements and personal property. Regardless of the language used by him or by the trial court, the question is whether the constitutional provision is applicable to the properties of the Pomona Cemetery Association.

This appeal, unlike that of San Gabriel Cemetery Association v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.App., 122 P.2d 330, filed this date, is on the judgment roll alone. The court found that the Pomona Cemetery Association "is a non-profit cemetery association," and "that it is a fact that none of petitioner's properties have ever been used or held for profit, and have never earned, made or paid any profits." The provision in the constitutional amendment "except as used or held for profit" (Cypress Lawn C. Ass'n v. San Francisco, 211 Cal. 387, 295 P. 813) may be eliminated from consideration in this case. In this connection appellants refer to the argument sent to all voters, quoted in part in the Cypress Lawn case at page 392 of 211 Cal., at page 814 of 295 P., as follows: " 'It will not relieve from taxation property of cemetery associations and others which is to be sold for profit, but only property to be used exclusively for the burial of the dead, and this sacred property should be kept tax free. * * *'" If in this appeal upon the judgment roll it were proper to refer to said argument, it is fully met by the finding of the trial court that the Pomona Cemetery Association is a non-profit organization which has "never earned, made or paid any profits."

[3] In view of the findings, no good purpose could be served by discussing the various assessments, including those on personal property consisting of office furnishings, etc., or equipment for the upkeep of the grounds, convenience in making burials, etc., some of which were in fact used on all portions of the cemetery, regardless of present or future interment. The primary and major use of such equipment appears to have been in direct connection with property found by the court to be exempt.

[4-6] It is immaterial whether the property assessed be real, personal or mixed in character. The provision uses the words "all property," and refers to that exclusively used or held for the permanent deposit of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or dead. The basis of appellants' argument in that regard is that the unsold portions of the land, crypts or niches, while "held" by the association, are not held for burial purposes but for sale, and that they may not be said to be held exclusively for burial until sold by the association. In other words, that "held for burial" applies only to rights of interment after transfer by the association to purchasers. The answer to this argument seems to be that the purchaser could obtain no other right than that conveyed by the vendor. The right, if any, of interment must first have been in the association. In this connection, appellants stress the word "exclusively," contending that it means that no plot or niche is used exclusively for burial until it has been transferred to a person who devotes it to this purpose. This argument presupposes that the word "exclusively" refers to persons using or holding rights of interment. We cannot so construe article XIII, section 1b, the language of which is "all property used or held exclusively for the burial" etc. The controlling factor is not whether a particular person, group or association held an exclusive right to a specific plot or space used or intended to be used for burial, but whether the "property" was held exclusively for that purpose. Upon the dedication of the land by the association to the interment of the human dead, it was held by the association for that purpose just as effectively as would be a segregated portion thereof transferred to an individual and thereafter by him devoted to that purpose.

[7] It may be noted that the court used the words of the constitutional provision "used or held." The word "used" may well refer to the property employed as a burial place for the human dead, whereas "held" refers to property that has been prepared, made available, maintained and offered for sale for burial purposes. The Cypress Lawn case is not of assistance to appellants. The court there held at page 389 of 211 Cal., at page 814 of 295 P., that, subject to the exception "for profit," the "provision exempts from taxation and local assessment two kinds of property, classified on the basis of its use, but without consideration of the status or character of its owner or possessor." (Italics added.) The hotel property held as an investment by the Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association was at least a degree or more removed from that which may be said to be held exclusively for cemetery purposes, but in the present case the trial court found—and the facts and circumstances substantiate the finding—that all of the property assessed was "used or held exclusively for the burial and other permanent deposit of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or such dead."

The conclusion reached on the main question eliminates the necessity of considering the numerous points raised by respondent in justification of the trial court's entry of judgment directing the county counsel of Los Angeles to consent to the cancellation of the illegal and erroneous assessment and taxes.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and GOODELL, J. pro tem., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 624

SAN GABRIEL CEMETERY ASS'N v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Civ. 11891.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 10, 1942.

1. Taxation ⇐245

Where cemetery association sold lots or graves for more than their cost but the price included expenses incident to making the place salable, and no part of the operating surplus of the association was distributed to stockholders or members of association, but was used to buy more land, for employment of salesmen and good will representatives, for advertising purposes and for upkeep of cemetery, the lots sold at a price in excess of their cost were not sold at a "profit" within constitutional provision regarding taxation of cemetery property. Pol.Code, § 3804; Civ.Code §§ 608–617; St. 1939, p. 696 et seq., § 8100 et seq., and p. 1370 et seq., § 5096 et seq.; Const. art. 13, § 1b.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Profit".

2. Taxation ⇐245

The word "profit" as used in constitutional provision regarding taxation of cemetery property does not mean financial benefit that accrues to a cemetery association through the sale of burial space at a price in excess of its costs where such gain is used for the upkeep of the cemetery property, but means net earnings, the benefits of which accrue directly or indirectly to the stockholders or members of the association. Const. art. 13, § 1b.

3. Taxation ⇐543(7)

In action by cemetery association to recover taxes on cemetery property, evidence authorized recovery on ground that property had been used and held exclusively for burial or other permanent deposit of human dead or for care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or such dead and that no part thereof had ever been used or held for profit. Pol.Code, § 3804; Civ.Code, §§ 608–617; St.1939, p. 696 et seq., § 8100 et seq., and p. 1370 et seq., § 5096 et seq.; Const. art. 13, § 1b.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William J. Palmer, Judge.

Action by San Gabriel Cemetery Association, a nonprofit cemetery association, against the County of Los Angeles to recover taxes paid. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Gordon Boller, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph Coleman Singer, Holbrook & Tarr, and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

This is an appeal by the county of Los Angeles from a judgment in favor of San Gabriel Cemetery Association, defendant and plaintiff respectively, in a suit seeking the refund of taxes alleged to have been illegally and erroneously collected for the years 1933, 1934 and 1935 on cemetery property claimed to be exempt from such taxes. (Political Code, sec. 3804; see Revenue and Taxation Code, div. 1, pt. 9, ch. 5, art. 1, St.1939, p. 1370 et seq.) The appeal has been taken under the alternative method.

The views expressed in our opinion in the case of Pomona Cemetery Association v. Board of Supervisors, 122 P.2d 327, filed this day, on the question of the exemption from taxation under the provisions of article XIII, section 1b of the state Constitution of real property used or held exclusively for burial purposes, and of personal property used primarily in connection with its care, maintenance and upkeep, are adopted as part of this decision. This disposition leaves for determination a question not before the court on the judgment roll in the Pomona case, namely, whether cemetery property otherwise exempt from taxation under such constitutional provisions would, by reason of being held, as appellants claim, for profit, come within the exception provided in such section.

The San Gabriel, like the Pomona, Cemetery Association was organized under the provisions of the Civil Code, sections 608–617 (repealed in 1931, p. 2434, but reenacted under similar provisions in div. VIII of the Health and Safety Code in 1939, St.1939, p. 696 et seq.). On the present appeal it is earnestly contended that the evidence does not support the finding that the unsold lots and crypts are not held for profit.

The original cemetery site containing about four acres was acquired by gift in 1872. Since that time the association has purchased approximately twelve additional acres, all of which, except the site of the superintendent's office and residence, are entirely platted into burial lots and graves. (The cemetery contains in excess of 15,000 graves.) The trial court held that the office and residence property was not exempt from taxation. The association has not appealed from that part of the judgment and no opinion, therefore, is expressed on the question.

[1, 2] It is appellant's contention that any amount received by the association for cemetery lots or graves in excess of their cost represents profit. The price charged for burial space represents not only its actual cost, but includes expenses of many kinds incident to making the place salable for the purpose intended, including in many instances an obligation of perpetual care, proper supervision, beautification of grounds, clerical services, equipment of various kinds, etc. Annual statements of the association indicate an "operating surplus." No part of this amount is distributed to stockholders or members of the association as dividends or otherwise, but is used to buy more land as needed, for the employment of salesmen and goodwill representatives, for advertising purposes and for the upkeep of the cemetery as above set forth. It may not be held herein that lots sold at a price in excess of their cost are sold "at a profit" as the word is used in article XIII, section 1b. Washelli Cemetery Ass'n v. King County, 158 Wash. 599, 292 P. 101; City of Paducah v. Commonwealth, 136 Ky. 232, 124 S.W. 286; Mountain View Cemetery Co. v. Massey, 109 W.Va. 473, 155 S.E. 547; Cypress Lawn Cemetery Ass'n v. San Francisco, 211 Cal. 387, 295 P. 813; Pomona Cemetery Association v. Board of Supervisors, supra. The word "profit" does not mean financial benefit that accrues to the association through the sale of burial space at a price in excess of its cost where such gain is used for the upkeep of the cemetery property. The word "profit" in article XIII, section 1b, means net earnings the benefits of which accrue directly or indirectly to the stockholders or members of the association.

[3] The court found that the parcels in question "have been used and held exclusively for the burial and other permanent deposit of the human dead, or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or such dead, and no part thereof has ever been used or held for profit." The evidence sustains the finding.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and GOODELL, J. pro tem., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 671

HAMMOND v. McDONALD et al.

Civ. 13086.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 11, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 6, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇦1099(3)

Where the point decided in prior appeal of action to abate liquor nuisance was that the statute authorizing such actions was not repealed by constitutional amendment relating to liquor control and Alcoholic Beverage Control Act of 1935, a portion of opinion, characterizing such amendment and act as prohibiting the disposal of intoxicating liquors for consumption by the public upon the premises, except when served with meals, was mere "obiter dictum" and did not become the "law of the case", determining that liquor can be thus disposed of only when served with meals. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3778; Act 3796, §§ 2(m), 5, subds. 20–23; §§ 6(j), 18, 53; Const. art. 20, § 22.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Law of the Case" and "Obiter Dictum".

2. Evidence ⇦1

The District Court of Appeal was not required to institute an independent investigation to determine whether there had been any action by the State Board of Equalization which would constitute an administrative construction of the constitutional amendment relating to liquor control of which the court should take judicial notice, but the court's attention should be called to the fact of such action, if any. Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 3; Const. art. 20, § 22.

3. Constitutional law ⇦20

Administrative construction of the Constitution may be considered by the court only where there is uncertainty in the provision of constitution to be construed, and, where the meaning is not doubtful, administrative acts or regulations in conflict with Constitution are void.

4. Intoxicating liquors ⇦17

In constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors other than beer for consumption on the premises in any public saloon, public bar, or public barroom, "provided, however, that subject to the aforesaid restrictions", such liquors may be disposed of in hotels, restaurants, etc., the proviso is not inconsistent with and does not abrogate the prohibition immediately preceding it. Const. art. 20, § 22.

5. Constitutional law ⇦16

In ascertaining the meaning of constitutional amendment relating to liquor control, the history thereof must be given due consideration. Const. art. 20, § 22.

6. Constitutional law ⇦18
Statutes ⇦147

A substantial change in the language of a statute or constitutional provision by an amendment thereto indicates an intention to change its meaning, and an omission may be as significant as an insertion or substitution, but a mere change in phraseology, incident to a revision of Constitution or statute, does not result in a change of meaning unless the intent to make such a change clearly appears.

7. Constitutional law ⇐12

Generally principles of construction applicable to statutes are also applicable to the Constitution.

8. Intoxicating liquors ⇐110

The 1935 amendment to constitutional provision of 1932, relating to liquor control, by eliminating from the prohibition against public saloons, etc., the words "or other public drinking place" and permitting the sale not only of wine and beer but of all intoxicating liquors, for consumption on the premises in hotels, restaurants, etc., and omitting therefrom the provision, "when served with meals", evidenced an intention to make a change in the meaning of the 1932 provision. Const. art. 20, § 22.

9. Constitutional law ⇐16

If any doubt existed as to whether framers of constitutional amendment had given consideration to Supreme Court decision, construing the constitutional provision prior to amendment, the argument officially circulated to the voters in support of the amendment could be examined and considered for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the amendment.

10. Constitutional law ⇐15

It is a settled rule of constitutional construction that, if there are apparent conflicts, it is the duty of courts to harmonize them, if this can be reasonably done without distorting the meaning of any provision, so as to give effect to every portion of the instrument, and each provision must be read with direct reference to every other which relates to the same subject, and so read, if possible, as to avoid repugnancy.

11. Intoxicating liquors ⇐110

The constitutional amendment authorizing the sale of intoxicating liquors by hotels, restaurants, etc., for consumption on the premises, permits such sale of intoxicating liquor without meals to some extent and in some places. Const. art. 20, § 22.

12. Constitutional law ⇐14

In the absence of a definition in constitutional provision of the terms therein used, words, having no technical meaning, will be taken in the ordinary and generally accepted sense.

13. Intoxicating liquors ⇐110

The words "saloon" and "barroom", as used in constitutional amendment relating to liquor control, import a place where intoxicating liquors are sold for consumption on the premises, commonly without meals. Const. art. 20, § 22.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Barroom" and "Saloon".

14. Intoxicating liquors ⇐110

The constitutional amendment, permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors by restaurants, etc., for consumption on the premises, uses the word "restaurant" as meaning a public eating house. Const. art. 20, § 22.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Restaurant".

15. Evidence ⇐20(1)

It is a matter of common knowledge, of which the District Court of Appeal may take judicial notice, that the saloons and barrooms existing before the enactment of prohibition, which undoubtedly it was the intent of the constitutional amendment, relating to liquor control, to prohibit, were not devoted to the furnishing of meals. Const. art. 20, § 22.

16. Intoxicating liquors ⇐110

A restaurant, kept and operated for the purpose of furnishing meals, the service of intoxicating liquors therein being merely incidental to such business, is a "bona fide restaurant" within the meaning of constitutional amendment permitting the sale of alcoholic liquors in such restaurants for consumption on the premises, and such liquor may be there sold without meals, but, where the main business of a restaurant becomes the sale of intoxicating liquors, the service of meals being merely incidental thereto, such place is to be regarded as a public "saloon" or "barroom", in which such sale of liquor is prohibited. Const. art. 20, § 22.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Bona Fide Restaurant."

17. Constitutional law ⇐14

Legislative definitions of words used in constitutional provision are not controlling, if palpably opposed to the meaning of constitution, but must be followed where the Legislature adopts one of two reasonable and possible constructions of the constitutional provision.

18. Intoxicating liquors ⇐110

The legislative definition of "saloon" contained in the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act of 1935, requiring the presence of a bar or counter in order to constitute a saloon, in so far as it is intended to define the word saloon as used in constitutional amendment, prohibiting the sale therein of intoxicating liquors other than beer, is ineffective as attempting to place an unwarranted limitation on the constitutional provision. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3796, § 2(m); Const. art. 20, § 22.

19. Intoxicating liquors ⇐143

Whether a given place is a bona fide restaurant, in which intoxicating liquor other than beer may legally be sold for consumption on the premises, or is so operated as to be a public saloon, bar, or barroom in which such sale would be illegal, is a "question of fact". Const. art. 20, § 22.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

20. Intoxicating liquors ⇐276

In action to abate a liquor nuisance, finding that defendants were conducting a bona fide restaurant but that they also sold intoxicating liquors, other than beer, without meals, which was illegal and in effect amounted to the maintenance therein of a saloon and barroom contrary to law, were irreconcilably inconsistent, and required reversal of judgment of abatement. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3778; Const. art. 20, § 22.

21. Intoxicating liquors ⇐260

The constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, other than beer, in a saloon, bar, or barroom for consumption upon the premises, makes such sale in a place answering to the description "saloon, bar or barroom", as used in the constitutional amendment, unlawful and subject to abatement under statute, authorizing action to abate nuisance consisting of unlawfully selling, serving, or giving away alcoholic liquors, even though such sale be not in violation of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3778, § 1; Act 3796, §§ 2(m), 53; Const. art. 20, § 22.

22. Constitutional law ⇐32

Where an act is directly prohibited by the Constitution as unlawful, no legislation is needed to put the prohibition in force and outlaw the prohibited acts.

WHITE, Judge, dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lucius P. Green, Judge pro tem.

Action by George Y. Hammond against Vernon McDonald and another to abate a nuisance resulting from the alleged illegal sale of alcholic beverages. From a judgment of abatement of the nuisance, defendants appeal.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

See, also, 45 Cal.App.2d 226, 113 P.2d 899.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting; TRAYNOR, J., not participating.

Hanna & Morton, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

This is an action brought by the plaintiff as a citizen and resident of the county of Los Angeles, to abate a nuisance consisting of a place in said county used by the defendants, it is alleged, for the unlawful sale and service of intoxicating liquor. The action purports to be brought under a statute of 1915 (Stats.1915, p. 236; Deering's General Laws, 1937 ed., Act 3778), which in terms authorizes such an action to be brought by any citizen of the county where the nuisance exists. On a former appeal in this action it was held that the statute just referred to was not repealed by the adoption in 1932 or the later amendment in 1934 of section 22, article XX of the Constitution regulating the sale of intoxicants or by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (Stats.1935, p. 1123; Deering's General Laws, 1937 ed., Act 3796) or by subsequent amendments of that act, but is still in full force and effect and authorizes the bringing of this action by the plaintiff. Hammond v. McDonald, 1939, 32 Cal.App. 2d 187, 89 P.2d 407. After that decision the case was tried, findings in favor of plaintiff were made, and judgment of abatement of the nuisance was entered thereon, from which defendants appeal.

The record shows that the place in question is, to some extent, at least, operated by the defendants as a cafe and lunch counter; and for convenience we will use, in referring to this part of their activities, the term "restaurant," which appears before "cafe" in the constitutional provision hereinafter construed and is synonymous therewith in ordinary use. This action is brought by the plaintiff to obtain a determination of the question, to what extent, if at all, may intoxicating liquors be sold without meals, in restaurants and other public eating places licensed to make sales of such liquors for consumption on the premises.

The controlling rule on this subject is established by section 22 of article XX of the Constitution of this state, as amended in 1934, which, after vesting in the state the exclusive power to regulate dealings with intoxicating liquors, further provides: "Intoxicating liquors, other than beers, shall not be consumed, bought, sold, or otherwise disposed of for consumption on the premises, in any public saloon, public bar or public barroom within the State; provided, however, that subject to the aforesaid restriction, all intoxicating liquors may be kept and may be bought, sold, served, consumed, and otherwise disposed of in any bona fide hotel, restaurant, cafe, cafeteria, railroad dining or club car, passenger ship, or other public eating place, or in any bona fide club after such club has been lawfully operated for not less than one year." Then follow provisions giving the State Board of Equalization "the exclusive power to license" all liquor business, subject to legislative control to an extent not now in question. By reason of the exception of "beers" in the first part of the language quoted, our problem does not affect the sale of beers, and references hereinafter made to intoxicating liquors do not include beers in that term, unless it is so stated. So also, the facts here raise no question in regard to clubs, and we do not undertake to construe the provisions relating to them.

For the purpose of enforcing and applying this constitutional provision, the legislature in 1935 passed the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act above mentioned, which, as amended in 1937 (Stats.1937, p. 2169) provides in section 53: "Every person who sells, serves or otherwise disposes of any alcoholic beverage, except beer which may be so sold, served or disposed of, over or at any public bar or in any public barroom, for consumption on the premises, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." A definition of the terms used in this section is supplied by subdivision (m) of section 2 of the same act as amended in 1937 (Stats.1937, p. 2129), which, with its introductory clause, reads as follows:

"Sec. 2. The following words, terms and phrases when used in this act have the meanings ascribed to them in this section, except where the context clearly indicates a different meaning: * * *

"(m) Public bar, or 'public saloon' or 'public barroom' is hereby expressly prohibited and means any room to which the public has access in which there is any bar, counter or other structure over which beverages of an alcoholic content in excess of four per cent by weight are sold or served by the drink to the public consumption on the premises; provided, however, that counters or other structures used for the sale, service and consumption of meals, and not as a subterfuge for a public bar, shall not be deemed to be a public bar within the meaning of this act."

The same statute provides for the issuance of what it denominates "on-sale" licenses to sell beer and wine and to sell distilled spirits (sec. 5, items 20, 21, 22 and 23; Stats. 1937, p. 2131); and these licenses authorize sales "for consumption on the premises where sold." (Sec. 6, subd. (j), Stats.1937, p. 2134.) Such "on-sale" licenses may be issued only for the places designated in the proviso above quoted from the constitutional provision. (Sec. 18, same act, Stats.1935, p. 1131.) The defendants had licenses under these provisions at the time to which this action relates.

[1] Before approaching a decision of the main question, it seems advisable to clear away some of the surrounding underbrush growing from subordinate or incidental contentions of the parties. Thus, plaintiff contends that the question now raised was answered by the decision of this court on the former appeal and that such decision has become the "law of the case" and cannot be questioned on this appeal. That contention is based on the words we now emphasize in the following passage from the opinion on the former appeal: "A reading of the constitutional amendment and the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, especially sections 1 and 53 thereof, indicates that it was the intention of the people, as well as of the legislature, to prevent the return of the public saloon or barroom to the social life of California after the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution. It was apparently with that idea in mind that the amendment was adopted and the statute enacted prohibiting the disposal of intoxicating liquors, other than beer, for consumption by the general public upon the premises, except when served with meals. The 1915 statute is entirely consistent with such viewpoint, and was obviously continued in effect in order to give a supplemental or additional remedy by which the sale of intoxicating liquor to the general public in a public saloon or barroom could be restrained through a civil suit in equity." (Italics added.) (Hammond v. McDonald, supra, 1939, 32 Cal.App.2d 187, at page 194, 89 P.2d 407, at page 411.) This, however, was obviously not intended as a ruling on the construction of the Constitution. That matter was not then under consideration. The question before the court arose on a demurrer to the complaint, and a request for leave to file an amended complaint. Neither of these complaints contained allegations adequate to raise on demurrer the question now under consideration, and the point decided, as stated by the court, was simply that "* * * the statute of 1915 is still in full force and effect and has never been repealed or superseded." Before making the statement relied on by plaintiff the court had referred to the 1932 version of the constitutional provision and to the State Liquor Control Act adopted in pursuance thereof, both of which did expressly prohibit disposal of intoxicating liquor for consumption on the premises except with meals, and the form of the statement may have been influenced by that fact. At any rate, the statement relied on is a mere passing remark, and if it can be said to lay down any legal rule at all, it is at best obiter dictum. It is therefore not binding on us as the law of the case (Millsap v. Balfour, 1910, 158 Cal. 711, 714, 112 P. 450, and cases there cited; Mulford v. Estudillo, 1867, 32 Cal. 131, 138), and does not bar us from now deciding the question on its merits.

It is urged by defendants that there have been legislative and administrative constructions of the constitutional provision above mentioned in accordance with their contentions. In support of their claim of a legislative construction, they call attention to provisions of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act which we have already mentioned (secs. 5, 6 and 18, supra), relating to licenses, and characterize them as "providing that a bona fide restaurant, hotel, etc., might serve intoxicating liquors without meals." This characterization is not borne out by a reading of the provisions mentioned. Their language goes no further than to authorize the sale of alcoholic beverages "for consumption on the premises where sold," without mention of meals; those sections authorize service of liquor without meals, if at all, only by not prohibiting it. This leaves the question open for determination upon such other provisions of Constitution or statute as may be found applicable. Far from putting a construction on the Constitution, it evades such construction. Reference is also made to subd. (m) of section 2, as amended in 1937, which is above quoted, and to the 1935 form of the same provision, which did not differ materially from that of 1937 as far as the present matter is concerned. These provisions say nothing of the service of meals with liquor, and are no more interpretive of the Constitution in that respect than are the other provisions just discussed.

[2, 3] On the claim of administrative construction it is argued that "the State Board of Equalization has uniformly construed the amendment of 1934 as authorizing the serving of all types of intoxicating liquors without meals in restaurants and hotel dining rooms and has consistently issued many thousands of licenses in the state of California for such purpose," and that we may take judicial notice of this fact. The issuance of licenses since 1935 must have been done under the statutory provisions already referred to, and their purpose could be no other than that stated in the statute, which, as we have already said, declares nothing regarding the question here in issue. What other acts the board may have done by way of construing the Constitution are not disclosed either in the record or in the briefs. If there be anything to which our judicial notice could extend, either under section 1875, subdivision 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure or otherwise, our attention should be called to it. We are not required to institute an independent investigation on the subject. In this connection we note that such administrative construction of the Constitution may be considered only when there is uncertainty in the provision to be construed. (Carter v. Commission of Qualifications, 1939, 14 Cal.2d 179, 185, 93 P.2d 140.) Where the meaning is not doubtful, administrative acts or regulations in conflict with it are simply void. (Hodge v. McCall, 1921, 185 Cal. 330, 334, 197 P. 86; Morris Plan Co. v. Johnson, 1940, 37 Cal. App.2d 621, 624, 100 P.2d 493; see, also, 16 C.J.S., Constitutional Law, § 32, p. 71; People v. Ford Motor Co., 1922, 188 Cal. 8, 10, 204 P. 217.)

The record does disclose that representatives of the State Board of Equalization inspected defendants' place of business from time to time, and in doing so paid particular attention to their facilities for serving food and the amount of food on hand. This shows a desire to ascertain whether defendants were conducting a bona fide restaurant for which an "on-sale" license could be properly issued, but indicates no opinion on the question whether meals must be served with drinks.

[4] Plaintiff argues that the proviso in the above quoted constitutional provision is repugnant to the body of the provision to which it is attached and is therefore void; while defendants argue that the proper function of a proviso is to limit the general language of an enactment and that the proviso here may be held to have that effect and is valid. Defendants also argue that if there is any inconsistency between the proviso and the provision preceding it, the proviso must control for several reasons; first, that in such case a special provision prevails over one of general character; second, that the provision which is last in point of arrangement prevails; and third, that the provision which is later in point of time—claimed to be the proviso—controls. Careful consideration of the constitutional language discloses that it affords no foundation for any of these arguments, and hence the questions presented under them need not be resolved here. We repeat here that constitutional language, emphasizing the part of it which disposes of the questions above mentioned: "Intoxicating liquors, other than beers, shall not be consumed, bought, sold, or otherwise disposed of for consumption on the premises, in any public saloon, public bar or public barroom within the State; provided, however, that subject to the aforesaid restriction, all intoxicating liquors may be kept and may be bought, sold, served, consumed, and otherwise disposed of in any bona fide hotel, restaurant, café, cafeteria, railroad dining or club car, passenger ship, or other public eating place, or in any bona fide club after such club has been lawfully operated for not less than one year." (Italics added.) The framers of this provision must have had in mind the questions above suggested, and to set them all at rest, they caused the Constitution to provide its own rule of construction in these respects. It declares that the authority given by the proviso for the sale of intoxicating liquors in bona fide hotels, restaurants, etc., is "subject to the aforesaid restriction." The only restriction previously stated, and hence the only restriction to which this language can refer, is the provision that intoxicating liquors shall not be consumed, sold, etc., "in any public saloon, public bar or public barroom." The conclusion is inescapable that the proviso is not inconsistent with and does not abrogate the prohibition immediately preceding it, although the terms of the proviso may, as hereinafter indicated, affect the construction of that prohibition.

[5-7] This brings us to the principal question above stated, the answer to which must be found in the constitutional provision just quoted. In ascertaining the meaning of this constitutional provision, its history, to which defendants point, must be given due consideration. The section 22 of article XX which we have before us (another section of the same number, covering a different subject, was adopted in 1934) was first placed in the Constitution in 1932, and as then adopted the provisions now to be construed differed from their present form in several respects. Following substantially the same provision as now exists giving the state the exclusive power to regulate dealings with intoxicating liquors there were two provisos which read as follows: "provided, however, no public saloon, public bar or barroom or other public drinking place where intoxicating liquors to be used for any purpose shall be kept, bought, sold, consumed or otherwise disposed of, shall ever be established, maintained or operated within the State; provided, further, subject to the above provisions, that the hotels, boarding houses, restaurants, cafes, cafeterias and other public eating places, wines and beer may be served and consumed with meals furnished in good faith to the guests and patrons thereof."

While the first proviso just quoted from the original section is different in form from the provision—not worded as a proviso—which takes its place in the amended section, the two enactments are substantially the same in effect insofar as they prohibit the sale and the consumption of intoxicating liquors in any public saloon, public bar or public barroom. But the second proviso of the original section was substantially revised and altered by the amendment, and this is a fact of considerable significance here. A substantial change in the language of a statute by an amendment indicates an intention to change its meaning. (Meyerfeld v. South San Joaquin Irr. Dist., 1935, 3 Cal.2d 409, 417, 45 P. 2d 321; Thomas v. Driscoll, 1940, 42 Cal. App.2d 23, 28, 108 P.2d 43; Hoffman v. McNamara, 1929, 102 Cal.App. 280, 285, 282 P. 990; McCarthy v. Board of Fire Com'rs, 1918, 37 Cal.App. 495, 497, 174 P. 402.) This rule has been specifically held applicable to the interpretation of constitutional provisions (Hyatt v. Allen, 1880, 54 Cal. 353, 356), and "Generally speaking, principles of construction applicable to statutes are also applicable to constitutions" (16 C.J.S., Constitutional Law, § 15, p. 51; see, also, People v. Denault, 1927, 81 Cal. App. 1, 9, 253 P. 151; Hyatt v. Allen, supra). An omission may be as significant as an insertion or a substitution. (Oakland Pav. Co. v. Whittell Realty Co., 1921, 185 Cal. 113, 120, 195 P. 1058.) But a mere change in phraseology, incident to a revision of Constitution or statute, does not result in a change of meaning unless the intent to make such a change clearly appears. (Hyatt v. Allen, supra; Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1932, 124 Cal.App. 303, 309, 12 P.2d 649.)

[8] Applying these rules to the portions of section 22, article XX of the Constitution, as amended in 1934, which are now under consideration, it is plain that we have something more than a mere change of phraseology resulting from a revision; there is clearly evident an intention to make changes in the meaning. Thus, the second proviso, as adopted in 1932, limited itself to "wines and beer"; in 1934 the authorization given by the corresponding proviso was extended to "all intoxicating liquors." At first, the authorization was only that "wines and beer may be served and consumed with meals furnished in good faith to the guests and patrons"; now those words have been omitted and the authorization is that "all intoxicating liquors may be kept and may be bought, sold, served, consumed, and otherwise disposed of in any bona fide hotel, restaurant" et cetera, with no reference at all to meals. The amendment also eliminated from what was the first proviso the words "other public drinking place." There can be no doubt that, as a result of these changes, the authorization previously given for the sale of wines and beer has been extended to all intoxicating liquors. This we understand plaintiff to concede; but he contends that these changes have no effect at all on the requirement that meals be served with intoxicating liquors, because of the declaration that the remaining proviso is subject to the prohibition against saloons, barrooms and bars, arguing further, in this respect, that whenever intoxicating liquor is served in a restaurant and is consumed on the premises, without a meal, such restaurant ipso facto becomes, at least for the time being, a public saloon or barroom. Defendants' argument goes to the opposite extreme, their claim being that the right of the keeper of a bona fide restaurant to sell liquor without meals for consumption on the premises is unlimited as to quantity, that no matter how much liquor is so sold or how great a proportion of his total business such sales may be, his place of business remains a bona fide restaurant and his sales are in such a restaurant and not in a public saloon, bar or barroom.

[9] We think the true rule lies somewhere between these contentions. There is in the changes made by the amendment a strong indication of an intent to free restaurant keepers and others from the limitation that their sales must be with meals. Not only were the words "with meals" stricken from the permissive provision, but the restriction regarding "other public drinking place" was eliminated from the prohibitory clause. The last quoted words were those upon which the Supreme Court relied, in Sandelin v. Collins, 1934, 1 Cal.2d 147, 154, 33 P.2d 1009, 93 A.L.R. 956, to support its holding that the constitutional provision, as first adopted in 1932, prohibited the consumption of intoxicating liquor in hotels, restaurants, et cetera, otherwise than with meals. This decision was made a little more than four months before the election at which the 1934 amendment was adopted, and the framers of that amendment no doubt gave it consideration. If any uncertainty exists in this respect, the argument officially circulated to the voters in support of the amendment, when it was adopted by them, may be examined and considered for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the amendment. (People v. Ottey, 1936, 5 Cal.2d 714, 723, 56 P.2d 193; Beneficial Loan Society, Ltd., v. Haight, 1932, 215 Cal. 506, 515, 11 P.2d 857.) Looking at that argument we find it emphasizing the proposition that under the amendment liquor may be served by the drink with or without meals, in restaurants et cetera.

[10] It is a settled rule of constitutional construction that, "If there are apparent conflicts, it is the duty of courts to harmonize them, if this can be reasonably done without distorting the meaning of any provision, so as to give effect to every portion of the instrument. Each provision must be read with direct reference to every other which relates to the same subject, and so read, if possible as to avoid repugnancy." (5 Cal.Jur. 583; see, also, Webster v. Board of Regents, 1912, 163 Cal. 705, 709, 126 P. 974; Wheeler v. Herbert, 1907, 152 Cal. 224, 236, 92 P. 353; Crowe v. Boyle, 1920, 184 Cal. 117, 129, 193 P. 111.) "The legal intendment is that each and every clause has been inserted for some useful purpose, and when rightly understood may have some practical operation." (5 Cal.Jur. 586.) This rule must be applied in connection with the other rule requiring effect to be given to substantial changes in language, including omissions, made by an amendment, so that in determining the effect of several provisions and their interaction upon each other as they now stand, we must consider changes made in them by amendment as well as their present form, and give effect to all of these matters so far as it is possible to do so.

[11] We have here two provisions for consideration: first, that prohibiting sale, consumption, etc., of intoxicating liquors "in any public saloon, public bar or public barroom"; and second, the proviso thereto attached, that "subject to" this prohibition, all such liquors may be sold, consumed, etc., "in any bona fide hotel, restaurant," etc. Under the rule just stated we must find, if possible, some construction which will give effect to both of these provisions; we cannot conclude that the words declaring the proviso subject to the prohibition were intended to nullify the proviso entirely or shut our eyes to the changes made by the amendment. Giving consideration to all these matters, we conclude that the Constitution, as it now stands, intends to permit the sale of intoxicating liquors without meals, for consumption on the premises, to some extent and in some places. The plaintiff's construction to the contrary entirely ignores the significant changes of omission made in the Constitution by the amendment.

[12-16] On the other hand, this permission given by the Constitution is expressly made subject to the prohibition of sales, consumption, et cetera, in any public saloon, bar or barroom. Some effect must be found for this restriction also. In this connection we note that while the provision requiring meals to be served in good faith with intoxicating liquors consumed on the premises has been eliminated from the Constitution, the idea of good faith has been retained, and the words "bona fide" have been inserted, where they did not formerly appear, at the head of the list of places in which sales for consumption on the premises are permitted. In other words, such sales are not permitted in every restaurant, but only in those which are "bona fide." Such bona fide restaurants are to be contrasted with the public saloons, bars and barrooms mentioned in the prohibition. To harmonize and effectuate all of these provisions we must hold that there are or may be bona fide restaurants in which intoxicating liquors are served and consumed without meals, and which are not saloons, bars or barrooms; but that there are or may be other restaurants in which such liquors are so sold and consumed, which are not to be regarded as bona fide restaurants, but, in the view of the Constitution, merely as saloons, bars or barrooms. Such a conclusion may be reached without doing violence to the language of the Constitution. No definitions of the terms used appear in the Constitution. In the absence of such definitions, the words, having no technical meaning, will be taken in the ordinary and generally accepted sense. (Kaiser v. Hopkins, 1936, 6 Cal.2d 537, 539, 58 P.2d 1278; San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 1911, 161 Cal. 610, 617, 119 P. 1073, 37 L.R.A.,N.S., 686.) The words "saloon" and "barroom," as used in connection with the sale of intoxicating liquor, import a place where such liquors are sold for consumption on the premises (7 C.J. 930; 9 C.J.S., Barroom, p. 1550; 55 C.J. 1345; see, also, Words and Phrases, Perm.Ed., under these words); to which Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d ed., first published in 1934, adds, in case of a saloon, that such sales are "commonly without meals." A restaurant is "a public eating house" (Webster's Dict. above cited), and it is evidently so regarded in the constitutional provision under consideration, for the enumeration including it is there followed by the words, "or other public eating place." It is a matter of common knowledge of which we may take judicial notice, that the saloons and barrooms existing before the enactment of prohibition, which undoubtedly it was the intent of this constitutional amendment to prohibit, were not devoted to the furnishing of meals. They did, in some cases, furnish "free lunches," usually of rather minor character; but the business for which they were established was the selling of intoxicating liquor for consumption on the premises, and any furnishing of food or meals was purely incidental to that business. Persons whose main object was the obtaining of meals, even if they desired drinks of intoxicants with them, went to restaurants and cafes, whose principal business was the serving of meals, not of intoxicants. The Constitution, by its use of the words "bona fide" to modify the words designating the places where intoxicating liquors may be sold and consumed on the premises, has drawn a similar distinction. As the court said in Webster v. Denison, 1853, 25 Vt. 493, 498, "The proper distinction in the law, between bona fides and mala fides, is that the former requires the thing to be, in fact, just what it purports to be." Such is also the common meaning of the words "bona fide." (See Webster's Dictionary, already cited.) A restaurant which is kept and operated for the purpose of furnishing meals to the public, the service of intoxicating liquors therein being merely incidental to that business, is what it purports to be, and is therefore a bona fide restaurant, and may as a casual and incidental part of its business sell such liquors and allow their consumption upon the premises even without meals. But where the principal business of the restaurant becomes the sale and service of intoxicating liquors, which are consumed on the premises, with the sale and service of meals the incidental matter, or "side-line," such place is no longer a bona fide restaurant, but is to be regarded as a public saloon or barroom, within the intent of the constitutional provision, and the sales of such liquor therein are prohibited. Any rule more liberal to the restaurant keeper would, in effect, wipe out the prohibition of saloons, et cetera, and give the proviso complete dominance over the "restriction" to which, by its own terms, it is subject.

[17, 18] The legislature has undertaken to define some of the words used in the Constitution and now under consideration. Such a definition, while not controlling, if plainly opposed to the meaning of the Constitution (Worswick Street Pav. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1919, 181 Cal. 550, 561, 185 P. 953) must be followed where the legislature adopts one of two reasonable and possible constructions of the constitutional provision. (Kaiser v. Hopkins, 1936, 6 Cal.2d 537, 540, 58 P.2d 1278; Pacific Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1932, 215 Cal. 461, 464, 11 P.2d 1, 82 A.L.R. 1170.) This legislative definition is in subdivision (m) of section 2 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, which now stands as amended in 1937, and has already been quoted. This definition departs from the Constitution in one respect. By its terms a room is not a saloon unless it contains a "bar" or counter. There is nothing in the usual or common meaning of the word "saloon" which requires the presence of a counter to constitute a "saloon," nor do we see any possibility of a double meaning of the Constitution in this respect. Hence, the definition places an unwarranted limitation on the constitutional provision, and, if intended as a definition of this term as used in that provision, it is to that extent ineffective.

[19, 20] Upon the construction we have given the constitutional provision, the question whether any given place is a bona fide restaurant, or is so operated as to be a public saloon, bar, or barroom, is one of fact. On that question the trial court, in this case, made findings which include the following: "* * * at the commencement of this action, and at all times thereafter, down to and including the time of the trial of this action, said defendants and each of them have been conducting in good faith, in a brick building on the premises above described, a cafe and lunch counter business; that said defendants have also, during said period in said building on said premises, engaged in the business of serving to the public intoxicating liquors" (Finding III); "Drinks, both soft and alcoholic and in excess of four per cent by weight, with and without meals, are served both over said counters and in said ballroom and dining room" (Finding III); "* * * the business conducted by said defendants upon said premises by the sale of intoxicating liquors (other than beers) containing alcohol in excess of four per cent, by weight, without meals, is illegal, and, in effect, amounts to the maintenance therein of a saloon and barroom, contrary to law." (Finding IV.) Between the findings quoted are statements of a number of facts of an evidentiary nature, but the findings quoted are not declared to be conclusions from these other facts. Upon our view of the Constitution, these findings, declaring, in effect, that the defendants are conducting a bona fide restaurant or cafe and that by their method of conducting it they are at the same time and place maintaining a public saloon and barroom, are irreconcilably inconsistent. For that reason the judgment must be reversed. Hollywood Cleaning & Pressing Co. v. Hollywood Laundry Service, 1932, 217 Cal. 131, 137, 17 P.2d 712.

[21, 22] Because of the limited nature of the provisions of section 2, subdivision (m) and section 53 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, both already quoted, it may be that, even if defendants are not conducting a bona fide restaurant, some of the sales of intoxicating liquor made by them without meals, particularly those in the ballroom, where there appears to be no counter, are not in violation of that act, but they are not for that reason excluded from the operation of the act of 1915 by which this action is sanctioned. By the terms of section 1 of the act last mentioned a place "used for the purpose of unlawfully selling, serving or giving away any spirituous, vinous, malt or other alcoholic liquor" is a nuisance which may be abated by proceedings under the act. The sales here, even if they do not violate any legislative enactment, are, if defendants' restaurant is not bona fide, in direct contravention of the constitutional provision. That provision directly prohibits certain acts, and no legislation is needed to put this prohibition in force and thus outlaw the prohibited acts. Of course, it would be possible and even desirable for the legislature to provide further sanctions, but without such sanctions an act directly prohibited by the Constitution is unlawful. (Sheehy v. Shinn, 1894, 103 Cal. 325, 329, 37 P. 393; Garms v. Jensen, 1894, 103 Cal. 374, 37 P. 337; 13 C.J. 424; 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 208, p. 560.)

The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded for a new trial.

YORK, P. J., concurred.

WHITE, Justice (dissenting in part).

I concur in that portion of the judgment which reverses the judgment of the court below, but I dissent from that portion which remands the cause for a new trial. I am firmly of the opinion that the cause should be remanded with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the defendants. The reason for such belief upon my part is engendered by the fact that the sole question here involved is whether, under the provisions of section 22 of article XX of the Constitution of this state, as amended in 1934, intoxicating liquors may be sold without meals in bona fide restaurants, cafes, hotels, clubs or other legitimate eating places. The trial court found, upon substantial and convincing evidence, that the defendants were conducting in good faith a cafe and lunch counter business, but nevertheless held that because in such bona fide restaurant defendants were serving intoxicating liquors without meals, their action in so doing was "illegal, and, in effect, amounts to the maintenance therein of a saloon and barroom, contrary to law." The bona fide character of defendants' restaurant is conceded, and the sole and paramount question which we should determine is, therefore, one of law, viz., can this bona fide restaurant serve intoxicating liquors without meals. While it might be inferred from the decision of this court that restaurants of a bona fide character may serve intoxicating liquors without meals, such holding is in my opinion more or less equivocal. I believe we should in this case decisively and unequivocally settle and determine that question of law. I am firmly convinced that under the existing provisions of our Constitution, a bona fide restaurant, etc., may legally and lawfully sell and serve intoxicating liquors either with or without meals. In that connection, let us consider the constitutional provision as adopted in 1932, so far as here pertinent. It read: "* * * provided, however, no public saloon, public bar or barroom or other public drinking place where intoxicating liquors to be used for any purpose shall be kept, bought, sold, consumed or otherwise disposed of, shall ever be established, maintained or operated within the State; provided, further, subject to the above provisions, that in hotels, boarding houses, restaurants, cafes, cafeterias and other public eating places, wines and beer may be served and consumed with meals furnished in good faith to the guests and patrons thereof."

As amended in 1934, the Constitution, so far as it concerns the question before us, was made to read: "Intoxicating liquors, other than beers, shall not be consumed, bought, sold, or otherwise disposed of for consumption on the premises, in any public saloon, public bar or public barroom within the State; provided, however, that subject to the aforesaid restriction, all intoxicating liquors may be kept and may be bought, sold, served, consumed, and otherwise disposed of in any bona fide hotel, restaurant, cafe, cafeteria, railroad dining or club car, passenger ship, or other public eating place, or in any bona fide club after such club has been lawfully operated for not less than one year."

It seems clear to me that by adopting the 1934 amendment the people intended to and did make a substantial change in the organic law. Under the 1932 constitutional provision only the sale of beer and wine for consumption on the premises was permitted, and then only when such service was made with meals, while the sale of so-called hard liquor by the drink was prohibited whether with or without meals in any public restaurant. If there be any doubt as to what was in the minds of the framers of the initiative amendment of 1934, or in the minds of the people when they voted to adopt such amendment, that doubt is dissipated by reason of the argument addressed to the electors of California as contained in the pamphlet compiled by the state legislative counsel and distributed to each qualified voter by the Secretary of State. In the argument favoring adoption of the 1934 initiative amendment, we find the following clear and unequivocal language: "* * * The issue is clear-cut. The sale of beer and wine, with or without meals, and of hard liquor by the drink, with or without meals, must stop in California after November 6th unless the people approve Proposition 2 at the polls. In voting for this proposition the people will vote for the open and regulated sale of all intoxicating liquors, with or without meals, in legitimate eating places so licensed by the State Board of Equalization."

That the opponents of the initiative measure suffered no illusions as to the intent and purpose of the amendment is evidenced by the following quotation from the argument made against the adoption of such amendment, and which argument, by the way, was signed by one of counsel for respondent herein: "It (referring to the amendment) provides that intoxicating liquors 'other than beers' shall not be consumed, bought, sold or otherwise disposed of for consumption on the premises in any public saloon, public bar, or public barroom within the state; but that subject to this restriction, 'all intoxicating liquors may be kept and may be bought, sold and served, consumed and otherwise disposed of in any bona fide hotel, restaurant, cafe, cafeteria, railroad dining or club car, passenger ship or other public eating place, or in any bona fide club after such club has been lawfully operated for not less than one year.' * * * The places in which all intoxicating liquors may be freely sold and consumed if the proposed amendment is adopted, are so varied, diversified and numerous that it would amount to no restriction worthy of the name and could only have been designed to fool the public, as the liquor forces have been prone to do at all times and under all circumstances."

With the foregoing arguments before them, the people wrote the initiative measure into the Constitution. The language of the amendment to me seems clear and understandable. After outlawing a return of the public saloon, it provides, subject to the just-mentioned restriction, that all intoxicating liquors may be kept, bought, sold, served, consumed and otherwise disposed of in any bona fide hotel, restaurant, etc. In other words, the service of meals with liquor is not required when such service takes place in a licensed bona fide hotel, restaurant, club, cafe, etc. The requirement of meal service with the sale of beer or wine contained in the former constitutional provision of 1932 was completely eliminated by the 1934 amendment and the sale of such malt and vinous as well as distilled liquors was authorized without any reference to meal service, provided the restaurant, cafe, etc., was in good faith conducted as a restaurant, cafe, etc.

Pursuant to the power granted by the Constitution, and to carry out its inhibition against the return of the old-time saloon or barroom, the legislature, in the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act referred to in the main opinion, expressly prohibited the operation of a public bar, public saloon, or public barroom, and defined the latter to be "any room to which the public has access in which there is any bar, counter or other structure over which beverages of an alcoholic content in excess of four per cent by weight are sold or served by the drink to the public for consumption on the premises; provided, however, that counters or other structures used for the sale, service and consumption of meals, and not as a subterfuge for a public bar, shall not be deemed to be a public bar within the meaning of this act." Section 2(m).

That by the 1934 amendment a substantial change was made in the Constitution to me seems clear and undeniable.

That this indicates a clear intention to change its meaning is conceded by the main opinion, with cases cited in support of such concession. As admitted in the main opinion, the indicated change was to free restaurant keepers and others from the limitation that the sale of liquor must be accompanied by the service of meals. The main opinion decides that the Constitution in its present form prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors for consumption on the premises in all places where that is the principal business, but permits it in hotels, restaurants, etc., where the principal business is the service of meals and the sale of intoxicating liquor is merely incidental thereto. The main opinion attempts to read into the Constitution the term "principal business," and thus add to the functions of the Board of Equalization the duty of determining what the "principal business" is. To my mind, this is not at all what is contemplated by the Constitution. A mere reading of its terms demonstrates clearly and unerringly that once the bona fide character of the hotel, restaurant, cafe, etc., as such, is determined, then the sale of liquor, either with or without meals, is permitted in licensed places. The trial court took the position, and the main opinion approves thereof, that because the amount realized from the sales of liquor exceeds that obtained from the sale of meals, the place becomes a public saloon or barroom and loses the characteristics of a bona fide restaurant, cafe, hotel, etc. This to my mind is not the true test. I feel that if the place in question, exclusive of the sale of liquor, could qualify as a bona fide restaurant, cafe, etc., as these terms are commonly known and understood—that is to say, is prepared to furnish meals and foodstuffs in the event such service is requested by the patron, then such establishment, if licensed by the Board of Equalization, may maintain upon its premises and sell intoxicating liquor, with or without meals.

It is true that the 1934 amendment prohibits public saloons and barrooms. But by its very language it provides that a bona fide restaurant, cafe, etc., is not a saloon. And this is but common sense. The voters of this state, when they adopted the 1934 initiative amendment, knew and understood what the old-time saloon was. They knew it never afforded an opportunity to order and consume a meal therein. It takes no skilled or learned lexicographer to understand that an establishment equipped to serve bona fide meals cannot be labeled as a saloon, because in the latter only liquor is sold, with possibly an occasional distribution of "free lunch."

In the face of the findings made by the trial court that defendants were operating a bona fide eating place, fully equipped with facilities and foodstuffs for the service of meals, it does not seem to me that there remains anything for the trial court to do but enter a judgment for the defendants, because as heretofore pointed out, the constitutional provision makes but one test for determining whether the Board of Equalization is entitled to license a restaurant, cafe, etc., to serve liquors, with or without meals, and that test is whether such establishment is conducted as a bona fide restaurant, cafe, etc. The evidence supporting as it does the finding of the trial court that the defendants were conducting a bona fide restaurant in compliance with the constitutional provision, their establishment could not be the subject of an abatement action on the ground that it constituted a nuisance, and they are therefore entitled to have a judgment entered in their favor. The decision of this court should so direct.

50 Cal.App.2d 10

BALLAGH v. WILLIAMS.

Civ. 12760.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 12, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Contracts ⇐270(2)

Failure to act promptly to rescind a contract upon discovery of mistake of fact may bar right to rescind.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)

In action to recover money paid to defendant and used as portion of down payment for corporate stock of mining corporation, a specified percentage of which was to be delivered to plaintiff, whether plaintiff was guilty of laches barring his right to rescind contract after mine, which was operated as the individual property of defendant, who also retained all of the corporate stock, proved worthless, was a "question of fact" for the trial court, whose decision supported by substantial evidence would not be disturbed on appeal.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

3. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)

Laches is in the first instance a question for determination by the trial court, whose conclusion with respect thereto will not be set aside by an appellate court if there is reasonable support therefor in the evidence.

4. Action ⇐63

All of the circumstances of the case must be considered in determining whether a party is guilty of laches.

5. Trial ⇐404(1)

Trial court's finding "that all of the allegations" in a designated defense "are not true" did not fail to support judgment for plaintiff because it was in the nature of a "negative pregnant" finding, where finding as a whole was not uncertain but was to the effect that all the allegations of the paragraph were untrue, except certain specified facts.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negative Pregnant".

6. Trial ⇐404(1)

Trial court's findings should receive a construction which will uphold rather than defeat the judgment.

7. Trial ⇐395(1)

The logical defect of a negative pregnant does not apply to trial court's findings.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

In action to recover money paid to defendant and used as a portion of down payment for corporate stock of mining corporation, a specified percentage of which was to be delivered to plaintiff, but which had not been so delivered at time plaintiff gave notice of rescission, whether plaintiff and a third person, not a party to the action, who had also contributed a portion of purchase price of stock, were joint obligees of promise of defendant so that a discharge as between such third person and defendant would operate to release defendant from any obligation to plaintiff was a "question of fact" for trial court.

9. Money received ⇐11

Where money was paid by plaintiff to defendant for purpose of purchasing stock of a corporation, which defendant purchased but failed to deliver specified percentage thereof to plaintiff, plaintiff was entitled to bring an action for money had and received without rescission, and his recovery was not barred on theory that since plaintiff had rescinded the contract, he could not recover on a common count without proof of total failure of consideration.

10. Vendor and purchaser ⇐334(6), 339

Where the vendor neglects to convey, being under a duty to do so, the vendee is entitled to bring an action for money had and received without rescission.

11. Money received ⇐18(3)

In action to recover money paid to defendant to be used as a portion of down payment for the corporate stock of a mining corporation, which defendant purchased but failed to deliver specified percentage thereof to plaintiff, defendant's testimony that, as he had explained to another associate in the venture, he intended to take care of plaintiff as respects the money advanced when he completed another deal, was sufficient to warrant recovery on the common count for money had and received.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Bertin A. Weyl, Judge pro tem.

Action by J. C. Ballagh against W. J. Williams to recover money paid by plaintiff to defendant to be used to purchase the capital stock of a mining corporation, no part of which stock was delivered to plaintiff. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff on the count for money had and received, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Baldwin Robertson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gwyn S. Redwine, Musick & Burrell, Clayton Straub, and James E. Ludlam, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

Four men became interested in a placer mine on the Mother Lode. In a placer mine gold is mixed in with sand and gravel, generally a deposit in the stream bed of a living or an ancient river. If there is gold enough in the gravel to pay the cost of extracting it, and something more for the miner, it is said to be a paying proposition. If there is enormous profit for the miner, it is said to be a bonanza. But, if there is no profit, or not enough profit to pay the cost of operation, then it is said to be borrasca. In this case, and with reference to this particular mine,—and not for the first time in the history of mining,—the recovery of gold did not pay the cost of getting it out of the gravel. It was borrasca.

And so, two of the four men who became interested in the mine have resorted to the courts to determine their rights. In the beginning, the parties met in Sacramento and went to Wheatland to see the mine. Title to the property was vested in a Nevada corporation. Being impressed with the possibilities, there was an agreement that the defendant was to purchase all of the stock in the corporation, whereupon the mine would be operated by the corporation for their benefit. The purchase price of the stock was to be $10,000 down, together with the note of the corporation for $15,000, which the defendant was to endorse, and an additional payment of $5,000 out of the recovery of gold.

The defendant received from the plaintiff $3,333.33. One of the other parties put in a like amount. The defendant put up the balance of the down payment, went to Nevada and closed the deal. The terms of purchase were changed in that the defendant gave to the vendor of the stock the note of the corporation, endorsed by him, for $20,000, instead of $15,000. Just prior to this, all of the stock in the corporation was, by appropriate corporate action, delivered to the defendant.

Thereafter, the defendant operated the mine as an individual, and not through the corporation, until he quit because it would not pay. He caused the gravel to be worked to extract the gold; he paid all of the expenses involved; and he disposed of the gold for his own account.

The plaintiff knew nothing about the increase of the principal sum of the promissory note. The defendant did not convey to the plaintiff any of the corporate stock which he received, although the plaintiff had put up his money on the understanding and with the expectation that he would receive 12½ per cent of the total stock of the corporation.

After the lapse of several months the plaintiff served the defendant with a notice of rescission, and then commenced this action, with a common count for money had and received in his complaint.

At the trial in the superior court and in the briefs and arguments before us, plaintiff and defendant each assert that the other was attempting to inflict upon him a sort of "heads I win and tails you lose" policy. The defendant asserts that the plaintiff rode with him until he found out that the mine was a failure and then wanted his money back. The plaintiff asserts that the defendant kept title to the property so that if it was a success, he would receive all of the profits, and be liable to the plaintiff only for money advanced; but if it was a failure, the defendant would then contend their relationship was a joint venture.

The trial court found for the plaintiff, and judgment was rendered against the defendant upon the money count.

Upon appeal, the defendant contends that the plaintiff could not rescind, because, especially where a mining venture is involved, the plaintiff is estopped to recover back his money if the project fails while he delays to promptly rescind.

[1] Delay to act promptly warrants a court in denying the right to rescind. Sanders v. Magill, 9 Cal.2d 145, 70 P.2d 159.

[2] But this is a question of fact, committed to the trial court for decision. If there is substantial evidence to support that decision it is our duty to affirm the judgment. We have examined the record, and find evidence therein which requires us to affirm the finding of the trial court that the plaintiff acted promptly upon discovery of the facts upon which his notice of rescission was based.

[3, 4] Laches is in the first instance a question for the determination of the trial court. Its conclusion will not be set aside by an appellate court if there is reasonable support for it in the evidence. All of the circumstances of the case are to be considered in a determination as to whether or not a party is guilty of laches. McMahon v. Grimes, 206 Cal. 526, 275 P. 440; Alexander v. State Capital Co., 9 Cal.2d 304, 70 P.2d 619; Wolpert v. Gripton, 213 Cal. 474, 2 P.2d 767.

[5] Next, appellant attacks one specific finding and asserts that because the court used the words, "That all of the allegations" (in the fourth grounds of defense) "are not true," there has been expressed what he terms "a negative pregnant finding." Therefore, it is argued that the finding does not support the judgment.

A reading of the language of the particular finding as a whole demonstrates that there is no uncertainty in it. The finding is to the effect that all the allegations of the paragraph were untrue, except certain specified facts which were found to be true.

[6] Findings should receive a construction which will uphold rather than defeat the judgment. Schomer v. R. L. Craig Co., 137 Cal.App. 620, 31 P.2d 396.

[7] In any event the logical defect of a negative pregnant does not apply to findings. McAuliffe v. McAuliffe, 53 Cal.App. 352, 199 P. 1071.

[8] Next the appellant presents the contention that the plaintiff and one of the other associates interested in this mining property, not a party to this action, were joint obligees of the promise of the defendant, and that a discharge as between this associate and the defendant operated to release the defendant from any obligation to the plaintiff. This again is a question of fact upon which the trial court's finding is in favor of the plaintiff, and with which we have neither the right nor the disposition to interfere.

[9] Finally, the appellant urges that the judgment may not rest upon a common count, there having been a rescission of a contract, unless there is a total failure of consideration. This contention may be readily disposed of by discussing the barest essentials of the case. The defendant received the money; with this money he was to purchase for the plaintiff stock in the corporation. He did purchase all of the stock of the corporation, but he failed to deliver any of it to the plaintiff. Therefore, we have to do here simply with an executory contract under which the plaintiff paid the defendant for corporate stock which was to be delivered to him, and which was not delivered.

[10] When the vendor neglects to convey, being under a duty to do so, then the vendee is entitled to bring an action for money had and received without rescission. Moresco v. Foppiano, 7 Cal.2d 242, 60 P.2d 430.

[11] Indeed there is testimony by the defendant upon which alone the court could have based a finding against him upon this simple issue. "* * * I explained to him and to my attorney at that time, that any money he had advanced to me would be taken care of when I got the deal on the Mississippi Bar" (testimony of the defendant as to conversations with one of the other associates respecting the money which the plaintiff advanced). The Mississippi Bar is another mine owned by the defendant. "Any arrangement I make with anybody, if it don't pay up, I intend to take care of them some other way. I intend to reimburse you for what money you have put in, and let you come in on the Mississippi Bar situation" (further testimony of the defendant on the same subject matter).

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 716

SMITH v. SMITH.

Civ. 11998.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Divorce ⇐87

Where wife filed action for divorce and alleged that defendant while intoxicated had used firearms, had threatened lives of plaintiff and children, and had destroyed property to which complaint the defendant filed a demurrer, on hearing of show cause order why defendant should not remove himself from family home pending trial, allegations of complaint constituted a portion of the record to be considered by the trial court and were admitted by defendant's demurrer and failure to deny them.

2. Divorce ⇐87

On appeal from order requiring defendant in divorce proceeding to remove himself from family home because of past acts of violence and threats to kill plaintiff and her children, record showed that at least on one occasion defendant was violent about the home and had threatened the lives of his family, and that irreparable injury might result from his continued presence there, and hence trial court acted within its jurisdiction in excluding defendant from home during pendency of divorce action. Code Civ. Proc. § 526, subd. 2; § 527.

3. Divorce ⇐87

In divorce proceeding where the requirements of service of notice set forth in Code of Civil Procedure were followed, issuance of a temporary injunction requiring defendant because of previous acts of violence and threats to remove from home during pendency of divorce action, was within jurisdiction of court. Code Civ.Proc. § 527.

4. Divorce ⇐216

Under codal provision that when a divorce action is pending court may require husband to pay alimony and that court may require husband or wife as the case may be to give reasonable security for providing maintenance or making any payments required, and appoint a receiver and that in executing such provisions, court must resort to community property, then to separate property of husband, trial court had jurisdiction to order sale of brokerage account and use of proceeds by trustee for support of plaintiff wife and her children. Civ.Code, §§ 137, 140, 141.

5. Divorce ⇐216

The general rule that a money judgment must be stated with certainty is not applicable to a situation where alimony pendente lite is awarded and a receiver is appointed to use the money for the support of the wife and children as required by them for their support during the course of the litigation.

6. Divorce ⇐216

In divorce action, an order directing sale of brokerage account and use of proceeds for support of wife and her children was in nature of an order to deliver personal property and contained all the elements essential to the rendition of an order of the court where there was an application in a pending action for the order addressed to the court, the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter, notice was given to adverse party, and a hearing was had in open court at which both parties were present.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William S. Baird, Judge.

Action for divorce by Lucile Rawleigh Smith against Quentin Roland Smith. From portions of a minute order requiring the defendant to remove himself from the family home and to authorize the sale of a brokerage account the proceeds of which were to be deposited with the trustee and used for support of plaintiff and minor children, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

See, also, 116 P.2d 3.

Hearing denied; CURTIS, EDMONDS, and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

George Stahlman and Harry Duckett, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Arthur William Green, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The defendant appeals from portions of a minute order entered by the trial court in a divorce proceeding requiring him to remove himself from the family home and to authorize the sale of a brokerage account, the proceeds of which would be deposited with a trustee, to be used for the support of the plaintiff and the minor children of the parties.

The plaintiff filed a complaint for divorce, in which she alleged that while in an intoxicated condition the defendant had used firearms in and about their home premises, had threatened her life and the lives of her children and had destroyed property in and about the residence. The defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint. On plaintiff's affidavit the court issued an order to the defendant to show cause why he should not be required to pay plaintiff's attorney's fees, to pay a sum of money for support of his wife and children and to leave the family residence pending the hearing of the action. The defendant was served with the order and filed an affidavit in opposition relating to the financial condition of the parties, but not denying the charges of misconduct in the family home. The order to show cause was heard after a hearing in chambers as a conciliation matter where the court was unable to effect a reconciliation. A minute order was thereupon entered requiring defendant to move from the family home, the order further provided: "* * * defendant to authorize the broker to sell out the brokerage account, deliver the proceeds from said sale to plaintiff's and defendant's attorneys and they are to choose a trustee with whom to deposit the money; said money to be used to support the plaintiff and the children." Defendant filed a notice of appeal from these portions of the order. He was subsequently adjudged in contempt of court for disobeying the order but was discharged after a hearing on his petition for habeas corpus, the operation of the mandatory order having been stayed by the appeal.

[1-3] The first question presented on this appeal is whether the trial court had jurisdiction to order appellant to remove himself from the family home pending the trial of the divorce action. The complaint filed in the proceeding alleged that appellant had committed acts of violence about the residence, had threatened the life of respondent and the children and had destroyed property; this allegation of the complaint constituted a portion of the record to be considered by the trial court at the hearing of the order to show cause and was admitted by appellant's demurrer and failure to deny. The hearing was held after lawful notice had been given to appellant, and seems to have been conducted in part in the nature of a conciliation proceeding under section 1767, Code of Civil Procedure. Since no reporter was present in chambers the transcript of testimony fails to disclose whether or not any evidence was then introduced to substantiate the allegation in the complaint concerning appellant's violence. However, the subsequent order to show cause in the contempt proceeding, which has been included in the record on appeal, indicates that the minute order appealed from was made on statements of the appellant and on facts stated by counsel for both parties in appellant's presence, and not denied by him, to the effect that upon one occasion he discharged firearms in the home, destroyed property and threatened the lives of his family to the extent that it was necessary to summon the police to disarm him. In addition to this the admitted allegations of the complaint were evidence of those facts upon the hearing. Hence it must be taken to have been pleaded and proved that appellant, on one occasion at least, was violent about the home, threatened the lives of his family, and irreparable injury might result from his continued presence there.

Under such circumstances it is clear that the trial court acted within its jurisdiction in entering an order in the nature of a temporary injunction excluding appellant from the residence during the pendency of the action. The power to make such an order is specifically granted to the courts by the legislature and appears in subdivision 2 of section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure providing that an injunction may be granted "When it appears by the complaint or affidavits that the commission or continuance of some act during the litigation would produce waste, or great or irreparable injury, to a party to the action." It might also be noted in passing that the requirements of service and notice set forth in section 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure were followed and therefore the issuance of the temporary injunction was within the jurisdiction and power of the court. The appellant relies upon Luitwieler v. Luitwieler, 57 Cal.App. 751, 207 P. 931. That case was decided upon the ground that it was an abuse of discretion to make the order because it did not appear that any physical injury was threatened. Here the appeal is confined strictly to the question of power and jurisdiction. In holding that the superior court has such jurisdiction we do not pass upon the facts supporting the order, or of the discretion in making it.

The only other issue raised is whether or not the trial court had jurisdiction to order appellant to sell the brokerage account in order that the proceeds from the sale might be used by a trustee for the support of respondent and the minor children of the parties pending the hearing of the action. Section 137 of the Civil Code provides that when an action for divorce is pending the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself or her children or to prosecute or defend the action. 1 Cal.Jur. 958. Section 140 of the Civil Code provides: "The court may require the husband or wife, as the case may be, to give reasonable security for providing maintenance or making any payments required under the provisions of this chapter, and may enforce the same by the appointment of a receiver, or by any other remedy applicable to the case." In executing these sections the court must resort to the community property, then to the separate property of the husband. Section 141 of the Civil Code.

[4-6] Under these code sections it is clear that the court acted within its power in ordering the brokerage account sold and the money received from the sale delivered to a trustee to be used to support respondent and her children. Although the general rule is to the effect that a money judgment must be stated with certainty (D'Arcy v. D'Arcy, 89 Cal.App. 86, 92, 264

P. 497) this rule cannot be held applicable to a situation wherein alimony pendente lite is awarded and a receiver is appointed to use the money for the support of the wife and children as required by them for their support during the course of the litigation. The order to appellant to sell the brokerage account was in the nature of an order to deliver personal property and contained all of the elements essential to the rendition of an order of court; to wit, there was an application in a pending action for the order addressed to the court, the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter, notice was given to the adverse party, and a hearing was had in open court, at which both parties were present. United Railroads v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 687, 691, 242 P. 701. In fact, from the record before us, it would appear that counsel for appellant agreed in open court to the arrangement.

The trial court acted within its jurisdiction in making the order and we find no error committed by the court in entering it.

The portions of the order appealed from are affirmed.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 730

BLANCHARD v. NORTON et al.

Civ. 3002.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 18, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1170(9)

In an action involving a collision between plaintiff's southbound automobile and defendants' northbound automobile which turned left to enter an auto court driveway, the refusal of defendants' instruction that failure to keep a vigilant lookout is negligence was error but did not warrant reversal of the judgment for plaintiff, where it appeared that plaintiff saw defendants' automobile when between one and two thousand feet away and saw it turn left, and that defendants' driver, after seeing plaintiff's automobile 900 feet away, looked south and did not see it again until just before the collision. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

2. Trial ⇐260(8)

Though it would have been better practice in an automobile collision case to have given an instruction defining contributory negligence, the refusal thereof was not prejudicial, since the question was sufficiently covered where the court properly defined negligence and instructed the jury to return a verdict for defendant if they found that plaintiff was negligent and that such negligence contributed in any degree as a proximate cause of the accident.

3. Trial ⇐256(10)

An instruction that to establish contributory negligence, the burden is on defendants to prove by a preponderance of evidence that plaintiff was negligent and that such negligence contributed in some degree as a proximate cause of the injury was correct as far as it went, and defendants could not complain that it omitted the element that contributory negligence may be proved by plaintiff's evidence, since it was the duty of defendants, if desiring a further instruction on the subject, to request it.

4. Automobiles ⇐242(4)

The existence of a 25-mile speed sign on the west side of a highway just north of an auto court driveway did not in itself establish the prima facie limit of 25 miles an hour for southbound vehicles, where there were no structures on the east side of the highway and, for one-fourth of a mile south of the sign, only nine buildings on the west side that came within the limitations provided in the section of the Vehicle Code relating to business and residence districts, in view of another section conclusively presuming a highway to be outside of such a district unless its existence therein is clearly established. Vehicle Code § 90.1, St.1939, p. 2106; § 758, St.1935, p. 243.

5. Statutes ⇐190

The statute conclusively presuming a highway to be outside of a business or residence district unless its existence therein is clearly established and unless such district is duly signposted is unambiguous and not subject to judicial interpretation. Vehicle Code § 758, St.1935, p. 243.

6. Statutes ⇐225¾

Judicial construction of a statute applies to a subsequent statute constituting a virtual re-enactment of the earlier one.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Andrew R. Schottky, Judge Assigned.

Action by Alan Blanchard against W. L. Norton and others, for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Hoge, Pelton & Gunther and A. Dal Thomson, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Richard Wagner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment against defendants for injuries received in a collision between an automobile being driven south on Highway 99 by plaintiff and one belonging to defendants and being driven by W. L. Norton from the east to the west side of the highway to enter a private driveway into the Hansen Auto Court. The accident happened about nine o'clock on the morning of November 24, 1939. The roadway was dry and visibility good.

At the point of the accident, Highway 99 consisted of a paved three-lane road with wide oil macadam shoulders on both sides. Just north of the driveway into the Hansen Auto Court there was a twenty-five-mile speed sign, facing north, on the west side of the highway. The evidence shows that for a distance of one-quarter of a mile south of this sign there were only nine buildings on the west side of the highway that came within the limitations provided in section 90.1 of the Vehicle Code, St. 1939, p. 2106. There were no structures on the east side of the highway.

Plaintiff testified that at the time of the accident he was driving his automobile south in the west traffic lane of the highway at a speed of between 40 and 50 miles per hour; that he kept a lookout for vehicles ahead of him; that he saw the Norton automobile when it was between one and two thousand feet from him; that it was traveling north with its right wheels on the edge of the east macadam shoulder and its left wheels in the east traffic lane; that when Norton was about opposite the driveway, and between one hundred twenty-five and one hundred fifty feet distant from the Blanchard car, he turned sharply to his left, heading toward the auto court driveway and proceeded on his course across the highway directly in the path of the oncoming car; that when Blanchard saw this movement he applied his brakes and swerved his car to his right; that the left front of his car came into collision with the right front of the Norton car; that at the time of the collision the Norton car was headed west with its front wheels on the west macadam shoulder and its rear wheels in the west traffic lane. Plaintiff further testified that he continually observed the Norton car as it proceeded north and turned west across the highway; that Norton gave no arm signal indicating his intention to make the turn.

This evidence is contradicted in but two particulars. Norton testified he gave an arm signal before making the turn, and a witness estimated the speed of plaintiff's car at between fifty and fifty-five miles an hour at a point about five hundred feet north of the place of the collision.

Norton testified that he saw plaintiff's car traveling south in the west traffic lane when it was about three hundred yards distant from him; that he did not continue to observe this automobile but looked for vehicles approaching from the south and did not again see the Blanchard car until just before the impact.

Appellants admit the negligence of Norton. The necessity of this concession is obvious from the statement of facts.

[1] Defendants complain of the refusal of the trial judge to give an instruction proposed by them to the effect that it was the duty of the driver of a motor vehicle to keep a vigilant lookout for other vehicles on the highway and that the failure to do so was negligence. This instruction should have been given, as we find no other in the record that exactly covers this subject. However, we cannot regard the failure to give the instruction so prejudicially erroneous as to require a reversal of the judgment. The evidence shows that the plaintiff maintained a sufficiently vigilant lookout to observe defendants' car as it approached him and crossed the highway ahead of him, while Norton admitted that after seeing plaintiff's car approaching three hundred yards away he looked away and did not see it again until about the moment of impact. If the proposed instruction had been given it would have pointed to an added act of negligence on Norton's part. The error does not afford ground for reversal under the provisions of section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution.

[2] Defendants proposed an instruction defining contributory negligence which was not given. While we believe it would have been better practice to have given this instruction we can find no serious prejudice in failing to do so because of other instructions given. The trial judge properly defined negligence and instructed the jury as follows:

"If you find that plaintiff was negligent, you then must determine a fourth issue, namely:

"Did that negligence contribute in any degree as a proximate cause of the accident?

"If you find that it did, your verdict must be for the defendant."

We believe the foregoing instruction sufficiently covered the question of contributory negligence so that the jury was not misled by the failure to give the requested instruction.

[3] The following instruction was given at the request of the plaintiff:

"To establish the defense of contributory negligence the burden is upon the defendant to prove by a preponderance of evidence that the plaintiff was negligent and that such negligence contributed in some degree as a proximate cause of the injury."

Defendants complain that this instruction omitted the element that contributory negligence may be proved by the evidence offered by plaintiff and that it was therefore incomplete.

We may assume the soundness of this argument and still cannot reverse the judgment. The instruction was a correct statement of the law in so far as it went. Richmond v. Moore, 103 Cal.App. 173, 284 P. 681. If defendants desired a further instruction on the subject it was their duty to request it. This they failed to do. Daniel v. Asbill, 97 Cal.App. 731, 276 P. 149.

[4-6] The trial court in its instructions quoted the various sections of the Vehicle Code bearing on prima facie speed limits, signs, and the different districts, including section 758 of that code, St.1935, p. 243, which provides as follows:

"Every highway shall be conclusively presumed to be outside of a business or residence district unless its existence within a business or residence district is established by clear and competent evidence as to the nature of the district and unless such district is duly signposted when and as required by this code."

Defendants now maintain this was error and argue that the existence of the twenty-five-mile sign on the west side of Highway 99, just north of the driveway into the Hansen Auto Court, in itself established the prima facie limit of twenty-five miles per hour for vehicles passing that sign in a southerly direction regardless of the density of structures on that portion of the road.

We regard this contention as entirely without merit as section 758 of the Vehicle Code is clear and unambiguous and not subject to judicial interpretation. It is a virtual reenactment of subdivision (c) of section 28½ of the former California Vehicle Act. Therefore judicial construction placed on the former section applies to the reenactment. Harris v. Barlow, 180 Cal. 142, 179 P. 682; Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane, 161 Cal. 689, 120 P. 771, Ann.Cas. 1913C, 1093. The earlier enactment was construed in Cunningham v. Cox, 126 Cal. App. 685, 15 P.2d 169, 171, where it was said:

"It is therefore clear that no road is deemed to be within a 'business or residence district' for the purposes of the act unless it appears first, that there is within the district the required density of structures, and, second, that the district is signposted 'at the boundary lines' thereof; and if the uncontradicted testimony affirmatively shows either an insufficient density of structures within the alleged district or a failure to post signs at the 'boundary lines' of the alleged district, then the district is outside of a 'business or residence district' for the purposes of the act." See, also, Wheeler v. Buerkle, 14 Cal.App.2d 368, 58 P.2d 230. A similar construction was put upon the section, 758 of the Vehicle Code, in Cavalli v. Luckett, 40 Cal. App.2d 250, 104 P.2d 708.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 607

HEWETT et al. v. LINSTEAD et al.

Civ. 11834.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 10, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 9, 1942.

1. Trusts ⇐93

Where property was erroneously distributed to certain heirs who had no knowledge of the existence of other heirs, and all statutory notices were given, and there was no element of extrinsic fraud, and decree of distribution became final, heirs excluded from decree could not thereafter successfully impose a trust on property in hands of distributees on sole ground that distributees had received the property by reason of a "mistake" within meaning of the Code. Civ. Code, § 2224; Probate Code, § 228.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mistake".

2. Trusts ⇐93

Under proper circumstances, mistake, though unconnected with fraud, will warrant relief under the Code providing that one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it. Civ.Code, § 2224.

3. Trusts ⇐95

Where an heir knows of the existence of other heirs, and for the purpose of defrauding such heirs and benefiting himself, he fails to notify the court of the existence of such heirs, and knowingly files false petitions with the court representing that there are no such heirs, he is guilty of "extrinsic fraud" warranting the imposition of a trust under the Code on the fraudulent distributee's interest. Civ.Code, § 2224.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Extrinsic Fraud".

4. Appeal and error ⇐931(1)

On appeal by defendants from a judgment for plaintiffs on a bill of exceptions, the District Court of Appeal was required to give the findings the strongest interpretation in favor of plaintiffs.

5. Trusts ⇐110

In action by heirs of deceased wife of intestate who died after the wife, to impress a trust on intestate's property, which was distributed to defendants as intestate's sole heirs, evidence that many years prior to intestate's death, a defendant, who was intestate's niece and who was subsequently appointed his administratrix, visited intestate's home, and saw a woman come out of the home and shortly after go back into the home, and that such defendant thereafter made no effort to learn who the woman was or what relation if any she sustained to the intestate, was insufficient to establish that such defendant was guilty of "extrinsic fraud" within the Code as would justify declaring defendant to be an involuntary trustee of share bequeathed her for plaintiffs. Civ.Code, § 2224.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Action by Charles Hewett and others against W. J. Linstead and others to impress a trust on a portion of property distributed to defendants as the sole heirs of George Golden, deceased, on ground that the decree of distribution was procured through mistake and a species of extrinsic fraud. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendants appeal.

Judgment reversed.

Hale McCowen, of Ukiah, for appellants Linstead.

Thomas & Thomas, of Ukiah, and M. Anderson Thomas, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This action was instituted by plaintiffs for the purpose of impressing a trust on a portion of the property distributed to defendants as the sole heirs of George Golden, deceased. This relief is sought on the ground that the decree of distribution was procured through mistake and a species of extrinsic fraud. This appeal is prosecuted by defendants from a judgment for plaintiffs on a bill of exceptions.

The main point urged for a reversal is that the facts alleged, proved and found do not support the judgment.

It was alleged, proved and found that George Golden was predeceased by his wife

Ellen Hewett Golden; that plaintiffs are the heirs at law of Ellen Hewett Golden; that a portion of the estate of George Golden consisted of property, which, during the lifetime of his wife, was community property; that plaintiffs reside without the State of California; that none of the plaintiffs had any actual knowledge of the death of George Golden until after the final decree of distribution in his estate; that in the petition for probate defendants were named as the heirs at law, and the only heirs at law of Golden; that by the final decree of distribution in Golden's estate the entire estate was distributed to defendants, who are the three surviving brothers of George Golden, and a niece, who is the daughter of a predeceased sister of Golden; that the niece, Margaret Holt Hauser, acted as administratrix of the estate. Plaintiffs first learned of the facts after the final decree of distribution had been entered, but while an appeal was pending by a third person. They immediately moved under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set the decree aside. This relief was granted in the trial court, but the order was annulled on certiorari. Linstead v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.App.2d 9, 61 P.2d 355. That decision became final in December of 1936, and this action was instituted shortly thereafter.

Plaintiffs as the heirs at law of the predeceased wife of Golden, were entitled, of course, to one-half of that portion of his estate that consisted of community property under the provisions of section 228 of the Probate Code. It is admitted that in the estate proceeding all required statutory notices were given.

The trial court held that defendants held a portion of Golden's estate distributed to them in trust for plaintiffs. There is no finding, and it is not contended, that defendants had actual knowledge of the existence of plaintiffs. Certain facts are alleged and found which plaintiffs contend are sufficient to make a case on the ground of extrinsic fraud. These facts will be considered after first disposing of plaintiffs' contention that in the absence of any fraud whatsoever distribution to the heirs of George Golden to the exclusion of Ellen Golden's heirs, who did not learn of the death of Golden until after distribution, constituted mistake from which relief in equity may be had. In this connection plaintiffs place their reliance squarely upon the provisions of section 2224 of the Civil Code. That section provides that: "One who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it."

[1] We are thus faced with the problem as to whether, when property is erroneously distributed to certain persons (who, for the purposes of this portion of the opinion we will assume had no knowledge of the existence of other heirs) and all the statutory notices are given, and there is no element of extrinsic fraud, and the decree has become final, the persons who were excluded from the decree may successfully impose a trust on the property in the hands of the distributees on the sole ground that such distributees have received the property by reason of a "mistake" within the meaning of section 2224 of the Civil Code, supra. The cases clearly establish the true rule to be that where the distributees are innocent of any wrongdoing, the excluded heirs may not successfully impose a trust on the ground of such "mistake." The case of Lynch v. Rooney, 112 Cal. 279, 44 P. 565, involved exactly the same factual situation as exists in the instant case. In that case an heir did not learn of the death of his intestate until after distribution. The distributee and the administrator had acted in good faith, not knowing that the heir survived the decedent. The trial court imposed a trust under section 2224, Civil Code, supra. The Supreme Court expressly rejected the contention that the heir was entitled to impose a trust under section 2224. In so holding the court pointed out that the decree of distribution, not having been obtained by fraud, was final and conclusive as to who were the proper heirs; that if a trust were imposed it would in effect be setting aside the findings of the decree; that, "If such a thing could be done the stability of judgments and decrees would be a thing of the past"; that, "Decrees of distribution would be as unstable as the sands, for omitted heirs from such decrees would be seeking to have involuntary trusts declared thereon at most inopportune times, and in direct opposition to the law as declared by section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure, pertaining to the conclusiveness and finality of judgments and decrees." 112 Cal. page 287, 44 P. page 567.

The above case does not stand alone. In Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 P. 158,

the widow was the sole distributee of the estate of her husband. She did not inform heirs living in distant states of the death of her husband. There was some evidence from which it was claimed it could be inferred she knew of the existence of such heirs. These heirs sought to impose a trust under section 2224 and were non-suited. The judgment of the trial court was affirmed. The Supreme Court held that a final decree of distribution, when the proper statutory notices are given, is conclusive on the whole world; that heirs who have constructive knowledge of the decree are as much bound by it as those who have actual knowledge; that under the law every person, heir or creditor, who has a claim against the estate must present such claim in the manner and within the time provided by statute; that, whether he appears and presents his claim, or fails to appear, as long as such failure is not the result of acts of the person who secures distribution, the action of the court is equally conclusive. The court commented on the evidence as follows at page 78 of 131 Cal., at page 160 of 63 P.: "There is some general evidence tending in an unsatisfactory way to show that Elizabeth Waters knew of the existence of these plaintiffs several years prior to the death of her husband. There is also some evidence showing that she told W. H. Metson, an attorney at law, who prepared the petition for letters of administration in behalf of Grant and Pennell, petitioners for letters, that her husband had no relatives; and this is all the evidence of fraud that we can find in the record. The showing made is too weak to stand alone. It would not support a judgment if one rested upon it. The fact that Elizabeth Waters did not inform these relatives, living in different states, of the death of her husband, is not material here. No legal duty devolved upon her to furnish them with that information. There is nothing to indicate that she acted in bad faith at any stage of the administration, or made the statements to Metson with the purpose or design of defrauding anybody, or imposing upon the court. There is no evidence showing that she knew these plaintiffs were entitled to any part of the estate as heirs at law of her husband."

A similar holding was made in Beltran v. Hynes, 40 Cal.App. 177, 180 P. 540. In that case an heir of the decedent sought to maintain an action to impose a trust where the heir was admittedly entitled to share in the estate but resided in Mexico and had no knowledge of the death of her intestate. The estate had been distributed to a nephew of the deceased. In upholding the action of the trial court in sustaining a demurrer to a complaint alleging these facts this court stated at page 178 of 40 Cal.App., at page 540 of 180 P.: "No claim is made that due and legal notice as provided by law was not given of the hearing of the petition for distribution, nor is there any claim of the existence of any fiduciary relation existing between plaintiff and defendant, or of extrinsic or collateral fraud. Under these circumstances, the demurrer was rightfully sustained. Defendant was under no legal duty to notify plaintiff of the death of deceased, even assuming that he knew the plaintiff (Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 P. 158); and, proper notice having been given of the hearing, plaintiff is barred by the decree. (Langdon v. Blackburn, 109 Cal. 19, 41 P. 814; Warren v. Ellis [39 Cal.App. 542] 179 P. 544.)"

In Monk v. Morgan, 49 Cal.App. 154, 192 P. 1042, the court declared that an administrator and an heir does not in either capacity, owe to his coheirs any further duty of informing them of the death of the intestate and of the probate proceedings than that afforded by the giving of the statutory notices. The court went so far as to hold that such rule applied even where the distributee and administrator had actual knowledge of the existence of out-of-state heirs, and deliberately failed to notify them for the purpose of securing the estate for himself. It is to be noted that in the concurring opinion of Waste, P. J., he dissented from the above holding solely on the ground that a duty to notify out-of-state heirs exists when the administrator has knowledge of their existence—but he clearly implied that no such duty exists where the heir and administrator acts in good faith.

These cases establish the rule to be that where a distributee is ignorant of the existence of an heir, and such heir is excluded from the decree of distribution, and all statutory notices have been given, there has been no "mistake" that will warrant relief under section 2224 of the Civil Code.

[2] This does not mean that mistake unconnected with fraud will not warrant relief under the proper circumstances. The type of mistake intended by section 2224 is well illustrated by the case of Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P. 317, so strongly relied upon by plaintiffs in the present case. In that case the will that was presented for probate, and the will that was probated, gave to plaintiff a legacy of ten thousand dollars. Typewritten copies of this will were furnished interested parties, including plaintiff, in which, by mistake of a copyist, the word "ten" was typed as "two." As a result of this error the will was represented to all parties and to the court as giving a legacy of only two thousand dollars to plaintiff. This mistake was carried through all probate proceedings so that by the decree of distribution two thousand dollars were distributed to plaintiff, the balance of eight thousand dollars of her legacy being distributed to the residuary legatees. The court imposed a trust on the interest of the residuary legatees. In so doing the court emphasized that not only was the plaintiff free from any fault, but also that the mistake was made by the executors, one of whom was her husband, who owed her a duty of good faith. The plaintiff relied on the mistaken statements of the executors who were also the residuary legatees. The court held that in order to secure relief for fraud or mistake the situation must be one where the legatee is kept in ignorance of the true fact by some act of the distributee. The court emphasized that the legatee had been prevented from securing her full legacy by the affirmative acts of the residuary legatees. That is an entirely different type of "mistake" from that involved in the instant case. Here the defendants had no knowledge of the existence of plaintiffs. They owed them no duty to search them out. All notices were given. There was no act of defendants that tended to keep the plaintiffs in ignorance. There was no reliance by plaintiffs on any act of the defendants. Such a "mistake" is not contemplated by section 2224. It must be held, therefore, that relief may not be had in equity from a decree of distribution on the ground of mistake where all statutory notices are given and where the omitted heir fails to learn of the intestate's death, but the distributees, in good faith, are unaware of the existence of the omitted heir.

[3] The above discussion has been predicated on the theory that defendants were ignorant of the existence of plaintiffs and acted in good faith. Plaintiffs contend, however, that, under the facts, defendants were chargeable with knowledge that George Golden was married, and were under a duty to ascertain whether his wife was dead, and, if so, whether she had left heirs. Although there is some confusion in the cases, we agree with plaintiffs that the better rule is that where a legatee knows of the existence of other heirs, and, for the purpose of defrauding such heirs and benefiting himself, fails to notify the court of the existence of such heirs, and knowingly files false petitions with the court representing there are no such heirs, he is guilty of extrinsic fraud warranting the imposition of a trust on the fraudulent distributee's interest. In Mulcahey v. Dow, supra, it was impliedly held, and in Monk v. Morgan, supra, it was expressly held, that even in such a case the fraud is intrinsic and is not extrinsic. The better-reasoned cases, however, are in accord with the rule as above-stated. See Caldwell v. Taylor, 218 Cal. 471, at page 476, et seq., where the cases are collected and discussed, 23 P.2d 758, 88 A.L.R. 1194; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U.S. 61, 25 L.Ed. 93; see, also, cases collected in annotations in 113 A.L.R. 1235; 88 A.L.R. 1201. Thus, in Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 67 P. 282, 87 Am.St.Rep. 98, a one-eighth interest in decedent's estate was distributed to one Reuss, who it was alleged by the executrix, the wife of decedent, was the son of decedent. This fact was untrue and known to be so by both the executrix and Reuss, but not to the plaintiffs, the minor children of the decedent. It was held that this constituted extrinsic fraud. The court emphasized that the fraud was accomplished by the fraudulent connivance of the executrix who was the mother of the defrauded plaintiffs, and who had their actual custody and control and who was chargeable with all the high duties pertaining to that relationship. It was held that she was under a duty to disclose to the court all the facts, and her fraud in concealing the truth from plaintiffs and the court, and her conspiring with Reuss constituted extrinsic fraud.

In Simonton v. Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, 192 Cal. 651, 221 P. 368, the executor concealed certain property from the probate court, did not account for the same, and appropriated such property to her own use. It was held that failure knowingly to include the property in the estate of decedent was extrinsic fraud.

In Purinton v. Dyson, 8 Cal.2d 322, 65 P.2d 777, 113 A.L.R. 1230, an equitable action was brought by respondent to recover a certain share of decedent's estate which had been distributed to one Schaffer. In the petition for probate of decedent's estate, Schaffer stated under oath that the only heir of decedent so far as known to him was decedent's son, Purinton. Schaffer was appointed executor. Later he filed a petition for distribution in which he stated the persons entitled to distribution were Purinton, Dyson and himself who were the three beneficiaries of the will. Decree was so entered. Respondent alleged that at the time the above petitions were filed, Schaffer knew respondent was an heir of the decedent, and that he failed to disclose this fact so as to defraud her out of her share. In fact, a deal was made between the three abovementioned beneficiaries whereby it was agreed that if Purinton did not notify respondent of the death of decedent, that Schaffer would make a will in favor of Purinton. The court held the acts of Schaffer amounted to extrinsic fraud. The court stated at page 326 of 8 Cal.2d, at page 779 of 65 P.2d, 113 A.L.R. 1230: "It is true that in most cases of extrinsic fraud the defendant has said something directly to the person whose rights were involved amounting to representations that it was not necessary for such person to take any part in the proceedings. In other cases, acts have been held to amount to such representations. But the rule allowing the maintenance of an action in equity for extrinsic fraud should not be limited so strictly as to require as a basis evidence of representations made directly to the one defrauded." The court also quoted from Bankers' Trust Co. v. Patton, 1 Cal. 2d 172, 175, 33 P.2d 1019, 1020, as follows: "It is assumed that the willful suppression in bad faith of material facts in probate proceedings by which the plaintiff and other creditors would be deprived of property and assets to which they would otherwise become entitled in satisfaction of their claims would constitute an extrinsic fraud against which equity could grant relief by discharging the distributees as trustees, even though the decree of distribution itself be not disturbed." Based on this reasoning, the court held that the acts of Schaffer amounted to extrinsic fraud and imposed a trust on the property distributed to him. See, also, Zaremba v. Woods, 17 Cal.App.2d 309, 61 P.2d 976.

These cases establish that, where the executor or heir knowingly suppresses evidence of the existence of other heirs with intent to defraud them, the fraud is extrinsic warranting the equity court in granting relief, but where the executor or heir acts in good faith the decree is final and conclusive and equity is without power to impose a trust.

Plaintiffs contend that the facts of the instant case show that the defendants knowingly suppressed the true facts from the probate court. What does the record show in this regard? The complaint alleges that "many many years prior to the time the said George Golden came to California, he had resided in an Eastern State"; that he left that state in the company of Ellen or Helen Hewett; that the two came West together and finally moved to Fort Bragg, California; that they were husband and wife; that they resided in Fort Bragg for many years prior to the time they died; that the defendants "W. J. Linstead, Ed Linstead, Frank Linstead and Margaret Holt Hauser knew that the said George Golden and the said Ellen Hewett, also known as Helen Hewett, were so residing together in the County of Mendocino, during said time, and that they also knew that the heirs of said Ellen Hewett, also known as Helen Hewett, and as Ellen Hewett Golden were entitled to share in the distribution of the property of said George Golden, Deceased."

It is to be noted that it is not alleged that defendants knew plaintiffs were the heirs of Ellen, nor that they knew that there were heirs of Ellen. The complaint was the fourth filed.

The court did not find that the three Linsteads knew anything at all about the existence of plaintiffs. As to Margaret Holt Hauser, niece of the decedent and administratrix of his estate, it did find that she had actual knowledge that George Golden lived for more than thirty years at Fort Bragg, that "many years prior to the death of said George Golden the said Margaret Holt Hauser visited the said George Golden at his home in Fort Bragg, Mendocino County, California, and at the time saw the woman in the home of the said George Golden but never thereafter made further investigation so far as the evidence shows to ascertain the relation between the said woman and the said George Golden and never thereafter made any effort to find or ascertain the heirs of the said woman, who would be entitled to share in the community property belonging to the said George Golden, etc., and the said Ellen Golden at the time of the death of the latter."

The court further found that "notwithstanding such knowledge on the part of said Administratrix, she at all times represented to the probate court in which the estate of said George Golden, alias, was being probated, that she and her uncles, W. J. Linstead, Ed Linstead, and Frank Linstead were the only heirs of said deceased."

There is a further finding that when Mrs. Hauser went to Fort Bragg to see her uncle she inquired where he lived, and then went to his home; that "the woman she saw on that occasion came out of the Golden home and after remaining on the front porch for a short time went back into said home, and did not again appear while Mrs. Hauser was there, and it appears from Mrs. Hauser's testimony that she never thereafter made any effort to learn who this woman was, or what relation if any, she sustained to the said George Golden."

In the findings there is not one word that connects the three Linsteads with any knowledge of this occurrence. The evidence appearing in the bill of exceptions, which recites that it contains a "statement of all the evidence in the case and of all proceedings had therein," would not support broader findings than those above-quoted. Mrs. Hauser testified that she had seen her uncle, George Golden, but once in her life, and that was upon her visit to Fort Bragg; that the visit occurred in 1912; that, "After reaching Fort Bragg I went to his home and met him outside of the house where we talked for a short time. While we were talking a woman came out of the house onto the porch and then went back inside. I do not know whether she was living there or not. I never learned the woman's name as my uncle did not introduce us. I never knew that he was married.

"I did not then, or later, make any inquiry whether he was married or not, and did not ask him anything about the woman I saw on the porch of the house. I never tried to find out who that woman was. My uncle and I never corresponded and the only time I ever saw him was for those few minutes in 1912."

[4, 5] Under these circumstances, giving the findings the strongest interpretation in favor of plaintiffs, as we must, it is found that Mrs. Hauser visited her uncle in 1912, saw him for a moment or two, saw a woman come out of the house and then return inside. George Golden died in 1932. Between 1912 and 1932 Mrs. Hauser never saw her uncle again, nor did she correspond or hear from him. Under such circumstances, the trial court concluded that she was guilty of fraud in failing to remember the presence of the woman, in failing to assume or make inquiry as to whether she was his wife, in failing to ascertain in 1932 who the woman was, and in failing to ascertain that she was Golden's wife, in failing to discover that part of the estate was community property of George Golden and the woman, in failing to discover that this woman had predeceased Golden, and in failing to discover that plaintiffs were the heirs of the predeceased wife. To so hold would be in effect to rule that an administratrix is under a positive duty at her peril to discover the existence of possible heirs of whose existence she has no reasonable ground to suspect. Certainly, the 1912 visit and the fleeting view of a woman on the porch did not give her knowledge that Golden was married, that there was community property, that the wife had predeceased him, and that plaintiffs were the wife's heirs. To hold that the administratrix is guilty of extrinsic fraud under such circumstances, in not making inquiry for possible heirs, is to do violence to the many decisions heretofore cited. No other conclusion is possible but that defendants were chargeable with no duty owed to plaintiffs under the circumstances, and certainly were not guilty of acts sufficient to constitute extrinsic fraud.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment must be and is reversed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 618

THAYER v. FISH.

Civ. 11709.

District Court of Appeal, First District. Division 1, California.

Feb. 10, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 12, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 9, 1942.

1. Execution ⇐74

Where, after death of judgment debtor, distributee of judgment creditor secured from the superior court an order under statute authorizing the enforcement of the judgment, and by obvious typographical error the order read that the judgment could be enforced against the estate of the creditor rather than the estate of the debtor, trial court properly permitted the error to be corrected. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

2. Executors and administrators ⇐436

In action on rejected claim against executrix of estate, the proper township in which to have tried the action was the township of the executrix' residence. Probate Code, § 714; Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐453(2)

Generally, where extrinsic fraud or mistake of a personal representative in failing to disclose a claim against an estate is shown, the relief granted is limited to imposing a trust on the estate distributed, for the benefit of those entitled, and does not justify a personal judgment against the personal representative.

4. Executors and administrators ⇐315(4)
Trusts ⇐93, 95

Executrix, who gave statutory notice of hearing for distribution of estate as required by statute, and who acted in good faith, was not guilty of "extrinsic fraud" or "mistake", in failing to discover that action had been filed on rejected claim, and, on discovering the filing of the action, to inform the court, and holder of claim was not entitled to have decree of distribution set aside, or to have a trust imposed in his favor on the estate, or to judgment against estate for amount of claim or against executrix individually. Probate Code, § 1200.

5. Executors and administrators ⇐314(4)

Executrix who gave statutory notice of hearing for distribution of estate as required by statute and who acted in good faith was under no duty to communicate with each claimant who had had his claim rejected before filing a petition for distribution, and executrix performed her full duty when she inquired of the clerk of the court located in the township where she resided of the pendency of the suit on rejected claims and was under no duty to make inquiries in other counties and townships. Probate Code, § 1200.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Philip R. Thayer, individually and as executor, etc., against Emma Belle Mutchmor Fish, individually and as executrix, etc., to set aside a final decree of distribution in the estate of John T. Mutchmor, deceased, to impose a trust in favor of plaintiff, and to award a judgment against the estate for the amount of plaintiff's claim and against defendant individually. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Wm. B. Chaplin, of Oakland, for appellant.

Clarence E. Todd, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of the trial court setting aside the final decree of distribution in the estate of John T. Mutchmor, imposing a trust in favor of plaintiff on the estate as distributed to defendant, and awarding a judgment against the estate for the amount of plaintiff's claim and against the defendant executrix individually. The plaintiff's theory is that the decree of distribution in John T. Mutchmor's estate was procured as the result of the fraud or mistake of the defendant executrix who, it is claimed, concealed from, or at least failed to disclose to, the probate court at the time of distribution the fact that plaintiff had a suit then pending on a claim against the estate which had been rejected by defendant as executrix of the estate.

The facts as found by the trial court, and concerning which there is no material dispute, are as follows:

[1] On July 10, 1917, I. E. Thayer recovered judgment in Alameda County against John T. Mutchmor in the sum of $400 together with costs assessed at $8.50. Although the evidence and the inferences therefrom were in conflict, the court found that the judgment has never been paid. In May, 1918, I. E. Thayer died, and, in due course, the judgment was distributed to Philip R. Thayer, plaintiff in the present action. In May, 1931, John T. Mutchmor died, and, in due course, his wife, who has since remarried and who is the defendant in the instant case, was appointed executrix of his estate. After publication of notice to creditors, plaintiff secured from the superior court an order under § 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizing the enforcement of the judgment. By obvious typographical error this order read that such judgment could be enforced against the estate of Thayer rather than the estate of Mutchmor. At the time of the present trial the court granted plaintiff's request to amend the order on its face to insert the name of Mutchmor in place of Thayer. Appellant in a supplemental brief which the court directed to be filed on an entirely different point, for the first time raised the point that the court improperly permitted the amendment. For the purposes of this appeal we may assume that the trial court properly permitted the error to be corrected. This would seem to be the law. In re Estate of Goldberg, 10 Cal.2d 709, 76 P.2d 508.

After securing permission to enforce the judgment, plaintiff filed a claim in the estate of Mutchmor together with a copy of the order above-mentioned. No action was taken on that claim until April 20, 1936, on which date defendant, as executrix, executed a notice of rejection of the claim. This notice was served on plaintiff May 6, 1936. Under the law the plaintiff had three months after receipt of that notice to file his action on the rejected claim. § 714, Probate Code.

[2] On July 14, 1936, two months and eight days after receipt of the notice of rejection, plaintiff filed an action on the rejected claim against defendant as executrix of Mutchmor's estate in the Justice's Court of Oakland Township, Alameda County. The trial court found that defendant was then, and for many years prior thereto had been, a resident of Brooklyn Township in said county. The proper township to have tried this action was the township of the residence of the executrix. Vickerson v. Wehr, 42 Cal.App.2d 678, 109 P.2d 743; § 395, Code of Civ.Proc.

Two process servers visited defendant's home on several occasions but were unable to find defendant at home. Defendant at that time was, and for many years prior thereto had been, a teacher in the Oakland public schools. No effort was made by plaintiff's counsel to notify counsel for defendant of the pendency of the justice court suit, although the two lawyers had been in communication with each other concerning the claim. Process was finally served on defendant as executrix on September 30, 1936. Prior to this date, however, on August 19, 1936, three months and thirteen days after the service of notice of rejection of the claim, defendant filed her petition for final distribution. The petition referred to the claim filed by plaintiff, alleged that such claim had been rejected and then alleged that "more than three months have elapsed since the service of such notice of rejection, and no suit has been filed thereon." The final decree of distribution was presented to, and signed by, the probate court on September 15, 1936, the court not being advised on that date of the pendency of plaintiff's action. The entire estate was distributed to defendant.

The complaint alleged that there was a fraudulent concealment from the probate court of the fact that plaintiff had filed suit on the rejected claim. The complaint refers to the allegation that no action had been filed as "false and fraudulent," and as a "wilful and fraudulent concealment." The trial court, however, simply found that the probate court was not advised that suit was pending. There is no finding of fraud or wilful concealment. In fact, the evidence would not sustain such a finding. Neither defendant nor her counsel knew that the action had been filed on the claim. Defendant's counsel testified that before preparing the petition for the final decree of distribution he telephoned to the clerk of the justice's court in Brooklyn Township where defendant resided and was informed that no action had been filed.

[3-5] As already pointed out, the trial court not only imposed a trust on the property distributed to defendant, but also set the final decree of distribution aside and granted a personal judgment against defendant. It would seem doubtful whether the trial court had power to set the decree aside or to grant a personal judgment against the defendant. The general rule seems to be where extrinsic fraud or mistake is shown that the relief granted is limited to imposing a trust on the estate distributed for the benefit of those entitled.

11B Cal.Jur. 806, § 1301; Simonton v. Los Angeles Trust, etc., Bank, 192 Cal. 651, 221 P. 368; In re Estate of Walker, 160 Cal. 547, 117 P. 510, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 89; Sohler v Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 67 P. 282, 87 Am.St. Rep. 98; Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 P. 158; but see 15 Cal.Jur. 32, § 130; Baker v. O'Riordan, 65 Cal. 368, 4 P. 232; Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P. 317. Whatever the proper rule should be in such cases, we are of the opinion that in this case the trial court was in error in granting any relief to the plaintiff.

Plaintiff argues that, under the facts, defendant was guilty of extrinsic fraud or mistake, it being recognized that one of these must exist in order to grant any relief to plaintiff. The problem as to what constitutes extrinsic fraud or mistake sufficient to warrant an equity court in granting relief from a final judgment has been discussed in Hewett v. Linstead, 49 Cal.App.2d 607, 122 P.2d 352, this day filed. No useful purpose would be served by repeating what was said in that opinion. From the cases therein cited it is apparent that the facts above set forth are not sufficient to support the theory of plaintiff that either extrinsic fraud or mistake was shown. It is obvious that defendant acted in good faith. She gave the statutory notice of the hearing for distribution required by § 1200 of the Probate Code. That section only requires posted notice. While plaintiff argues that it would have been a simple matter for defendant's counsel to have telephoned to his counsel and to have asked whether suit had been filed, certainly no duty is imposed on an executrix to communicate with each claimant who has had his claim rejected before filing a petition for distribution. Moreover, it would have been an equally simple matter for plaintiff to have filed a request for special notice as provided by § 1202 of the Probate Code. In that event plaintiff would have had ample time to have advised the probate court of the pendency of his suit before the decree of distribution was entered. Moreover, defendant's counsel did make inquiry of the clerk of the court located in the township where defendant resided. Even if the defendant was under some duty to make inquiry, was that duty not performed when inquiry in the township of the residence of the executrix was made? Can it be the law that an executrix must not only make inquiry in the county or township where she resides, but also in other counties and townships? I think not. In the present case, the attorney for plaintiff could easily have protected his client against the very situation that arose by either filing the notice abovementioned, or by notifying the attorney for defendant of the filing of the action. Certainly there was no greater duty on the attorney for defendant to notify the attorney for plaintiff, than there was on defendant's counsel. Such a situation falls far short of a showing of extrinsic fraud or mistake.

Plaintiff relies on the case of Zaremba v. Woods, 17 Cal.App.2d 309, 61 P.2d 976, as supporting his contention. A study of that case demonstrates that it involved an entirely different problem from that presented in the instant case. There the fraud consisted of the wilful concealment of the heirs of decedent. There the sole legatee of a will secured by his undue influence falsely and fraudulently represented in his petition for probate that the decedent had no heirs when he had actual knowledge that the decedent had a brother living in Chicago. This, of course, prevented the statutory notice being given the brother. Clearly, such wilful concealment constituted extrinsic fraud, but in the present case there is no evidence of any knowledge on the part of defendant that a suit had been filed when she filed the petition for final distribution. The other cases cited by plaintiff such as Purinton v. Dyson, 8 Cal.2d 322, 65 P.2d 777, 113 A.L.R. 1230; Sohler v. Sohler, supra; Simonton v. Los Angeles Trust, etc., Bank, supra, and Scott v. Dilks, 47 Cal.App.2d 207, 117 P.2d 700, involved situations where the person making the false statement knew it was false and made it for the purpose of preventing the court from considering the rights of other parties. No case has been cited that holds that where all statutory notices are given, and where no duty because of relationship exists, and where the injury was caused as much by the fault of one party as the other, that an equity court possesses the power to declare a trust. There are many cases that hold where the distributee represents in good faith that there are no other heirs, and certainly a creditor stands in no stronger position than an heir, the equity court is without power to grant relief. Mulcahey v. Dow, supra; Monk v. Morgan, 49 Cal.App. 154, 192 P. 1042; Lynch v. Rooney, 112 Cal. 279, 44 P. 565; Beltran v. Hynes, 40 Cal. App. 177, 180 P. 540. It is the knowing suppression of the true facts with intent to defraud that is the gist of the action.

For the foregoing reasons it is quite apparent that under the facts plaintiff was entitled to no relief. The judgment appealed from is reversed.

KNIGHT, J., and B. C. JONES, J. pro tem., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 709

Ex parte RAMIREZ.

Cr. 1796.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 14, 1942.

1. Habeas corpus ⇐21

Where petitioner, seeking habeas corpus, while under sentence for misdemeanor of vagrancy escaped from industrial road camp, the holding of petitioner, after his apprehension, under charge of felony for escaping from the road camp was illegal and he was entitled to his discharge. Pen.Code, §§ 647, 995, 4532.

2. Escape ⇐1

The statute providing that a prisoner, charged with or convicted of a felony, who escapes from certain institutions shall be guilty of a felony does not apply to the escape of a prisoner who is committed for a mere misdemeanor. Pen.Code, §§ 17, 4532.

3. Criminal law ⇐27

A "felony" is a crime of a graver or more atrocious nature than those designated as misdemeanors.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Felony".

4. Escape ⇐1

The statute providing that every prisoner, charged with or convicted of a felony, who is confined in any jail or prison or industrial farm or industrial road camp and escapes or attempts to escape from such jail, prison, industrial farm or industrial road camp is guilty of a felony is not subject to the construction that a prisoner who escapes from institutions other than county jail is subject to the penalty therein prescribed if he had been committed for a mere misdemeanor while those who escape from a jail must have been charged with or convicted of a felony. Pen.Code, § 4532

5. Statutes ⇐195

Where a statute defining an offense designates one class of persons as subject to its penalties, all other persons are deemed to be exempt under the principle of "expressio unius est exclusio alterius".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Expressio Unius Est Exclusio Alterius".

6. Escape ⇐1

In determining whether petitioner, seeking habeas corpus, was illegally held on charge of felony for escaping from industrial road camp to which he had been committed after conviction for misdemeanor of vagrancy, statute confined to felony prisoners who escape from public training schools, reformatories or county hospitals was inapplicable. Penal Code, §§ 107, 647.

Habeas corpus proceeding by Philip C. Wilkins, on behalf of Frank Ramirez.

Writ granted.

Philip C. Wilkins, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

By means of habeas corpus the petitioner seeks to secure his release from the custody of the Sheriff of Sacramento County. He is held upon a charge of felony under section 4532 of the Penal Code for escaping from the Sacramento County Industrial Road Camp. After a preliminary examination, an information was filed in the superior court, charging him with the felony provided for by that section. A motion to set aside the information, under section 995 of the Penal Code, on the ground that he was illegally committed without probable cause, was denied. The evidence shows that he was convicted on June 30, 1941, of the misdemeanor of vagrancy under section 647 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail at Sacramento for the term of 130 days. He was subsequently transferred to the Sacramento County Industrial Road Camp, from which he escaped September 16th. He was subsequently apprehended and the felony charge for escaping from the officers of that camp was then instituted. He has served his sentence for the misdemeanor charge.

It is contended the petitioner is illegally held in custody and charged with the felony of escaping from the road camp for the reason that section 4532 of the Penal Code has no application to the escape of a prisoner from a road camp who is committed thereto for a mere misdemeanor.

[1] We are of the opinion the petitioner is illegally held in custody. Section 4532 of the Penal Code clearly provides that a "prisoner charged with or convicted of a felony" only, who escapes from the institutions therein named, shall be guilty of a felony. It makes no reference to the escape of a prisoner who is merely charged with or convicted of a misdemeanor. That section reads: "Every prisoner charged with or convicted of a felony who is confined in any jail or prison or industrial farm or industrial road camp or who is engaged on any county road or other county work or who is in the lawful custody of any officer or person, who escapes or attempts to escape from such jail, prison, industrial farm or industrial road camp or from the custody of the officer or person in charge of him while engaged on or going to or returning from such county work or from the custody of any officer or person in whose lawful custody he is, is guilty of a felony * * *."

[2, 3] The foregoing section does not make it a felony, or any offense whatever, for a prisoner to escape from the institutions mentioned therein, who is committed thereto on a mere charge of misdemeanor. It is only such prisoners as are committed or charged with a felony who become guilty of a separate crime for escaping from such custody. If the legislature had intended to make it a felony for a prisoner to escape, regardless of whether he was committed for a misdemeanor or a felony, it would have been very easy for it to have so provided. The fact that the legislature specifically refers to the escape of "every prisoner charged with or convicted of a felony," leads to the inevitable conclusion that the legislature deliberately omitted from that statutory offense of escaping from the custody of officers those prisoners who were merely charged with or convicted of misdemeanors. The foregoing construction of the application of section 4532 is reinforced by reference to the heading which precedes that section of the Penal Code. It reads, "From jail, industrial farm or road camp: Felons and persons accused of felony: Punishment." (Italics added.) From this heading it is apparent that it is merely "felons and persons accused of felony" who are deemed to be guilty of the offense defined in that section when they escape. The term "felony" does not include the offense of a mere misdemeanor. Sec. 17 of the Penal Code; Black's Law Dictionary, 3d Ed., 764. Section 17 of the Penal Code defines the term "felony" as follows: "A felony is a crime which is punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison. Every other crime is a misdemeanor. * * *" In Black's Law Dictionary, supra, it is defined as "A crime of a graver or more atrocious nature than those designated as 'misdemeanors.'"

[4, 5] It may not be reasonably said that a prisoner "who escapes" from institutions other than that of the county jail is subject to the penalty therein prescribed if he had been committed for a mere misdemeanor, while those who escape from the jail must have been "charged with or convicted of a felony." There is no room for that distinction. Clearly the various institutions successively mentioned in that section, from which the escape occurs, refer to one and the only class of prisoners which is therein described, namely, "prisoner[s] charged with or convicted of a felony." In 2 Lewis' Statutory Construction, 2d Ed., p. 918, sec. 491, it is said: "When a statute, defining an offense, designates one class of persons as subject to its penalties, all other persons are deemed to be exempted." For the application of the principle included within the common Latin phrase, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius", see People v. Doyle, 13 Cal.App. 611, 110 P. 458, and 15 Words & Phrases, Permanent Edition, at page 765.

[6] Section 107 of the Penal Code, as it now exists, has no application to this case, for it is confined to prisoners who escape from public training schools, reformatories or county hospitals. But the heading to that section also confines its application to "escapes of felony prisoners from other places of detention." (Italics added.)

When the case of In re Haines for a Writ of Habeas Corpus, 195 Cal. 605, 234 P. 883, was decided in 1925, section 107 of the Penal Code, as it then existed, was preceded with the heading "Punishment for escape of prisoner." The court seems to have placed great stress on that heading in support of its construction. In enacting section 4532, in 1941, the heading to the former section 107 was omitted, and it now applies, according to the present heading, to "Felons and persons accused of felony." Moreover, section 4532 was not adopted as an amendment to former section 107. That section was amended in 1941, to apply only to escaped prisoners from public training schools, reformatories and county hospitals. Section 4532 was adopted as a new section which is "added" to the code in part 3 of the Penal Code, "relating to prisons, jails, prisoners, terms and conditions of imprisonment, the death penalty, parole, reprieves, commutations, pardons, and convict-made goods." Stats. 1941, p. 1080.

In support of our construction of section 4532, we may reasonably assume the legislature considered it a more grievous offense for a felon to escape from the custody of officers than for a prisoner who is merely guilty of a misdemeanor, such as vagrancy. The first class is likely to be more dangerous to society than the latter class. The fact that the legislature considered it a more grievous offense for a felon to escape from custody than for a prisoner who was previously convicted of a mere misdemeanor is evidenced from the penal statutes which formerly existed with relation to the subject of escapes from custody. Section 105 of the Penal Code, which was repealed in 1941, made it a felony for "Every prisoner confined in a state prison" to escape. Section 106, which was also repealed in 1941, made it a felony for "Every prisoner committed to a State prison" who escaped while he was being conveyed to or from prison, or while engaged in the performance of work "outside such prison." Section 107, as it existed prior to the amendment thereof in 1923, merely provided that prisoners who escaped from "any other prison than the state prison" would be guilty of a misdemeanor only. It then read: "Every prisoner confined in any other prison than the state prison, who escapes or attempts to escape therefrom, is guilty of a misdemeanor." (Italics added.)

It thus appears that the legislature evidently considered it a much more serious offense for a felon who is committed to state prison to escape.

At least the clear language of the section, as it now exists, omits to include prisoners who have been convicted of misdemeanors only, and we are unable to reasonably hold that such petty offenders were intended, by mere inference, to be included within the class who are declared to be guilty of a felony for escaping from custody.

We are of the opinion that In re Haines, supra, upon which the respondent relies, is not authority for holding that section 4532 applies to escaped prisoners who have been formerly convicted of mere misdemeanors.

The writ is granted and the petitioner is discharged.

TUTTLE, J., and STEEL, J. pro tem., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 57

COBB v. COBB'S ESTATE et al.

Civ. 13424.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 19, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 16, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

Appeal and error ⇐555

Where proposed bill of exceptions had been stricken from the files, and no steps on appeal were taken under the alternative method, and period prescribed by court rules within which transcript shall be filed had expired and appellate court had refused to settle a bill of exceptions so that nothing remained before Appellate Court but an ineffectual notice of appeal, the appeal must be dismissed. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 650, 652, 953a, 953d; Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, Rule 6, § 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action between Charles Sherman Cobb and estate of Charles Henry Cobb and others. From an adverse judgment, Charles Sherman Cobb appeals. On respondents' motion dismiss the appeal.

Motion granted.

Charles Sherman Cobb, in pro. per., for appellant.

Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, of Pasadena, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This is a motion by respondents to dismiss an appeal which is taken from the verdict of the jury and the judgment rendered thereon. The motion is grounded on the claim that the transcript of record has not been filed and served within the time prescribed by law; that proceedings for a bill of exceptions had been dismissed by the trial court, and that no proceedings for bill of exceptions or transcript under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure are pending in the trial court. This motion is based on the certificate of the clerk of the trial court dated November 14, 1941, and filed in this court on November 18, 1941. This certificate contains the following averments:

(1) Notice of appeal was served and filed on March 24, 1941, by appellant, but the same does not state the court to which the appeal is taken; (2) no notice to the clerk to prepare a transcript under 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure has been filed; (3) motion for new trial was served on respondents on March 24, 1941, and filed the following day (this motion was denied on April 14, 1941, and minute entry of such denial entered April 16, 1941); (4) notice of order denying motion for new trial was filed July 31, 1941, and served on appellant by mail on July 29, 1941; (5) no clerk's transcript under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure has been filed; a reporter's transcript covering testimony taken March 18 and 19, 1941, was filed on September 15, 1941, and on September 22, 1941, a reporter's transcript on motion to settle bill of exceptions was filed; and (6) a proposed bill of exceptions was filed October 20, 1941, and a motion to strike the same was granted on the same day.

From the foregoing it is evident that no effort has been made on the part of appellant to perfect an appeal in accordance with the alternative method set forth in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, because no request for a transcript was filed within the ten days allotted, and no transcript was filed within twenty days thereafter, nor at any time, and appellant's time to take an appeal by this method has since expired.

It is at once apparent that appellant has attempted to present his appeal on a bill of exceptions. However, the court, after giving appellant time to amend his bill, which he refused to do, granted a motion to strike the proposed bill from the files on October 20, 1941. On November 25, 1941, this court dismissed appellant's petition to settle a bill of exceptions under section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The question now presented is whether appellant's appeal can or should be dismissed, and this question seems to have been settled by the case of Tingley v. Otis, 141 Cal. 71, 74 P. 448, wherein, upon an appeal, where a bill of exceptions had been stricken from the files by the superior court, the Supreme Court held that nothing remained before it except the notice of appeal, and that if no motion to dismiss had been presented, it would have been the court's duty to dismiss on its own motion.

Rule VI, section 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal provides that on motion to dismiss an appeal for failure to file the transcript within the prescribed time, there shall be presented the certificate of the clerk of the court below certifying "* * * the fact and date of the entry of order of termination, if any, by the trial court of any proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions or transcript. It shall be incumbent on the party moving to dismiss to show by such certificate or by affidavit that no proceeding for a bill of exceptions or transcript under section 953a is pending in the trial court, and if no such proceeding was ever instituted that the time to institute the same has expired." The case of Attkisson v. Reynolds, 94 Cal.App. 185, 270 P. 686, holds that a statement in the clerk's certificate in words following the wording of said rule VI, section 1, is insufficient and merely the conclusions of the certifying clerk. In the present case the clerk's certificate shows the fact and date of the serving and filing of the notice of order denying motion for new trial and the other steps taken or not taken under sections 650, 953a and 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is in accordance with the cases of Gross v. Cassin, 43 Cal. 27; Bruce v. Tunstall, 24 Cal.App.2d 370, 75 P.2d 120, and Atlas Assurance Co., Ltd., v. Tunstall, 24 Cal.App.2d 371, 75 P.2d 121, cited in support of the motion to dismiss. It is evident that the striking of the proposed bill of exceptions from the files leaves no bill of exceptions in the case; that no steps on appeal were taken under the alternative method; that the forty-day period prescribed in rule I, section 1, Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, within which the transcript shall be filed, has expired; and that the striking out of the proposed bill of exceptions and the refusal of this court to settle a bill of exceptions would seem to terminate proceedings completely as a dismissal in the lower court and leave this court in the same position as the court found itself in Tingley v. Otis, supra, that is to say, with nothing before it but an ineffectual notice of appeal.

For the reasons herein stated, the motion to dismiss the appeal must be granted, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. DUANE.

Cr. 2192.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 11, 1942.

Hearing Granted March 12, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐620(1)

A charge of kidnapping with intent to commit robbery was properly consolidated for trial with a charge of robbery of same person on the same occasion and with a charge of assault with force and violence on that person with intent to rob on a different occasion. Pen.Code, § 954.

2. Robbery ⇐13

One who assaults another under circumstances set forth in codal provision defining robbery with intent to commit the consummated offense is guilty of an assault with intent to commit robbery. Pen.Code, §§ 211 et seq., 220 et seq.

3. Criminal law ⇐620(1)

A charge of kidnapping with intent to commit robbery was properly consolidated for trial with a charge of robbery of the same person on the same occasion, with charge of kidnapping with intent to commit robbery of that person and his wife on a different occasion and with a charge of robbery of the husband on the latter occasion. Pen.Code, § 954.

4. Indictment and Information ⇐127

The offenses of robbery on different occasions and accompanying offenses of the same class of crime may be charged in different counts in one information.

5. Criminal law ⇐620(1)

The consolidation for trial of criminal informations or indictments must be for good cause shown and in the interest of justice, which presupposes that consolidation must be without prejudice to substantial rights of the accused. Pen.Code, § 954.

6. Criminal law ⇐1166(6)

A defendant may be prejudiced if forced to stand trial on one charge with a codefendant or codefendants who are charged with a distinct and unconnected offense, even though charges are subject to consolidation because they are of the same class. Pen. Code, § 954.

7. Criminal law ⇐620(1)

The fact that offenses charged occurred on four different dates within six months' period did not preclude consolidation for trial of seven charges including robbery, kidnapping with intent to commit robbery and assault with force and violence with intent to rob on one person and charges of the first two offenses committed on two different occasions against another person, whose wife on one occasion was also a victim of kidnapping with intent to commit robbery. Pen. Code, § 954.

8. Criminal law ⇐620(1)

Where defendant in course of robberies of two grocery stores committed acts leading to three charges of robbery, two charges of kidnapping of store managers with intent to commit robbery, one charge of kidnapping manager and his wife with same intent and one charge of assault with force and violence with intent to rob, fact that the crimes were perpetrated upon different victims did not preclude consolidation of the cases for trial. Pen.Code, § 954.

9. Criminal law ⇐620(1)

The consolidation of cases for trial is not jurisdictional, but merely procedural. Pen.Code, § 954.

10. Criminal law ⇐1163(1)

It is incumbent upon defendant on appeal to show substantial prejudice to his rights.

11. Criminal law ⇐1159(1)

In prosecution for kidnapping and robbery, where package containing dynamite was removed from defendant's automobile at about the time of his arrest, jury's implied finding was binding on reviewing court, as against claim that evidence of defendant's statement to his victim that a box in his possession contained dynamite was no proof that it actually did and that evidence of a test explosion was fabricated merely to impress the jury.

12. Criminal law ⇐739(2)

The credibility of witnesses on issue of alibi was a matter for the jury.

13. Contempt ⇐20
Criminal law ⇐665(4)

Disobedience of a trial court's order excluding witnesses from the courtroom may be punished as a contempt, but does not constitute ground for exclusion of the testimony of the witness.

14. Criminal law ⇐1170(1)

A judgment will not be reversed for erroneous exclusion of testimony unless it affirmatively appears from the transcript that testimony was material, relevant, not too remote and not cumulative.

15. Criminal law ⇐1163(1)

An appellant seeking to set aside a judgment of conviction must present the appeal on a record affirmatively showing reversible error, since such error will not be presumed.

16. Criminal law ⇐1120(3)

Where defendant's witness had admitted talking to attorney who had represented defendant in civil matters and who had occupied a seat at his counsel table during trial, refusal to allow attorney to testify did not constitute reversible error in absence of any showing of nature of testimony which attorney would have given.

17. Robbery ⇐13

Proof that perpetrator was armed with a weapon is unnecessary to establish offense of assault with intent to commit robbery. Pen.Code, § 220.

18. Criminal law ⇐1159(1)

Where jury on charge of assault with intent to commit robbery returned two verdicts, one finding defendant guilty of the offense and the second finding that charge of being armed with a weapon was true, insufficiency of evidence to support the latter verdict was not ground for reversal of conviction for assault with intent to commit robbery. Pen.Code, §§ 220, 669, 969c, 1158a.

PETERS, P. J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George J. Steiger, Judge.

James Duane was charged with kidnapping with intent to commit robbery and with robbery on three different occasions, and with assault with force and violence with intent to rob. From judgments and orders denying a new trial following the conviction of the defendant on the seven separately charged offenses, the defendant appeals.

Judgments of conviction and orders denying new trial affirmed in six of the actions and the judgment of conviction on charge of assault with force and violence with intent to rob modified and as so modified the judgment and order denying motion for new trial were affirmed.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener and Dennis Hession, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

Appeal from judgments and orders denying a new trial following the conviction of defendant on seven separately charged offenses. The informations charged the commission in the City and County of San Francisco of the following: Case No. 32,109, kidnapping on March 16, 1940, of Antone Burkard with intent to commit robbery; case No. 32,111, robbery on the same occasion; case No. 32,105, assault with force and violence on July 7, 1940, on Antone Burkard, with intent to rob; case No. 32,-106 kidnapping on July 10, 1940, of Allen F. McLean, with intent to commit robbery; case No. 32,107, robbery of McLean on the same occasion; case No. 32,108, kidnapping on August 6, 1940, of Frances McLean and Allen F. McLean, with intent to commit robbery; case No. 32,104, robbery of McLean on the same occasion.

Each information charged that defendant, in the commission of the designated offense, was armed with a weapon, to-wit, a pistol; and each contained an allegation of previous conviction in California of a felony, to-wit, receiving stolen property, in connection with which a sentence was served; also of conviction in the State of Arizona of the crime of felony, to-wit, burglary, for which sentence was likewise served. Defendant entered pleas herein of not guilty, but admitted the prior convictions. Over his objection, the above cases were consolidated, and, following trial, he was found guilty as charged in each information.

The cases involve a series of kidnappings and robberies, the robberies being of two Safeway grocery stores, and the victims of the kidnappings, the managers thereof respectively; in one of the cases the wife of one of the managers was kidnapped with her husband. One of the cases involves an assault upon one of such managers, with intent to commit robbery.

It is contended by appellant that the court erred in consolidating the cases for trial. So far as pertinent to the facts herein, under the provisions of section 954 of the Penal Code, two or more indictments charging offenses connected together in their commission, or crimes or offenses of the same class, may, in the discretion of the trial court, be consolidated for trial or may be divided into two or more groups and each group tried separately.

[1, 2] For the purpose of convenient consideration, three of the informations may be referred to as the Burkard cases, the other four as the McLean cases. In each of the cases charging robbery, kidnapping was committed in furtherance and in consummation thereof, hence "connected * * * in their commission." Penal Code, § 954; People v. Morales, 56 Cal.App. 270, 204 P. 1088. Among the Burkard cases there appears an offense of assault with intent to rob, alleged to have been committed upon the same victim four months after the original robbery and kidnapping perpetrated upon him. The felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by force or fear, is robbery. Penal Code, § 211. One who assaults another under circumstances set forth in section 211, with intent to commit the consummated offense, is guilty of an assault with intent to commit robbery. Both offenses are denounced in the Penal Code as crimes against the person. Pt. 1, tit. 8, chapters 4 and 6, §§ 211 et seq., and 220 et seq. Each offense is characterized by practically the same essential features, except that in robbery there must be a felonious taking of property.

Each information in the Burkard cases alleges the same perpetrator and the same victim. Up to this point the alleged offenses are sufficiently "connected." In People v. Johnston, 114 Cal.App. 241, 299 P. 805, it was held permissible to include robbery and burglary in the same information. However, there is a difference in the alleged dates of commission, but it has been held that this contention standing alone, is without merit in the absence of proof of prejudice. In People v. Northcott, 209 Cal. 639, 289 P. 634, 70 A.L.R. 806, the indictment contained three counts of murder, the first alleged to have been committed on or about February 2, 1928, and the other two on or about May 16, 1928. In People v. Feigelman, 65 Cal.App. 319, 320, 223 P. 579, the court said: "The fact that the two crimes charged against the defendant were committed, the one more than a year after the other, does not in our opinion furnish any ground for the claim that the court abused its discretion in consolidating said actions and causing them to be tried at the same time."

[3] The conclusions herein relative to the Burkard cases may be considered as applicable to the McLean cases of kidnapping and robbery on July 10 and August 6, 1940. The only allegation of factual difference appearing in the informations is that in the kidnapping on August 6th it is alleged that Allen F. McLean and Frances McLean were enticed and forcibly taken away by the defendant with intent to restrain them and thereby commit a robbery. The evidence discloses that Frances McLean is the wife of Allen McLean. If appellant had been charged in a separate information with the offense of kidnapping the wife, Frances McLean, with intent to commit robbery of the husband, Allen, on the same date, the offenses would have been sufficiently connected to warrant consolidation.

[4-6] The next point for consideration is the consolidation of the two groups, the Burkard and the McLean cases. Here we have offenses of the same general class, but alleged to have been committed upon different persons on different dates. The different offenses of robbery, and the accompanying offenses of the same class of crime under separate counts, could have been charged in different counts in one information. Technically the consolidation was without error, but the consolidation for trial of criminal informations or indictments must be "for good cause shown" and "in the interest of justice," which presupposes that the consolidation must be without prejudice to the substantial rights of the accused. A defendant may be prejudiced if forced to stand trial on one charge with a codefendant or codefendants who are charged with a distinct and unconnected offense. The charges may be of the same class and therefore subject to consolidation, but if unconnected and dependent upon evidence of an entirely different state of facts, one defendant may be prejudiced by evidence introduced in support of an information charging a second defendant with a separate offense. This state of facts appeared in People v. Davis, 42 Cal.App.2d 70, 108 P.2d 85. See, also, People v. O'Connor, 81 Cal.App. 506, 254 P. 630; People v. Foward, 134 Cal.App. 723, 26 P.2d 532; People v. Aguinaldo, 3 Cal.App.2d 254, 39 P.2d 505; People v. Shepherd, 14 Cal.App. 2d 513, 58 P.2d 970.

[7] Based upon the above, as applied to the facts in the present case we find that no valid objection could be presented to the consolidation of the Burkard and McLean cases solely upon the difference in allegations of dates of commission of the offenses unless peculiar circumstances surrounding the transactions, which do not appear on this appeal, should of themselves indicate that the defendant would be prejudiced by the consolidation.

[8] One further factual subject deserves consideration, namely, the perpetration of the crimes upon different victims. A consolidation under circumstances unnecessary to mention, which do not apply to the present case, may give rise to a reasonable conclusion that a defendant has in fact been prejudiced. However, the consolidation of indictments alleging different dates and different victims has been approved in this state. In People v. Kelly, 203 Cal. 128, 133, 134, 263 P. 226, 228, the offenses alleged in different counts presumably were committed on the same date. In that case the court said: "Appellant therefore argues that the provision of law (Pen.Code, § 954), under which the present indictment was filed, is unconstitutional in that it makes it possible for one, accused as he was, to be placed on trial at the same time, and with the same jury, on three separate and distinct charges of murder, committed at different times, at different places, upon different individuals, and requiring different evidence from different witnesses to establish each separate act. We know of nothing in the state or Federal Constitutions sustaining appellant's position, and we do not agree with his contention that two crimes of the same grade, or class, could not be joined in separate counts in one indictment at the common law." In People v. Hanna, 100 Cal.App. 509, 280 P. 379, two defendants were charged jointly in one information with robbery, and in a second information with another robbery. One of the defendants pleaded guilty to one of the charges. The court properly granted a motion that the two defendants be tried separately, and that the two charges against one of them be consolidated. In People v. Northcott, supra, the defendant was charged with three crimes of murder on two separate dates. Evidence of separate and distinct crimes other than murder, having no direct connection with the charges of murder alleged in the indictment, was introduced for the purpose of establishing a general scheme or plan. Had Northcott been granted separate trials, the facts of one murder might with equal force have been introduced for the same purpose. In People v. Thorn, 138 Cal.App. 714, 734, 735, 33 P.2d 5, 15, the court said: "As we have seen the three groups of crimes joined are forgery, fraud in keeping accounts in corporate books, and presenting false claims of insurance. The Legislature, it seems to us, meant by the use of the words, 'the same class of crimes or offenses,' in such section, offenses possessing common characteristics or attributes, and it would seem that the different offenses set out in the information here do have many attributes in common. Fraud is involved in them all, and the purpose of each is to obtain property or credit by false writings. The inference drawn by the jury was that they were so used. The offenses charged were closely related in the plan and scheme of their commission, and the joinder saved useless repetition of evidence, time and expense, both to the state and to the defendant. We think the different offenses were properly joined." In People v. Garcia, 2 Cal.2d 673, 42 P.2d 1013, the defendant was tried for two separate murders. At pages

680, 681 of 2 Cal.2d, page 1017 of 42 P.2d, the court said: "* * * the evidence when considered in its entirety suggests that the two homicides were the culmination of a plan on defendant's part to 'get' his two victims before they 'got' him."

[9, 10] In the present case the defendant had developed a well defined plan to unlawfully and feloniously obtain the property of Safeway Stores, Inc. The assault by force, violence and intimidation, and the kidnapping of Burkard, McLean, and the latter's wife, were merely incidents to the accomplishment of his purpose. The methods used in the perpetration of the crimes were manifestly similar. The consolidation saved the state and the defendant the ordeal of possibly seven separate trials. The consolidation was not jurisdictional; merely procedural. People v. Thomas, 45 Cal. App.2d 128, 113 P.2d 706; People v. Aguinaldo, supra; People v. Shepherd, supra. It is incumbent upon defendant on appeal to show substantial prejudice to his rights. A bald declaration by his attorney is insufficient upon which to base error. "The determination whether a motion for severance of trial should be granted always rests within the sound discretion of the trial judge. There can be no clearly defined rule for determining when a defendant is entitled to a separate trial because the exercise of discretion means that the decision must be based upon a just and proper consideration of the particular circumstances which are presented to the court in each case. Only where an abuse of discretion is shown will the ruling of the trial court be disturbed upon appeal." People v. Eudy, 12 Cal.2d 41, 46, 82 P.2d 359, 361. What has been said of severance is equally applicable to consolidation. An abuse of discretion herein is not shown—on the contrary the order of consolidation appears to be in the interest of justice.

The nature and character of many of the objections raised by the attorney for appellant cannot be definitely determined. In many instances reference to certain cross-examination is set forth as improper, the reviewing court being left to conjecture the basis of the claimed impropriety. However, in justice to the appellant, the entire record has been considered. It does not reveal misconduct on the part of the court or the district attorney, as contended by appellant, that could be the basis for a holding of prejudicial error. The evidence contained in the record—as to which, except that relating to alibis, there is little, if any dispute—is sufficient to uphold conviction of each offense charged.

[11] There is testimony that appellant at the time of the commission of one of the offenses showed his victim a box which he said contained dynamite, stating that it would be used to blow up Burkard's home if he refused to obey appellant's orders. This evidence appears in proof of the allegations of the Burkard robbery and kidnapping cases. About the time of appellant's arrest, a package containing dynamite was removed from his car. Appellant's claims—that his statement that the box contained dynamite was no proof that it actually did, and that evidence of a test explosion of the dynamite by the police was fabricated to impress the jury—are without merit. At least the jury's implied finding is binding on this court.

[12] A substantial conflict appears in each instance wherein appellant offered evidence tending to prove an alibi. The credibility of the witnesses in this as in other respects was a matter solely for the consideration of the jury.

Appellant contends that "another reversible error committed by the court is shown in the misconduct of the trial judge refusing to allow Mrs. Leila Leep * * * to testify as a witness." This contention arises out of the following situation. At the outset of the trial the assistant district attorney, Mr. Skillin, invoked the rule that all witnesses be excluded from the court room. Appellant's defense was conducted by the assistant public defender, Mr. Toner. Mrs. Leep is an attorney, who had represented appellant in certain civil matters, and she had evidently taken an active part in the preparation of his defense. At no time did she request to be associated as attorney of record for appellant in these criminal actions, but during the progress of the trial she occupied a seat at his counsel table and frequently consulted with the public defender and the appellant. On cross-examination of some of appellant's witnesses Mr. Skillin asked the question, as he had the right to do, whether prior to taking the witness stand they had talked or consulted with Mrs. Leep. The last witness so interrogated was Mrs. Lucille Meegan, by whom with others, appellant sought to prove that he was at his home on the night of March 16, 1940, the night he is accused of having committed the crimes charged in action No. 32,109, to-wit, the kidnapping and robbery of Anton Burkard. At the conclusion of Mrs. Meegan's testimony Mr. Toner called on Mrs. Leep to take the witness stand, but Mr. Skillin objected to her testifying upon the ground that she had been present in the court room during the trial of the case; and the court sustained the objection. That portion of the reporter's transcript showing the cross-examination of Mrs. Meegan and the proceedings relating to the sustaining of Mr. Skillin's objection is as follows:

"Q. [by Mr. Skillin, cross-examining] You still think it is Saturday night. And * * * who, if anyone, did you discuss the testimony with you were going to give here to-day? A. I discussed it with Mrs. Leep, and I discussed it with Mr. Duane's wife.

"Q. When did you discuss it with Mrs. Leep? A. I am not certain.

"Q. Well, when? A. It was several weeks ago. I am not certain.

"Q. Not since then? A. No. I talked to her exactly once.

"Q. Did you talk to her to-day? A. Yes.

"Q. Where? A. Right outside.

"Q. Right outside? A. Yes.

"Q. This morning? A. This afternoon.

"Q. And this morning? A. I think we exchanged the time of day.

"Q. That is all, just the time of day? A. That is all.

"Q. Did you talk with her after Mrs. De Soto left the stand to-day? A. Yes.

"Q. Mr. Skillin: That is all.

"Redirect Examination.

"Mr. Toner. Q. Just one question: Did Mrs. Leep suggest any testimony that you were to give here this afternoon? A. No.

"Mr. Toner: That is all.

"Mr. Skillin: That is all. (Witness excused.)

"Mr. Toner: I would like at this time to ask Mrs. Leep to take the stand.

"Mr. Skillin: Well, of course we object, if your Honor please to Mrs. Leep being sworn or testifying in this matter.

"The Court: She interviewed all of the witnesses. I couldn't allow it. She has been sitting here in court all the time the witnesses were being examined.

"Mrs. Leep: It is really my fault. I forgot I wasn't the man's attorney, because I had acted as his attorney, and I really felt in my heart I still was his attorney, and I have been trying to help him, as you know, here.

"The Court: There is no need of making any speech here, Mrs. Leep.

"Mr. Toner: Well, I am calling her, if the Court please, in good faith, because I feel that she didn't at the time realize as she sat here at counsel table that she would be excluded and not allowed to come forward as a witness in this matter. And that is why I am calling her.

"The Court: I don't see how I can permit it, under the objection." No statement or suggestion or offer of proof of any kind was made at any time during the trial as to the nature of the testimony Mrs. Leep intended to give, or as to the purpose for which she was called as a witness, or as to what testimony the appellant expected to elicit from her.

[13-16] Although there may be some conflict in the decisions of other jurisdictions, it has been held in this state that disobedience of a trial court's order excluding witnesses from the courtroom may be punished as a contempt, but does not constitute ground for exclusion of the testimony of the witness. People v. Russell, 34 Cal.App. 2d 665, 94 P.2d 400, and cases cited therein. But it is well settled that an appellate court is not warranted in reversing a judgment of conviction upon the ground of erroneous exclusion of testimony unless it affirmatively appears from the transcript on which the appeal is presented that the testimony sought to be introduced was material, relevant, not too remote, and not cumulative. Many of the later cases so holding are to be found in the 1940 supplement to vol. 7 of the New California Digest, Criminal Law (§ 1133). In other words, the rule is that it is incumbent upon an appellant seeking to set aside a judgment of conviction to present the appeal on a record affirmatively showing reversible error; that such error will not be presumed. It is evident, therefore, that since the transcript here is absolutely barren of any statement as to the nature of the testimony Mrs. Leep intended to or was expected to give, no legal ground for reversal has been established. The only suggestion as to the purpose for which she was called as a witness comes from appellant's brief, which was filed by his present counsel, who did not participate in the trial, and so far as the record shows was not present at any time during its progress. After setting forth the portion of the reporter's transcript hereinabove quoted, he says: "Thus it is shown that a biased and prejudiced Trial Judge refused to allow appellant the right to have a witness testify against the insinuations of Assistant Distric Attorney Skillin, constantly repeated as the record shows, in order to cast the reflection to the Jury that Mrs. Leep was advising these witnesses in which way to testify." Even though we were permitted to accept the statement made by counsel in his brief that such was the purpose in calling Mrs. Leep as a witness, it could not be held that the exclusion of her testimony constituted ground for reversal because Mrs. Meegan on redirect examination stated that Mrs. Leep had made no suggestion to her as to the testimony she was to give, and obviously if Mrs. Leep had been sworn as a witness she would not have been permitted under the rules of evidence to relate the conversation she had with any of appellant's witnesses, including Mrs. Meegan.

Subsequently appellant testified in his own behalf, and as part of his story denying he had committed the crimes charged in actions 32,106 and 32,107, to-wit, the kidnapping and robbery of Allen McLean on the night of July 10, 1940, he testified that on that night he had been in Mrs. Leep's office and that she had driven him home in her car, arriving there between eleven and eleven-thirty o'clock, at which time and place they were met by appellant's wife. However, after appellant had testified, no attempt was made to call Mrs. Leep as a witness in corroboration of his story, nor his wife, who appeared as a witness but was not interrogated on this subject, and since the only time that Mrs. Leep was called as a witness was prior to the appearance of appellant, it cannot be said, in the absence of any offer of proof, that the trial court might have anticipated that she was being called upon to corroborate the story which appellant afterwards told. In fact appellant's counsel nowhere in his brief makes any claim that the purpose in calling Mrs. Leep as a witness prior to the time appellant testified was to corroborate the story afterwards told by him. Counsel's sole criticism of the trial court's ruling is that "* * * appellant was denied the testimony of Mrs. Leep to cast aside and to dispel the insinuations of the District Attorney, whose conduct in the examination of all defense witnesses was most over-bearing, tending to prejudice the Jury * * *." It would appear, therefore, that in order to reverse the judgments of conviction in actions 32,106 or 32,107 upon the ground of erroneous exclusion of testimony, it would be necessary to go entirely outside of the record on appeal and even beyond any claims made by appellant in his brief and hold that if Mrs. Leep had been permitted to testify she might have given testimony in corroboration of appellant's story. Manifestly such a reversal would be based on pure conjecture, in which, of course, we have no right to indulge.

[17, 18] In action No. 32,105 appellant was charged with assault with intent to commit robbery, wherein it was alleged also that he was armed with a weapon, to-wit, a pistol, and the jury returned two separate verdicts, one finding appellant guilty of "assault with intent to commit robbery, as charged in the information," and the second finding that "the charge of being armed with a weapon" was true. There is no direct proof that on this occasion appellant was armed with a pistol. There is evidence that he approached his victim, Burkard, menacingly; that Burkard ran, and that appellant ordered him to halt or be shot. Upon the calls of Burkard's wife for help, and the appearance of others at the scene, appellant disappeared. However, the charge of assault with intent to commit robbery is based on the provisions of section 220 of the Penal Code, and upon an examination thereof it will be found that in order to establish the crime denounced therein it is not essential to prove that the perpetrator was armed with a weapon. The charge that he was so armed was added and the separate verdict based thereon was returned to conform to the requirements of sections 969c and 1158a of the Penal Code; that is, for the benefit of the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles in fixing the minimum term of imprisonment. Therefore the insufficiency of the evidence to support the latter verdict does not serve as ground for reversal of the conviction based on said section 220. It appears, however, that after properly pronouncing sentence on this conviction, the trial court in the exercise of the authority conferred by section 669 of the Penal Code, made an order that the sentence run consecutively to those pronounced on certain other convictions. It is ordered, therefore, that the order so made be set aside and that a new order be entered by the trial court directing whether, in view of the present state of the record, the appellant shall serve the sentence heretofore pronounced on this conviction concurrently with or consecutively to any other sentence or sentences imposed; that said new order be made and entered within sixty days after the filing of the remittitur herein in the trial court, and that a copy thereof be forwarded to the warden of the state prison wherein appellant is imprisoned.

In accordance with the views above expressed it is ordered that the judgment of conviction in action No. 32,105 be modified by striking therefrom the words "while armed with a weapon," and as so modified the judgment of conviction and the order denying the motion for new trial be and the same are affirmed. It is further ordered that the judgments of conviction and the orders denying new trials in each of the remaining actions be and the same are affirmed. It is further ordered that copy of the remittitur be served upon the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles.

KNIGHT, J., concurred.

PETERS, Presiding Justice (concurring in part).

I concur and dissent.

I agree that the consolidation for trial of the seven informations was proper. I also agree that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the respective convictions. I disagree, however, with the majority opinion in so far as it holds that the exclusion of Mrs. Leep's testimony was not prejudicial error. It is my opinion that the exclusion of this evidence requires a reversal in case 32,106 (kidnapping on July 10, 1940, of Allen F. McLean) and case 32,107 (robbery on July 10, 1940, of Allen F. McLean). I base this conclusion on the following matters disclosed by the transcript.

The record shows that defendant was charged with seven offenses. So far as the two offenses charged to have been committed on July 10, 1940, are concerned, his defense was an alibi. He testified that Mrs. Leep was his attorney in a civil suit then pending; that on July 10, 1940, he telephoned her about 11:00 a. m.; that at her direction he visited her office where he remained until 2:00 p. m.; that the two then visited San Rafael where they called on the deputy district attorney; that the two spent some time together in San Rafael and came back to San Francisco at about 5:00 or 6:00 p. m.; that they were together thereafter until 11:00 p. m. when Mrs. Leep drove him home where he arrived close to 11:30 p. m. McLean, the prosecuting witness, had testified that the offenses here under discussion had been committed by defendant just before or just after 11:00 p. m.

As pointed out in the majority opinion, at the outset of the trial the rule to exclude all witnesses was invoked. Mrs. Leep did not then disclose that she intended to testify. She had been the attorney for the defendant in a civil case and occupied a seat at the counsel table. When Mrs. Leep was called as a witness the trial court absolutely refused to permit her to be sworn—not because her testimony would be irrelevant, but because in its opinion, the witness by violating the exclusion order had rendered herself incompetent.

What is the proper rule to apply to such a situation? The majority opinion concedes that it was error to exclude her testimony. That this concession is in accordance with the law is supported not only by People v. Russell, 34 Cal.App.2d 665, 94 P.2d 400, but also by People v. Boscovitch, 20 Cal. 436; People v. Mack, 115 Cal.App. 588, 2 P.2d 209, and Mintzer v. Wilson, 21 Cal.App.2d 85, 68 P.2d 370. People v. Boscovitch, supra, is the leading case in this state. In that case the factual situation was identical with that presented in the instant case. On appeal the Attorney General confessed error. The Supreme Court held that reversible error had been committed, and, in this connection, stated:

"If the witnesses offered disregarded the rule of the court excluding their presence, until called, during the progress of the trial, the court might have punished them as for a contempt. The fact constituted no ground for the exclusion of their testimony. The defendant could not enforce the rule, and to deprive him of the benefit of their testimony for its disobedience, without fault on his part, was manifestly unjust and illegal." In Mintzer v. Wilson, supra, a civil case was reversed because a witness violating the rule was not permitted to testify.

The basis of the rule is obvious. The right of a defendant to present the facts of his defense should not be abrogated because of the misconduct of a witness over whom he has no control. The witness who violates the order of exclusion may be guilty of reprehensible conduct, and such witness may be punishable by contempt, and such conduct may affect the witness's credibility, but it must be remembered that it is not the witness that is on trial. The issue before the court is the guilt or innocence of the defendant. In order that such issue may be properly determined, the defendant is legally and constitutionally entitled to present the facts of his defense.

The majority opinion recognizes that the trial court committed error in refusing to permit Mrs. Leep to testify, but holds that since there was no offer of proof, the conceded error was not prejudicial. It is, of course, the rule, at least since the adoption of article VI, section 4½ of the Constitution, that it is incumbent upon the appellant not only to show error, but also that the error was prejudicial. The instant case, however, is not one where the trial court erroneously refused to permit a witness to answer a question, the relevancy of which does not appear from the question (in which case an offer of proof is indispensable), but is a case where the trial court refused to permit the witness to be sworn on the ground that by violating the exclusion rule she had rendered herself incompetent. In such a case an offer of proof, although proper, is not always indispensable. The true rule is stated in 64 Corpus Juris, 123, section 141, the text being supported by many authorities, and no contrary cases noted, as follows:

"An offer of proof is unnecessary where the offer would be a useless ceremony, or the evidence is rejected as a class, or where the court indicates such offer would be unavailing. An offer of proof is unnecessary where the court rules * * * that the witness is incompetent * * *." It is to be noted that the majority opinion cites no case to the contrary.

The reason for this exception to the general rule requiring an offer of proof is obvious. Such an offer is required for two reasons. In the first place, it is required so that the trial court may have the opportunity of ascertaining the relevancy of the proffered testimony. Where the trial court absolutely refuses to permit the witness to testify, regardless of the nature of his testimony, obviously an offer of proof would not serve this purpose. In the second place, an offer of proof is required so that the appellate court can ascertain whether the error in excluding the evidence was prejudicial. If the record is completely devoid of any showing on this issue and there is no offer of proof, the error in refusing to permit a witness to testify is not prejudicial, because it is incumbent upon the appellant to show prejudicial error. But where the record shows, with reasonable certainty, the probable subject matter that would have been testified to by the witness, the failure to make an offer of proof is not fatal to the appeal.

The majority opinion purports to state the rule substantially as it is stated in this dissent, but holds that a perusal of the record demonstrates that Mrs. Leep was probably called only to corroborate the several witnesses who had testified that she did not tell them what to say on the witness stand. I agree that the exclusion of this cumulative and corroborative testimony, although error, was not prejudicial. But this is not the only thing disclosed by the record. As already pointed out, defendant's defense to the two crimes alleged to have been committed on July 10, 1940, was that he was in the company of Mrs. Leep, an attorney at law, all that day and until after the hour the crimes are supposed to have been committed. It is true that the defendant did not so testify until after Mrs. Leep had been held to be an incompetent witness, but it would be an astonishing rule of law that would hold that in determining whether prejudicial error occurred the court must stop reading the transcript at the point where the trial court committed the error. Obviously, the record must be read as a whole. In determining whether the record reasonably discloses the probable subject matter of Mrs. Leep's testimony, in order to determine whether the erroneous order holding her to be incompetent was prejudicial, we should give the benefit of the doubt to the defendant. This is so because the error was the result of an improper objection by the prosecuting attorney and the arbitrary action of the trial court. The defendant was in no sense to blame.

Tested by these standards, what is disclosed? The record shows that, as to these two crimes, defendant's defense was an alibi—that he was in the company of his attorney, Mrs. Leep, when the crimes were committed. Is it an unnatural inference that she was called to verify that statement? I think not. Under the circumstances, are we not compelled to infer that this would have been the subject of her testimony? I think we are. Can we say, as does the majority opinion, that after the defendant had testified he should have again produced Mrs. Leep or made an offer of proof? I think not. Such a rule implies that the trial judge would intentionally commit error as long as he thought Mrs. Leep's testimony was of only minor importance, but would overrule himself if he knew her testimony was vital.

I believe that if we are to give more than lip service to the fundamental rule that a defendant—even a guilty one—is entitled to a fair trial, then under the circumstances of this case a reversal of the two convictions under discussion is required.

Appellant cannot successfully contend that Mrs. Leep might have testified as to issues involved in the other cases. It is incumbent upon appellant to show prejudicial error. In the absence of an offer of proof, and in the absence of a showing that the record reasonably discloses the probable nature of the testimony to be given by the witness, no prejudicial error has been shown.

It is therefore my view that the convictions of the two offenses alleged to have been committed on July 10, 1940, should be reversed.

50 Cal.App.2d 1

LAFRENZ et ux. v. STODDARD.

Civ. 11811.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 19, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⇐160(4)

Under statute, a motorist was bound to yield the right of way to a pedestrian in a legally established cross-walk. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

2. Automobiles ⇐160(3)

A motorist had a general duty to keep a lookout for pedestrians who might be lawfully using a legally established cross-walk.

3. Automobiles ⇐244(6)

Evidence that motorist failed to see pedestrians who were crossing street in a legally established cross-walk, that pavement was dry, that headlights on automobile were on, and that intersection where accident occurred was well lighted, warranted judgment against motorist for injuries sustained by pedestrians when struck by automobile. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

4. Damages ⇐132(3)

$7,500 was proper for injuries sustained by a married man where injuries, which necessitated confinement in a hospital for 38 days, caused considerable pain and consisted of fractures of third, fourth, and fifth lumbar vertebrae and a tear of ligaments between fifth lumbar process and the sacrum and ilium, and injured person was deprived of 20 per cent. of motion of his lower back.

5. Damages ⇐132(7)

$21,600 was proper for injuries sustained by a married woman where injuries consisted of fractures of both bones in both legs below knees, resulting in the woman's legs becoming permanently deformed and rendering it difficult and painful for her to walk, and there was medical testimony that woman had suffered serious injury to her brain, and the woman had sustained special damages to extent of $1,968 for hospital and rest home care before time of trial.

6. Trial ⇐207

In automobile accident case where plaintiff testified that after accident defendant told plaintiff not to worry and that, "I am well insured", instructing jury to disregard quoted words and that such testimony was admitted only for purpose of tending to show an admission of liability was proper.

7. Trial ⇐127

Where a defendant makes a statement which may be fairly construed as an admission or acknowledgment of responsibility, and as a part of the same statement makes incidental reference to the fact that he carries insurance, the entire statement is admissible, not to prove the fact of insurance, but solely because reference to insurance is part of the admission.

8. Witnesses ⇐275(3)

In automobile accident case where defendant denied on direct examination that he had told plaintiff that defendant was insured and that insurance company would have to make good for plaintiff's injuries, defendant could properly be cross-examined respecting a subsequent conversation between plaintiff and defendant where purpose of cross-examination was to elicit that in such conversation defendant did not deny that he had made the statement concerning insurance.

9. Appeal and error ⇐1048(6)

Where subject of plaintiff's inquiry on cross-examination of defendant was proper, the fact that plaintiff's counsel abandoned the inquiry in deference to trial judge's doubt as to its propriety placed counsel in no worse position than if he had pursued the inquiry.

10. Trial ⇐217

The better practice in an automobile accident case is not to go outside record to instruct that no insurance company is interested in the case.

11. Appeal and error ⇐1067

In an automobile accident case, striking out the words "or interested in" from defendant's proposed instruction reciting that no insurance company was a party to or interested in the action was not prejudicial.

12. Evidence ⇐571(1)

In action for personal injuries, the jury was not bound to accept a physician's diagnosis of plaintiff's condition.

13. Trial ⇐109

Argument of plaintiff's counsel, in opening statement in personal injury action, stating that plaintiff became for a time insane as result of injuries, was not prejudicial where evidence justified finding that plaintiff suffered from temporary insanity as result of injuries and jury was advised that opening statement was not evidence and was instructed that case was to be decided solely on evidence and that arguments of counsel were not to be taken as evidence.

14. Appeal and error ⇐1060(1)

Nothing short of bad faith in opening statement or a gross misconception of what is admissible, resulting in bringing to attention of jury matters wholly irrelevant, and of a nature calculated to create so profound an impression that charge of trial court cannot eliminate the prejudice produced, will justify an appellate court in vacating a judgment on ground of prejudicial remarks in opening statement.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Elmer E. Robinson, Judge.

Action by Henry Lafrenz and wife against Elgin Stoddard for personal injuries sustained when plaintiffs were struck by defendant's automobile. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Robert L. Lamb, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Vincent W. Hallinan and Devine & Devine, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs Henry Lafrenz and Rita Lafrenz, his wife, after a jury trial recovered judgment for personal injuries of $7,500 and $21,600 respectively. We cannot agree with appellant that the question of his negligence was a close one on the evidence or that the verdicts appeared to be excessive.

[1-3] Respondents were crossing Harrison Street between Seventh and Eighth Streets in San Francisco in a legally established cross-walk at the intersection of Langton Street with Harrison. Before stepping off the curb they looked to their left toward Seventh Street, saw no vehicles approaching and waited until the traffic signal at Seventh Street turned red. When they reached the center of Harrison Street they stopped, looked to their right and saw no vehicles or headlights nearer than Eighth Street and proceeded. As they approached the south curb of Harrison Street they were struck by appellant's automobile. Appellant testified that he did not see respondents until the instant before he struck them when he jammed on his brakes, killing his engine. He left skid marks on the pavement 29 feet in length and stopped in three or four car lengths, 48 to 64 feet. The accident occurred at about 5:50 p. m. on December 9, 1939; the pavement was dry, the headlights of appellant's automobile were on and the intersection was well lighted. Appellant's only explanation for not seeing respondents sooner was that they were "apparently hurrying as fast as they could and * * * Mr. Lafrenz was apparently trying to draw Mrs. Lafrenz after him as fast as they could go under the circumstances." The testimony of the respondents and the only other eye witness is that respondents were walking. In view of the duty cast upon appellant by section 560 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 188, to yield the right of way to a pedestrian in a legally established cross-walk and his general duty to keep a look out for persons who might be lawfully using such cross-walk, his failure to see respondents in the cross-walk under the circumstances existing in this case could hardly be attributed to anything other than negligent inattention.

On the question of damages the evidence showed as to Henry Lafrenz that he was unable to rise from the street after the accident; was confined to a hospital for thirty-eight days; during the first two weeks was unable to move and had to be fed; suffered considerable pain and still suffers pain when he walks; had fractures of the third, fourth and fifth lumbar vertebrae and a tear of the ligaments between the fifth lumbar process and the sacrum and ilium; the fifth vertebral process is now fused to the sacrum; he has been deprived of about 20 per cent of motion of the lower back; there is a tendency to pull the whole spine off balance; he suffers from an incontinence of urine which necessitates his constantly wearing a pad and clamp; and his injuries are now permanent.

[4, 5] Respondent Rita Lafrenz had fractures of both bones in both legs below the knees and her legs are now permanently deformed so that the knees practically knock together at every step rendering it difficult for her to walk. She has pain in both ankles and legs particularly when walking; she was rendered unconscious and lost all recollection until some time in March 1940, when she first realized that she was in the San Francisco Hospital; a spinal puncture on the night of the accident disclosed gross blood in her spinal fluid; she was so disoriented and irrational that she was removed to the psychopathic ward of the San Francisco Hospital for two weeks and still suffers from dizziness, pains in the head and faulty memory. Dr. Sooy who first saw her eleven months after her injuries were incurred expressed the opinion that she had suffered damage to the brain of a serious nature and that no further improvement can be expected. She was in the San Francisco Hospital over four months, and since has been at various sanitariums and the Laguna Honda Home. Her special damages for hospital and rest home care to the time of trial were $1,968. In view of the injuries received we cannot hold that the amounts of the verdict were not well justified.

Appellant cites no cases in support of his claim that the damages were excessive and we understand that he makes no contention that standing alone the damages allowed would justify a reversal. It is his position rather that in view of the closeness of the evidence on the question of liability and the amounts allowed for damages the errors which he alleges to have occurred on the trial must be held to have been prejudicial.

[6, 7] Respondent Henry Lafrenz testified that some time after the accident appellant called on him at which time he stated: "Mr. Lafrenz, I don't want you to worry too much. I am well insured and they will have to make good."

There was an immediate objection, assignment as misconduct, and motion for mistrial. The court instructed the jury to disregard the portion, "I am well insured" and admonished them that no insurance company is a party to this lawsuit, and further that the evidence was admitted only for the limited purpose of tending to show an admission of liability. This ruling was correct under the settled rule "that where a defendant makes a statement which may be fairly construed as an admission or acknowledgment of responsibility and as a part of the same statement makes incidental reference to the fact that he carries insurance, the entire statement is admissible, not to prove the fact of insurance, but solely because the reference to the insurance is part of the admission." North v. Vinton, 17 Cal.App. 2d 214, 219, 61 P.2d 950, and cases there cited; McPhee v. Lavin, 183 Cal. 264, 191 P. 23; Weiner v. Mizuta, 6 Cal.App. 2d 142, 44 P.2d 421; Bamber v. Belprez, 15 Cal.App.2d 110, 58 P.2d 1325.

On direct examination of appellant the following question was asked by his own attorney and the following answer given: "Did you ever say this to Mr. Lafrenz, 'Mr. Lafrenz, I don't want you to worry too much. I am well insured. They will have to make good.' A. I did not."

On cross-examination counsel for respondents asked appellant: "On the last trial, you heard Mr. Lafrenz testify on the witness stand that you said to him, 'Don't worry. I am well insured and they will have to make good.' "

After objection was overruled and without answer by the witness, counsel for respondents asked about a conversation between appellant and respondent Mr. Lafrenz: "Did Mr. Lafrenz say, 'One thing I am sore at you about is you are trying to make a liar out of me?' A. Yes."

After further objection and argument appellant was asked: "Q. Please state what the rest of the conversation was as to what was stated, to your knowledge: 'You tried to make a liar out of me' and what your response was."

Another objection and more argument followed and the trial judge asked counsel to discuss the matter with him in chambers. In chambers counsel for respondents stated: "At this time, in view of the court's doubt as to the admissibility of this evidence, I will withdraw the question. However, I want to state that the—and this is outside the presence of the jury, and in the court's chambers—that the purpose of asking the question was to elicit that when the plaintiff Lafrenz stated to the defendant Stoddard that he knew very well that he had made the statement that the insurance company would have to make good for his injuries, that Mr. Stoddard did not deny the accusation, but stated instead, 'Well, Mr. Lafrenz, I couldn't make them. I couldn't make the insurance company make good.'"

Upon returning to court the trial judge instructed the jury that the testimony elicited on that subject "shall be disregarded by the jury for all purposes."

[8] The inquiry for the purpose stated by counsel was within the field of legitimate cross-examination. If appellant had admitted making such a statement it would have tended to impeach his testimony on the stand and would also have been independently relevant as an additional admission of liability. If he had denied making the statement Lafrenz could properly have testified to it for both purposes. The other questions asked were stated by counsel to be preliminary and we think properly allowed, but in any event the court promptly admonished the jury to disregard them for all purposes.

[9] The fact that counsel for respondents abandoned the whole inquiry in deference to the doubt of the trial judge as to its propriety should put him in no worse position than if he had pursued it, as we believe he had a right to do. We cannot find on the record that any prejudice resulted to appellant.

Appellant proposed the following instruction from which the trial judge struck out the words which we have placed in parentheses:

"In your examination for the purpose of determining your fitness to act as jurors in this case, you were questioned concerning your interest in any casualty insurance company. This was merely for the purpose of determining your frame of mind.

"I instruct you that this is a case between the plaintiffs, Henry Lafrenz and Rita Lafrenz, on one hand and defendant, Elgin Stoddard, on the other. No insurance company is a party to (or interested in) this action."

[10, 11] While the giving of an instruction in the form proposed was held not to constitute error in Brown v. Yocum, 113 Cal.App. 621, 298 P. 845, the striking of the same words from a proposed instruction was expressly approved in Elmore v. County of Lassen, 10 Cal.App.2d 229, 51 P.2d 481. It would seem the better practice not to go outside the record to instruct that no insurance company "is interested in" the case, but in any event we cannot hold that appellant suffered prejudice by the omission. The jury must be given credit for ordinary intelligence and we can perceive no other reasonable construction that they could put on the instruction as given than that they were not to consider the question of insurance in arriving at a verdict.

Complaint is made that respondents' counsel in his opening statement was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in referring to a police report, which he knew was inadmissible, and afterwards made no effort to get into evidence, and in stating that respondent Rita Lafrenz became for a time insane as a result of her injuries and is obsessed with a terror that she may be declared insane and confined in an institution.

There was substantial proof of Mrs. Lafrenz's temporary insanity as a result of her injuries. Dr. Pinkham testified that "when she entered the ward shortly after surgery her condition was rather insane, she was completely irrational at times. * * * Later, I believe it was two months later, she was transferred to the physcopathic side because of her mental condition."

Dr. Poliak, a witness called by the defense who saw her in the psychopathic ward, found that "she was very confused and disoriented. She didn't know where she was...her talk was incoherent and irrational. She was seeing imaginary things, having hallucinations in other words ...she didn't remember how she got in the hospital or what it was all about, and also what we call confabulating, telling stories that obviously were not true."

[12] Dr. Poliak diagnosed her condition as Korsakoff's psychosis which is generally the result of alcoholism. However, the jury was not bound to accept this diagnosis. Dr. Sooy testified to a serious brain injury. Dr. Poliak's diagnosis was based on the patient's statement to him: "I asked her how much drinking she had been doing. At first she denied drinking at all; later she admitted drinking." Such an admission by a woman given to "confabulating" might well be regarded by the jury as another confabulation. There was no other evidence of Mrs. Lafrenz's addiction to the use of alcohol. Also Dr. Poliak testified that after further observation he made a few additional diagnoses. He made a diagnosis of cerebral arteriosclerosis. "Sometimes the vessels of the brain come hardened before other parts of the body,—and show a post-traumatic syndrome on her history of having been in an accident." Translated into layman's English Dr. Poliak found symptoms of traumatic effect upon the preexisting hardening of the brain arteries resulting in Mrs. Lafrenz's mental disturbance. Viewing the evidence as a whole the jury would be well justified in finding that she suffered from temporary insanity of several months duration as a result of injuries to her brain.

The jury was fully advised that the opening statement was not evidence. Counsel for respondents prefaced his statement by saying: "What I am saying is not argument or evidence.... You understand in this opening statement the plaintiff will point out what he expects the evidence will show. You understand that is the entire purpose of an opening statement."

[13] The trial court instructed the jury that they were to decide the case solely on the evidence and not to take arguments of counsel as evidence. It is hard to see how prejudice resulted. Any trial lawyer or judge at all experienced with juries knows that the making of positive claims that the evidence will show certain things followed by failure of proof on the subject is a two-edged sword apt to be more harmful to the one wielding it than to his opponent. Juries are frequently adversely impressed when proof falls short of promise, and the astute trial lawyer in his argument to the jury very often points out with telling effect the failure of his adversary to support by evidence the things which he forecast in his opening statement would be established.

It is only where the statements are inflammatory in character and calculated to blind the jury to the succeeding lack of proof that they will be found ordinarily to be prejudicial. The statements complained of here were not of that character.

[14] We think the rule applicable in such cases is correctly stated in Prentis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, 53 N.W. 153, 154, 17 L.R.A. 494: "It must be an exceedingly plain case of an abuse of privilege which will justify the setting aside the verdict on the ground of improper opening either in statement of the law or fact. Nothing short of bad faith or a gross misconception of what is admissible, resulting in bringing to the attention of the jury matters wholly irrelevant, and of a nature calculated to create so profound an impression that the charge of the court cannot eliminate the prejudice produced, will justify an appellate court in vacating a judgment on such grounds; and, in determining whether such an error has been committed, it is believed to be entirely safe to credit the jury with at least average intelligence."

The same rule in substance is announced in Mudrick v. Market Street Ry. Co., 11 Cal.2d 724, 737, 738, 81 P.2d 950, 118 A.L.R. 533.

We find the verdicts amply supported by the evidence and are satisfied that no prejudicial error occurred during the trial.

The judgments appealed from are affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

DRISCOLL v. EAST-WEST DAIRYMEN'S ASS'N et al.

Civ. 6433.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 11, 1942.

1. Statutes ⇐227

The word "may" used in the statute in some instances has the effect of "must" but generally the use of the word "may" carries no mandate and it is only when the context indicates or the object to be attained compels such a construction that the imperative shall be deemed the legislative intent.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "May" and "Must".

2. Agriculture ⇐6

The word "may" as used in provision of Agricultural Code that each cooperative association under its by-laws may provide for the manner of determining the value of a member's interest and make provision for its purchase by association on withdrawal of member, does not mean "must" and under the provision an association may or may not provide for immediate purchase and payment of interest of members voluntarily withdrawing. St.1933, p. 257, § 1200.

3. Agriculture ⇐6

Since cooperative marketing associations have become firmly implanted in the national scheme, courts will be reluctant to construe statute so as to destroy such an agency without the consent of the majority of its members.

4. Agriculture ⇐6

A by-law of a dairymen's cooperative marketing association which provided that interests of members in the association's property should be payable on liquidation of association was valid, and members who voluntarily withdrew from association which was a solvent, going concern and was not in process of liquidation, could not recover their share of money paid in and remaining in the funds of the association. St.1933, pp. 255–265 and p. 257, §§ 1191–1221 and § 1200.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; H. S. Shaffer, Judge.

Action by Patricia Driscoll against the East-West Dairymen's Association and others for moneys paid to the named defendant, a cooperative association, by its members who withdrew from the association. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

John J. Taafe, of San Francisco, C. Ray Robinson and Willard B. Treadwell, both of Merced, and George B. Harris, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. L. Royle, of Fresno, and F. M. Ostrander, of Merced, for respondents.

PARKER, Justice pro tem.

The case was presented in the trial court upon an agreed statement of facts supplemented by evidence illustrative and in elaboration of the agreed statement. There is little dispute as to the facts, the question here presented being one of construction.

The plaintiff is the assignee of a large number of persons and her rights depend entirely upon the rights of her assignors. We will hereinafter use the term "plaintiff" without regard to any assignment, treating plaintiff as though she were pursuing her individual cause, giving to her the status of her assignors. The defendant dairymen's association is a non-profit organization created and existing under the laws of this state, the statute governing such associations being now found in the Agricultural Code, § 1191 et seq., having been taken directly from the Civil Code, section 653bb et seq. Inasmuch as there was no change other than in the creation of a separate code, we will cite the law by reference to the appropriate sections of the Agricultural Code only.

The general scheme of cooperative association is found in the Agricultural Code, constituting chapter 4 thereof, and embracing sections 1191 to 1221, inclusive, St.1933, pp. 255–264. Section 1200 provides that each association formed under the provisions of the charter shall adopt for its government and management a code of by-laws not inconsistent with the chapter. This same section 1200 provides that:

"Each association, under its by-laws, may provide for any or all of the following matters:

* * * * * *

"(j) The number and qualification of members or stockholders of the association and the conditions precedent to membership or ownership of common stock; the method, time and manner of permitting members to withdraw or the holders of common stock to transfer their stock; the manner of assignment and transfer of the interest of members and of the shares of common stock; the conditions upon which and time when membership of any member shall cease; the automatic suspension of the rights of a member when he ceases to be eligible to membership in the association; and the mode, manner and effect of the expulsion of a member; the manner of determining the value of a member's interest and provision for its purchase by the association upon the death or withdrawal of a member or upon the expulsion of a member or forfeiture of his membership, or at the option of the association, the purchase at a price fixed by conclusive appraisal by the board of directors; and the conditions and terms for the repurchase by the corporation from its stockholders of their stock upon their disqualification as stockholders. In case of the expulsion of a member, and where the by-laws do not provide any procedure or penalty, the board of directors shall equitably and conclusively appraise his property interest in the association and shall fix the amount thereof in money, which shall be paid to him within one year after such expulsion."

The defendant association, here involved, did adopt by-laws. The particular by-law around which the controversy centers is as follows:

"Each person upon becoming a member of the Association shall pay to the Association one-half cent per pound on every pound of butter fat delivered by him to the Association, or marketed or disposed of through the facilities provided by this Association; said sum to become due and payable on the first day of each and every month, and said sum shall be deductible by said Association from the sums due each member for milk delivered during the preceding month."

The foregoing, with occasional addition, will serve as sufficient background from which the controversy may be reviewed.

The plaintiff had been a member of the defendant association, entitled to all privileges of membership under the by-laws. Acting within the scope of the said by-laws and in full compliance therewith, plaintiff chose to withdraw from membership and did so. While a member she had paid dues consisting of certain moneys deducted from the amounts received on her account by the association for milk which she had marketed through the association. Having withdrawn, she demands that the moneys paid in by her and remaining in the funds of the association be accounted for and her share thereof determined and paid to her.

The defendants concede that the plaintiff has some right or interest in the funds of the association, but claim that any distribution must, pursuant to the by-law hereinbefore set forth, be deferred until liquidation of the association. The trial court sustained the contention of defendants and determined that plaintiff was not entitled to any present accounting nor was she entitled to have her liquidation rights presently determined.

The question here to be determined relates to the validity of the by-law on distribution of assets and rights of withdrawing members.

It may again be noted that plaintiff here is the assignee of a large number of persons whose rights are unequal and among whom, upon distribution, differences both in sums due and in rights accruing, might arise. Many points are urged by the respective parties in support of the judgment and by way of attack thereon. But regardless of what form the attack takes, it always comes back to the one point, namely, the validity of the by-law. A determination of this point will dispose of the appeal and render unnecessary further inquiry or consideration of the many other contentions made, whether in support of the judgment or contra. It is agreed that the association is a solvent, going concern and not in process of liquidation. The by-law questioned sets forth the interest of each member in the property of the association and provides that such interest in the property shall be payable upon the liquidation of the association. The first attack on the by-law is that the same is in direct contravention of the general law, inconsistent with the provisions of the Charter and of the Agricultural Code and that it is a by-law not within the power of the association to adopt.

[1, 2] The governing section, sec. 1200, Agricultural Code, provides that each association formed under the provisions of the chapter, under its by-laws, may provide for "* * * the manner of determining the value of a member's interest and provision for its purchase by the association upon the death or withdrawal of a member." Appellant argues that the permissive "may" becomes "must" and that no discretion nor alternative remains in the association in regard to its by-laws; in other words, that all associations are commanded to adopt by-laws and that such by-laws are set forth in the section quoted. It is conceded that in certain instances the word "may" has the effect of "must." But, ordinarily, the use of the permissive term carries no mandate. It is only where the context indicates or where the object to be attained compels such a construction that the imperative shall be deemed the legislative intent. The legislature, in adopting the provisions setting up a voluntary nonprofit organization, would not ordinarily cast the mandatory provisions in permissive form. If it had been the legislative intent to set up a rule of conduct for all such associations and to prescribe and limit the rights and liabilities accruing through membership therein, it would have done so without the unnecessary mechanics of separate by-laws for each organization to be thereafter formed. We note also that the subdivision of section 1200 quoted, subd. j, refers to by-laws governing expulsion and what the by-laws may provide in that respect. It is apparent that the term "may" does not mean "must" in the latter case for the obvious reason that provision is made for the expelled members in cases where the by-laws are silent. It is thus apparent that while the associations might or might not provide for immediate purchase and payment for the interests of members voluntarily withdrawing, it could not enforce expulsion without fair compensation.

We hold that the phrasing of the section does not compel or warrant the mandatory construction. We may then consider the general purposes of all such legislation and the end sought to be accomplished thereby.

[3] The general purpose is reflected in the name chosen to designate the association, viz., "Co-operative." It was the legislative plan, conforming to a then manifest public policy, to permit and encourage, without the hampering restrictions peculiar to profit corporations, the pooling of interests between those engaged in similar enterprises and the securing of united action for the common benefit. From the inception of these organizations the scheme was deemed to be for the personal benefit of the members only to the extent that the individual profited through the operation of the enterprise. Tomes have been written on the purposes of cooperative associations. But nowhere has it been argued that the paramount concern was the advancement of the individual interest, as such. There is no need to wander into history or trace the growth of the cooperative idea. Cooperative marketing associations have become an established factor in the economic plan of the country, fostered and encouraged by legislative enactment, judicial construction and administrative policy. Thus firmly implanted in our national scheme, courts will be reluctant to construe statutes so as to destroy such an agency without the consent of a majority of its members. It is conceded that the present rule of statutory construction and of judicial decisions looks toward the general policy of the law as distinguished from the rule of private property or private rights in the abstract. As far as these announced ideas may apply to the instant case, there seems to be a dearth of California authority. However, the subject has been quite fully discussed in other jurisdictions. Clear Water Citrus Ass'n v. Andrews, 81 Fla. 299, 87 So. 903; Burley Tobacco Growers' Co-op. Ass'n v. Tipton, 227 Ky. 297, 11 S.W.2d 119; Texas, etc., Cotton Ass'n v. Lennox, 117 Tex. 94, 297 S.W. 743. See, also, Hanna on Law of Co-operative Marketing Associations.

In Evans and Stokdyk on The Law of Co-operative Marketing, at page 84, we find it stated:

"The members' demand for service is responsible for the creation of them (facilities of the corporation) and any advantage he may claim is only in proportion to the use he makes of them. His purpose is not primarily that of acquiring property interest, but merely of providing a means of marketing his products during the period of his membership. There is no logical ground upon which he should be permitted arbitrarily to withdraw his interest at the expense of the life of the association."

[4] In the case before us, plaintiff and her assignors have received in full all paid dues they were entitled to receive, namely, the benefits accruing to them from the organization and collective marketing during the period of their membership. The plan of the defendant association and its members was and is to further expand to the extent of procuring or erecting permanent plants and equipment, and the funds available therefor inure to the benefit of those who, at present, constitute the association and to those who may subsequently join therein. Plaintiff became a member by his own volition and submitted to the by-laws which are now attacked.

It would be a futile task to attempt any present accounting, in the absence of a right to distribution or payment, for the obvious reason that, in a going concern, the amount due upon future distribution would vary and become subject to the vicissitudes of the intervening period.

The questioned by-law, being in all respects valid and binding, is determinative of the rights of all parties to the present action.

The judgment is affirmed.

TUTTLE, J., and THOMPSON, Acting P. J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 60

PEOPLE v. SHAPIRO.

Cr. 3541.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 19, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

On appeal from conviction where jury was waived and cause was submitted to court on transcript of evidence adduced at preliminary examination, every fact which the trial court could reasonably have deduced from the evidence was required to be assumed by the reviewing court in favor of the trial court's decision.

2. Criminal law ⇐552(4)

Fact that evidence is circumstantial does not impair its intrinsic value, since law makes no distinction between circumstantial and direct evidence in degree of proof required for conviction, and merely requires that guilt be established beyond reasonable doubt by evidence of the one character or the other or both.

3. Gaming ⇐98(5)

Evidence including physical facts, sustained conviction of keeping a room equipped with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets or wagers on horse races. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

4. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

Where evidence is as equally compatible with innocence as it is with his guilt and the trial court as trier of fact rejects hypothesis pointing to innocence, and there is evidence to support implied finding of guilt as the more reasonable of the two hypotheses, reviewing court is bound by finding of the court, and it is only where there is no substantial evidence to support conclusion reached by the trial court that the reviewing court can set aside its determination.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. A. Scott, Judge.

Mike Shapiro was convicted of violating statute making it unlawful to keep, maintain or occupy any room, apartment, etc., equipped with books, papers, devices, apparatus or paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets or wagers on horse races, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Russell E. Parsons, Joseph L. Fainer, and Philip W. Erbsen, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and R. S. McLaughlin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, all of the above-named defendants were charged in count 1 with a violation of subdivision 2 of section 337a of the Penal Code; count 2 charged them with the offense denounced by subdivision 4 of the same Penal Code section; while in count 3 the defendants were accused of violating subdivision 1 of the same section. The defendants pleaded not guilty, waived trial by jury, and the cause was submitted to the court upon the transcript of the evidence adduced at the preliminary examination. All defendants were acquitted as to counts 2 and 3, and with the exception of appellant were found not guilty on count 1, the latter being found guilty of the offense charged in said count

1. His motion for a new trial was denied. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Generally speaking, subdivision 2 of section 337a of the Penal Code, which forms the basis of count 1 upon which appellant was convicted, makes it unlawful, among other things, for any person to keep, maintain or occupy any room, apartment, etc., equipped with books, papers, devices, apparatus or paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets or wagers on horse races.

The factual background of this prosecution may be thus summarized: Police officers entered a room located in an apartment house in the city of Los Angeles, where they found appellant seated at a table. On the table was a cash book, with $25.60 in change on top of some betting markers and collection sheets. In the cash book were found similar collection sheets. Several yellow sheets also were found on the table. At the trial it was stipulated that one of the officers was qualified to testify as an expert in connection with the business of bookmaking, and he identified the various sheets as collection sheets and totalized betting markers. Behind the davenport the officers found a file containing several papers, and under the davenport and a chair were found several scratch sheets, while additional scratch sheets were found on the premises. Certain numbers appearing on one of the prosecution's exhibits, when compared with the scratch sheet for July 30, 1941, showed that they referred to various horses racing at Rockingham and Arlington Parks, the amounts of various bets and the information whether the bettors won or lost. Other numbers on people's exhibits above referred to, when compared with scratch sheets for July 26th, showed that such numbers also referred to various race horses running on that date. As the officers were about to enter the apartment, defendant Myra Durschlag opened the door from the inside. She held a purse in her hand, which contained among other things a blue notebook and a sheet of white paper. The officers also found a scratch sheet for August 1, 1941, in a car registered to the last-named defendant parked in front of the premises. On one of the collection sheets appeared the word "Myra." This was written in pencil at the top and showed various collections from and payments to different persons, with a net balance of $25.60, which it is to be noted is the identical amount of money found on the table at which appellant was seated. The officer found similar names on the paper taken from Myra Durschlag's purse and the daily account sheets containing the names of various bettors which were found in the file. Shortly after the entry of the officers into the room defendant Joe Durschlag arrived. Police officers took a yellow collection sheet and two betting markers for August 1, 1941, from his pocket. When compared with the scratch sheet for August 1, 1941, the officer found the numbers on the markers represented race horses running at Del Mar on that day and the amounts of the various bets.

Leon Jasper, another defendant, arrived about three minutes after defendant Joe Durschlag. In the inside pocket of his coat an officer found three yellow collection sheets and betting markers. When compared with scratch sheets found on the premises for July 26th and 31st, these showed that the numbers on the betting markers referred to race horses running at Arlington, Rockingham and Hollywood Parks on those days. They also showed the amount the players had bet and the amount, if any, which they had won. In the wallet of defendant Jasper the officers found a receipt on which appeared the appellant's name and a white sheet of paper with numbers, which the defendant admitted he had written.

It is noteworthy that several of the collection cards had markings thereon resembling those used in bookmaking activities described by the police officer. In the files were also found many loose sheets of paper similar to those used in the keeping of books. At the top of each sheet was a designation, such as "Andy," "Bert," "Ed," and other names and initials. On such sheets were numerous entries of charges, credits and balances, apparently entered with a bookkeeping machine. Several of the names on these account sheets were also found in the daily cash book. Under the head "Revenue" appeared a loose-leaf sheet marked "Winning and Losing," which was opened May 20th with a credit balance of $616.30, which balance fluctuated from day to day, and the last entry, bearing date July 31, 1941, showed a charge of $173.70, a credit of $73.65, and a credit balance of $14,430.36. On another sheet, marked "Wages," was a showing of the payment of $350 per week from May 31st to July 22nd. These payments were shown to have been made to persons identified only by their first or given names, and were in amounts ranging from $30 to $60. The names of the recipients of these wages appeared also opposite various charges, averaging about a dollar per day, on a sheet headed "Gas Expense." The first entry was May 31st and the final entry was July 31st. In other words, there was a more or less complete set of books kept and maintained.

Appellant did not take the witness stand in his own behalf to explain his presence in the room or to deny any of the testimony hereinbefore narrated. In fact, he offered no defense whatsoever.

[1, 2] Appellant urges a reversal of the judgment herein on the sole ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the decision of the trial court finding him guilty of violating the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 337a of the Penal Code. In support of this claim it is argued that the evidence fails to establish that appellant either kept or occupied the apartment in question for the purposes denounced by the cited code section. In the adjudication of a charge made in a criminal proceeding, the court is confronted with the question of whether there is present proof of two distinct propositions: first, that the offense charged was committed; and second, that it was perpetrated by the person or persons accused thereof. In the case now before us, no doubt exists as to the first proposition. That a crime was committed is practically conceded by appellant, and indeed is amply established by the evidence. In determining whether appellant committed or participated in the commission of such crime, let us refer to the record for the existence therein of evidence, if any, from which the court could have justifiably drawn the inference of appellant's guilt. Every fact which the court could reasonably have deduced from the evidence must be assumed by us in favor of the court's decision. That the evidence was circumstantial does not impair its intrinsic value, because the law makes no distinction between circumstantial and direct evidence in the degree of proof required for conviction. It merely requires that guilt be established beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence of the one character or the other, or both.

[3] A review of the record herein discloses that when the officers arrived defendant Mrs. Durschlag had just opened the door of the apartment from the inside, preparatory to departing. Appellant was seated at a table in the living room, and in front of him on the table were a cash book and several collection sheets; and in this connection it might be noted that on two of the collection sheets appeared the name "Myra," Mrs. Durschlag's first name, the same being in her handwriting. Also upon the table was $25.60 in cash, which was the exact amount of the net balance shown on one of the cards bearing the name "Myra." Shortly thereafter the two other defendants entered, each having on his person collection sheets not only similar to those marked "Myra," but to others found in the apartment. In the absence of any explanation by the defendant of his presence in the room where the paraphernalia was under the circumstances above set forth, as well as those presented by the testimony hereinabove narrated, we feel that it was a fair inference for the court to draw that the three defendants came to the apartment to see appellant and deliver collection sheets and money to him, and that the latter was in possession of and occupied the room with bookmaking paraphernalia. The physical facts to which we have referred, coupled with the conduct of the defendant in connection therewith, are in our opinion amply sufficient to support a finding not only that the room was kept for the purpose of accepting wagers on horse races, but that the defendant was occupying the same and at the time of the entry of the officers was receiving and about to receive collection sheets and money from his co-workers. Such a conclusion is justified by reason of the fact that the evidence shows, through the exhibits introduced, that such had been the regular practice, as reflected by similar collection sheets found in the room.

[4] Appellant contends that the evidence in the case at bar is as equally compatible with his innocence as it is with his guilt, and that therefore we should reverse the judgment. Such is not the law. Under such circumstances, where the court or jury by its decision or verdict rejects the hypothesis pointing to defendant's innocence, and there is evidence to support the implied finding of guilt as the more reasonable of the two hypotheses, an appellate court is bound by the finding of the triers of fact. People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 184 P. 389; People v. Latona, 2 Cal.2d 714, 43 P.2d 260. It is only where there is no substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached by the court below that we can set aside its determination. In other words, unless the conclusion arrived at by the trial judge or jury does violence to reason, an appellate tribunal is without authority in law to substitute its finding as to the ultimate fact of guilt for that reached by the forum constituted as the final arbiter thereof.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and the order appealed from are, and each is, affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 662

PEARL et al. v. FIGONI.

Civ. 11796.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 11, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐930(1)

Upon appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, based on conflicting evidence, the facts most favorable to plaintiff must be assumed as proved

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐274(2)

Landlord's refusal to permit tenant to remove from leased house furnishings belonging to tenant until rent, which was in arrears, was paid, constituted a "conversion" rendering landlord liable for resulting damages.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conversion".

3. Landlord and tenant ⇐274(7)

Where landlord refused to permit tenant to remove from leased house furnishings belonging to tenant until rent, which was in arrears, was paid, the measure of damages for such conversion was the fair market value of the property, all of which was lost to tenant as a result of being sold or otherwise disposed of by landlord, who brought an action for unlawful detainer and obtained a summary writ of possession without notice to tenant. Code Civ.Proc. § 1166a.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Maxwell McNutt, Judge.

Action by John Pearl and others against L. Figoni for the conversion of personal property. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

F. E. Hoffmann and Raymond J. Daba, both of San Mateo, for appellant.

Jerome L. Schiller and Samuel G. Holcenberg, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment for the conversion of personal property. Respondents Pearl rented a house from appellant Figoni. When two months in default in their rent and on February 4, 1939, Mrs. Pearl with a Mr. Metcalfe and a moving van with three movers went to the rented house to remove the furnishings and furniture belonging to the respondents Pearl. There they met appellant Figoni who was later joined by a son and four or five others. Several hours were spent in an effort to remove the personal property from the house, during which time Figoni repeatedly made such statements as: "No, don't move anything because you still owe me rent"; "You cannot do it"; "They owe me the money and you cannot touch anything"; "You cannot move"; "No, you can not take a thing"; "No, don't take a thing"; "Not one stick of furniture goes out of here, and if it does, I call the law." When asked by one of the movers if they might not take everything except a gas stove, refrigerator and washing machine which should be ample to secure the payment of the rent due Figoni said: "No dice, it is all or nothing."

Mrs. Pearl began to cry and Figoni told her that if she gave him the key to the house he would allow her to take some bedclothing and personal belongings otherwise she would not be allowed to take anything. Under pressure of this position Mrs. Pearl gave the key to Figoni, removed the personal effects that Figoni permitted and left everything else in the house. Before leaving she gave her address to Figoni.

[1] Thereafter Figoni brought an action for unlawful detainer, got a summary writ of possession under section 1166a of the Code of Civil Procedure without notice to respondents and ultimately sold part of the contents of the house, gave some of them away and threw the balance on the city dump. While letters were addressed to respondents advising them that they could have their property upon paying accrued charges none was directed to the address given by Mrs. Pearl to Figoni and none was ever received by respondents. Many of the recited facts were contradicted by appellant and his witnesses but we assume as proved those most favorable to respondents as we are bound to do on appeal.

The case is controlled by Gruber v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 13 Cal. 2d 144, 88 P.2d 137, which is not distinguishable on its facts. In that case the court said at page 147 of 13 Cal.2d, at page 139 of 88 P.2d:

"The defendant's refusal in the instant case to permit the plaintiff to have access to his equipment or to remove the same while an arrearage in rent existed constituted an improper and wrongful exercise of dominion over the plaintiff's property in violation of his rights as owner and, as shall presently be shown, amounted to a conversion rendering defendant liable for whatever damage resulted therefrom—here, the market value of such equipment all of which, as indicated, was ultimately lost to the plaintiff."

Appellant cites two cases from other jurisdictions which he claims announce a contrary rule. Even if this is true we are, of course, bound by the cited decision of our own Supreme Court.

[2, 3] It follows that a conversion occurred on February 4, 1939, and what subsequently took place is only material on the question of damages, here the market value of the property all of which, as in the Gruber case, was ultimately lost to the plaintiffs.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 614

FELD v. CONTINENTAL CASUALTY CO.

L. A. 17956.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 27, 1942.

1. Insurance ⇐370

In action to reinstate disability policy canceled by insurer for nonpayment of premium until after expiration of grace period, evidence sustained findings that insured was not negligent in having arranged for forwarding of his mail, that insurer did not mail the premium notice to the insured as insurer had done for 17 years, that such failure was the sole reason for nonpayment of the premium, and that insured was without fault in failing to receive premium notice.

2. Insurance ⇐388(4)

An insurer was "estopped" to declare a forfeiture of disability policy executed in Missouri for nonpayment of premium until 12 days after expiration of grace period, where delay in payment of premium was due to fact that no notice of premium date was mailed to insured, although insurer had followed a custom for 17 years of mailing such a notice prior to date premiums became due.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

3. Appeal and error ⇐173(14)

Where insurer in insured's action for reinstatement of policy conceded that insurance contract was entered into in Missouri where insured had resided, and insurer made no claim to trial court that laws of any other jurisdiction were applicable and insurer did not claim on appeal that the laws of any specific jurisdiction were different from those of Missouri, and at trial insurer apparently acquiesced in trial court's application of Missouri laws, insurer could not for the first time on appeal claim that Missouri laws were not necessarily controlling.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Action by Milton H. Feld against the Continental Casualty Company for declaratory relief and reinstatement of an insurance policy canceled by the defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Crider, Runkle & Tilson, Clarence B. Runkle, and Joe Crider, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Herman A. Bachrack, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HAUSER, Justice.

This appeal has been taken by the defendant insurance company from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action for declaratory relief and reinstatement of a policy of insurance which was cancelled by the insurer for non-payment of premium.

The question presented for determination is whether an insurer is estopped to declare a forfeiture where the premium has not been paid until after the grace period therefor has elapsed—the delay in payment having been due to the fact that no notice of the premium date was mailed to the insured, although the insurer had followed a custom of mailing such a notice prior to the date the premiums became due.

The policy was executed on March 24, 1921, in the State of Missouri. It provided for indemnity to the extent of $400 a month against "loss of time" caused by bodily infirmity and premium in the sum of $120 was due annually on or before March 24, with a thirty-one day grace period thereafter. In 1935 plaintiff, who was then residing in New York City, notified the defendant company of a change in his address to 25 Central Park West, New York City. A short time later he moved to Los Angeles, California. Before doing so, he sent a notice to the New York City Post Office requesting that mail addressed to him at 25 Central Park West in that city be forwarded to the office of the Monarch Theatres, Inc., at 1270 Sixth Avenue, in the city of New York. Plaintiff was the retiring president of that corporation and as such he instructed one of its employees to open all mail sent to him at that address, and to forward to him at Los Angeles all communications relating to insurance premiums, etc. During the ensuing three years notices of the date when premium was due each year were sent by the defendant insurer to plaintiff and were received by him at Los Angeles through those channels. However, in the year 1939, plaintiff did not receive a premium payment notice from the defendant through the mail or otherwise. He asserted that due to the defendant's failure to send him a notice for that year the matter of payment of the premium was not called to his attention until May 6, 1939, when in looking over some of his personal papers and effects he found memoranda which reminded him of the fact that the premium for 1939 had become due on the previous March 24. Thereupon he immediately mailed his personal check to the defendant insurance company for the full amount of the 1939 premium, which, as heretofore indicated, was rejected by the insurer who shortly thereafter declared the policy lapsed. At the defendant's request plaintiff then executed an application for reinstatement, which also was rejected by the insurer. Thereafter the present action was instituted by plaintiff, who deposited in court the amount of the yearly premium for 1939.

The trial court found that plaintiff had made prompt payment of the premiums each year when due on the policy from 1921 to 1939; that ever since 1921, and for a period of 17 years, the defendant had followed the custom of sending to plaintiff each year, several weeks before the premium became due, a notice of the due date of the premium, and that plaintiff had relied on such custom in making the annual premium payments; that preceding the 24th of March, 1939, the defendant had prepared the customary premium notice for plantiff, but that it was not sent to him, nor did he receive any such notice, his failure in that respect being due to no fault of his own; and that solely as a result of the defendant's failure to mail the notice plaintiff did not make the 1939 payment within the grace period. The court also found that the defendant had not manifested an intention to depart from its custom with respect to the 1939 notice; that plaintiff's tender of the year's premium after lapse of the grace period was made within a reasonable time; and that the defendant had suffered no loss by reason of the 12 days' additional time taken by plaintiff in which to pay the premium after expiration of the grace period.

[1] The defendant insurer contends there was insufficient evidence to support the findings that (1) defendant did not mail the 1939 notice to plaintiff; (2) that such failure was the sole reason for nonpayment of the premium; and (3) that plaintiff's failure to receive notice was without fault on his part. Each of those claims has been resolved against the defendant either by an express or an implied finding of the trial court.

The evidence on which such findings were based includes the testimony of one of the defendant's employees to the effect that some time in February, 1939, there was placed on her desk a notice covering premium payment on plaintiff's policy, which she enclosed in an open-faced envelope and laid in a mailing basket on her desk; that she did not know what happened to it thereafter, although had the usual office routine been pursued the envelope would have been taken from her basket to be stamped and sealed in the mailing room and ultimately would have reached the United States mails; and that to her knowledge no such envelope was returned through the mails to the defendant's office. Another employee of the defendant testified to the routine procedure followed by the insurer in its mailing department, by which outgoing mail reached the postal channels; but there was no evidence which showed that a 1939 premium payment notice addressed to plaintiff was actually mailed at the time it was assertedly prepared, or thereafter, nor that the routine mailing procedure was followed on or about the date of such preparation for mailing of the notice. In addition thereto, the employee of the Monarch Theatres, Inc., in whose care plaintiff had placed the reforwarding of matters relating to insurance policies, etc., testified that no premium payment notice for 1939 addressed to plaintiff was received at the office of the Monarch Theatres, Inc., New York City.

With respect to the evidence adduced in support of the finding that plaintiff's failure to pay the premium was without fault on his part, the defendant contends there was no assurance that plaintiff would have received a notice had it been mailed to him; and that there was nothing to show his request for a rerouting of his mail would be carefully observed by the insurer more than three years after it had been notified of the New York address to which plaintiff desired notices to be sent,—the same period having elapsed since the time of plaintiff's notification to the postal authorities to forward his mail from such address to that of the Monarch Theatres, Inc. In that connection the defendant contends plaintiff made no showing that he had ever renewed his forwarding order with the post office and that a request to forward mail to another address is limited by postal regulation to a period of two years. However, the provisions of the regulation referred to, as set forth in the defendant's brief, do not show the observance of a forwarding order by the postal authorities to be necessarily limited to such period of time—although they indicate that such observance is mandatory during the two-year period. In any event, whatever may be the rule or general practice of the postal authorities with respect to the observance of forwarding orders, there was evidence presented in this case that plaintiff's order was complied with by the postal authorities during 1939, and that plaintiff received mail in Los Angeles during that year which had been forwarded to him by the employee of the Monarch Theatres, Inc., in New York City. Moreover, the question whether negligence existed on the part of plaintiff in having arranged for the forwarding of his mail in the manner indicated, even if pertinent to the issues here involved, would have been one of fact for the trial court,—as were the questions whether the defendant failed to mail the notice in 1939, and whether such failure was the sole reason for nonpayment of the premium within the grace period. But the question of plaintiff's negligence (if any) in the respect referred to is not involved in this case,—the trial court having found as a fact, on substantial evidence (which to some extent was conflicting), that the defendant did not mail the 1939 notice to plaintiff, and that the insurer owed him the duty to send such notice.

[2] In that connection, the defendant's principal contention is that where, as here, the policy specifies the date when premiums are due, and there is assertedly no showing of fraud or negligence on the part of the insurer in having failed to mail a premium payment notice, such failure is not a sufficient excuse for nonpayment of the premium—even though in previous years the insurer has followed the custom of mailing notices in advance of the premium due date. Plaintiff contends the great weight of authority is to the contrary and, in particular, that such contrary rule has been followed in the State of Missouri, the laws of which jurisdiction were regarded by the trial court as controlling here—the parties having proceeded to trial on that assumption.

Plaintiff's contention in that respect is correct. The Supreme Court of the State of Missouri considered the question here in issue at considerable length in the case of Missouri Cattle Loan Co. v. Great Southern Life Ins. Co., 330 Mo. 988, 52 S.W.2d 1, at pages 9, 10, and in its opinion rendered therein the following statement was made:

"The authorities are not uniform on the question of whether or not a custom of notifying the insured when the premium will fall due, such as the insured has reasonably come to rely upon, will amount to a waiver of the requirement of payment on the precise due date or estop the insurer from declaring a forfeiture for nonpayment when the customary notice has not been given and the insured has not been notified that the custom is to be discontinued. The rule supported by the greater weight of authority, and which we think most consonant with reason and justice, is thus stated in Joyce on The Law of Insurance (2d Ed.) vol. 3, § 1332: 'If a life insurance company has been in the practice of notifying the insured of the time when the premium will fall due, and of the amount, and the custom has been so uniform and so reasonably long in continuance as to induce the insured to believe that a clause for forfeiture for nonpayment will not be insisted on, but that the notice will precede the insistence upon the forfeiture, and the insured in consequence put off his guard, such notice must be given, and if not given no advantage can be taken of any default in payment which it has thus encouraged, for the insured is entitled to expect the customary notification; and to mislead the insured by not giving such notice, and then insist upon a strict compliance with the conditions of forfeiture, constitutes, under such circumstances, a fraud upon the assured which the courts have refused in numerous cases to countenance.' Many cases are cited in support of the rule stated. * * * That an insurance company may by a course of dealing which the insured has been induced to rely upon, create an estoppel to enforce a forfeiture for the insured's failure to pay promptly, notwithstanding the policy provides for such forfeiture, is in effect held in the following cases: James v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 148 Mo. 1, 49 S.W. 978; Goedecke v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 30 Mo.App. 601; Hanley v. Life Ass'n of America, 69 Mo. 380; McMahon v. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees, 151 Mo. 522, 52 S.W. 384; Britt v. Sovereign Camp, Woodmen of the World, 153 Mo.App. 698, 134 S.W. 1073; Woolfolk v. Home Ins. Co., Mo.App., 202

S.W. 627, where the company failed to give promised notice of maturity of premium note. In the last-named case the court cites many cases in support of its holding that the company was estopped from insisting on a forefeiture for nonpayment of the note."

It is true that in the Missouri decision the court concedes it was not necessary to hold that such custom, reasonably relied on, would alone create an estoppel, for the reason that, in the factual situation there existing,—in addition to the showing that the insurer had followed the custom of mailing premium notices,—it appeared that during the course of correspondence had between the insurer and the assignee of the insured the former had also expressly promised to mail such notices to the assignee. However, the court there directed attention to the fact that in most of the cases which it cited in support of its conclusion "the estoppel was created by a custom relied upon by the insured and without an agreement to give notice or to waive prompt payment of premiums." (Emphasis added.) A careful reading of that case discloses the fact that the Supreme Court of Missouri intended to and did give its unqualified approval to the rule which it set forth from the text, Joyce on Insurance Law, supra. Also, in Couch, Cyclopedia of Insurance Law, volume 3, pages 2193-4, the following comment is made: "* * * the greater number of the decisions apparently support the proposition that an insurance company, which adopts and uniformly adheres to the custom or practice of giving notice of payments for such a length of time as leads those insured to believe notice will be given, cannot declare a forfeiture without giving notice, or without previously advising the persons who have relied upon receiving notice that the custom will be or has been discontinued, and, consequently, that a payment within a reasonable time after the premium becomes due is sufficient, where the custom has been to send notice, and none is given." (See cases there cited.)

The ruling in the Missouri case, on which the trial court here predicated its decision in favor of plaintiff, has not been disaffirmed since its rendition, and a review of the cases from other jurisdictions shows that the weight of authority supports the rule there recognized and applied.

[3] The defendant also makes the contention, for the first time on appeal, that the laws of the State of Missouri were not necessarily controlling here. However, the record shows that by its pleadings the defendant conceded that the insurance contract was entered into in the State of Missouri, where plaintiff then resided; and that the insurer made no claim to the trial court that the laws of any other jurisdiction were applicable to the issues presented in this case. Moreover, from the general argument set forth in the defendant's closing brief, it does not appear that the insurer is making the claim therein that the laws of any specific jurisdiction—which conceivably it might have relied on as being controlling—are or were any different from those of the State of Missouri. In the light of those circumstances and of the fact that at the trial of the issues the insurer apparently acquiesced in the trial court's application of the laws of Missouri, the defendant may not for the first time on appeal announce a change of position in that respect. 2 Cal.Jur. 239, 241; In re Estate of Hein, 32 Cal.App.2d 438, 90 P.2d 100; Miller v. Forster, 131 Cal.App. 509, 512, 21 P.2d 678.

In view of our conclusion that the trial court was correct in ruling that the defendant was estopped to declare a forfeiture of the policy, other questions raised by the defendant in connection with the application for reinstatement, which was executed by plaintiff at the insurer's request, need not here be discussed.

From the foregoing it follows that the judgment should be and it is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

HAIME v. DE BEAULIEU et al.

L. A. 17935.

Supreme Court of California. *

Mar. 2, 1942.

Rehearing Granted April 1, 1942.

1. Trusts ⇐361

In case of a resulting trust, where purchase money is advanced by person taking title as a loan to purchaser, the conveyance being made to the lender as security, purchaser cannot demand conveyance until he has paid the money advanced for which the land is held as security.

2. Specific performance ⇐97(1)

Where defendants agreed to purchase realty for benefit of plaintiff with understanding that plaintiff could repurchase property prior to specified date, the plaintiff, while in default on her agreement to repay the defendants, could not have obtained a decree of specific performance. Civ. Code § 3391.

3. Trusts ⇐179

Where defendants agreed to purchase realty for benefit of plaintiff with understanding that plaintiff was to repurchase property and that property was to be rented in the intervening time, the action of one of the defendants in making remarks disclosing an attitude of open hostility against plaintiff and in preventing the renting of the property by wrongfully taking possession thereof without knowledge or consent of plaintiff was in violation of the defendant's duty as a trustee. Civ.Code § 2228.

4. Appeal and error ⇐172(3)

In action to quiet title, the plaintiff's failure to assert in trial court a claim to reimbursement for value of improvements did not preclude plaintiff from asserting such claim on appeal, where parties had stipulated that trial court should have jurisdiction to dispose of all issues which were shown by evidence to exist between parties and evidence disclosed that plaintiff had expended a substantial sum in making improvements.

5. Quieting title ⇐50

In action to quiet title to property which defendants had agreed to purchase for benefit of the plaintiff with understanding that plaintiff was to repurchase property, the defendants, who had refused to sign written agreement with respect to the property and who had admittedly violated one of the covenants thereof, could not insist upon enforcement against plaintiff of provision that if plaintiff failed to repurchase by agreed date she should lose all interest in property including value of improvements made by her.

6. Quieting title ⇐50

Where defendants had agreed to purchase property for benefit of plaintiff with understanding that plaintiff was to repurchase property prior to certain date, but plaintiff was unable to repay money advanced by defendants, the defendants' action in preventing rental of property, as contemplated by the parties, by taking possession thereof "estopped" them from receiving property enhanced in value by improvements placed thereon by plaintiff, who was entitled to an allowance for reasonable value of improvements as condition of quieting title in favor of the defendants. Civ.Code § 2228.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

7. Equity ⇐66

A cross-complainant seeking affirmative relief is an actor and must do equity if he would have equity.

8. Improvements ⇐4(1)

Equity grants compensation for improvements on theory that an unjust enrichment should be prevented.

9. Quieting title ⇐50

Where defendants had agreed to purchase property for benefit of plaintiff with understanding that plaintiff was to repurchase the property and that it was to be rented in the intervening time, but defendants in violation of the understanding took possession of property thereby preventing rental thereof, the plaintiff, who defaulted on her obligation, was entitled to an award of reasonable rental value of property during time defendants were in wrongful possession thereof as a condition of quieting title in favor of the defendants.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clement L. Shinn, Judge.

Action by Lulu G. Haime against Louis Hudon de Beaulieu and another to quiet title, wherein the defendants filed a cross-complaint asking for a decree quieting title in themselves. Judgment for the defendants and the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed with directions.

* Subsequent opinion 129 P.2d 345.

Redmond & Redmond, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Evans & Boyle, of Pasadena, for respondents.

HOUSER, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from a decree in favor of the defendants de Beaulieu by which title to certain real property was quieted in them as against plaintiff.

The record shows the following factual situation: In August, 1939, plaintiff owned a residence in San Marino, California, on which she had given a trust deed to the Mortgage Guarantee Company. She had also given a chattel mortgage to Carlton Finance Company on certain furniture which she owned. The trust deed was foreclosed in August, 1939, and the mortgage company became the purchaser at the sale. Thereafter, and on September 28, 1939, plaintiff entered into an oral agreement with the defendants Louis de Beaulieu and his wife, whereby they agreed to purchase the real property for the benefit of plaintiff, on the understanding that plaintiff was to be permitted to repurchase the property at any time prior to March 1, 1940. Pursuant thereto the de Beaulieus paid the mortgage company $1,000 on the purchase price of the realty and executed a promissory note for the balance thereof, together with a deed of trust as security therefor, in the sum of $5,115.98. It was further agreed between plaintiff and the de Beaulieus that, prior to March 1, 1940, plaintiff was to effect a release of such trust deed and pay them all moneys which they had expended in connection with their purchase of the property.

Pursuant to the purchase of the real property by the de Beaulieus a deed to them from a mortgage company was placed in escrow, but it appears that plaintiff advised the title company she claimed an interest in the property and as a result thereof no deed was delivered to the defendants.

At the time plaintiff entered into the agreement with the de Beaulieus respecting the real property, it was understood between them that plaintiff would make certain improvements and repairs to the realty, which obligation was subsequently carried out; also, that the property was to be rented and the rentals were to be applied toward the payment of interest on plaintiff's loan from the de Beaulieus, and for taxes. However, plaintiff contended the rentals were also to be applied toward the cost of repairs to the real property—if, after payment of the said interest and taxes, any funds remained for such purpose.

On December 5, 1939, at plaintiff's request, the de Beaulieus paid the amount due on the chattel mortgage and the furniture was moved into the residence. Plaintiff contended it was understood between the parties that on or before March 1, 1940, she was to reimburse them for that expenditure, whereupon she was to regain possession of the furniture.

On January 16, 1940, and in violation of the understanding between plaintiff and Mrs. de Beaulieu, the latter went into possession of the property, citing as her reason therefor that the mortgage company—under threat of foreclosing the trust deed, which would mature on April 1, 1940—had demanded that she do so. Except for the difference in the asserted understanding between the parties as to how the rentals were to be applied, the facts as heretofore related are not in dispute.

However, it is further alleged in the complaint that between the time plaintiff entered into the aforementioned agreement with the de Beaulieus respecting the real property and March 1, 1940, plaintiff attempted to effect a loan from a loan company in order to meet her obligation of March 1st, but was unsuccessful in doing so. In that connection she alleged that Mrs. de Beaulieu not only went into possession of the property, in violation of the agreement, and refused to move therefrom on plaintiff's demand,—thereby precluding the possibility of renting the property,—but that while she was in possession thereof and on an occasion when two appraisers visited the residence with respect to plaintiff's efforts to secure the loan, Mrs. de Beaulieu made certain statements in their presence which were derogatory to plaintiff's credit standing, and which, plaintiff alleged, were made for the purpose of preventing her from effecting a loan with which to make repayment to the de Beaulieus.

On March 1, 1940, plaintiff defaulted on her obligation. Thereafter, and on March 12th, she brought the present action on the theory that the agreement between the de Beaulieus and herself with respect to the real property created a resulting trust, but that, due to the alleged bad faith on their part, as heretofore referred to, a constructive trust was implied by law, as a result of which she asserted the right to compel specific performance of the agreement. The defendants de Beaulieu answered and filed a cross-complaint, asserting they possessed title to the property and asking for a decree quieting title in themselves. Thereafter trial was had and, on August 7, 1940, the court made an interlocutory order in which it was recited that as a condition of having title quieted in plaintiff's favor she would be allowed a period of thirty days in which to pay to the defendants the sum of $2,002.90, which was found to be the amount that the de Beaulieus had expended in connection with the property, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. Prior to the lapse of the thirty-day period plaintiff made a motion for a new trial and modification of the decree, and on October 4th the trial court modified its former decree by reducing the amount to be paid by plaintiff to $1,662, with interest at 7 per cent, and granted plaintiff an extension of time to October 12th in which to pay such sum. Plaintiff failed to make the payment and, on November 4th, the court rendered its final decree quieting title to the real property in the defendants as against plaintiff, but adjudging plaintiff to be the owner of the personal property, on the showing that she had reimbursed the defendants for the sums expended by them, together with interest, in discharging the chattel mortgage. Thereafter the court denied a motion for a new trial, and this appeal is taken from the interlocutory decrees and final decree quieting title to the real property in favor of the defendants as against plaintiff.

Plaintiff contends that, in view of the asserted bad faith evidenced by the defendants de Beaulieu in the respects heretofore mentioned, the interlocutory decrees were excessive and erroneous in that no interest should have been allowed on the sums found by the court to have been expended by them—which plaintiff was directed to repay as a condition to having title quieted in her favor; and, in any event, that interest in excess of 6 per cent should not have been allowed, that being the rate which, as stipulated by the parties at the trial, was originally agreed on between them with respect to the moneys to be repaid to the defendants.

[1, 2] However, those contentions are grounded on the principal claim that the trial court erred in rendering its decree quieting title to the property in favor of the defendants. The rule is that in the case of a resulting trust, where the purchase money is advanced by the person taking title, as a loan to the purchaser, the conveyance being made to the lender as security, the purchaser cannot demand the conveyance until he has paid the money advanced and for which the land is held as security. Hughes v. Korntved, 218 Cal. 3, 6, 21 P.2d 417; Lamberson v. Bashore, 167 Cal. 387, 139 P. 817; Woodard v. Hennegan, 128 Cal. 293, 60 P. 769; 25 Cal.Jur. 185, 186; 17 Cal.Jur. 753. By the terms of the agreement here in issue, the date on which plaintiff was to repay the de Beaulieus was fixed as March 1, 1940, and, as heretofore indicated, the trial court allowed her additional time in which to effectuate a loan or otherwise to secure the moneys with which to pay the defendants—the final decree not having been rendered until about eight months after plaintiff's default. While she remained in default, and until her obligation to the defendants had been met, the court could not have rendered a decree of specific performance in her favor. § 3391, Civ.Code.

However, plaintiff contends that in view of the fraudulent acts and conduct of the de Beaulieus, which were inconsistent with and violative of the duties owed by a trustee to a beneficiary, she should have been allowed as a credit in her favor the reasonable rental value of the premises during the period in which Mrs. de Beaulieu was wrongfully in possession and, in addition, that she should have had credit for the amount of money expended by her in making the repairs and improvements on the property.

[3] Before proceeding to a discussion of the contentions last referred to, comment should here be made with respect to the evidence pertaining to the relationship of the parties subsequent to the time they entered into the agreement. Although after hearing the evidence adduced by the respective parties the trial judge stated it had not been established to the court's satisfaction that the defendants de Beaulieu were responsible for plaintiff's failure to meet her obligation to them, and there was no direct evidence to show that plaintiff's failure in that regard was due to any act or statement of Mrs. de Beaulieu,—nevertheless there was evidence presented which showed that both prior to and at the time she wrongfully took possession of the premises, Mrs. de Beaulieu evinced an attitude of hostility toward plaintiff. As summarized in the bill of exceptions, her testimony, in part, was as follows: that "on an occasion when she was talking on the telephone two gentlemen came to appraise the real property and overheard her telephone conversation, and what she said over the telephone was not complimentary towards the plaintiff"; that "she did not make any comments to the appraisers concerning Mrs. Haime's credit standing, but on other occasions might have said something to other persons concerning Mrs. Haime's credit standing." The import of such statements, disclosing an attitude of open hostility harbored by Mrs. de Beaulieu against plaintiff, is wholly inconsistent with the duty of a trustee to "act in the highest good faith toward his beneficiary." § 2228, Civ. Code.

Moreover, the action of Mrs. de Beaulieu in wrongfully taking possession of the premises without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, thus precluding the renting of the property, and her refusal to move therefrom at the request of the latter, were in direct violation of the duty she owed to plaintiff. The situation thereby presented is analogous to that of a mortgagee wrongfully in possession. In Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 53, 59, 30 P. 1020, 1021, 31 Am.St.Rep. 175, the court said: "In this case the appellant's mortgage gave him no right to the possession of the mortgaged premises, and he did not take possession with the consent of the plaintiff. * * * [A] ppellant wrongfully entered upon the premises and ousted the plaintiff from the possession thereof, and in such a case it is very clear to us that the appellant is liable to be charged for rents and profits, precisely the same as any other disseisor would be, and he is not entitled to any accounting to determine how much he may have actually realized from this wrongful occupation, after deducting the necessary expenses of carrying on the farm." See, also, Bradley Co. v. Bradley, 37 Cal.App. 268, 173 P. 1013; Estate of Piercy, 168 Cal. 750, 145 P. 88; Fricker v. Americus Mfg. & Imp. Co., 124 Ga. 165, 52 S.E. 65; Lawley v. Hickenlooper, 64 Utah 543, 231 P. 821, 36 A.L.R. 1327; Candelaria v. Miera, 18 N.M. 107, 134 P. 829, 831.

[4-6] Furthermore, contrary to the defendants' contention, we do not agree that plaintiff should be precluded from now asserting a claim to reimbursement for the value of the improvements because such claim was not specifically urged by her in the court below, where, as disclosed by the record, the parties stipulated in open court that, the proceeding being one in equity, the trial court should have jurisdiction and authority to dispose of all issues which were shown by the evidence to exist between the parties. The facts adduced by the evidence disclosed that plaintiff had performed her covenant under the agreement by making improvements and repairs to the property to the extent of a substantial sum of money, as they also showed that the defendants had violated their covenant by wrongfully entering and taking possession of the property. But the defendants further contend that by the terms of a written agreement—a copy of which was introduced in evidence—which purportedly contained the covenants originally agreed on orally by the parties, it was contemplated that if plaintiff failed to meet her obligation of March 1 to the de Beaulieus, she should lose all interest in the property, including the value of the improvements. However, the record shows that although a copy of the agreement was received in evidence, the defendants had never signed such agreement, and in view of their refusal in that regard and the further fact that by their own admission they had violated one of the covenants of the written agreement, they are not now in a position to insist that all of its provisions are legally binding on plaintiff. With respect to her claim to reimbursement for the value of the improvements, in the Bostwick case heretofore referred to, where the facts showed that the defendant mortgagee had wrongfully seized possession of the property there involved, the court said: "The possession of defendant, and all that he did upon the land, were acts hostile to the title of plaintiff, and plaintiff is not required in this action, upon any principle of law or equity, to account to defendant for the value of the improvements thus made by him." Notwithstanding the factual difference between the two cases, we think the equities which were allowed to prevail in the cited case should be applied here, where the defendants have been guilty of similar wrongful and hostile acts, but who, because of plaintiff's inability to repay the moneys advanced by them on her behalf, and despite their dereliction, ultimately will receive the benefit of the improvements placed on the property by plaintiff. Under the facts of this case, to thus permit the defendants to take the property, enhanced in value by substantial improvements, toward the cost of which they contributed nothing, would be contrary to well-settled equitable principles.

[7, 8] Here the defendants, as cross-complainants, have applied to a court of equity for a decree quieting title as against plaintiff. The rule is that a cross-complainant seeking affirmative relief is an actor and must do equity if he would have equity. Chapman v. Hicks, 41 Cal.App. 158, 182 P. 336; Agmar v. Solomon, 87 Cal.App. 127, 141, 261 P. 1029; 10 Cal.Jur. 511; 27 Am.Jur. 279. With reference to the maxim just referred to, in O'Brien v. O'Brien, 197 Cal. 577, 584, 241 P. 861, 864, this court said: "It means that the court will not confer its equitable relief upon one seeking its interposition and aid—'unless he has acknowledged or conceded, or will admit and provide for, all the equitable rights, claims, and demands justly belonging to the adverse party, and growing out of or necessarily involved in the subject-matter of the controversy.'" The underlying theory on which equity grants compensation for improvements is that an unjust enrichment should be prevented. 27 Am. Jur. 276. Having acted in violation of their own promises and obligations under the contract, the defendants herein are estopped from claiming a right to receive the property, enhanced in value by plaintiff's act in placing the improvements on the real property in good faith and in performance of her covenants under the agreement. See 10 Cal.Jur. 515-517.

[9] From the foregoing we conclude that as a condition of quieting title in favor of the defendants de Beaulieu as against plaintiff, the latter is entitled to have awarded to her the reasonable rental value of the premises during the time the defendants were in wrongful occupation and possession thereof, together with an allowance for the reasonable value of the improvements made by her.

The judgment is therefore reversed in order that evidence may be adduced with respect to the two issues last referred to, and thereafter the trial court is directed to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed, and to render its judgment accordingly.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

KENT et al. v. CLARK.

L. A. 17845.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

Rehearing Granted March 27, 1942.

1. Fraud ⇐31, 34

A purchaser who has been induced to enter into a contract to purchase realty by the fraudulent representations of his vendor may elect to affirm the contract, retain the property received under it, and sue the vendor for damages in an action for deceit, and having chosen that course on discovery of the vendor's fraud, the purchaser need not continue performance but may properly withhold payments under the contract in an amount necessary to recoup the damages which he has suffered.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇐314(2)

Since a purchaser's failure to make payments due under a contract for the purchase of realty is excused because of fraudulent representations by the vendor inducing the purchaser to enter into the contract, the purchaser may set up the vendor's fraud as a defense to an action for the balance due under the contract, by way of answer to the whole demand, or in abatement of the damages, according to the circumstances of the case.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇐299(3)

In an action by a vendor to cancel contract for sale of realty, to quiet title to the realty, and for possession of the realty, purchaser may plead fraud of vendor in inducing purchaser to enter into the contract.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇐335

A defrauded purchaser who has been induced to enter into a contract for the purchase of realty by the fraudulent representations of the vendor may elect to rescind the contract for fraud, restore possession of the realty to the vendor, and recover the purchase money paid less the fair rental value for the use of the realty during the occupancy, and that right of rescission is available to a purchaser in default.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇐117

As a prerequisite to effective rescission of a contract for sale of realty, a defrauded purchaser desiring to rescind contract must restore to the vendor every thing of value which he has received from the vendor under the contract, or must offer to restore everything, on condition that the vendor shall do likewise, unless the vendor is unable or positively refuses to do so, and the offer to surrender possession of the realty need not be unqualified but may be made conditional on the vendor's restitution of the purchase money. Civ.Code, § 1691, subd. 2.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⇐337

A purchaser who has been induced to enter into the contract for the purchase of realty by the fraudulent representations of the vendor has a right to a lien on the realty as security for the repayment of the purchase money and for the value of any improvements placed on the realty, and that lien survives a rescission of the contract. Civ.Code, § 3050.

7. Vendor and purchaser ⇐117

Where a defrauded purchaser remains in possession of realty after his conditional offer of restoration, he is not claiming under the contract for purchase of the realty, and at the same time repudiating it, but, on the contrary, he has manifested no other intent than to rescind, and his claim to possession does not rest on the terms of the contract but is asserted in connection with his right to withhold the realty as security for the payments made by him to the vendor, and for the improvements placed by him on the realty.

8. Vendor and purchaser ⇐299(1)

Where purchaser of realty, on discovery of vendors' alleged fraud, served notice of rescission of contract for sale of realty on them and offered to restore possession of the realty on condition that they return all moneys paid under the contract, less the reasonable rental value of the realty, notice and offer had the effect of rescinding the agreement, and the purchaser had the right to retain possession of the realty and to defend successfully against an action of ejectment by pleading and proving the facts establishing the fraud.

9. Pleading ⇐147

Under statute providing that whenever defendant seeks affirmative relief relating to "transaction" on which the action is brought, or affecting the property to which the action relates, he may, in addition to his answer, file at the same time a cross-complaint, the facts surrounding the cause of action and not the form of the complaint are determinative of what constitutes the transaction, and if the defendant's pleading sets forth matter inextricably related to the matter forming the basis of the complaint, it meets the statutory requirements of a cross-complaint, and it is immaterial that the relief sought thereby is independent of that prayed for in the complaint. Code Civ.Proc. § 442.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Transaction".

10. Vendor and purchaser ⇐299(3)

In action of ejectment by vendors against a purchaser in default under an executory contract of sale, the purchaser was entitled to file a cross-complaint for rescission of the contract, on ground of the vendors' fraud, and for a judgment representing the amount paid under the contract, together with reasonable value of improvements placed on the realty, less the value of its use during occupancy. Code Civ.Proc. § 442.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

Action of ejectment by Charles R. Kent and others against Alverda Clark, wherein the defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Lorrin Andrews and Wm. J. Clark, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Emil H. Koehl, of Hollywood, for respondents.

EDMONDS, Justice.

The question presented for decision by this appeal is whether, in an action of ejectment brought by a vendor of realty against a vendee in default under an executory contract of sale, the vendee may set up fraud in the inception of the contract, either by way of defense to the action or by way of cross-complaint for rescission or damages. The trial court answered it in the negative and rendered judgment for the respondents, who are the vendors of the property in controversy.

The appellant entered into a written contract with the respondents under which she agreed to purchase a house and lot for the sum of $4,500, of which amount $200 was paid in cash. She agreed to pay the balance in stated instalments, with interest, and also to pay the taxes upon the property. Time was of the essence of the agreement. Although not provided for by the contract, she was given possession of the property.

Three years passed, during which the appellant made all payments required by the contract with the exception of certain taxes. Although these payments were not promptly made, the vendors accepted them. But upon the appellant's failure to pay an instalment which accrued in August, 1939, the respondents demanded, in writing, that she remedy the default immediately. Although there is some dispute as to the amount which was due at that time, the appellant admits that she was then in default so far as the payment of taxes is concerned.

A week later the respondents wrote another letter informing the appellant that unless the delinquent taxes and the balance of the instalment of principal then overdue were paid within three days, a forfeiture would be declared. The day after this letter was written, the appellant served upon the vendors a written refusal to make further payments and a notice of rescission of the contract, offering to restore to them the property upon condition that they return to her all money paid under the agreement, less the reasonable value of the use of the property. One month later, the vendors served a notice advising the appellant that her rights under the contract were thereby declared forfeited and demanding possession of the property. She made no further effort to remedy her default and refused to comply with the demand for surrender of possession. The present action followed.

The complaint alleges the making of the contract, the default thereunder, the vendee's attempted repudiation and rescission and her refusal to surrender possession after demand. These facts state a cause of action in ejectment upon which the vendors sought no further relief than possession of the property. To this complaint the appellant filed an answer, admitting execution of the agreement, her possession and default thereunder. By way of an affirmative defense, she alleged that the respondents demanded of her more than was due to them, that she was not given a reasonable time in which to remedy her default, and that she was induced to enter into the contract through the false and fraudulent representations of the vendors.

These asserted representations, all of which concern the nature, character and value of the property, are set forth with particularity. The answer also contains an allegation of the appellant's notice of rescission of the contract, her offer of restoration of the property to the respondents upon the condition that they return to her all money paid under the contract less the reasonable value of the use of the premises, and the refusal of the respondents to comply with this demand.

In a cross-complaint the appellant alleged the same representations, the fact that she had given notice of rescission, and the refusal of respondents to accept her conditional offer of restoration of the property. Under this pleading she prayed for a decree declaring the contract to be rescinded and for a judgment in the sum of $2,219.72 representing the amount paid by her under the contract, together with the reasonable value of the improvements placed upon the property by her, less the value of its use during her occupancy. As an alternative remedy, if for any reason rescission could not be had, she asked that she be awarded damages because of the vendors' representations, the amount of such damages to be set off against the purchase price of the land.

At the trial of the case upon these pleadings, when the respondents had concluded the presentation of evidence, the appellant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that she was not in default in the sum demanded by them and also that she had not been given a reasonable time in which to remedy her default. This motion was denied. She then proceeded with the presentation of her defense and offered evidence tending to prove fraud in the inception of the contract, as alleged in her answer and cross-complaint. The respondents objected to this evidence upon the ground that the alleged fraud was neither a proper subject of defense nor cross-complaint to an action in ejectment where possession only was demanded. The court sustained this objection. The appellant then made an offer of proof, to which the respondents interposed the same objection with the same ruling.

Thereafter the court gave judgment for the respondents, based upon findings that the appellant had repudiated, and was in default under the contract of sale; that the contract was not terminated by mutual consent; that the appellant had at all times since her default refused to make further payments under the agreement; that the respondents, as vendors, were entitled to possession of the property, but that the appellant was entitled to a reasonable time in which to remedy her default. The judgment fixed this time as not exceeding 60 days from its entry.

The appellant asserts that the ruling of the trial court in sustaining objections to evidence in support of her allegations of fraud was erroneous, and that the court also erred in failing to make findings of fact upon that issue. She also contends that it was an abuse of discretion to deny her motion for a new trial. The respondents rest their case upon the proposition that in an action of ejectment, the defendant may not set up fraud in the inception of the contract under which he took and held posssession either by way of answer or cross-complaint. More specifically, they rely upon the principle, frequently announced in the authorities, to the effect that where a vendee in possession under an executory contract of purchase has failed to perform his part of the contract and is in default with respect thereto without excuse, he may not maintain an equitable defense to an action of ejectment by the vendor.

[1] Two distinct remedies are open to a vendee who has been induced to enter into the contract of purchase by the fraudulent representations of his vendor. Notwithstanding the vendor's fraud, he may elect to affirm the contract, retain the property received under it and sue the vendor for damages in an action for deceit. Having chosen that course upon the discovery of the vendor's fraud, the vendee need not continue performance but may properly withhold payments under the contract in an amount necessary to recoup the damages which he has suffered. In other words, because of the vendor's fraud, he may avoid the obligation stated by the contract and excuse what would otherwise be a default. Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 379, 63 P. 692; Paolini v. Sulprizio, 201 Cal. 683, 258 P. 380; Pembrook v. Houston, 41 Cal.App. 54, 181 P. 828; Palladine v. Imperial Valley Farm Lands Ass'n, 65 Cal. App. 727, 225 P. 291; 25 Cal.Jur. 560.

[2, 3] In such a situation, as the vendee's failure to make payments is excused, he may set up the seller's fraud as a defense to an action for the balance due under the contract, by way of answer to the whole demand, or in abatement of the damages, according to the circumstances of the case. Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. R. Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 P. 550; Field v. Austin, supra; Hunter v. McKenzie, 197 Cal. 176, 239 P. 1090; Paolini v. Sulprizio, supra; Pembrook v. Houston, supra; Palladine v. Imperial Valley Farm Lands Ass'n, supra. And, for the same reason, the fraud of the vendor may be pleaded as a defense in an action by the vendor to have the contract canceled, to quiet title to the property, and for possession of the premises. The reason for this rule was stated in Nevada Land & Inv. Corp. v. Sistrunk, 220 Cal. 174, 30 P.2d 389, 390 where the court declared: "There would be little consistency or justice in a rule which, when the suit was for the payments due under the contract, would allow the buyer to set up damage caused by the fraud of the seller in answer to the demand or in abatement of damages, but, when the action was one for possession of the premises and to quiet title, would not allow the same matter to be pleaded as a defense against a forfeiture for failure to make the payments which the law says he may withhold."

[4] But the defrauded vendee has another and alternative remedy. He may elect to rescind the contract for fraud, restore possession to the vendor, and recover the purchase money paid less the fair rental value for the use of the property during his occupancy. This right of rescission is available to a vendee in default. Graham v. Los Angeles First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank, 3 Cal.2d 37, 43 P. 2d 543; Lombardi v. Sinanides, 71 Cal. App. 272, 235 P. 455.

However, by certain decisions it has been broadly and unqualifiedly held that a vendee who has elected to disaffirm the contract for fraud, may not thereafter remain in possession of the property and defend against an action in ejectment brought by the vendor. Having taken possession by virtue of the contract, it is said, the vendee may retain that possession only by faithfully performing the conditions of the contract under which he entered, and if he desires to rescind, he may do so only by a surrender of the premises to the vendor. To hold otherwise, according to this reasoning, would allow the vendee to assume the inconsistent position of repudiating the contract and at the same time claiming under it. This analysis of the legal principles involved, at least as applied to the facts of the present case, may not be legally or logically sustained.

[5] True, as a prerequisite to effective rescission of a contract, a defrauded vendee desiring to rescind his contract "must restore to the other party everything of value which he has received from him under the contract; or must offer to restore the same, upon condition that such party shall do likewise, unless the latter is unable or positively refuses to do so." Sec. 1691, subd. 2, Civ.Code. But by the express terms of this code section, the offer to surrender possession of property received under the contract need not be unqualified but may be made conditional upon the vendor's restitution of the purchase money.

[6, 7] The vendee's remedies also include a lien upon the property as security for the repayment of the purchase money and for the value of any improvements he placed upon the land. Sec. 3050, Civ.Code. This lien survives his rescission of the contract. Montgomery v. Meyerstein, 186 Cal. 459, 199 P. 800. And although it may be asserted independently of possession of the property, without possession the remedy may be valueless because of an intervening conveyance to a bona fide purchaser for value. Accordingly, when a defrauded vendee remains in possession of the property after he has given notice of rescission and the vendor has refused his conditional offer of restoration, he is not claiming under the contract and at the same time repudiating it. Nor is he attempting to retain possession of the property without paying the balance of the purchase price and at the same time disaffirming the contract by reason of the asserted fraudulent representations of the vendor. On the contrary, he has manifested no other intent than to rescind, and his claim to possession does not rest upon the terms of the contract but is asserted in connection with his right to withhold the property as security for the payments made by him to the vendor and for the improvements he placed upon the land.

In so far as the case of Los Molinos Land Co. v. MacKay, 175 Cal. 305, 165 P. 926, is contrary to these conclusions, it is overruled and Watkins v. Warren, 122 Cal. App. 617, 10 P.2d 500, and Hincksman v. Delacour, 47 Cal.App. 416, 190 P. 832, are disapproved.

[8] Applying these principles to the facts of the present case, the appellant, upon discovery of the respondents' alleged fraud, served notice of rescission upon them and offered to restore possession of the property to them upon condition that they return to her all money paid by her under the contract, less the reasonable rental value of the premises. If the respondents are guilty of the asserted fraud, this notice and offer had the effect of rescinding the agreement, and as a result of their refusal to comply with her demand, she had the right to retain possession of the property and to successfully defend against an action of ejectment by pleading and proving the facts establishing that fraud. The trial court therefore erred in refusing to permit the appellant to introduce evidence tending to prove fraud as a defense to this action.

[9] The facts relied upon by the appellant also furnish a proper basis for her cross-complaint. Section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the contract, transaction, matter, happening or accident upon which the action is brought, or affecting the property to which the action relates, he may, in addition to his answer, file at the same time * * * a cross-complaint. * * *" The more recent cases have approved a broad and liberal interpretation of the phrase "transaction * * * upon which the action is brought." Hanes v. Coffee, 212 Cal. 777, 300 P. 963; California Trust Co. v. Cohn, 214 Cal. 619, 622, 7 P.2d 297; Nevada Land & Inv. Corp. v. Sistrunk, supra. The facts surrounding the cause of action and not the form of the complaint are determinative of what constitutes the "transaction." If the defendant's pleading sets forth matter inextricably related to the matter forming the basis of the plaintiff's complaint, it meets the statutory requirements of a cross-complaint, and it is immaterial that the relief sought thereby is independent of that prayed for in the complaint.

[10] Tested by these principles, it is clear that the alleged fraud of the respondents arose out of the identical transaction which is the basis of their cause of action in ejectment. They demand possession of the property because of the appellant's breach of contract. She charges fraud in inducing the execution of that contract. Were it not for the contract, therefore, neither party would have had occasion to bring suit.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 634

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. FRISBIE.

L. A. 18104.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 28, 1942.

1. Statutes ⇐181(1), 205

The object of all construction of statutes is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the Legislature, and in ascertaining such intent regard is to be had not so much to the exact phraseology in which the intent has been expressed as to the general tenor and scope of the entire scheme embodied in the enactments.

2. Statutes ⇐184, 217, 224, 225

In construing a remedial statute, such as the one dealing with kindred's liability for charitable aid furnished by county to indigent relatives, the court is free to study history and purpose of the enactment and the previous state of the legislation on the subject as well as other statutes in "pari materia" and the benefit sought to be provided. St.1937, pp. 1099, 1100, §§ 2576–2578.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Pari Materia".

3. Paupers ⇐39(3)

By statute it is made the mandatory duty of every county to relieve and support all indigent persons lawfully resident therein, when such persons are not supported and relieved by their relatives or by some other means. St.1937, p. 1097, § 2500.

4. Paupers ⇐43(2)

That an indigent has legally liable kindred able to maintain him does not preclude him from obtaining relief from the county, for the county's mandatory duty to relieve and support all indigents lawfully resident therein is not limited to cases where an indigent is without a responsible relative with ability to support him, but is restricted in application only to those cases where responsible relatives are actually supporting and relieving the indigent. St.1937, pp. 1097, 1099, §§ 2500, 2576.

5. Statutes ⇐231

In determining whether provisions of Welfare and Institutions Code, dealing with liability of indigent's kindred for support of indigent, authorize maintenance by county of an action against indigent's kindred for reimbursement for charity aid already furnished without having first secured a court order fixing the liability of the kindred for indigent's support and directing payment of specified sum to the county for that purpose, such code provisions must be read and considered together. St.1937, pp. 1099, 1100, §§ 2576–2578.

6. Statutes ⇐206

A statute should be so construed, if reasonably possible, as to give force and effect to every expression used by the Legislature.

7. Statutes ⇐188

Words in a statute should be given their ordinary meaning and receive a sensible construction in accord with the commonly understood meaning thereof, except when clearly otherwise intended or indicated. Civ.Code, § 13.

8. Paupers ⇐37(2), 51

The provisions of Welfare and Institutions Code, dealing with liability of kindred for support of indigents, authorized two alternative methods of procedure, under which the county may either maintain an action against responsible kindred for the recovery of money previously expended by county for charity aid furnished indigent relatives, such legislative intent being demonstrated by the use of the words "reimburse" and "reimbursement", which ordinarily mean to pay back, to make restoration, to repay that expended, or county may petition for a court order determining liability and financial ability of kindred to make specified payments in advance for aid to be furnished indigent relatives. St.1937, pp. 1099, 1100, §§ 2576–2578.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Reimburse" and "Reimbursement".

9. Paupers ⇐37(1)

The theory underlying the extension by county of charity aid to an indigent has always been that he is without means of support either from his own efforts or those of responsible kindred, and that when the latter are available, they are primarily liable for the welfare of the indigent relative, and in applying this principle, counties have established the practice of maintaining actions against kindred of indigents to recover as a debt reimbursement for aid previously furnished. St.1937, pp. 1099, 1100, §§ 2576–2578.

10. Statutes ⇐219

The contemporaneous and practical construction of a statute by those whose duty it is to carry it into effect, while not controlling, is given great respect by the court in construing the statute.

11. Statutes ⇐212

It is not to be presumed that the Legislature, in the enactment of statutes, intends to overthrow long established principles of law unless such intention is made clearly to appear by express declaration or by necessary implication.

12. Statutes ⇐183, 184

Whenever possible a statute is to be construed in a way which will render it reasonable, fair and harmonious with its manifest purpose, and which will conform with the spirit of the act.

13. Statutes ⇐239

The provisions of a statute in derogation of the common law must be strictly complied with.

14. Constitutional law ⇐309(1)

In county's action to recover from decedent's estate reimbursement for charity aid furnished an adult daughter of decedent, during decedent's lifetime, the fact that the executrix of decedent's estate was furnished with notice of suit and afforded an opportunity to present her case in court satisfied the constitutional requirements of "due process of law", although action was never taken by county during decedent's lifetime to secure a court order determining her liability to support adult daughter. St.1937, pp. 1099, 1100, §§ 2576–2578; Const. art. 1, § 13.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

15. Abatement and revival ⇐52

Under statute, providing for the survival of an action which might have been maintained against the deceased during his lifetime, county's cause of action against decedent to recover reimbursement for charity aid furnished to an adult daughter of decedent during decedent's lifetime survived and could be maintained against decedent's estate. St.1937, p. 1099, § 2576; Probate Code, § 573.

16. Paupers ⇐51

Under provisions of Welfare and Institutions Code, dealing with liability of kindred for the support of indigent relatives, county could maintain an action to recover from decedent's estate reimbursement for charity aid furnished to decedent's adult daughter during decedent's lifetime without having first obtained a court order determining decedent's liability and financial ability to support daughter and directing payment in advance of specified sums for such purpose. St.1937, pp. 1099, 1100, §§ 2576–2578.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. Rey Schauer, Judge.

Action by the County of Los Angeles against Azile M. Frisbie, executrix of the estate of Mary A. Stoner, deceased, to recover from deceased's estate reimbursement for charity aid furnished by the county to an adult daughter of decedent. From a judgment of dismissal, entered after a demurrer to its complaint was sustained, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Prior opinion, 115 P.2d 900.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, Gerald G. Kelly, Deputy Co. Counsel, and L. K. Vobayda, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Holbrook & Tarr, Leslie R. Tarr, and Freda B. Walbrecht, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

By this action the county of Los Angeles seeks to recover from the estate of Mary A. Stoner, deceased, the sum of $2,236.57, together with interest thereon, for aid, hospital care, medical treatment and supplies furnished by it to one Fay Pheysey, an adult daughter of decedent, between February 26, 1937, and April 28, 1939. Mary A. Stoner died a resident of Los Angeles County on April 28, 1939, and thereafter, upon admission of her will to probate, letters testamentary were issued to Azile M. Frisbie, defendant herein. Following the filing by such executrix of an inventory and appraisement of such estate with the probate court, the county of Los Angeles presented its amended creditor's claim in the aforementioned amount. Upon rejection of its claim, the county commenced this action for reimbursement from the decedent's estate. Defendant's demurrer to the amended complaint was by the court sustained without leave to amend, following plaintiff's refusal to plead further. From the judgment of dismissal thereupon entered plaintiff county prosecutes this appeal.

The determination of this appeal involves the construction of sections 2576, 2577 and 2578 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, St.1937, pp. 1099, 1100. Material to the consideration of this issue of statutory interpretation are the following allegations appearing in the amended complaint: that the county of Los Angeles rendered charity aid to Fay Pheysey, the indigent adult daughter of decedent, in the sum aforementioned; that all such relief was furnished during the lifetime of the mother; and that during the entire period over which such aid was extended the mother was possessed of sufficient financial ability to reimburse the county in full therefor. The trial court sustained defendant's contentions as advanced in her demurrer, which primarily challenged the sufficiency of plaintiff's amended complaint to state a cause of action because there was not alleged the filing of a petition for the judicial determination of liability pursuant to the terms of section 2578 of the Welfare and Institutions Code.

The sections of the Welfare and Institutions Code basically involved in the present controversy are the following:

Section 2576: "If any indigent has living within this State a spouse, parent, or adult child, and such kindred or any of them, or any group of them has sufficient financial ability to support the indigent, he shall not be eligible for aid under this chapter, except such emergency aid as may be extended hereunder pending a determination of responsibility for his support. Upon failure of such kindred to support the indigent, the county may extend aid, and such kindred in the order above named and to the extent of their ability shall reimburse the county for the support of the indigent by paying to the county the sums per month or per day fixed by the board of supervisors for such aid. In any case where such kindred are unable to pay the entire charge for such support, they shall reimburse the county to such an extent as may be determined under the provisions of this section.

"The board of supervisors shall, in the case of aid granted by institutional care, fix a reasonable charge therefor, which shall be the measure of reimbursement to the county, and the existence of the order fixing the charge shall constitute prima facie evidence of its reasonableness."

Section 2577: "Upon failure of the kindred, referred to in section 2576, to perform their duty to support the indigent, the board of supervisors shall request the district attorney of the county to proceed against such kindred in the order of their responsibility for support. Upon such request the district attorney shall promptly commence and prosecute proceedings for the ascertainment and enforcement of the liability and responsibility of the kindred."

Section 2578: "Such proceedings shall be begun by filing in the name of the county a petition verified in the manner of a complaint praying that the responsibility and liability of the named kindred be ascertained, and that an order be made accordingly. The provisions of Titles I to IX, inclusive, of Part II of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to the proceedings in such action and the court shall therein determine the liability, if any, of each of the kindred for such support. The court shall, in such action, ascertain the financial ability of the defendants and each of them, and unless it finds that a defendant is unable to pay any sum for support, either because of lack of sufficient funds or because such payment would result in the probability of the defendant becoming at some future time a public charge, the court shall order each defendant to pay to the county a proper proportion, if any, of his liability for the support of the indigent.

"If any relative or group of relatives has sufficient financial ability to support the indigent no relative beyond him or them in the order named in section 2576 shall be ordered to pay any portion of the support. The order of the court shall specify that a given sum shall be payable monthly in advance to the board of supervisors or its designated social agency for the entire or partial maintenance of the defendant's indigent relative in accordance with the defendant's financial ability."

Appellant county contends that the foregoing sections give it two separate causes of action, to-wit: (1) an action against a responsible relative for reimbursement for charity aid rendered by the county to the indigent, and (2) a proceeding against the legally responsible kindred to obtain court orders for future monthly support payments by said kindred to the county for the aid which the county will have to furnish the indigent. In other words, appellant county urges that the two methods of collection procedure available to it under these code provisions are wholly separate and distinct: that section 2576 contemplates an action to recover by way of reimbursement for moneys expended for charity aid, and that sections 2577, 2578 provide an independent mode of proceeding by the filing of a petition to obtain a court order directing future periodical payments by the liable kindred to the county to be disbursed by the latter. On the other hand, respondent argues that these above-quoted code sections permit at the outset but a single type of proceeding, one summary in character for the purpose of securing a court order fixing the liability of the kindred for the support of the indigent relative, and that it is only after the failure of the kindred to comply with the terms of the order directing the payment of specified sums that there accrues to the county a cause of action for the recovery of these amounts. Thus, it is respondent's position that the prior adjudication of the existence and extent of decedent's liability is an essential prerequisite to the county's maintenance of the present action. Admittedly, the aid rendered by the county to the decedent's daughter was not of an "emergency character," but was of an ordinary nature consonant with the support, institutional care and medical treatment furnished during the period above mentioned.

[1, 2] Preliminary to our consideration of the questions raised by the parties relative to the meaning of the particular language employed in these code provisions, it is pertinent to observe that the object of all construction of statutes is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the legislature. State v. Conkling, 19 Cal. 501, 512. In the analysis of statutes for the purpose of finding the legislative intent, regard is to be had not so much to the exact phraseology in which the intent has been expressed as to the general tenor and scope of the entire scheme embodied in the enactments. Palache v. Pacific Ins. Co., 42 Cal. 418, 430. While the intention of the legislature must be ascertained from the words used to express it, the manifest reason and the obvious design of the law should not be sacrificed to a literal interpretation of such language. In re Haines, 195 Cal. 605, 612, 234 P. 883. Hence, in construing a remedial statute, like a law concerning the rendition of charitable aid to indigents and recovery therefor, reason must have its just proportion, and in interpreting the expressions employed, the court is free to study the history and purpose of the enactment and the previous state of the legislation on the subject, as well as other statutes in pari materia and the benefits sought to be provided. People v. Earl, 19 Cal. App. 69, 71, 72, 124 P. 887.

[3, 4] It is made the duty of every county in this state to "relieve and support" all indigent persons lawfully resident therein, "when such persons are not supported and relieved by their relatives" or by some other means. Sec. 2500, Welfare and Institutions Code, St.1937, p. 1097; based on Stats.1901, ch. CCX, sec. 1, p. 636; Stats.1933, ch. 761, sec. 1, p. 2005. The obligation imposed by this statute is a mandatory duty City and County of San Francisco v. Collins, 216 Cal. 187, 190, 13 P.2d 912.

By section 2576 the legislature has qualified the indigent's right to compel or mandamus the county to render aid by declaring in effect that if such person has a responsible relative with sufficient ability to support him, he shall not be eligible for aid as a matter of absolute right. The mere fact that the indigent has legally liable kindred able to maintain him does not preclude him from obtaining relief, for the county's mandatory duty (sec. 2500, supra) is not limited to cases where the indigent is without a responsible relative with ability to support him, but is restricted in application only to those cases where the responsible relative is actually supporting and relieving the indigent. To hold, as respondent urges, that any aid, other than that of an emergency character, rendered by the county prior to a judicial determination of the kindred's responsibility for the indigent relative's support is without statutory authority and a voluntary act on the basis of a gratuity, is to place undue emphasis upon the first sentence of section 2576 and to disregard the balance of the code provision. The opening words of the second sentence significantly read: "Upon failure of such kindred to support the indigent, the county may extend aid * * *." (Emphasis added.) This language, permissive in character and without reference to court order, plainly gives the county the discretionary right to advance such aid, that is, regular support, in the event the responsible kindred neglect to discharge the duty impressed by statute. Substantiating the county's claim to recovery for the relief so extended is the remainder of the second sentence of section 2576: "and such kindred in the order above named and to the extent of their ability shall reimburse the county for the support of the indigent by paying to the county the sums per month or per day fixed by the board of supervisors for such aid." (Emphasis added.) The primary and ordinary meaning of the word "reimburse" is "to pay back, to make restoration, to repay that expended." Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition; Funk & Wagnall's Standard Dictionary. The actual amount due depends upon the sums determined by the board of supervisors to be representative of the county's expense for the relief granted. This section then continues with a third sentence declaring that where such kindred, remiss in their obligation to support the indigent, "are unable to pay the entire charge for such support [the support by the county], they shall reimburse the county to such an extent as may be determined under the provisions of this section." (Emphasis added.) Thus, the amount of partial recovery for support furnished the indigent is governed by the ability of the responsible kindred to reimburse the county. The fourth and final sentence of this section then treats the question of recovery for institutional care extended, by prescribing as follows: "The board of supervisors shall, in the case of aid granted by institutional care, fix a reasonable charge therefor, which shall be the measure of reimbursement to the county * * *." (Emphasis added.)

[5] Section 2577 provides that upon failure of the kindred, as specified in section 2576, to perform their duty to support their indigent relative, the district attorney shall, upon request of the board of supervisors, "promptly commence and prosecute proceedings for the ascertainment and enforcement of the liability and responsibility of the kindred." This language envisages and authorizes the county's pursuit of a distinct type of procedure to compel future contributions by responsible kindred who neglect to discharge their legal obligation, as created by statute (section 2576, supra). The precise limits and fundamental aim of the prescribed action is outlined in section 2578, which, after declaring that such proceedings shall take the form of a petition praying for the ascertainment of the responsibility and liability of the specified kindred of the indigent, provides that the court shall "ascertain the financial ability of the defendants and * * * the court shall order each defendant to pay to the county a proper proportion, if any, of his liability for the support of the indigent." Thus, the extent of the kindred's liability is declared to rest upon the court's finding as to financial ability. Section 2579 then provides for proceedings to be taken in the event of such kindred's non-compliance with the court's order directing payments for the maintenance of the indigent relative. Undoubtedly, the express terms of these three sections establish a distinct right and furnish a complete remedy for its enforcement, but there still remains the question of whether the availability of this method of collection procedure negatives the propriety of appellant county's prosecution of the instant action in reliance upon the language of section 2576. To determine the intent of the legislature in this respect, the provisions of all of these code sections must be read and considered together.

[6, 7] In arriving at the proper construction of these code provisions relative to the responsibility of kindred for support of their indigent relatives, certain cardinal principles of statutory interpretation must be observed. A statute should always be so construed, if reasonably possible, as to give force and effect to every expression used by the legislature. Brainard v. Brainard, 17 Cal.App.2d 520, 62 P.2d 403; 23 Cal.Jur. 780, sec. 157. Excepting when clearly otherwise intended or indicated, words in a statute should be given their ordinary meaning and receive a sensible construction in accord with the commonly understood meaning thereof. Universal Pictures Corp. v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.App.2d 490, 50 P.2d 500. Section 13 of the Civil Code provides: "Words and phrases are construed according to the context and the approved usage of the language; * * *."

[8] Tested by these canons of statutory construction, it is manifest that the code provisions here subject of analysis extend to the county alternative methods of collection procedure. Section 2576, after its introductory direction pertaining to the eligibility of an indigent for relief, gives the county an independent cause of action against the responsible kindred for the recovery of money previously expended by it for aid furnished the indigent relative. Three separate times the legislature has so demonstrated its intent in this section: twice by the use of the term "reimburse" and once by the use of the term "reimbursement." As so employed, these words, referable to the recoupment of sums already paid, indicate the legislature's intention by this enactment to provide the county with authority to prosecute an ordinary cause of action for the recovery of money and negative the requirement of a judicial decree to determine the measure of the debt as the basis for the maintenance of such action. Sections 2577 and 2578 outline a wholly different type of procedure, whereby the county is permitted to file a petition, not to reimburse itself for money already expended, but to compel the responsible kindred to contribute to the future support of the indigent who is not eligible for county relief, other than that of an emergency character, as a matter of right. That these last-mentioned code provisions contemplate a proceeding entirely independent of the action for reimbursement, subject of section 2576, is indicated by the fact that they refer to section 2576 only in one respect, that is, the order in which the liability of the kindred is fixed by the latter provision. By virtue of sections 2577 and 2578 the county may, prior to rendering non-emergency charity aid to an applicant indigent who has responsible kindred pecuniarily able to maintain him, commence a proceeding for a judicial declaration of the extent of the kindred's liability in accordance with the court's finding as to financial ability and for an order directing the responsible relatives to discharge their statutory duty of support of the indigent by the payment in advance of certain fixed sums to the county for that purpose. Such adjudication, of course, would have only prospective operative force.

[9-12] The above construction of these code provisions is in complete accord with the system of county aid established by the relief statutes of this state. The theory underlying the extension of such aid to an indigent has always been that he is without means of support either from his own efforts or those of responsible kindred, and that when the latter are available, they are primarily liable for the welfare of the indigent relation. In accordance with this basic principle, the original relief act of 1901, Stats. 1901, ch. CCX, page 636, made specified kindred of an indigent liable for reimbursement to the county for the aid it extended to the latter person. Pursuant to the authority of this statute, the various counties of this state have prosecuted actions to recover, as a debt, money representative of the aid so advanced. Then in 1933 this first act was repealed in conjunction with the enactment of a second relief statute (Stats. 1933, ch. 761, page 2005), wherein was inserted the language now embodied in sections 2576–2579 above mentioned. Under the provisions of this 1933 law the counties continued, as they had under the prior act, to file like actions for reimbursement for charity aid granted. In 1937, upon the repeal of former relief statutes, all legislation on this subject was codified and incorporated into the newly created Welfare and Institutions Code. Since then sections 2576–2579 have been interpreted by county officials engaged in the administration of the charity laws in this state in the same manner as the corresponding provisions in the 1933 act were regarded, and accordingly the counties proceeded, as before, to file suits predicated upon the theory of a cause of action for reimbursement from responsible kindred for charitable aid rendered to indigent relations. Thus is established a course of conduct followed without interruption for forty years. The contemporaneous and practical construction of a statute by those whose duty it is to carry it into effect, while not controlling, is given great respect People v. Southern Pacific Co., 209 Cal. 578, 290 P. 25; Riley v. Thompson, 193 Cal. 773, 227 P. 772; Riley v. Forbes, 193 Cal.

740, 227 P. 768; 23 Cal.Jur. 775, sec. 151. As was said in United States v. Philbrick, 120 U.S. 52, 59, 7 S.Ct. 413, 417, 30 L.Ed. 559: "A contemporaneous construction by the officers upon whom was imposed the duty of executing those statutes is entitled to great weight; and, since it is not clear that that construction was erroneous, it ought not now to be overturned." Furthermore, it is not to be presumed that the legislature in the enactment of statutes intends to overthrow long-established principles of law unless such intention is made clearly to appear either by express declaration or by necessary implication. Lowe v. Yolo County Consolidated Water Co., 8 Cal.App. 167, 174, 96 P. 379; 23 Cal.Jur. 782, sec. 158.

Wherever possible, a statute is to be construed in a way which will render it reasonable, fair and harmonious with its manifest purpose, and which will conform with the spirit of the act. Uhl v. Badaracco, 199 Cal. 270, 284, 248 P. 917. "Therefore," as is stated in People v. Merrill, 24 Cal.App. 206, 210, 140 P. 1075, 1077, "when a suggested construction of a statute in any given case necessarily involves a decided departure from what may be fairly said to be the plain purpose of the enactment, such construction will not be adopted to the exclusion of a possible, plausible interpretation which will promote and put in operation the legislative intent."

Several reasons bearing on the practical administration of county relief suggest themselves in support of our construction of these statutory enactments as expressive of the legislative intention to provide alternative modes of collection procedure. The abandonment of the county's long-authorized cause of action predicated upon the reimbursement theory, in favor of the exclusive remedy of requiring its filing of a petition for the adjudication of the extent of liability of relatives before the institution of a suit against the kindred of the indigent, not only would have disastrous consequences upon the applicant for aid, as well as upon the county, but likewise would be repugnant to the entire legislative scheme referable to relief in this state. The granting of public aid would be slackened pending the county's search for and investigation of responsible kindred who might be judicially declared liable to the county for the payment of certain sums. As the kindred's financial ability changed or the requirements of the recipient of aid varied, the county would be faced with the necessity of petitioning for further court orders to correspond with these altered circumstances. Also of significance is the fact that whereas under the reimbursement theory the county may attach, as in any action for the recovery of money in this state, the assets of defendant kindred of the recipient of relief without actually locating such responsible relatives (subd. 1, sec. 537, Code Civ. Proc.), a like procedure would not be so available if it were necessary to have a prior judicial finding as to pecuniary ability and the measure of liability of defendant kindred. That such increased amount of litigation incident to the county's exercise of the remedy of attachment in its proceeding to recover for aid furnished an indigent would aggravate and hamper the operation of the established county relief system is not debatable. Akin to these considerations is the additional fact that the code provisions relative to the maintenance of juvenile delinquents and to the care of blind, mentally disordered and aged persons authorize actions against responsible relatives for reimbursement for aid extended by the county, an observation indicating that the legislature intended the same right of recovery to exist in all types of charitable relief, and that the aforementioned sections of the Welfare and Institutions Code applicable to the support of indigents should be so interpreted when the language therein contained is susceptible of such construction.

[13, 14] Respondent argues that the due process of law guaranty of the Constitution of this state (art. I, sec. 13, California Constitution) prohibits the maintenance of an action such as here instituted by appellant county. In this connection she urges that the decedent was entitled in her lifetime to notice and opportunity to be heard as to her liability and financial capacity to render aid to her adult daughter, and that without such hearing the decedent's estate may not be adjudged responsible for the relief furnished by the county as above outlined. It is her contention that since one of the direct purposes of the code provisions above quoted is to create, as between a parent and an adult child, a legal obligation to furnish support, maintenance and relief, a duty which at common law was only a moral one, resting on close blood relationship and humanitarian considerations, the statutory procedure to be followed in enforcing the liability imposed by the legislative enactment must be rigidly observed. This well-defined rule referable to the necessity of strict compliance with the provisions of a statute in derogation of the common law is, of course, indisputable. But likewise it should be added that appellant county's maintenance of the present action is not inconsistent with this settled principle, since in our opinion its action based upon the reimbursement theory is expressly authorized by section 2576 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, as above construed. The fallacy of respondent's argument is her assumption that sections 2576–2578 contemplate not two types of action, but only one method of procedure, the filing of a petition for and the securing of a court order judicially declaring the responsibility of the specified kindred as a prerequisite to the county's commencement of a suit for the recovery of money expended in aid of the indigent relation. The fact that respondent as defendant in the county's action for reimbursement was furnished with notice of suit and afforded an opportunity to present her case in court satisfies the requirements of due process of law. This precise point was recently so determined in the Estate of Stobie, 30 Cal. App.2d 525, 529, 530, 86 P.2d 883, wherein the state was suing for reimbursement for the care furnished an insane person under a statute making the estate of the incompetent liable.

[15] Furthermore, with respect to the estate's liability upon the county's claim, it should be noted that section 573 of the Probate Code specifically provides for the survival of an action such as the instant one, which "might have been maintained" against the deceased during her lifetime.

[16] For the reasons above expressed it is our opinion that the county's amended complaint herein states a cause of action under the provisions of section 2576 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. Accordingly, the judgment from which this appeal was taken is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and permit the respondent to answer if she so desire.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 22

PORTNOY v. HOHMANN, Chief of Police et al.

Civ. 13283.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Constitutional law ⇐235, 292

A city ordinance, providing no person shall upon a public street or sidewalk solicit the sale of or distribute any handbill or other advertising matter relating to photographs taken of passers-by on the public way, set up an arbitrary and unreasonable classification and violated the constitutional guaranties of "equal protection of the law" and "due process of law". Const.Cal. art. 1, § 13; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law" and "Equal Protection of the Law".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw and B. Rey Schauer, Judges.

Action to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance by Irving Portnoy against Arthur C. Hohmann, Chief of Police, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., W. Jos. McFarland, Asst. City Atty., and John L. Bland, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellant Hohmann, Chief of Police.

J. F. Rosen and H. Wolpin, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Plaintiff in the court below petitioned for an injunction restraining the enforcement against him of a certain ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality thereof, to which petition the defendant chief of police of the said city interposed a general demurrer. The said defendant waived the right to file an answer to the complaint in the event his demurrer was not sustained; and upon the overruling of the demurrer judgment was entered against the said defendant, in his official capacity as chief of police, the judgment being in the form of a permanent injunction restraining enforcement of the ordinance against plaintiff. From this judgment the defendant chief of police appeals.

The ordinance involved is section 42.16 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code, which reads as follows: "Sidewalk Photographers—Soliciting Prohibited. No person shall upon or along any public street, sidewalk, alley, park, or parkway, or in any doorway or entranceway to any building abutting thereon, solicit the sale of, or distribute any handbill or other advertising matter relating to photographs taken of passersby on or along said public way or place."

In his complaint for injunction plaintiff alleges that he "is now and for more than five years last past has been engaged in the candid camera business and in connection therewith has maintained and is now maintaining a place of business * * * in the City of Los Angeles. That in connection with said business the plaintiff on or about the 2nd day of August, 1940, employed twelve camera men who took snapshots of pedestrians on the sidewalk as they walk towards said camera men and to each of said pedestrians whose photograph has been taken, who voluntarily accepted the same, the said camera men would deliver a card advising the said pedestrian that his or her photograph had just been taken and could be secured upon sending the price thereof to the place of business of the plaintiff." Plaintiff alleges that as to his business the ordinance in question is discriminatory in character, unconstitutional and void in that it does not prohibit the distribution of handbills or other advertising matter relating to anything else, such as shows, theatres, ball games or political advertising but merely prohibits the distribution of handbills or other advertising matter relating to the photographs taken of passersby on or along such public way or place; and that the ordinance is unconstitutional as an unreasonable and unwarranted exercise of the police power which arbitrarily and without due process of law deprives the plaintiff of his property, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution and of article 1, section 13, of the Constitution of the State of California.

Among other points in his brief appellant chief of police contends that the ordinance is a proper enactment for the prevention of littering the streets; that the ordinance is a proper method of preventing the use of the streets for commercial purposes, and a proper method of protecting the right of privacy of persons using the public streets. The only question necessary for determination here is whether the ordinance unjustly discriminates against respondent by seeking to set up an unreasonable and arbitrary classification of persons soliciting sales and distributing advertising matter upon the public streets. It is to be noted that the ordinance in question does not prevent the taking of candid camera photographs upon the streets but merely seeks to prevent solicitation of the sale of such photographs and the distribution of advertising matter relating thereto. Upon the basis of solicitation of sales and the distribution of advertising matter there appears to be no substantial distinction between respondent's type of business and any other type of business which employs or which might employ such solicitation and distribution upon the streets, nor has appellant pointed out any reasonable distinction. Upon its face the ordinance sets up an arbitrary and unreasonable classification of persons soliciting sales and distributing advertising matter upon the public streets, not based upon any natural or constitutional difference, and therefore violates the constitutional guaranties of equal protection of the law and against deprivation of property without due process of law. No question is here involved as to a distinction between commercial and non-commercial use of the streets for solicitation and advertising. The contentions of appellant as to the insufficiency of the complaint are without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 25

PITTSFORD et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Civ. 13391.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Constitutional law ⇐90

The conduct of strictly commercial activities may, under certain circumstances, involve the exercise of free speech and a free press, and under such circumstances prohibition of the commercial practices might be an abridgment of the constitutional rights.

2. Constitutional law ⇐90

There is a real basis for distinction between the exercise of constitutional rights of free speech and free press when in connection with ordinary business activities and the exercise of the same rights when in relation to public expressions of opinion upon political, religious, social, and economic questions, so far as regulation and control thereof under police power is concerned.

3. Constitutional law ⇐92

There is no vested right to do business upon public streets.

4. Constitutional law ⇐90

The public at large has vested right to exercise of constitutional right of freedom of speech and freedom of press in public places.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐703(1)

The fact that regulation of business conducted upon public streets may adversely affect certain individuals whose commercial welfare is peculiarly dependent upon such uses affords no argument against the validity of the ordinance otherwise bearing a reasonable relation to the public health, safety, and general welfare if the ordinance adopts a sound method of classification.

6. Evidence ⇐5(2)

In determining validity of ordinance prohibiting distribution of commercial advertising matter upon public streets and thoroughfares as applied to "candid camera" photographer who gave order blank to person whose picture had been taken, it could be recognized as a matter of common knowledge that, after a brief perusal or glance at the order blank, many of the persons receiving order blank would be apt to cast it into the street.

7. Constitutional law ⇐90, 235, 274

Municipal ordinance prohibiting distribution of commercial advertising matter upon public streets and thoroughfares, but not prohibiting the distribution of handbills upon religious, political, and scientific subjects, is not unconstitutional as denying right of "freedom of press", "freedom of speech", "equal protection of the laws", or "due process of law". Const.Cal. art. 1, §§ 9, 13, 21; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law", "Equal Protection of the Laws", "Freedom of Press", and "Freedom of Speech".

8. Municipal corporations ⇐63(1)

In determining the validity of a municipal ordinance, the judicial function is exhausted with the discovery that the relation between means and end is not wholly vain and fanciful.

9. Municipal corporations ⇐703(1)

A municipal ordinance prohibiting the distribution of commercial advertising matter upon public streets and thoroughfares, but not prohibiting the distribution of handbills upon religious, political, or scientific subjects, is not invalid on ground that the object of the ordinance, which was to prevent littering of streets, did not bear a reasonable relation to public health and general welfare.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles, County; Hartley Shaw, Edward T. Bishop, and W. Turney Fox, Judges.

Action to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance by Marion J. Pittsford and others against the City of Los Angeles and others. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., W. Jos. McFarland, Asst. City Atty., and Clyde P. Harrell, Jr., and John L. Bland, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Mott & Grant and A. A. Goldstone, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

This action arose under circumstances similar to those in Portnoy v. Hohmann, Cal.App., 122 P.2d 533, but the ordinance sought to be enforced against plaintiffs in the instant action is section 28.01.1 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code. The defendant city and its chief of police here appeal from the judgment granting a permanent injunction against enforcement of the ordinance in question as to respondents, which judgment was entered after demurrer to respondents' complaint was overruled and appellants had waived the right to answer. The complaint prayed for the relief granted upon specific allegations as to the unconstitutionality of the ordinance, towit: That it constitutes a denial to plaintiffs of the right of free press and the right of free speech, in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and section 9 of article I of the Constitution of the State of California; that it denies plaintiffs the equal protection of the laws and grants privileges to one class of citizens not accorded to all citizens similarly situated, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution and of section 21 of article I of the Constitution of the State of California; that it constitutes an unreasonable, unwarranted, arbitrary and discriminatory regulation having no substantial relation to the public health, morals, safety, or welfare, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States; and that it deprives plaintiffs of their property and their property rights without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution and section 13 of article IV(sic) of the Constitution of the State of California.

Respondents' business was the same as that of the respondent in Portnoy v. Hohmann, supra, and in their complaint respondents described the operation of their business as follows: "* * * plaintiffs employ photographers, the number of whom varies from time to time, and said photographers are equipped by plaintiffs with motion picture cameras; that pictures are taken by said photographers of pedestrians on the sidewalks of the City of Los Angeles, and simultaneously with the taking of a picture of a pedestrian the photographer offers to the person whose picture has been taken an order blank in the form of a card, together with an envelope bearing the address of plaintiffs' place of business * * * that each card bears a serial number for the purpose of enabling plaintiffs to identify the picture which has been taken, and the person whose picture has been taken and to whom the card is handed is informed by the printing on said card that by inserting his or her name and address on said card and mailing the same in the envelope accompanying it, together with twenty-five cents and three cents postage, said person will receive from plaintiffs an enlargement of the picture which has been taken. * * * That said order blanks and envelopes are not thrown on the sidewalks or streets, nor are they offered or handed to pedestrians promiscuously by said photographers, but are offered and handed to those persons only whose pictures have been taken and who are willing to and voluntarily accept the same."

Section 28.01.1 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code, by virtue of which the city sought to prevent distribution of the order blanks and envelopes in question, reads as follows:

"(a) No person shall, upon any street, sidewalk or park, cast, throw or deposit, or distribute among pedestrians or to persons in vehicles, any commercial advertising handbill, or any handbill distributed for the purpose of advertising any merchandise, commodity, property, business, service, art, or skill, offered, sold or rendered for hire, reward, price, trade or profit.

"(b) This section shall not be deemed or construed to prohibit or restrict the distribution of written or printed matter devoted to the expression of views, opinions, beliefs or contentions relating to religious, political or sociological subjects, or to public or civic affairs, or to labor disputes or other controversies, or to community, state, regional, national or international affairs, or which treat of any social or economic order, or which relate to the arts or sciences; or which are aimed to redress any grievance, or which otherwise are not distributed for the purpose of soliciting business, trade or custom; nor shall the terms of subsection (a) be deemed to include the printed notice of an event which is not arranged for profit or to stimulate the business, trade, or traffic of the person who causes the dissemination of the notice, even though a monetary contribution of an admission fee be requested or accepted in connection with such event."

Appellants contend that a municipality may prohibit the distribution of commercial advertising matter upon its streets, and that failure to prohibit distribution of handbills upon religious, political and scientific subjects does not render such an ordinance invalid; that the ordinance in question does not take the property of plaintiffs and respondents without due process of law; and, further, that plaintiffs and respondents have no constitutional right to conduct their business upon the public streets. Respondents here raise substantially the same objections to the ordinance as those set forth in their complaint, noted above, and state that the question is whether a municipality may, by ordinance, prohibit the distribution upon its streets of commercial advertising of a lawful business to persons willing to accept it. That is a correct statement of the question involved. It is to be noted that the ordinance in question does not seek to classify commercial interests or enterprises in the use of the city's streets for distribution of advertising matter; the distinction is expressly drawn between commercial and non-commercial use of the streets for that purpose. It is for this reason, no doubt, that respondents strongly rely upon their contention that the ordinance abridges the exercise of free speech and a free press. In fact, respondents contend that the prevention of the use of the city streets for business activities is not an issue in the case at bar. Respondents' argument that the ordinance denies equal protection of the laws is based upon the claim that the attempted distinction between commercial and non-commercial handbills is arbitrary; and while they concede that a municipality under its police power may enact ordinances regulating the use of the streets, respondents contend that the boundaries of control of municipalities over the distribution of handbills upon the public streets are clearly stated in Lovell v. City of Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L.Ed. 949; Hague v. C. I. O., 307 U.S. 496, 59 S.Ct. 954, 83 L.Ed. 1423; and Schneider v. State of New Jersey, Town of Irvington, 308 U.S. 147, 60 S. Ct. 146, 84 L.Ed. 155; that under those cases the control is limited to regulating the exercise of the right to prevent its abuse, but the right itself cannot be denied. In all of these cases so-called handbill or similar ordinances were held invalid upon the ground that they violated the constitutional guaranties of freedom of speech and freedom of the press. Each of these cases was concerned with an attempted exercise of either a political, civic, social or other closely related right; and in none of the cases cited were the individuals in question engaged or connected with any commercial activity. The ordinances in these cited leaflet cases were broad in scope and made no distinction between commercial and non-commercial handbills. Respondents rely particularly upon Lovell v. City of Griffin, supra. That case was concerned with an ordinance which prohibited the distribution of literature of any kind, anywhere, at any time, without a permit, and involved a prosecution thereunder of a person distributing religious literature. The United States Supreme Court held the ordinance invalid on its face because of its scope, stating [303 U. S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 669, 82 L.Ed. 949]: "There is thus no restriction in its application with respect to time or place. It is not limited to ways which might be regarded as inconsistent with the maintenance of public order, or as involving disorderly conduct, the molestation of the inhabitants, or the misuse or littering of the streets." Nothing is contained in the opinion in the Lovell case, either expressly or by inference, to aid in the determination of the question here at bar. Certain statements in the opinion in Schneider v. State, supra [308 U.S. 147, 60 S.Ct. 150, 84 L.Ed. 155], are more significant. It is there stated:

"Although a municipality may enact regulations in the interest of the public safety, health, welfare or convenience, these may not abridge the individual liberties secured by the Constitution to those who wish to speak, write, print or circulate information or opinion.

"Municipal authorities, as trustees for the public, have the duty to keep their communities' streets open and available for movement of people and property, the primary purpose to which the streets are dedicated. So long as legislation to this end does not abridge the constitutional liberty of one rightfully upon the street to impart information through speech or the distribution of literature, it may lawfully regulate the conduct of those using the streets. For example, a person could not exercise this liberty by taking his stand in the middle of a crowded street, contrary to traffic regulations, and maintain his position to the stoppage of all traffic; a group of distributors could not insist upon a constitutional right to form a cordon across the street and to allow no pedestrian to pass who did not accept a tendered leaflet; nor does the guarantee of freedom of speech or of the press deprive a municipality of power to enact regulations against throwing literature broadcast in the streets. Prohibition of such conduct would not abridge the constitutional liberty since such activity bears no necessary relationship to the freedom to speak, write, print or distribute information or opinion. * * *

"We are of opinion that the purpose to keep the streets clean and of good appearance is insufficient to justify an ordinance which prohibits a person rightfully on a public street from handing literature to one willing to receive it." (Italics added.)

One of the ordinances involved in the Schneider case required a permit to solicit or express views from door to door. Of this the court said: "We are not to be taken as holding that commercial soliciting and canvassing may not be subjected to such regulation as the ordinance requires." In this instance the petitioner's motive in calling from door to door was religious. Of petitioner's activities the court stated: "We do hold, however, that the ordinance in question, as applied to the petitioner's conduct, is void, and she cannot be punished for acting without a permit." This may be taken as indicating that the United States Supreme Court recognized a distinction between commercial and non-commercial solicitations, at least as far as requirements for a permit are concerned. Moreover, the court in the Schneider case clearly held that as to the petitioner's religious activities the ordinance, in requiring a permit therefor, abridged freedom of speech. Since the court saw fit to draw a distinction between petitioner's actions and those of commercial canvassing, it is proper to conclude that the ordinance there involved would not be held to abridge freedom of speech when applied to commercial solicitations.

[1] The conduct of strictly commercial activities may under certain circumstances involve the exercise of free speech and a free press, and under such circumstances prohibition of certain commercial practices might conceivably be held to abridge these constitutional rights. People v. Osborne, 17 Cal.App.2d, Supp., 771, 59 P.2d 1083, concerned an ordinance which prohibited the advertising of prices of barbers' services or the posting of a price list in a barber shop so as to be seen from the street. The appellate department of the superior court held that the ordinance violated the right of property and of contract and impaired freedom of speech and of the press. However, People v. Osborne, supra, was concerned with the validity of restrictions on the posting or publication of prices, a question which has different ramifications than that of the use of public streets for the distribution of commercial handbills. Moreover, regardless of what particular constitutional right or freedom was involved in the case last cited the ordinance there in question obviously bore no reasonable relation to the public morals, peace, safety, health or general welfare, and, on that ground alone, constituted an unreasonable exercise of police power. It does not follow that where an ordinance regulating or prohibiting the transaction of business, or certain practices in connection with the transaction of business upon the public streets may be said to bear a reasonable relation to the public welfare, such an ordinance may be set aside upon the ground that it encroaches upon liberty of speech and of the press. Such liberties in connection with commercial activities may ordinarily be exercised in some other manner than upon the public streets.

[2-5] It may be seen then that there is a real basis for distinction between the exercise of such constitutional rights when in connection with ordinary business activities and the exercise of those same rights when in relation to public expressions of opinion upon political, religious, social and economic questions, in so far as regulation and control thereof under the police power is concerned. As far as general expressions of opinion are concerned, public places frequently afford the only forum where free speech may be exercised. Under such circumstances, prohibition of use of the streets for this purpose at once constitutes an abridgment of the right of free speech and a violation of its constitutional guaranty. On the other hand, prohibition of the use of public places for purposes of commercial advertising, assuming without deciding that such advertising embodies principles of free speech and a free press, may not so readily be said to abridge constitutional rights in this respect. Other channels of expression of equal value may still be left open to the commercial advertiser. Consequently, what would constitute actual prohibition of expressions of opinion when applied to the public at large might only serve as a reasonable regulation when applied to matters of commercial advertising. The place for the conduct of a private business is upon private property; and it has been said that there is no vested right to do business upon the public streets. "* * * the highways of the state are public property. They are established and maintained at public expense for the use of the whole people, primarily as avenues of communication for their private uses, and their use for private gain is 'special and extraordinary.' Having that consideration in mind, it is not only within the power of the state, but its imperative duty to so regulate their use for private gain, that it may not materially impair or destroy their usefulness as avenues of communication adequate and available for the use of all citizens for their own proper and private purposes." Parlett Co-operative v. Tidewater Lines, 164 Md. 405, 165 A. 313, 317, citing Stephenson v. Binford, 287 U.S. 251, 264, 53 S.Ct. 181, 77 L.Ed. 288, 294, 87 A.L.R. 721. And more appropriately, see: State v. Barbelais, 101 Me. 512, 64 A. 881; Ex parte Bradshaw, 70 Tex.Cr.R. 166, 159 S.W. 259, and the dissenting opinion In re Thornburg, Court of Appeals, Ohio, Cuyahoga County, 55 Ohio App. 229, 9 N.E.2d 516. Because of the conditions generally attendant upon the exercise of free speech and freedom of the press, and in the light of the recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, above cited, it may well be said that the public at large has a vested right to the exercise of these constitutional freedoms in public places; but there is sufficient basis, both in logic and in reality, for declining to extend such a doctrine to the protection of purely private commercial activities conducted upon public property. "Nor is it an objection to the validity of such an ordinance regulating the use of the streets, that the acts prohibited would not in and of themselves necessarily obstruct travel, or in any way create a nuisance. The carrying on of trade or business in the public streets by one, or by a few persons, might not be of sufficient consequence to materially obstruct the public travel, while, if the same thing should be done by many, it might create a serious obstruction and nuisance, and what may be done by one in this respect, all must have an equal right to do." State v. Barbelais, supra. Though a regulation of business conducted upon the public streets may adversely affect certain individuals whose commercial welfare is peculiarly dependent upon such usage, this circumstance affords no argument against the validity of an ordinance otherwise bearing a reasonable relation to the public health, safety and general welfare, if the ordinance in question adopts a sound method of classification. See: San Francisco Shopping News Co. v. City of South San Francisco, 9 Cir., 69 F.2d 879, at page 890.

[6, 7] Appellants concede that the purpose of the ordinance in question is to prevent the littering of the streets. Respondents point out that their distribution of forms and envelopes was limited to persons willing to receive the same. The fact that the order blanks in question were handed to persons willing for the moment to accept them is of little or no importance here, since it may be recognized as a matter of common knowledge that after a brief perusal or glance at the card or blank many of the persons receiving such a card would be apt to cast it into the street. Nor, under the circumstances here presented, could it be a valid argument to contend that the proper remedy would be to arrest and punish those who threw the cards away. It should again be pointed out that the instant case does not involve the question of the general right of persons to express their views and opinions on all subjects in public places. The question here involved is the narrower one of the right to distribute commercial advertising matter upon public streets and thoroughfares. It is difficult to see how the distribution of commercial order blanks and return envelopes for the purchase of photographs embodies the principles of freedom of speech and freedom of the press; but, as already indicated above, the assumption that such principles are involved would have little effect upon the determination of the question presented.

In Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Comm. of Ohio, 236 U.S. 230, 35 S.Ct. 387, at page 391, 59 L.Ed. 552, at page 560, it is said, in speaking of cases upholding the police power in granting or withholding licenses for exhibition of motion pictures: "It seems not to have occurred to anybody in the cited cases that freedom of opinion was repressed in the exertion of the power which was illustrated. The rights of property were only considered as involved. It cannot be put out of view that the exhibition of moving pictures is a business, pure and simple, originated and conducted for profit, like other spectacles, not to be regarded, nor intended to be regarded by the Ohio Constitution, we think, as part of the press of the country, or as organs of public opinion."

Respondents attempt to distinguish the question of the right to distribute their order blanks on the streets from that of regulating or prohibiting the photographic or any other business upon the public streets. This distinction is attempted because the ordinance does not seek to prevent the taking of photographs on the street, but only has the effect of preventing the distribution of literature on the streets in connection with the pictures taken. However the situation may be viewed, the effect of the ordinance is to regulate business conducted on the streets. As far as respondents' business is concerned respondents are permitted to take pictures upon the streets but are not permitted to distribute literature, applications or order blanks in connection therewith. The distribution of the order blanks and cards in the case at bar must necessarily be viewed as an incident to the enjoyment of an interest in property, the property being the "candid camera" business. In the final analysis the problem here presented should be approached from that standpoint rather than from any consideration of the principles of freedom of speech and of the press, which, as already pointed out, are not material to the question, nor particularly relevant. It is to be noted that in all the cases, cited by the parties herein or found upon review of the question, which concern the validity of a handbill ordinance as applied to a strictly commercial activity, the courts have considered the question in the light of a regulation or prohibition of a property right rather than that of freedom of speech or press.

One possible exception may be found in Chrestensen v. Valentine, 2 Cir., 122 F.2d 511, in which case, however, the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari in November, 1941, 62 S.Ct. 301, 86 L.Ed. 486; and that case has not yet been heard by the Supreme Court. The question there involved is somewhat different from that in the case at bar. The ordinance there was a section of the Sanitary Code of New York City to the same effect as the ordinance here; but the handbill in the Chrestensen case was one containing a purely commercial notice on one side, advertising the exhibition of a submarine, coupled with a notice on the other side of the bill protesting the refusal on the part of city authorities of the use of a certain dock for the exhibition. The United States Circuit Court held in the majority opinion that the hybrid nature of the handbill, when not shown to be a subterfuge, prevented its falling within the prohibition of the ordinance. The majority of the court also expressed the opinion that absolute prohibition of commercial handbills seemed to be of doubtful validity, but preferred to rest its decision on the ground first stated. Circuit Judge Frank, however, in a strong dissent, was of the opinion that the handbill in question, though embodying a protest in the nature of an exercise of free speech, actually constituted two separable matters; and that the portion of the handbill which was of a purely commercial nature came within the prohibition of the ordinance; and that the constitutional guaranty of free speech does not render unconstitutional the prohibition of the distribution on the city's streets of such a purely commercial advertisement merely because it is deliberately coupled with a totally distinct and easily separable exercise of the privilege of free speech.[1]

In re Thornburg, Court of Appeals of Ohio, Cuyahoga County, 55 Ohio App. 229, 9 N.E.2d 516, 520, concerned the application of a handbill ordinance to the same business as that of respondents here. The court considered the ordinance as applied to such a business as one attempting to regulate property rights. The majority of the court held that a city may not prohibit distribution of handbills, etc., which are merely an incident to the conduct of a lawful business. But the opinion concedes that if the purpose of the ordinance were to regulate traffic, and so stated, it would represent a valid exercise of police power. The court held the ordinance valid insofar as it prohibited distribution of drugs, patent medicines, samples of foodstuffs, etc., on the streets, because such an application related to public health. Judge Terrell, dissenting, observed that it is not necessary in an ordinance to state the purpose for which it is enacted, or the evils sought to be overcome, and if from a reading of the ordinance it can be gathered that the purpose thereof is for the general safety and health of the citizens, it is within the exercise of the police powers of the city. He stated: "No person has an inherent right to conduct his business upon the public streets and sidewalks of a city. The distributing of advertising circulars and cards is part of a business. The city council in the exercise of its police power may prohibit the carrying on of such business on the public streets and highways." The dissent in the Thornburg case follows a line of reasoning more in accord with the views herein expressed.

[1] In McKay Jewelers et al. v. Bowron, Cal.Sup., 122 P.2d 543, recently argued and submitted November 6, 1941, there is raised the same question in connection with solicitation of business in front of a jewelry store by the proprietors or employees thereof. The ordinance there involved is section 42.00 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code prohibiting such solicitation. The court below (the same court which passed on the cases at bar) sustained a demurrer, without leave to amend, to a complaint seeking to enjoin enforcement of the ordinance as invalid and unconstitutional. The appellant there contends that the ordinance violates the guaranty of freedom of speech, which it is claimed applies as well to commercial transactions as to expressions of general opinions. It appears that when appellants there made solicitations they were standing on their own property, but in front of their store.

A significant case upon the subject at hand, and one regarded as leading, is that of San Francisco Shopping News Co. v. City of South San Francisco, cited above, certiorari to United States Supreme Court denied, 293 U.S. 606, 55 S.Ct. 122, 79 L.Ed. 697. The city of South San Francisco enacted an ordinance prohibiting the distribution in the city of any handbills or printed or written advertising matter on any porch or in any yard not in possession or under the control of the person distributing such matter. It was further provided that the ordinance shall be inapplicable to any newspaper or any publication printing news of a general nature and keeping advertising space therein open to the public, and the publishing of general advertising matter therein. In a decision replete with citations of compelling authority, drawn from the United States Supreme Court, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the validity of the ordinance.

In Murphy v. California, 225 U.S. 623, 32 S.Ct. 697, 698, 56 L.Ed. 1229, 41 L.R.A., N.S., 153, cited in San Francisco Shopping News Co. v. City of South San Francisco, supra, it is said: "The 14th Amendment protects the citizen in his right to engage in any lawful business, but it does not prevent legislation intended to regulate useful occupations which, because of their nature or locaton, may prove injurious or offensive to the public. Neither does it prevent a municipality from prohibiting any business which is inherently vicious and harmful. But, between the useful business which may be regulated and the vicious business which can be prohibited lie many nonuseful occupations which may or may not be harmful to the public, according to local conditions, or the manner in which they are conducted."

In People v. St. John, 1930, 108 Cal.App., Supp., 779, 288 P. 53, the appellate department of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County considered the validity of an ordinance prohibiting distribution of commercial advertising on streets, other public places and private yards. The case concerned the distribution of an advertising publication like that in the San Francisco Shopping News case. The shopping news in question was left upon the private porches of persons requesting the same. The validity of the ordinance was upheld as applied to distribution of the shopping news, though doubt was expressed as to the validity thereof if applied to instances where such a paper was handed at their homes to persons willing to receive the same; but when, as in the St. John case, the paper was thrown on the porch, where such distribution was likely to litter the streets, the court was of the opinion that the method employed did not constitute such personal distribution. It should be noted that there is a marked distinction between handing a paper to an individual who wants it, at the door of his home, and handing a paper to a person upon the public street, insofar as the likelihood of littering the streets is concerned.

In Sieroty v. City of Huntington Park, 1931, 111 Cal.App. 377, 295 P. 564, the ordinance was like that in the San Francisco Shopping News case, and prohibited distribution of advertising matter by placing or causing the same to be placed in any automobile, or in any yard, on any porch, or in any mailbox, not in the possession or under the control of the party distributing the same. The ordinance was held to be regulatory and not prohibitive and its validity was sustained. A hearing in the California Supreme Court was denied, Mr. Justice Shenk and Mr. Justice Preston dissenting.

It is significant that in the San Francisco Shopping News case, People v. St. John and in the Sieroty case a distinction between a commercial advertising sheet and a newspaper printing news of a general nature was recognized as reasonable; and in none of these cases was it considered that anything more than an interest in property was involved.

Respondents attempt to distinguish these three cases last mentioned upon the ground that the ordinances there considered prohibited distribution on private property, whereas the ordinance here in question seeks to prohibit distribution of advertising matter upon the public streets. But in all three cases the ordinances were viewed as intended to prevent littering of the streets. Can it be said that a city may prohibit or regulate the distribution of advertising matter on private property in order to prevent littering public streets, but may not enact a similar ordinance as to distribution on the streets themselves?

It is true that in People v. Taylor, 33 Cal. App.2d, Supp. 760, 85 P.2d 978, the appellate department of the Superior Court of San Diego County has stated that the attempt to prohibit mere handing of advertising matter to persons on streets or other public places has often been held an unlawful and unwarranted invasion of private rights, but, of the cases there cited as authority for such a proposition, all were concerned with ordinances so broad as to include any and all types of literature, at once rendering the ordinances invalid; and all of such cases directly involved the exercise of freedom of speech or of the press in connection with political, religious, social, economic or related matters, as did the case of People v. Taylor itself. It is to be noted that among the cases so cited, People v. Johnson, N.Y., Gen.Sess., New York County, 117 Misc. 133, 191 N.Y.S. 750, expressly draws a distinction between distribution of commercial and non-commercial matter in this respect. The court there was of the opinion that the ordinance in question was only intended to apply to commercial advertising matter, and, within such limits, was a proper police regulation. A distinction between distribution of commercial advertising and freedom of expression of views in general has also recently been drawn by lower New York courts in People v. La Rollo, Mag. Ct. N. Y. City, Municipal Term, Bronx County, 1940, 24 N.Y.S.2d 350, and People v. Passafume, Sp. Sess. New Castle, Westchester County, 1940, 22 N.Y.S.2d 785. Under the circumstances, the statement in People v. Taylor, above referred to, must be taken as intended to apply only to attempts at prohibiting all advertising matter without respect to reasonable distinctions or classifications, and is therefore inapplicable to the instant situation.

[8, 9] It is thus demonstrated that the distinction drawn by the ordinance here in question, between commercial and non-commercial matter distributed on the public streets, is reasonable and possesses a sound basis in reality; nor could it be contended that the ordinance does not apply equally to all persons of the same class. But one question remains. Does the ordinance bear a reasonable relation to the public health and general welfare? In a populous metropolitan area such as Los Angeles it cannot be said that any ordinance, framed like the present one, intended to prevent littering of the streets, does not bear a direct connection with the maintenance of public health and safety. Reasonable minds might differ, but "The judicial function is exhausted with the discovery that the relation between means and end is not wholly vain and fanciful, an illusory pretense." Williams v. Baltimore, 289 U.S. 36, at page 42, 53 S.Ct. 431, at page 433, 77 L.Ed. 1015, 1022; and see San Francisco Shopping News Co. v. South San Francisco, supra. There is no sound basis for setting aside the ordinance as invalid, nor any grounds for restraining its enforcement as applied to respondents. Upon the facts alleged the cause of action herein is unfounded, and it follows that appellants' demurrer to respondents' complaint should have been sustained; nor does it appear that any cause of action could possibly be stated in the situation here presented. It should be noted that respondents have not attempted to distinguish their order blanks and envelopes from "any commercial advertising handbill, or any handbill distributed for the purpose of advertising any merchandise," as these terms are used in the ordinance in question; and it is clear, both from the apparent purpose of the ordinance and from respondents' allegations as to the manner of distribution, that such a distinction would not be possible.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer interposed by defendants and thereupon enter judgment in favor of defendants.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 595

McKAY JEWELERS, Inc., et al. v. BOWRON et al.

L. A. 17933.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

1. Injunction ⇐85(2)

Where the enforcement of an ordinance may cause irreparable injury, the injured party may attack its constitutionality by an action to enjoin its enforcement.

2. Pleading ⇐214(1)

Allegations of plaintiffs' complaint were admitted by defendants' demurrer.

3. Injunction ⇐118(3)

Complaint alleging that jewelers engaged in practice of approaching passers-by who paused to inspect merchandise on display in jewelers' windows, that the jewelers did not step off their respective premises to address passers-by, that substantial portions of sales of the respective jewelers were derived from sales secured in such manner, and that defendant enforcement officers were threatening to institute proceedings against jewelers and arrest them and their employees for violation of ordinance prohibiting use of entrances, hallways, or doorways of places of business to solicit passers-by to enter for purpose of purchasing merchandise, was sufficient to show irreparable injury so as to authorize maintenance of injunctive action attacking constitutionality of ordinance.

4. Municipal corporations ⇐589

A municipality may, within its limits, exercise police powers equal in extent to those of the state. Const. art. 11, § 11.

5. Constitutional law ⇐81

The term "police power" is an attribute of sovereignty and is founded on the duty of the state to protect its citizens and provide for the safety, good order, and well-being of society, and it includes the general welfare which embraces regulation to promote economic welfare, public convenience, and general prosperity of the community.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Police Power".

6. Municipal corporations ⇐625

A prohibition or regulation under police power of municipality must be reasonably related to public health, safety, morals, or general welfare.

7. Constitutional law ⇐70(1), 81
Municipal corporations ⇐63(1), 611

A business may be inherently lawful and still subject to police regulation, but, when such lawful business is regulated, it is a judicial question whether the law or ordinance is a lawful exercise of the police power.

8. Constitutional law ⇐45
Municipal corporations ⇐63(2)

If a statute or ordinance purporting to be enacted to protect the public health, safety, morals, comfort, convenience, or general welfare has no real or substantial relation to any of those objects, it is the duty of the court to so declare, since a legislative body may not, under the guise of the police power, impose restrictions that are unnecessary and unreasonable upon the use of private property or the pursuit of useful activities.

9. Municipal corporations ⇐611

Municipal ordinance prohibiting use of entrances, hallways, or doorways of places of business to solicit or importune passers-by to enter for purpose of examining or purchasing merchandise, could not be sustained on theory that it was enacted to protect public health or morals. Const. art. 11, § 11.

10. Municipal corporations ⇐625

Municipal ordinance prohibiting use of entrances, hallways, or doorways of places of business to solicit or importune passers-by to enter for purpose of examining or purchasing merchandise cannot be sustained as having reasonable relation to general public welfare. Const. art. 11, § 11.

11. Constitutional law ⇐87, 296(1)

Municipal ordinance prohibiting use of entrances, hallways, or doorways of places of business to solicit or importune passers-by to enter for purpose of examining or purchasing merchandise, violates the state constitutional provision that all men have right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and prohibiting taking of property without "due process of law" and violates the Fourteenth Amendment of Federal Constitution as applied to jewelers who while standing on their own premises in quiet, dignified and peaceful manner, made solicitation without pressure or undue influence. Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 1, 13; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

12. Constitutional law ⇐48

In considering the constitutionality of the enactment of a legislative body, no presumption of invalidity will obtain and every intendment will be indulged in favor of its validity, but the presumption of validity is not conclusively binding on the court.

13. Constitutional law ⇐90

Municipal ordinance prohibiting use of entrances, hallways, or doorways of places of business to solicit or importune passers-by to enter for purpose of examining or purchasing merchandise, violates the constitutional guarantee of "freedom of speech".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Freedom of Speech".

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Edward T. Bishop, and W. Turney Fox, Judges.

Action by McKay Jewelers, Incorporated, and others, against Fletcher Bowron and others, to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed with directions.

Rollin L. McNitt and Edythe Jacobs, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., W. Joseph McFarland and F. von Schrader, Asst. City Attys., and Robert H. Patton, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment of dismissal after an order sustaining a demurrer to an amended complaint without leave to amend. The action was brought to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, on the ground that, as applied to plaintiffs, it violated certain articles of both the state and federal constitutions.

Plaintiffs and appellants are owners of duly licensed businesses conducted at ten respective addresses between Third and Ninth Streets on South Broadway in Los Angeles, a district included in the ordinance hereinafter referred to. They are all engaged in the business of selling jewelry, radios, certain types of electrical appliances, and other miscellaneous articles. Each owner carries merchandise of the value of $20,000 and over, and fixtures and equipment of $5,000 and over. The stores all abut on South Broadway and all have display windows in front. Two of the stores are set back two or more feet from the street line, so that a pedestrian or passer-by pausing to inspect the merchandise in the display windows may stand entirely on the premises of the owners. The other store fronts extend to the street line so that a pedestrian or passer-by must stand on the sidewalk when pausing to inspect the window displays. The stores all have entrances immediately abutting on the street and some of these are of sufficient size to contain display cases to display articles sold in the places of business.

The ordinance in question—Ordinance No. 77,000 and the amendments thereto—is entitled "Soliciting and Begging." This ordinance is a portion of the Municipal Code of the City of Los Angeles, Chapter 4, article 2, sections 42.00 to 42.16, inclusive. The particular sections and subdivisions under attack are section 42.00 (d), prohibiting, with certain exceptions, the sale of goods on any street, sidewalk or park in the districts defined; section 42.00 (e), prohibiting the "crying" or "soliciting" of merchandise on any street or sidewalk or in any doorway or entrance to any building opening into any such street or sidewalk in the districts defined; section 42.01, prohibiting, with certain exceptions, the use of any area in front of any building occupied by a sidewalk or used or intended for use for sidewalk purposes and extending eighteen feet back of the curb line for any purpose other than for the free and unobstructed passage of pedestrians thereon; and section 42.02, as amended in 1940, which makes it unlawful "for any person to use the street or sidewalk in front of or adjacent to any place of business where goods, wares or merchandise is sold or services offered for gain, or any entrance, doorway or hallway immediately abutting upon any public way, for the purpose of importuning or soliciting passers-by, by word of mouth or gesture, or by any sound making device, to enter such place of business for the purpose of examining or purchasing any goods, wares or merchandise or of hiring or bargaining for any services therein."

In the first cause of action plaintiffs allege that they engage in the practice of approaching pedestrians or passers-by, standing on the premises of plaintiffs, who pause to inspect the merchandise on display in the windows, and endeavor to engage them in conversation and to further interest such pedestrians or passers-by in such merchandise for the purpose of making a sale. Plaintiffs deny that any sound-making devices or gestures are used or physical force, pressure or undue influence is exerted to induce prospective customers to enter their places of business. They affirmatively allege that all solicitation or importuning of prospective customers to enter the stores is done in a quiet, dignified and peaceful manner. It is further alleged that all such conversations are conducted in the set-backs or recesses to the doorways within the respective property lines; that at no time do the plaintiffs or their employees step off of the private premises upon which their businesses are being conducted to engage in such conversations; and that no sales are conducted from any display cases in the entrances, but all sales are made inside the stores. The second cause of action contains the allegation that in addition to the conversations conducted entirely on the private premises, plaintiffs also engage in the practice of addressing pedestrians or passers-by, standing on the street adjacent to plaintiffs' display windows and inspecting the contents thereof, and endeavor to and do engage such pedestrians or passers-by in conversations in order to further interest them in such merchandise for the purpose of effecting sales. It is again alleged that in these latter instances neither the plaintiffs nor their employees step off the respective premises of plaintiffs to address or converse with such pedestrians or passers-by.

Each of the causes of action contains the further allegations that a substantial portion of the sales in the respective businesses of plaintiffs is derived from the conduct of the businesses as alleged in the complaint; that the defendants, as enforcement officers of the city of Los Angeles, have threatened to institute proceedings against plaintiffs and to arrest plaintiffs, their officers, agents and employees, for alleged violations of the sections of the Municipal Code previously referred to; and that the threat of defendants to prosecute and the prosecution of plaintiffs, their officers, agents and employees under the ordinance will result in great and irreparable injury to plaintiffs and their businesses, property and other rights.

Defendants demurred generally on the ground that the ordinance complained of was a valid exercise of the police power of the city and was not arbitrary, unreasonable or discriminatory. Defendants also demurred specially on the grounds of uncertainty, indefiniteness and ambiguity. As previously stated, the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend.

[1-3]Respondents first question the propriety of the injunctive relief sought by plaintiffs. It is well settled that where the enforcement of an ordinance may cause irreparable injury, the injured party may attack its constitutionality by an action to enjoin its enforcement. Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 211 Cal. 304, 295 P. 14; San Diego Tuberculosis Ass'n v. City of East San Diego, 186 Cal. 252, 200 P. 393, 17 A.L.R. 513; Abbey Land, etc., Co. v. San Mateo County, 167 Cal. 434, 139 P. 1068, 52 L.R.A.,N.S., 408, Ann.Cas. 1915C, 804, 2 McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, 2nd ed., sec. 851. The allegations of the complaint, which are necessarily admitted by defendants on demurrer, are sufficient to show the irreparable injury which would be suffered by the plaintiffs and their businesses if the threatened arrests were made or if they discontinued the method of conducting the businesses as alleged because of fear of arrest and prosecution.

Before discussing the constitutional questions generally, it should be noted that although the validity of many of the sections of the "Soliciting and Begging" ordinance are attacked in the plaintiffs' briefs, the discussion must be confined to those sections which prohibit soliciting from entrances, doorways or hallways immediately abutting upon any public way. The discussion must be so confined because the allegations in the complaint specifically allege that all of the activities of plaintiffs and their employees are carried on in the set-backs, doorways, hallways or recesses to the doorways of their respective places of business and within their respective private property lines. Because of these allegations the constitutionality of those sections of the ordinance which prohibit sale or solicitation on streets or sidewalks cannot now be questioned by the plaintiffs. Attention will therefore be directed only to that portion of section 42.00 (e) which prohibits the "crying" or soliciting" of the sale of goods in any doorway or entrance to any building opening into the street or sidewalk and that portion of section 42.02 which makes it unlawful for any person to use any entrance, doorway or hallway immediately abutting upon any public way, for the purpose of importuning or soliciting passers-by, by word of mouth or gesture, to enter such place of business for the purpose of examining or purchasing any goods, wares or merchandise. The latter section also prohibits the use of sound-making devices, but it is alleged that no such devices were used; therefore, the question of the power of the city to prohibit such use is not now before this court.

[4-8] The question to be determined is whether it is within the police power of the respondent city to prohibit the solicitation of the sale of goods by appellants on their own property in the manner alleged in the complaint. It is, of course, undisputed that a municipality, under article XI, section 11, of the state Constitution, may, within its limits, exercise police powers equal in extent to those of the state. The term "police power" as defined in the case of Gin S. Chow v. City of Santa Barbara, 217 Cal. 673, 702, 22 P.2d 5, 17, is an attribute of sovereignty and is founded on the duty of the state to protect its citizens and provide for the safety, good order and well-being of society. In that case it was noted that although in its inception the police power was closely concerned with the preservation of the public peace, safety, morals and health, under modern conditions it includes the general welfare which embraces regulation "'to promote the economic welfare, public convenience, and general prosperity of the community.' Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinios, 200 U.S. 561, 592, 26 S.Ct. 341, 50 L.Ed. 596, 4 Ann.Cas. 1175." In the case of Wholesale T. Dealers v. National, etc., Co., 11 Cal.2d 634, 82 P.2d 3, 118 A.L.R. 486, this court observed that although the police power has not expanded, changed social, political and economic conditions have enlarged the field of conduct which may properly be subjected to regulation in order that the general welfare may be adequately protected. It should be kept in mind, however, that even though the field of conduct which may be regulated has been enlarged, the requirement that the prohibition or regulation be reasonably related to the public health, safety, morals or general welfare remains the same. A business may be inherently lawful and still subject to police regulation, but when such lawful business is regulated, it is a judicial question whether the law or ordinance is a lawful exercise of the police power. People v. Hawley, 207 Cal. 395, 279 P. 136; Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 32 P. 870, 19 L.R.A. 727, 35 Am.St.Rep. 152. If, in the opinion of the court, a statute or ordinance purporting to be enacted to protect the public health, safety, morals, comfort, convenience or general welfare has no real or substantial relation to any of those objects, it is the duty of the court to so declare. A legislative body may not, under the guise of the police power, impose restrictions that are unnecessary and unreasonable upon the use of private property or the pursuit of useful activities. Skalko v. City of Sunnyvale, 14 Cal.2d 213, 93 P.2d 93; Ganley v. Claeys, 2 Cal.2d 266, 40 P. 2d 817; Ex parte Hayden, 147 Cal. 649, 82 P. 315, 1 L.R.A.,N.S., 184, 109 Am.St. Rep. 183. Innumerable authorities might be cited wherein different standards or tests have been applied in determining whether there has been a valid exercise of the police power.

[9] Referring to the instant case, we find that by sections 42.00 (e) and 42.02 appellants are absolutely prohibited from using the entrances, hallways or doorways of their places of business to solicit or importune passers-by to enter for the purpose of examining or purchasing merchandise. It is shown by the allegations in the complaint that the owners of the businesses are not wandering peddlers who set up their wares in doorways or entrances for "one night stands." They have established businesses with investments of over $25,000. No sales are made until the prospective customers are inside the stores. It is alleged that appellants obtain a substantial portion of their respective businesses and make a substantial sale of their merchandise as a result of such solicitation. If appellants were prohibited from so conducting their businesses, it must be assumed that the burden would be a heavy one. Such prohibition obviously has no relation to health or morals. It is possible that there might be some relation to safety of the public generally if there were evidence to show that as a result of appellants' activities, crowds of such proportion gathered as to impede or obstruct traffic on the sidewalk. But respondents do not urge that the prohibition is justified on the basis of traffic regulation. Futhermore, that is an evidentiary matter, the determination of which was precluded by the sustaining of the demurrer.

[10, 11] If the prohibition may be justified at all, then it must be under the general welfare clause. However, we find the prohibition has no reasonable relation to the general public welfare. It is alleged that the solicitation is done in a quiet, dignified and peaceful manner, and it is further alleged that no pressure or undue influence is exerted. The passer-by may stop and listen to what is being said or he may freely and without any interference continue on his way. Such solicitation, confined as it is to private property, differs little from window displays which passers-by may pause and inspect or disregard entirely if they so desire. It is conceivable that some hypersensitive individuals may find this type of solicitation offensive. However, that is not sufficient to justify the prohibition of an otherwise lawful method of conducting a business. As stated in Ex parte Whitwell, supra, 98 Cal. at page 83, 32 P. at page 874, 19 L.R.A. 727, 35 Am.St.Rep. 152: "There are many unpleasant, and even annoying, things which must be borne by persons living in a state of organized society, in order that others may also enjoy their equal rights under the law." The fact that a major part of appellants' business is gained from such solicitation is proof that the majority of the public does not disfavor upon such methods. The moment the conduct of appellants becomes offensive to the public generally it will cease, for it would be a poor business policy to carry on a practice which resulted in a loss of business rather than a gain. Those who now find the practice distasteful must tolerate it as many other characteristics of a business district must be tolerated. The burden placed upon appellants by such prohibition far outweighs the benefit, if any, to the public generally. Therefore, we are of the opinion that the restriction as applied to appellants under the facts disclosed in the complaint is an unwarranted and unreasonable interference with a lawful business and is violative of article I, sections 1 and 13, of the state Constitution and of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution. See State of California v. Marin Mun. W. Dist. 17 Cal.2d 699, 111 P.2d 651; Skalko v. City of Sunnyvale, supra; Skaggs v. City of Oakland, 6 Cal.2d 222, 57 P.2d 478; Ganley v. Claeys, supra.

In support of the contention that the ordinance is valid under the police power respondents cite two New York cases decided by courts of inferior jurisdiction—People v. Phillips, 147 Misc. 11, 263 N.Y.S. 158 and People v. Patrick, 171 Misc. 705, 14 N.Y.S.2d 249. In these cases ordinances similar to section 42.02 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code were upheld. In the Phillips case it is not disclosed whether the defendant confined his activities to his own premises, and in a brief opinion the court concludes: "In our opinion the regulation as provided in this subdivision appears to be a reasonable provision, and tends to provide against such conduct and acts which may lead to disorder and disturbance." [147 Misc. 11, 263 N.Y.S. 159.] In the Patrick case the defendant set up a counter in a vestibule. The counter was situated on the building line of the premises and gloves were sold over the counter to people standing on the sidewalk. The facts of this latter case differ materially from the facts of the instant case as disclosed by the allegations of the complaint. It is doubtful whether the New York court would have reached the same conclusion under a similar set of facts. If the Phillips case may be interpreted to mean that a municipality under its police power may prohibit the type of solicitation engaged in by appellants here, then for the reasons already discussed this court does not feel constrained to follow that decision.

Respondents also cite and rely on the cases of Williams v. Arkansas, 217 U.S. 79, 30 S.Ct. 493, 54 L.Ed. 673, 18 Ann.Cas. 865, and In re Barmore, 174 Cal. 286, 163 P. 50, L.R.A.1917D, 688. The Williams case upheld legislation prohibiting drummers from soliciting business on trains. The Barmore case upheld an ordinance prohibiting the solicitation of business for the transportation of persons or baggage in depots. This brief reference to those cases is sufficient to distinguish them from the situation now under consideration. Travelers would have no alternative but to face and endure the persistent solicitation on trains or in depots, and legislation prohibiting such activity is undoubtedly of great benefit to the peace and convenience of the traveling public. On the other hand, in the instant case, if a person does not desire to listen to the importunities of appellants, he need only pass on, as appellants confine their activities to their own private properties.

[12] This court is well aware of the rule recently reiterated in the case of Hart v. City of Beverly Hills, 11 Cal.2d 343, 79 P.2d 1080, to the effect that in considering the constitutionality of a statute no presumption of invalidity will obtain and every intendment will be indulged in favor of its validity. However, the presumption of validity is not conclusively binding on the courts. As previously stated, a legislative body may not impose restrictions that are unnecessary and unreasonable upon the use of private property, and it is for the court to determine the reasonableness of restrictions imposed. It should be noted that in the Hart case, supra, the court observed that the statute there in question tended to provide the general public with greater safety "not only from a standpoint of protection of its members from physical injury, but also from the possibility of their being the individual victims of fraud or crime." In the instant case respondents have made no showing of nor do they claim a like justification for the enactment of the ordinance in question.

[13] An additional argument made by appellants is worthy of note. Referring to the cases of Carlson v. People of State of California, 310 U.S. 106, 60 S.Ct. 746, 84 L.Ed. 1104; Thornhill v. State of Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093, and other cases which have declared ordinances prohibiting peaceful picketing invalid as in violation of the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech, appellants contend that if a person may stand outside a place of business and orally urge one not to enter, no loud noise or disorderly conduct being involved, certainly an owner of a business may say something in an orderly way, importuning a person to enter his premises to engage in business. In this regard appellants present the following query: "If it is the constitutional right of an employee to stand on the street in front of his employer's place of business and solicit or importune the public not to enter and trade with his employer, is it not also his constitutional right, as well as that of his employer, when conditions of employment are satisfactory to the employee, to stand on the premises of his employer's business and importune or solicit patrons to enter and trade, thus promoting trade and commerce in aid of his employment and in aid of the general welfare?" These contentions are primarily directed against those sections prohibiting activities on streets or sidewalks, and as previously pointed out, the constitutionality of such sections is not directly involved in the present case because of the allegations in the complaint. However, the argument becomes even stronger if it is confined to those parts of the sections prohibiting solicitation from doorways and entrances. If a person because of his constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech, can stand on the sidewalk in front of a place of business and peacefully solicit the general public to refrain from entering because of a labor dispute, then surely a person can stand in his own doorway and solicit the general public to enter his place of business to purchase merchandise. Respondents attempt to dismiss this contention with the statement that "regulations and prohibitions bearing upon solicitation of trade are not to be measured by rules relating to freedom of speech." Such contention cannot be so easily dismissed. The right to conduct a private business free from unreasonable regulation is just as sacred as the right of the members of a labor organization to conduct a campaign for better labor conditions and should receive equal protection under the constitutional guarantees. To permit peaceful solicitation by a picket on the sidewalk and prohibit peaceful solicitation from a doorway abutting on the sidewalk would be gross discrimination. It may be said, therefore, that the prohibition in the instant case is in violation of the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and permit the defendants to answer if they are so advised.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 580

STEPHENS v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

L. A. 18091.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

1. Attorney and client ⇐44(1)

Gross carelessness and negligence constitute a violation of attorney's oath to discharge his duties faithfully to the best of his knowledge and ability, and involve "moral turpitude" in that they are breach of fiduciary relation which binds him to the most conscientious fidelity. Code Civ.Proc. § 278; St.1939, p. 357, §§ 6103, 6106.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Moral Turpitude".

2. Attorney and client ⇐38

Acts of dishonesty, acts involving moral turpitude, and violation of oath of an attorney are all grounds for disbarment. St.1939, p. 357, §§ 6103, 6106.

3. Attorney and client ⇐54

The fact that all the attorneys constituting local administrative committee which investigated charges against attorney were members of the city attorney's staff and were not otherwise engaged in practice of law did not render the proceeding objectionable on ground that the committee was not a representative body of practicing attorneys.

4. Attorney and client ⇐44(1)

Record showing that attorney was guilty of gross negligence and carelessness in certain lawsuits, and that he was guilty of misrepresenting facts to his clients and making statements to them concerning their lawsuits which he knew to be false, required disbarment of the attorney for breach of his oath as attorney and for commission of acts involving "moral turpitude". St.1939, p. 357, §§ 6103, 6106.

In Bank.

Proceeding by John Randolph Stephens against the State Bar of California, to review a recommendation of the State Bar that the petitioner be disbarred.

Petitioner disbarred.

W. Verne Ahrens, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

W. Eugene Craven, of Merced, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a proceeding to review the recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that the petitioner be disbarred. The recommendation was made pursuant to findings and conclusions of the local administrative committee in accordance with two charges brought against the petitioner. The petitioner was admitted to practice law in California on October 11, 1927. He had previously practiced law in the State of Illinois, having been admitted to practice in that state in 1912. He is about 53 years of age.

On the first charge against petitioner Alvin Douglas was the complaining witness. In February, 1940, the petitioner was employed by Douglas to handle a divorce proceeding. It was agreed that his fee in this matter would be $35. This fee was paid to the petitioner in installments and payment was completed by June 17, 1940. A complaint for divorce was verified by Douglas before a notary public on March 4, 1940, but the complaint was not filed or summons issued until September 6, 1940. Before the complaint had been filed or summons issued, and about July 12, 1940, the petitioner gave the complaining witness a copy of the complaint and of what purported to be a copy of summons for service on the defendant. These papers were served on the defendant on July 13, 1940. The purported original summons with affidavit of service was returned to the petitioner about the 24th day of July, 1940. Between March 4, 1940, and September, 1940, Douglas called petitioner several times and inquired concerning the status of his lawsuit. The petitioner advised him that his trial would soon be coming up notwithstanding the fact that the complaint had not then been filed or summons issued. When the complaining witness discovered that the action had not been filed until September 6, 1940, he reported the matter to the State Bar. The petitioner then took some action in the case and the summons was re-served on September 28, 1940. A default was entered and the case was set for trial for November 14, 1940. The case was continued until November 19, 1940, because the testimony of the corroborating witness was insufficient. The interlocutory decree of divorce was granted at this later date.

The second charge was brought by Randolph Lowell. The petitioner on June 2, 1937, filed an action in Los Angeles County on behalf of Lowell against the Humboldt Malt & Brewing Company. An agreement was entered into on June 16, 1937, between the petitioner and Lowell whereby the petitioner agreed to prosecute the action and receive 25 per cent of any amount recovered. In the event no settlement was made and the case was tried the petitioner was to be paid $150 win or lose. The $150 was paid although the action was never tried. A motion for a change of venue was made and granted. The case was ordered transferred to San Francisco. The petitioner was present when this motion was granted. During the following year the petitioner told Lowell on several occasions that the action had been set for trial. Almost a year after the motion for a change of venue was granted, Lowell became suspicious and inquired at the Los Angeles County Clerk's office. He discovered that the action had never been transferred because the transfer fee had not been paid. At this time there were eleven days left to pay the fee. Lowell went to the petitioner and asked why the fee had not been paid and the petitioner told him it was the plaintiff's duty to pay this fee. The petitioner then asked Lowell for $30 expense money which Lowell gave him. About three months later Lowell discovered that the transfer fee had not been paid, and he persuaded the petitioner to pay the fee although the year had already elapsed. The action was dismissed on motion of the defendant on the ground that the action had not been transferred within one year after the order therefor had been made. The petitioner did not appear at the hearing on this motion. He did file points and authorities in opposition to the motion for dismissal. At the time of the dismissal the statute of limitations had run on the cause of action. The complaining witness, Lowell, then tried to recover his fee of $150 from the petitioner. After unfulfilled promises to pay he gave Lowell a note for the amount secured by a set of Corpus Juris. The note was never paid. He later had one Ogg give Lowell a check for $150, but the check was dishonored and never paid. Finally payment of the $150 was made on July 2, 1941, after proceedings in disbarment were well under way.

[1, 2] The petitioner claims that the recommendation of the board is contrary to law, and urges various reasons. He claims, first, that there is an attempt to disbar him upon grounds other than those enumerated in the California statutes or the rules of professional conduct. Considering the facts of the case in the light most favorable to the petitioner his acts show gross carelessness and negligence. In Waterman v. State Bar, 8 Cal.2d 17, 63 P.2d 1133, 1134, this court stated at page 20: "Gross carelessness and negligence constitute a violation of the oath of an attorney to 'faithfully discharge the duties of an attorney and counselor at law to the best of his knowledge and ability' (Code Civ.Proc. § 278) and involve moral turpitude in that they are a breach of the fiduciary relation which binds 'him to the most conscientious fidelity.'" Acts of dishonesty, acts involving moral turpitude, and the violation of the oath of an attorney are all grounds for disbarment. §§ 6103, 6106, State Bar Act, St.1939, p. 357.

The petitioner claims that there was no preliminary investigation as required by rule 10 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. The record recites, however, that a preliminary investigation was had at which petitioner was given an opportunity to be present. The petitioner presents no evidence to the contrary.

The petitioner claims that he had no opportunity to subpoena witnesses in his own behalf. But the record discloses that the petitioner made no request for a subpoena. It appears that he had every opportunity to produce or subpoena any witnesses he desired.

[3] There is no merit in the claim that the local administrative committee was not a representative body of practicing attorneys because all the attorneys were members of the City Attorney's staff and not otherwise engaged in the practice of law.

[4] The petitioner contends that no acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude are shown by the findings. Under the rule of Waterman v. State Bar, supra, above quoted, acts of gross carelessness and negligence involve moral turpitude and also breach the oath of an attorney. In addition to gross negligence and carelessness on the part of petitioner the record here also shows that he was guilty of repeatedly misrepresenting facts to his clients and making statements to them concerning their lawsuits which he knew to be false. This conduct certainly involved moral turpitude.

The recommendation of the Board of Governors is justified by the evidence and the proceedings appear to be regular in all respects.

It is hereby ordered that the petitioner, John Randolph Stephens, be and he is hereby disbarred from the further practice of law in this state, and that his name be and it is hereby stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors at law of the State of California.

HOUSER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment of disbarment, but in my opinion the judgment should be based upon the findings of the local administrative committee involving the conduct of petitioner in connection with his handling of the case of Randolph Lowell v. Humboldt Malt & Brewing Company pending in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. In this proceeding the local administrative committee found the petitioner guilty of conduct involving moral turpitude and dishonesty within the meaning of section 6106 of the State Bar Act and recommended disbarment. The Board of Governors adopted the findings and recommendation of the local administrative committee in this proceeding and recommended to this court that petitioner be disbarred. In addition to the above-mentioned findings, said committee made the following comment with respect to petitioner:

"The committee feels that it should point out to the Board of Governors that the respondent (petitioner) in this case did not show any disposition whatsoever to cooperate with the committee in attempting to ascertain the truth of the charge set forth in the notice to show cause. His conduct on the stand was evasive. He either deliberately lied to the committee concerning his belief on questions of law, or displayed a gross ignorance of the knowledge of law. That he has demonstrated to the committee either that he is an accomplished liar or has an absolute incapacity to practice law."

In view of the facts found by the local administrative committee with reference to petitioner's conduct in connection with the Randolph Lowell case, and the conclusion reached by said committee that such conduct amounted to moral turpitude and dishonesty coupled with the above-quoted comment of the committee, which findings of fact and conclusion were adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California, I am persuaded that petitioner does not possess either the moral character or the legal ability requisite to a member of the legal profession of this state, and for this reason he should be disbarred.

But, I do not agree that petitioner should be disciplined for his conduct in connection with the Alvin Douglas divorce proceeding as the local administrative committee found him not guilty of the matters charged in the complaint against him and recommended dismissal of the charges against him arising out of the Douglas case. The Board of Governors refused to approve the finding of the local administrative committee "that the delay in bringing said action and in obtaining said interlocutory decree was caused by the illness of the respondent (petitioner)," and also refused to adopt the conclusion and recommendation of the committee finding the petitioner not guilty and recommending dismissal of the charges against him. I agree with the conclusion reached by the local administrative committee in connection with the Douglas case, and in my opinion, petitioner should not be disciplined for his conduct in connection with this case.

The majority opinion is predicated upon the proposition that carelessness and negligence of a member of the bar in the handling of his client's legal matters may be made the basis of a disciplinary proceeding against him. I do not agree with this theory, and in this connection I adhere to the views expressed by me in the dissenting opinions which I prepared in the cases of Trusty v. State Bar of California, 16 Cal.2d 550, 107 P.2d 10; and In re McKenna, 16 Cal.2d 610, 107 P.2d 258.

In the case at bar there is no basis for the application of the so-called negligence theory as petitioner was not found guilty of mere negligent conduct, but of conduct involving moral turpitude and dishonesty. Such conduct amounts to moral delinquency which is not comprehended in any accepted definition of mere negligence.

For the reasons above stated with respect to petitioner's conduct in connection with the Randolph Lowell case, I am of the opinion that petitioner should be disbarred.

19 Cal.2d 586

SPENCER KENNELLY, Limited, v. BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N et al.

L. A. 17953.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

1. Replevin ⇐78

Where plaintiff prevails in a claim and delivery action, and the personalty involved has diminished in value, depreciation is a proper element of compensatory damages to be awarded. Code Civ.Proc. § 667.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

Whether bank, which held a conditional sales contract of purchase of an automobile, a certificate of ownership of automobile as security for performance of contract, and a note which buyer had executed to cover repair charges on automobile, lost its lien on automobile by informing dealer that it would accept amount due under contract as a condition to releasing certificate, was for the trial court under conflicting evidence.

3. Tender ⇐12(4)

Where an action has been begun, an offer to compromise the litigation should be an offer to allow judgment to be taken for the amount due at the time of the commencement of the action with costs incurred.

4. Estoppel ⇐88(1)

The rights of parties to an action are not affected by an attempt and failure to compromise the litigation, irrespective of the cause which produced the failure.

5. Damages ⇐182

Where bank, holding conditional sales contract of purchase of automobile and certificate of ownership as security for performance of contract, sent to dealer, after dealer had instituted claim and delivery action to recover possession of certificate and before bank filed a cross-complaint, a written demand asserting that bank legally owned automobile, demanding possession thereof or payment of a stated sum, and advising that on receipt of that sum it would release certificate, the document, though offered in evidence, should not have been considered by the trial court as imposing a duty on dealer to have accepted its terms as a means of avoiding accrual of further damages. Code Civ.Proc. § 997.

6. Attorney and client ⇐86

An attorney may not impair his client's substantial rights by making an unauthorized oral declaration.

7. Attorney and client ⇐86

Where uncontradicted evidence showed accrual of damages to automobile dealer by reason of bank's retention of ownership certificate held by bank as security for performance of conditional sales contract, trial court had indicated that it would award dealer damages in its claim and delivery action, and dealer's attorney had no authority to make statement that if damages were awarded dealer would be willing to pay sum demanded by bank, attorney's statement should not have been allowed to operate to dealer's detriment on issue of allowance of damages.

8. Replevin ⇐65

Under proper circumstances, relief may be sought by the filing of a cross-complaint in a claim and delivery action, and new parties may be brought in under a cross-complaint where it appears that their presence is essential to the complete determination of the controversy already before the court. Code Civ.Proc. § 442.

9. Replevin ⇐65

Where a cross-complaint which is not otherwise objectionable is filed in a claim and delivery action, it is not demurrable if it contains a prayer for damages for conversion in addition to other relief sought.

10. Sales ⇐475

Where bank, sued in claim and delivery by automobile dealer to recover possession of certificate of ownership held by bank as security for performance of conditional sales contract of purchase of automobile, joined dealer and buyer as cross-defendants seeking to recover balance due under contract, judgment against buyer and in favor of bank in amount due under contract was proper in view of agreement between buyer and dealer that if buyer made that payment he would be entitled to a net credit on a new automobile of amount allowed for old automobile, less amount due under contract.

11. Appeal and error ⇐1122(1)

Where it appeared that the trial court acted contrary to the uncontradicted evidence in failing to make a finding and award in favor of plaintiff on issue of damages in claim and delivery action to recover possession of certificate of ownership of an automobile, the reviewing court would modify the findings by adding in lieu of trial court's finding to the contrary a finding that by reason of defendant's wrongful detention of certificate plaintiff was damaged in a stated sum, since to affirm a judgment an appellate court may make a necessary finding under such circumstances.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action in claim and delivery by Spencer Kennelly, Limited, against the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association, to recover possession of a certificate of ownership of an automobile, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint joining plaintiff and Glenn Goss as cross-defendants and seeking to recover the balance due on a conditional sales contract and a note, a declaration of rights, a decree quieting title, and damages for conversion of the automobile. From the judgment, plaintiff and Glenn Goss appeal.

Judgment modified and, as modified, affirmed.

A. J. Getz and J. R. Myers, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edmund Nelson and G. L. Berrey, both of Los Angeles, and Louis Ferrari, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HOUSER, Justice.

The plaintiff corporation brought an action in claim and delivery in the municipal court against the defendant Bank of America Trust & Savings Association to secure possession of a certificate of ownership of an Oldsmobile coupé, the plaintiff dealer having accepted the coupé from one Glenn Goss as part payment of the purchase price of a new automobile. The bank was the holder of a conditional sales contract of purchase of the Oldsmobile coupé wherein Goss was the vendee, and the certificate of ownership thereof was held by the bank as security for the performance of the contract.

The controversy here involved arose in the following manner: In the latter part of April, 1940, Goss effected the purchase of the new automobile from the plaintiff company, intending to exchange in part payment therefor the Oldsmobile coupé, on which there was a balance still owing. The final payment under the conditional sales contract amounted to the sum of $376.12 and was due on May 7, 1940. At the time of such negotiations between Goss and the plaintiff automobile dealer, Goss arranged to give the latter a written authorization to pay to the bank the balance due under his contract, in order that the plaintiff might obtain possession of the certificate of ownership of the coupé. Pursuant thereto, an employee of the plaintiff company telephoned the bank concerning the balance necessary to be paid in order to receive the ownership certificate, and was informed by one of its clerks that the amount due was $376.12. The court found that on being so advised the "plaintiff accordingly agreed with said Glenn Goss to purchase said automobile for $760.00, allowing * * * [him] a net credit on a new automobile * * * of $760.00 less $376.12, or a total net credit of $383.88"; that thereafter, on May 1st, the plaintiff tendered to the bank Goss's authorization, together with a certified check in the sum of $376.12, which the defendant bank refused to accept upon the ground that the amount secured by the title to the automobile was the sum of $376.12 plus an unpaid balance on a promissory note (which had been executed by Goss to cover an expenditure for repairs to the automobile and which had been subsequently assigned to the bank), or a total of $421.97, which the bank thereupon demanded as a condition to releasing the ownership certificate.

The plaintiff company refused to pay the sum demanded by the bank and, treating the refusal of its tender of $376.12 as a waiver of the bank's lien on the automobile (Walker v. Houston, 215 Cal. 742, 12 P.2d 952, 87 A.L.R. 937; Moskovitz v. LeFrancois, 121 Cal.App. 310, 8 P.2d 1049; Sondel v. Arnold, 2 Cal.2d 87, 39 P.2d 793; Wagner v. Shoemaker, 29 Cal.App.2d 654, 85 P.2d 229), brought the instant action in claim and delivery to secure possession of the ownership certificate. The defendant bank cross-complained, plaintiff and Goss being joined as cross-defendants, seeking payment of the unpaid balance on the conditional sales contract, together with the balance due on the promissory note; a declaration of its rights, including a determination that the bank possessed a lien on the automobile; a decree quieting title, and damages for conversion of the automobile.

Having become a cause in equity the matter was transferred to the superior court where Goss's demurrer to the cross-complaint was overruled and trial was had by the court. Judgment was rendered directing the bank to deliver the ownership certificate to the plaintiff and awarding the plaintiff costs as against the defendant bank. Also, by the terms of the judgment Goss was directed to pay to the bank the said sum of $376.12 and cost of suit incurred subsequent to the filing of the cross-complaint. From that judgment the plaintiff and Goss have appealed.

[1] The plaintiff's appeal is on the sole ground that the trial court erred in refusing to award compensatory damages in its favor. It was claimed that during the time the certificate was held by the bank the plaintiff was unable to sell the automobile due to lack of evidence of title, and that, as a consequence, the automobile was kept in storage until the ownership certificate could be secured. Evidence was adduced to show that during such period the automobile suffered a depreciation in value in the amount of $155—which evidence was not contradicted. The plaintiff contends that since the trial court found it was entitled to the possession of the certificate both prior to and after the bringing of the action, and where, as here, compensatory damages were proved, an award therefor should have been made as a matter of course. Such is the general rule. Sec. 667, Code Civ.Proc.; Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 374, 260 P. 869; 5 Cal. Jur. 206. Moreover, it has been held that in a claim and delivery action where plaintiff prevails and the personal property involved has diminished in value, depreciation is a proper element of damages. 5 Cal. Jur. 207; Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Collins, 192 Cal. 315, 317, 219 P. 982; Berry v. Bank of Bakersfield, 177 Cal. 206, 170 P. 415; Morris v. Allen, 17 Cal.App. 684, 121 P. 690.

The question to be determined is whether there were facts or circumstances presented herein by the evidence which justified the trial court in disallowing damages.

[2] The evidence showed that at the time of the conversation between the respective employees of the plaintiff dealer and the bank concerning the amount of money necessary to be paid to secure the ownership certificate, the bank was the holder also of the promissory note heretofore referred to, in an amount covering repair charges on the automobile. Goss had incurred such expense and had executed the note about a year after the bank had become the assignee of the contract for the purchase of the automobile. The conditional sales contract contained a provision that title to the automobile was to be reserved in the bank until the payments on the purchase price of the automobile and any charges for repairs were paid. The note was being paid by monthly installments which were not consolidated with the monthly payments made on the purchase price of the automobile, and the bank kept its account of the note transaction separate from that pertaining to the contract for purchase of the automobile. No payment was due on the note at the time the conversation was had between the plaintiff company and the bank respecting the amount the latter would require to release the certificate, and the evidence conclusively showed that the note was not even mentioned at that time. However, there was some conflict in the evidence as to what was said on the occasion of the telephone conversation just referred to. The plaintiff's employee testified that she telephoned to the bank and asked a clerk thereof for the amount of the "pay-off" on the Goss account; that "he very particularly said $376.12"; that she then asked, "The net payoff is $376.12, is that correct?"—to which the defendant's clerk replied, "Yes, and it is due May 7th"; that she then asked whether the bank would accept the plaintiff's certified check therefor and he replied "Yes, in that amount"; and that nothing whatever was said with regard to any repair bill or any other account Goss might have had with the bank. As heretofore stated, the evidence was in conflict as to what was said during that conversation. Nevertheless, in making its findings favorable to the plaintiff, the trial court concluded that the bank had in fact informed the plaintiff it would relinquish the ownership certificate on payment of the sum of $376.12—and, by implication, that in so doing the bank had thereby waived its security for the unpaid balance on the promissory note, and thereafter was estopped from demanding the payment of such additional sum as a condition to releasing the ownership certificate. Parenthetically, it may here be said that Goss was not in default with respect to either of his transactions with the bank, and that he continued to and prior to trial did make payment of the entire balance owing on the note.

The defendant bank, in effect, now argues that under the facts and circumstances heretofore related, the trial court was in error in finding that the bank had lost its lien on the automobile by informing the plaintiff it would accept the sum of $376.12 as a condition to releasing the certificate. However, the bank has not appealed from the judgment rendered herein, and in view of the conflict in the evidence in a material particular, this court would not be inclined to disturb the findings in that respect in any event.

[3-5] The record further shows that after the plaintiff company had instituted this action, and before the filing of the defendant's cross-complaint, the bank sent to the plaintiff a written demand, or statement, asserting it was the legal owner of the automobile, demanding possession thereof or the payment of the sum of $376.12, and advising that on receipt of such sum it would release the ownership certificate. That statement was introduced in evidence by the plaintiff, and the purpose it was intended to serve is not made clear. However, it has become the subject of considerable controversy between the parties to this appeal. The defendant asserts that the document constituted evidence which showed that the plaintiff could have mitigated the amount of damages which accrued during the period following its receipt by the plaintiff if the latter had immediately paid to the defendant the sum therein demanded. The plaintiff's reply thereto is that the defendant cannot set up, as a defense to an allowance of damages against it, a claim that the plaintiff was under a duty to accept the offer in order to mitigate damages, where the defendant has invoked the equity powers of the court and by that tribunal has been adjudged to be the wrongdoer. Moreover, the plaintiff asserts, the document here under discussion amounted to an unaccepted offer of compromise, within the import of section 997, Code of Civil Procedure, which was made after the commencement of suit and, as such, should not have been considered by the trial court in connection with the question of allowance of damages. The plaintiff points out that not only was such offer made by the defendant after the action had been instituted, but it contained no offer by the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs theretofore incurred. In that regard, in 5 California Jurisprudence, at page 406, it is said: "If a suit has been begun, the offer should be to allow judgment to be taken for the amount due at the time of the commencement of the action, with costs incurred." (Emphasis added.) Rottman v. Hevener, 54 Cal.App. 485, 490, 202 P. 334; McCoy v. Buckley, 11 Cal.App. 241, 244, 104 P. 705; Fell v. Frierson, 171 Cal. 351, 352, 153 P. 229. It has been ruled that "The rights of the parties to an action are not affected by an attempt and failure to compromise the litigation, irrespective of the cause which produced the failure." 5 Cal.Jur. 408; see, also, McCallion v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 70 Cal. 163, 12 P. 114. Section 997, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that an unaccepted offer of compromise "cannot be given in evidence upon the trial." Under the foregoing authorities, it is our conclusion that, although the document was offered in evidence—in the light of the circumstances surrounding the making of such offer—it should not have been considered by the trial court as imposing a duty on the plaintiff to have accepted its terms as a means of avoiding the accrual of further damages. The trial court made a finding on such offer, and therefore we cannot say that in refusing to award damages to the plaintiff the court was not erroneously influenced by the document in question.

[6, 7] The record also shows that after most of the evidence had been adduced the trial court stated it would award damages to the plaintiff in the sum of $155. Thereafter, during the course of argument by counsel, the plaintiff's attorney made the statement that if such judgment should be awarded the plaintiff the latter would be willing to pay the sum of $376.12—whereupon the trial judge said that in view of such statement no damages would be awarded to the plaintiff. However, we find nothing objectionable in that statement sufficient to warrant a refusal to award damages, in view of the fact that the trial court had previously indicated it would make such an award. Insofar as the statement purported to express a willingness on the plaintiff's part to pay the $376.12, there was evidence to show, and, as heretofore indicated, the trial court found that "plaintiff * * * [had] agreed with said Glenn Goss to purchase said automobile for $760.00, allowing to the said Goss a net credit on a new automobile then purchased by Goss from plaintiff at $760.00 less $376.12, or a total net credit of $383.88"; and therefore it would seem immaterial whether Goss paid the sum of $376.12, or whether the plaintiff offered to make such payment. Moreover, the record shows that the plaintiff's attorney possessed no authority from his client to make any declaration of the nature of that here involved, and the rule is that an attorney may not impair his client's substantial rights by the making of an unauthorized oral declaration. Price v. McComish, 22 Cal.App.2d 92, 97, 70 P.2d 978; 3 Cal.Jur. 667. That the statement of plaintiff's counsel had such an effect on the trial judge who decided the issues here involved is evidenced by his response thereto. In view of the uncontradicted evidence showing the accrual of damages to the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's retention of the ownership certificate, neither the statement referred to nor the so-called offer of compromise previously discussed should have been allowed to operate to the plaintiff's detriment on the issue of an allowance of damages.

[8, 9] Appellant Goss claims the trial court erred in overruling his demurrer to the cross-complaint. He contends a cross-complaint may not be filed in an action for claim and delivery—asserting that such action is limited to the issue whether the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the specific personal property involved. He claims that proposition is particularly true in an instance such as the present one, where, as a third party, he was brought into the controversy for the first time by the cross-complaint. However, it has been held that under proper circumstances relief may be sought by the filing of a cross-complaint in a claim and delivery action. See Ackerman v. Schultz, 178 Cal. 190, 172 P. 609; Moskovitz v. LeFrancois, 121 Cal.App. 310, 313, 8 P.2d 1049; 5 Cal.Jur. 193. Also, it is the rule that new parties may be brought in under a cross-complaint where it is made apparent that their presence is essential to the complete determination of the controversy between parties already before the court. Sec. 442, Code Civ.Proc.; 21 Cal.Jur. 82, et seq. And, contrary to Goss's further contention, we do not understand that where a cross-complaint which is otherwise not objectionable is filed in such an action, it is vulnerable to a demurrer if it contains a prayer for damages for conversion in addition to other relief sought. See Moskovitz v. LeFrancois, supra; Ackerman v. Schultz, supra.

[10] Although appellant Goss has challenged the imposition of the judgment against him in favor of the bank in the sum of $376.12, it does not appear he is claiming that as between himself and the plaintiff it was understood the latter was primarily liable for the payment of such sum. By the terms of the agreement which existed between them it evidently was the understanding that if Goss made such payment he was to be entitled to the gross credit heretofore referred to. We find no error, therefore, in the judgment which was rendered against him on the cross-complaint.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss other points argued in the briefs.

[11] As heretofore has been indicated, in failing to make a finding and award in favor of the plaintiff upon the issue of damages, the trial court has acted contrary to the uncontradicted evidence adduced on that issue. It is settled, however, that in order to affirm a judgment an appellate court may make a necessary finding under such circumstances. Tupman v. Haberkern, 208 Cal. 256, 280 P. 970. Therefore, the findings hereby are modified by adding thereto the following in lieu of the trial court's finding to the contrary: "It is found that by reason of the defendant's wrongful detention of the certificate the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of one hundred and fifty-five dollars."

The judgment is therefore modified to show an allowance of damages to the plaintiff in the sum of $155. As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 605

NEET et al. v. HOLMES et al.

L. A. 17955.

Supreme Court of California.
Feb. 26, 1942.

1. Venue ⇐72

On motion for change of venue, question of transitory or local character of causes of action was to be determined from allegations of complaint on file at time motion was made and from nature of judgment which might be rendered, assuming the truth of the allegations.

2. Venue ⇐22(1)

Where complaint contained a statement of four causes of action, one being for money had and received, two being for an accounting and the fourth for the appointment of a receiver, but all were based mainly on alleged fraud and misrepresentations of defendants in connection with operations of mines in which plaintiffs had an interest the action was a proceeding in equity and was essentially a "personal action" which was properly brought in county of defendants' residence rather than in county where mines were situated. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 392, 395.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Personal Action".

3. Venue ⇐46

If action for an accounting based upon alleged fraud and misrepresentations of defendants in connection with operations of mines in which plaintiffs had an interest had been brought in county in which mines were located, the defendants would have been entitled to have action removed to county of their residence. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

4. Venue ⇐4

An action is "transitory" rather than "local" where right to any real property sought by plaintiffs depends upon outcome of the controversy concerning a personal obligation of the defendants, and the judgment rendered thereon would be one to enforce such an obligation. Code Civ.Proc. § 392.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Local Action" and "Transitory Action".

5. Venue ⇐5(1)

The nature of action is "local" and action must be tried in county where land is situated where it turns on title to property as distinct from the personal obligation, and decree operates ex proprio vigore on the title. Code Civ.Proc. § 392.

6. Pleading ⇐34(4)

Where defendant seeks change of venue from county in which realty is located to county of his residence, allegations of complaint will be strictly construed against the pleader to ascertain whether he has joined a personal or transitory cause so as to entitle defendant to a trial in county of his residence. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

7. Venue ⇐22(3)

A plaintiff may not join as defendants those who are not real parties in interest merely for purpose of obtaining a trial in the county of their residence. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

8. Venue ⇐5(5), 22(1)

Where action for an accounting and for a declaration of trust of certain mining property was essentially to enforce a personal obligation arising from alleged fraud and misrepresentations of defendants in connection with operations of mines in which plaintiffs had an interest, the existence of a claim for damages for alleged injuries to the mines did not require that action be maintained in county in which mines were located rather than in county of defendants' residence. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 392, 395.

9. Pleading ⇐45

The pleader is required to frame his complaint to show clearly that he is entitled to retain the trial of the action in the county in which it was commenced.

10. Venue ⇐72

The matter of inconveniences in respect to introduction of evidence, books and records, and convenience of witnesses if case were retained in county of defendants' residence was not cognizable on motion for change of venue under codal provision relating to venue of actions involving realty. Code Civ.Proc. § 392.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

Suit by Thomas Porter Neet and others against Kenneth A. Holmes and others for an accounting, for a declaration of trust of certain mining property and for other relief, wherein some of the defendants filed motions for a change of venue. From orders denying the motions, the moving defendants appeal.

Orders affirmed.

Ralph D. Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

William Ellis Lady and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants for an accounting, for a declaration of trust of certain mining property, and other relief. The action was commenced in Los Angeles County which was the county of the defendants' residence. Mining claims referred to in the complaint were situated in Imperial County. Certain of the defendants moved for a change of venue to Imperial County. The motions were denied and this appeal is prosecuted by the moving defendants from the orders denying their motions.

The appellants, who will be referred to as the defendants, assert that they are entitled to have the action tried in Imperial County for either of two reasons: (1) that all of the causes of action alleged in the complaint are local in character; (2) that if one of the causes of action is local in character the plaintiffs, by joining a transitory cause of action, cannot defeat the right of the defendants to have any question of title of real property or of injuries to real property tried in the county where the real property is situated.

[1] The question of the transitory or local character of the causes of action must be determined from the allegations of the complaint on file at the time the motion was made and from the nature of the judgment which might be rendered thereon, assuming the truth of the allegations. Sheeley v. Jones, 192 Cal. 256, 219 P. 744; Eckstrand v. Wilshusen, 217 Cal. 380, 18 P.2d 931.

The complaint in form contains a statement of four causes of action. The first is a common count for money had and received in the sum of $550,000. The second in substance alleges that in 1896 Mary E. Greathouse became the owner of 55/100ths interest in three mining claims, the Padre, Madre and Cargo Muchacho, located in what is now Imperial County; that Mary E. Greathouse died in the State of Kentucky in 1906 and that the plaintiffs in time succeeded to all of her interest in these mining properties. In 1896 Kate S. Wright became the owner of the remaining 45/100ths interest in said mining claims. She died in 1938 and her surviving husband as a joint tenant became the owner of that interest. The defendant, Ray H. Fitzgerrell, an attorney, was married to a niece of Kate S. Wright. The defendants Holmes and Nicholson were associates and partners in the mine ventures. They investigated the value of the Padre, Madre, and Cargo Muchacho mines, looked up the owners, and represented to Fitzgerrell that the mines were valuable. It is then alleged that the three formed an unlawful conspiracy to obtain possession and control of the mines for their own use and benefit and to defraud the owners of gains therefrom. In January, 1935, they discovered that Mary E. Greathouse was still the owner of record of the 55/100ths interest, that she had died in Versailles, Kentucky, and that her estate in California was without administration. Fitzgerrell obtained a conveyance in trust of the 45/100ths interest of the Wrights. He journeyed to Kentucky by airplane, using funds furnished by Holmes and Nicholson, and made representations in person and by correspondence to the Greathouse heirs, none of whom lived in California, that the mining properties were of no substantial value, that he knew of no one who was interested in the mines, and that he was making the investigation and trips at his own expense to preserve the properties in contemplation of some future possibility of development.

In April, 1935, Fitzgerrell organized a corporation called the Rayfitz Company, had himself elected as president, and his daughter, a girl of college age, as secretary-treasurer. An agreement was then entered into pursuant to which the Greathouse heirs, the plaintiffs herein, transferred to the Rayfitz Company their 55/100ths interest in the mines in exchange for 55 shares of stock. Fitzgerrell conveyed the Wright interest for 45 shares of stock of the company. A lease of said mining properties was then executed by the Rayfitz Company as lessor, and by Holmes and Nicholson as lessees, for a term of five years from August 7, 1935. The complaint contains allegations of details in which the lease is claimed to have been unfair to the lessor. The consideration for the lease is alleged to have been $700 and certain royalties. Holmes, Fitzgerrell acting as his attorney, had himself appointed by the court in California as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Mary E. Greathouse. During the term of the lease Holmes, Nicholson and Fitzgerrell caused twenty mining claims to be located in the public domain of the United States contiguous and adjacent to the Padre, Madre, and Cargo Muchacho mines. The cost and expenses of making such locations and acquisitions were paid with funds received from ores recovered from the leased mining properties. It is then alleged that the acquisition of the adjacent mining property was and is necessary to the efficient operation of the leased property, but that all of said adjacent mining claims were located for the personal benefit of Holmes, Nicholson and Fitzgerrell, contrary to the plaintiff's instructions to Fitzgerrell to locate those claims for the benefit of the lessor, and in furtherance of the alleged unlawful plan and conspiracy. Then follow statements of alleged misrepresentations of Fitzgerrell in connection with his attempt to obtain consent to the execution of a second lease of said properties by the Rayfitz Company to the same lessees for a period of twenty years, "and as long thereafter as gold, silver" or other metals are mined. The plaintiffs set forth the alleged small amounts of royalties accounted for by the lessees and the decrease in the amounts thereof after Fitzgerrell's unsuccessful attempt to obtain consent to the twenty year lease. The lessees then over a period of months attempted to obtain an additional five year lease, at the same time representing that there were no operations at all on the leased properties. In November, 1938, the plaintiffs rescinded the lease of August, 1935, on statutory grounds, Civil Code, section 1689, whereupon the operations on said property produced greatly increased amounts of ore. It is then alleged that the defendants failed to protect said property by proper timbering and the surface of the Padre and Madre mines caved in, making it impossible to remove ore still remaining in said mines alleged to be of the value of $200,000; that the defendants withheld and converted to their own use royalties belonging to the lessor and that the plaintiffs are entitled to an accounting of the value of all ore extracted and all moneys received from the operations of all the mining properties mentioned in the complaint; that on July 5, 1939, the Rayfitz Company reconveyed to the plaintiffs their 55/100ths interest in the Padre, Madre and Cargo Muchacho mining claims, the certificates of stock issued to the plaintiffs were surrendered by them and that the plaintiffs are the owners and in possession of said mining properties. Similarly the successors of the Wright 45/100ths interest obtained a conveyance thereof from the Rayfitz Company. The plaintiffs allege the total damage suffered by them and the other owners of the Padre, Madre, and Cargo Muchacho mines to be $1,000,000.

By the second cause of action the plaintiffs ask for an accounting of their 55/100ths percentage of the moneys received from the operations of all the property by the defendants and of the $200,000 damages sustained by reason of the occupation of the three mining claims. The statement of the second cause of action covers nearly 70 pages of the typewritten transcript and contains 46 numbered paragraphs.

The third cause of action reincorporates all 46 paragraphs of the first cause of action, with the additional allegations that more than $400,000 was received by the defendants after the rescission of the lease by the plaintiffs, which sum has been retained by the defendants with the exception of a comparatively small amount; that the plaintiffs are entitled to an accounting of all moneys received from operations from the date of the rescission to the date of the surrender of the leased properties and to a judgment not only for said receipts but for all receipts from the date of the making of the lease to the date of the surrender thereof.

The fourth cause of action realleges by reference all the numbered paragraphs of the second cause of action and in addition realleges the confidential relationships existing as grounds for the allegation that the location and acquisition of the adjacent twenty mining claims by the defendants for their own benefit was a constructive fraud upon the plaintiffs; that the defendants hold said mining claims as constructive trustees for the plaintiffs; that defendants have removed valuable ores from said mines without any accounting thereof to the plaintiffs and that they will so continue to remove ores from said mines unless enjoined from so doing or unless a receiver be appointed. In this cause of action the plaintiffs expressly reallege the loss in possible ore production to the value of $200,000 caused by the cave-in of the Madre and Padre mines as the basis for allegations of necessity for the appointment of a receiver for the mines, including the adjacent twenty mining properties. This cause of action also contains the formal allegation that the defendants claim some right, title and interest in the twenty mining claims which is adverse to the plaintiffs, but that all such claims, except those of the Wright and Greathouse estate interests (their representatives having been made defendants) are invalid.

[2] It is apparent that the granting of the major relief sought by the plaintiffs will depend upon proof of facts constituting such a fraud as to entitle them to any relief pursuant to the alleged second cause of action. Without proof of sufficient facts pursuant to that cause of action, the plaintiffs will not have shown any cause for the major relief asked under the first, third and fourth causes of action. All are based mainly on the alleged fraud and misrepresentations of the defendants in connection with the operations of the Padre, Madre, and Cargo Muchacho mines. Title or ownership of those properties is not involved inasmuch as there is no allegation that the defendants claim any interest therein adverse to the plaintiffs. The principal relief sought by the plaintiffs is an accounting of operations in the leased property and in the additional twenty mines located by the defendants, and a judgment based on the fruits thereof including title to the additional mines, of which the plaintiffs have been deprived by the alleged fraud of the defendants. Such an action is a proceeding in equity and is essentially a personal action. Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 P. 356; Bardwell v. Turner, 219 Cal. 228, 25 P.2d 978; Weygandt v. Larson, 130 Cal. App. 304, 308, 19 P.2d 852. See, also, Vaughan v. Roberts, 45 Cal.App.2d 246, 113 P.2d 884.

[3-5] Therefore, even if we ignore the inclusion of the common count, it cannot be said that all of the causes of action are local in character so as to require the application of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure in accord with the first contention of the defendants. In other words, if the action had been brought in Imperial County, the defendants would have been entitled to have it removed to Los Angeles County. Section 395, Code of Civil Procedure; Smith v. Smith, supra; Sheeley v. Jones, supra; Howe v. Tucker, 219 Cal. 193, 25 P.2d 832; Turlock Theatre Co. v. Laws, 12 Cal.2d 573, 86 P.2d 345, 120 A.L.R. 786. In Turlock Theatre Co. v. Laws, supra, it was pointed out that an action is transitory rather than local where the right to any real property sought by the plaintiffs depends upon the outcome of a controversy concerning a personal obligation of the defendants, and the judgment rendered thereon would be one to enforce such an obligation. The nature of the action here is essentially transitory, that is, the defendants would be entitled to have it tried in the county of their residence, if the determination of an estate or interest in land is merely incidental to the determination of a cause for equitable relief in trust, fraud, or contract. The nature of the action is local, and must be tried in the county where the land is situated, where it turns on the title to property as distinct from the personal obligation, and the decree operates ex proprio vigore on the title. State v. Royal Consolidated Mining Co., 187 Cal. 343, 351, 202 P. 133. In Booker v. Aitken, 140 Cal. 471, 74 P. 11, an action to recover real property on the ground that a deed of said property was invalid for fraud, was deemed to be local and an order denying a motion for a change of venue to the county of the defendant's residence was affirmed. The principles hereinabove stated were recognized and it was expressly pointed out that in that case neither a personal accounting nor a money judgment was sought, and that the substantial and only specific appropriate relief related to the title of the land deeded to the defendant. Similar cases are Eckstrand v. Wilshusen, 217 Cal. 380, 18 P.2d 931, and State v. Royal Consolidated Mining Co., supra.

In the present case it is obvious that the action turns principally on the personal obligation, as distinct from the title, and that judgment for any mining properties not now owned by the plaintiffs would follow if at all, merely as an incident of the judgment establishing the personal obligation.

The foregoing answers the first contention of the defendants that the action is entirely local in character. It also answers in part their second contention that if any alleged cause of action is local in character, the plaintiffs cannot deprive the defendants of a trial in the county where the property is situated.

[6, 7] In cases where the action has been commenced in the county of the location of the real property and the defendant moved for a change of venue to the county of his residence, it has been declared to be the policy of the law jealously to guard the right of the defendant to have a trial in the county where he resides and that the allegations of a complaint will be strictly construed against the pleader to ascertain whether he has joined a personal or transitory cause so as to entitle the defendant to a trial of the action in the county of his residence. Section 395 Code of Civil Procedure; Ah Fong v. Sternes, 79 Cal. 30, 21 P. 381; Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 575, 26 P. 356; Turlock Theatre Co. v. Laws, supra. For similar reasons a plaintiff may not join as defendants those who are not real parties in interest merely for the purpose of obtaining a trial in the county of their residence. Section 395, Code of Civil Procedure.

[8] Here it is not disputed that all the defendants living in Los Angeles County are real parties in interest and were not joined solely for the purpose of having the action tried in that county, and it may not be said that the plaintiffs have framed the allegations of their complaint so that their action will be considered transitory solely for the purpose of having it tried in the county of the defendant's residence rather than in the county where the mining property is situated. We have concluded that the action is essentially to enforce a personal obligation arising from the alleged fraud of the defendants. But it is said that there is the claim for damages for alleged injuries to the Padre and Madre mines. It should be noted that the relief prayed for in this respect is not the principal relief sought; that the property alleged to have been injured is the property of the plaintiffs, and that any disadvantage resulting from a trial in a county other than that in which the property is situated is theoretically at least, a disadvantage inuring to the plaintiffs rather than to the defendants.

[9] The pleader is required to frame his complaint to show clearly that he is entitled to retain the trial of the action in the county in which it was commenced. Sheeley v. Jones, supra. What we have said is sufficient to demonstrate that the complaint herein clearly shows that the plaintiff is entitled to retain the trial of the action in Los Angeles County.

The defendants' attempt to find support in the case of Brown Materials Co. v. Angus, 20 Cal.App.2d 32, 66 P.2d 470, for their contention that when local and transitory causes of action are joined, the defendant has the choice of where the action shall be tried. In that case the action was concededly brought in an improper county, which was neither the county of the defendant's residence nor the county of the situs of the real property. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for a change of venue to the county of the location of the real property. The decision in that case cannot be construed as a holding that a defendant would have a right to have an action transferred to the county where the property was situated where the action was otherwise commenced in a proper county.

[10] The defendants also refer to inconveniences which they say are sure to arise in the trial of the action in Los Angeles County, in respect to introduction of evidence, books and records, and convenience of witnesses. These are not matters which are cognizable on a motion seeking the application of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The orders are affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

ANDERSON v. ANDERSON.

L. A. 18117.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

Rehearing Granted March 23, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐627(2)

Where no printed transcript of the record was filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court within 40 days of the filing of the engrossed bill of exceptions in the trial court, as required by court rule, appeal was dismissed. Rule 1 for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.

2. Appeal and error ⇐662(3)

Failure of appellant to apply to the trial court for relief on any legal grounds existing to set aside or modify engrossed bill of exceptions, which had been filed in trial court, precluded appellant from raising objection to the engrossed bill of exceptions on motion by respondent in Supreme Court to dismiss the appeal on ground that printed transcript had not been filed in Supreme Court within 40 days of the filing of the engrossed bill of exceptions in trial court. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

3. Appeal and error ⇐938(1)

Legal grounds existing in appellant to set aside or modify engrossed bill of exceptions which had been filed in the trial court must be presented to trial court, and trial court's refusal to act is subject to review by Supreme Court. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

4. Exceptions, bill of ⇐50

Where appellant had taken no action to have his first bill of exceptions settled, and had filed a second proposed bill of exceptions, the first bill of exceptions was "abandoned".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Abandon"

5. Exceptions, bill of ⇐39(1)

Bill of exceptions filed long after time fixed by rules of Supreme Court was a nullity.

6. Appeal and error ⇐554(2)

Where appellant had abandoned her first proposed bill of exceptions, and her second proposed bill of exceptions was filed too late, there was no proceeding for settlement of bill of exceptions pending on appeal and appeal was dismissed.

7. Courts ⇐85(3)

The purpose of the provision in the Supreme Court Rules that any showing in opposition to a motion noticed for hearing before the Supreme Court shall be in writing and unless time on the notice of motion has been shortened, shall be served and filed at least ten days before the hearing is to give moving counsel and the court an opportunity to give advance consideration to the grounds of opposition and to expedite the work of the court. Rule 20, § 3, for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles.

Suit by Frain R. Anderson against Mary M. Anderson for partition. From a decree of partition, and from an order confirming sale of property, defendant appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

Marcus L. Roberts, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Von Herzen & Woods, C. P. Von Herzen, and Geo. C. Woods, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

Motion to dismiss two appeals on the ground that the transcript on appeal in each instance was not filed within the time required by the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal. One of said appeals was taken from a decree of partition and the other of said appeals was taken from an order of court confirming a sale made by the referee of a portion of the property described in said decree of partition.

No printed transcript of the record on either appeal has been filed with the clerk of this court.

[1-3] The certificate of the clerk of the trial court shows that on the appeal from the judgment of partition an engrossed bill of exceptions was filed in his office on August 19, 1941. Rule I of this court provides that the printed transcript of the proceeding on appeal in a civil action must be filed, in case proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions are pending, within forty days after the filing of the engrossed bill of exceptions with the clerk of the trial court. As this time had expired before the notice of said motion to dismiss said appeal, the motion must be granted.

Appellant, by the affidavit of her attorney filed in this court at the hearing of said motion, states that there never had been any hearing set, notice given or hearing held to settle said bill of exceptions on the appeal from the judgment of partition, and that in the absence of appellant and her attorney, and without notice to either of them, the trial court undertook to settle said bill of exceptions. It does not appear by said affidavit or otherwise that appellant instituted any proceedings in the trial court under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or under any other provision of law, to set aside or vacate the order of the trial court settling said bill of exceptions, or made any attempt in the trial court to correct, modify or amend said engrossed bill of exceptions. Had appellant any legal grounds to set aside or modify said engrossed bill of exceptions, application to that end should have been first made to the trial court, and in the event of the refusal of that court to grant the relief sought, its action upon said application would have been subject to review by this court. In Moultrie v. Tarpio, 147 Cal. 376, at page 378, 81 P. 1112, at page 1113, it is stated: "Ordinarily, this court would not undertake to determine, on a motion to dismiss an appeal, whether or not a party had so failed to comply with the requirements of the law in regard to the settlement of a bill of exceptions that his pending proceeding for such settlement must ultimately fail, but would leave that question to be determined by the trial judge, subject to review on appeal." That case is cited by this court in the case of Dernham v. Bagley, 151 Cal. 216, 218, 90 P. 543, where the language set out above is quoted and approved.

As the engrossed bill of exceptions on the appeal from the judgment of partition was properly filed in the trial court and no printed transcript of the record was filed with the clerk of this court within the time provided by the rules of this court, the motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment of partition on the grounds stated should be granted.

As to the appeal from the order confirming the sale made by the referee of a portion of the property distributed, the certificate of the clerk of the trial court shows that a proposed bill of exceptions was timely served and filed on July 1, 1941, and that on July 23, 1941, "proposed additions and corrections to defendant's bill of exceptions was filed" by respondent. Undoubtedly, this document was understood by all parties and the trial court as respondent's proposed amendments to appellant's proposed bill of exceptions. On August 4, 1941, a second proposed bill of exceptions was filed by appellant. This latter document was not filed within the time prescribed for the filing of a proposed bill of exceptions, nor was it served on respondent. The certificate of said clerk does not show that there is on file in his office any engrossed bill of exceptions on the appeal from this order or that the trial court has taken any action whatever to settle the first proposed bill of exceptions filed by appellant within the time fixed by the rules of this court.

[4-6] As near as we can understand from the somewhat confused record before us, consisting of two certificates of the clerk of the trial court and affidavits of the attorneys of the respective parties to these appeals, a proposed bill of exceptions was prepared by appellant to be used on each of the two appeals involved herein and proposed amendments to each of the proposed bills were filed by respondent. Said proposed bills and proposed amendments were all timely filed and served on the attorneys of the opposite party. A hearing was duly set and noticed for the settlement of each of said two matters. At said hearing the trial court settled each of said bills and ordered the attorney for respondent to engross the same. The attorney for respondent complied with this order, and the engrossed bills were filed with the clerk of said court on August 4, 1941. On August 19, 1941, the judge signed the engrossed bill of exceptions on the appeal from the judgment of partition, but for some unexplained reason did not sign the engrossed bill on the appeal from the order confirming the sale of property, and said engrossed bill has never been signed by the trial judge. Appellant has made no effort to have the trial judge sign this engrossed bill. On the other hand, on August 4, 1941, the day the engrossed bills of exceptions were filed by the attorney for respondent, appellant filed the second proposed bill of exceptions on the appeal from the order confirming the property sale. We are warranted in assuming that by filing her second proposed bill of exceptions and by taking no action to have settled her first bill, appellant has abandoned the prior bill of exceptions. As the second bill of exceptions was filed long after the time fixed by the rules of this court for filing the same, it must be regarded as a nullity. Having abandoned her first proposed bill and her second proposed bill having been filed too late, it must be held that there is no proceeding for settlement of a bill of exceptions pending on the appeal from the order confirming the property sale. It follows, therefore, that the motion to dismiss the appeal from said order must be granted.

The motion to dismiss said appeals is granted, and each of said appeals is hereby dismissed.

[7] We think it but proper to call the attention of counsel and of the profession to the provisions of section 3 of rule XX of this court, and particularly to the last sentence of said section, providing that any showing in opposition to a motion noticed for hearing before this court "shall be in writing, and, unless the time on the notice of motion has been shortened, shall be served and filed at least ten days before the hearing." The purpose and object of this provision of the section is apparent. The practice has become all too prevalent for the opposing attorney, as he did at the hearing of the present motion, to present his opposition to the motion at the time of the hearing of the motion, thus depriving moving counsel and the court of any opportunity to give any advanced consideration to the grounds of opposition. This situation often renders it necessary to delay the decision of the motion and imposes additional labor on the court. This court is in hearty accord with the object and purpose of the rule just stated and is of the opinion that its strict enforcement will contribute materially to the prompt administration of justice, as well as expedite the work of this court.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 570

OLIVERA v. GRACE et al.

L. A. 17343.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 20, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐917(1)

On appeal from judgment for defendant after an order sustaining general and special demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint without leave to amend, the allegations of such complaint must be regarded as true.

2. Judgment ⇐297, 340

The general common-law power that courts had to control their own judgments during the term at which they were rendered has been continued in the form of statutory authority, and under such statutes the court which rendered the judgment has power in its discretion for a definite period of time and upon specified grounds, to open, vacate, or modify its own final judgment. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473, 663.

3. Judgment ⇐306, 307

Apart from statutory authority, all courts have an inherent power to correct their records so as to make them speak the truth, and, under such inherent power, courts have frequently corrected their final judgments when because of clerical errors or omissions the judgments actually rendered were not the judgments intended to be rendered. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 663.

4. Judgment ⇐346

A court has inherent power apart from statute to correct its records by vacating a judgment which is void on its face for such judgment is a "nullity" and may be ignored. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 663.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Nullity".

5. Judgment ⇐435, 443(3)

Equity's jurisdiction to interfere with final judgments is based upon the absence of a fair "adversary trial" in the original action, as, for example, where one party has been prevented from presenting his case to the court by extrinsic fraud or extrinsic mistake.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Adversary Trial".

6. Judgment ⇐454

One who has been prevented by extrinsic factors from presenting his case to the court may bring an independent action in equity to secure relief from the judgment entered against him, and, where the court that rendered the judgment possesses a general jurisdiction in law and in equity, the jurisdiction of equity may be invoked by means of a motion addressed to that court.

7. Insane persons ⇐95

Where one has not been judicially declared of unsound mind and no guardian has been appointed, personal service upon such person is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the person, and a judgment rendered against such person is not void for want of jurisdiction.

8. Insane persons ⇐94(1)

"Incompetency" which renders a person wholly devoid of understanding and incapable of transacting business of any nature is a condition which exists independently of a judicial determination of that fact, and, where a defendant is under such legal disability and the plaintiff has knowledge of it, a duty rests upon the plaintiff to disclose such matters to the court and have a guardian appointed for the purpose of the proceeding.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Incompetency".

9. Insane persons ⇐100

If the plaintiff knows of the defendant's incompetency but conceals such information from the court, and to prevent a true adversary hearing proceeds to default judgment by taking advantage of defendant's condition, his conduct constitutes a "fraud" upon the court as well as upon the incompetent defendant, since the direct effect of such concealment is to prevent the incompetent from presenting whatever defense he has to the court, and such fraud is "extrinsic" in nature.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Extrinsic Fraud" and "Fraud".

10. Judgment ⇐443(3)

Where an adversary hearing has been held, a cause of action for relief in equity can be stated upon the ground that extrinsic fraud prevented a fair adversary proceeding.

11. Insane persons ⇐100

Where there has been no adversary proceeding, the right of the incompetent defendant to equitable relief from a default judgment may be established if the plaintiff's ignorance of defendant's legal disability prevented a true adversary hearing, as well as where the plaintiff's fraud prevented such hearing.

12. Insane persons ⇐100

Where there has been no adversary hearing in action against an incompetent defendant, if the plaintiff's ignorance of defendant's legal disability prevented a true adversary hearing there exists an "extrinsic mistake" which is a recognized ground for the intervention of equity where the mistake has prevented a fair adversary hearing.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Extrinsic Mistake".

13. Judgment ⇐447(1, 2)

It is a general rule that equity will not interfere with a judgment which is unjust unless it appears that the one whose interests were thus infringed can present a meritorious case, but a "meritorious case" does not require an absolute guarantee of victory; it being enough if the complaint presents facts from which it can be ascertained that the plaintiff has a sufficiently meritorious claim to entitle him to a trial of the issue at a proper adversary hearing.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Meritorious Case".

14. Insane persons ⇐100

In action to have a judgment set aside on ground that plaintiff knew of defendant's legal incompetency but concealed the fact from the court, a complaint, alleging that but for such concealment the court in the former action would have considered the testimony of additional witnesses and would have reached a different conclusion, sufficiently showed a "meritorious case", and the admissibility of such evidence would be for the court to determine upon a trial of the issues.

15. Insane persons ⇐100

In action to set aside judgment obtained against defendant who subsequently died, complaint, alleging that such defendant was incompetent at the time, that such fact was known to the person obtaining the judgment and was concealed from the court, that a default judgment was obtained against defendant, and that but for such concealment testimony of additional witnesses would have been considered and a different conclusion reached, stated a cause of action for relief in equity.

16. Pleading ⇐225(2)

Where both a general and a special demurrer were filed against complaint and the parties have stressed only the question whether the complaint states a cause of action and the complaint is sufficient against a general demurrer, trial court ought not to sustain the special demurrer without leave to amend.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Action by Marguerite Olivera, as administratrix, etc., against Rosaline Grace, as administratrix, etc., and others, to set aside a judgment rendered against plaintiff's decedent. From a judgment for defendants, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed.

For prior opinion, see, Cal.App., 116 P.2d 146.

Harold M. Davidson, V. A. Morgan, and Morgan & Davidson, all of Alhambra, for appellant.

Daniel A. Knapp, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

The plaintiff brought this action as administratrix of the estate of Emilie Rust, deceased, to set aside a judgment rendered against Emilie Rust prior to her death. The judgment was in favor of defendant as administratrix of the estate of Hattie Haas in an action to reform a deed in which Hattie Haas and Emilie Rust were named as joint tenants. The plaintiff, Marguerite Olivera, and Hattie Haas were daughters of Emilie Rust, and the defendant, Rosaline Grace, is the daughter of Hattie Haas. After the death of Hattie Haas on April 23, 1936, the defendant obtained a default judgment against Emilie Rust which reformed the joint tenancy deed so as to provide for the conveyance of the fee to Hattie Haas and the conveyance of a life estate only to Emilie Rust.

[1] Plaintiff brings this appeal from a judgment for defendant entered after an order sustaining a general and special demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint without leave to amend. The allegations of the complaint must therefore be regarded as true. Prior to March 21, 1933, Emilie Rust was the owner in fee simple of the real property involved in the present action. On or about that date she conveyed the property to John and Marie V. Zell, husband and wife, who immediately reconveyed it to Emilie Rust and Hattie Haas, as joint tenants. It is alleged that Emilie Rust sought legal advice in connection with these conveyances and determined upon that advice to provide for a joint tenancy between herself and her daughter.

During the year 1934, Emilie Rust sustained a serious head injury which resulted in a complete loss of mentality. The injury rendered her wholly devoid of understanding and incapable of transacting business of any nature. After the death of Hattie Haas, the defendant, as administratrix of her estate, commenced an action to reform the joint tenancy deed. Emilie Rust was personally served and upon her failure to appear in the action defendant secured a default judgment granting the relief sought. Plaintiff alleges that the defendant knew that Emilie Rust was incompetent prior to the commencement of the action and throughout its prosecution but, notwithstanding such knowledge, failed to secure the appointment of a general guardian or a guardian ad litem for her and failed to inform the court of her condition. It is also alleged that before the commencement of the action defendant talked with the two men upon whose advice Emilie Rust had relied in making the joint tenancy deed, but that defendant failed to call either of these men as witnesses in the hearing held at the time the default judgment was rendered. The complaint alleges that the default judgment reforming the joint tenancy deed would not have been rendered if the court had been advised of Emilie Rust's mental condition and had heard the testimony of the two persons who advised her concerning the disposition of her property. On April 8, 1938, Emilie Rust was judicially declared to be incompetent and the plaintiff was appointed guardian of her person and estate. The default judgment entered on August 14, 1936, was not discovered by plaintiff until January 4, 1939, after the death of Emilie Rust and after plaintiff's appointment as administratrix of her estate. The present action to set aside the default judgment was instituted immediately thereafter.

Plaintiff argues that the complaint states a cause of action and consequently that the judgment must be reversed. It is contended that under the facts alleged the default judgment should be set aside either upon the ground that the court lacked jurisdiction over Emilie Rust for failure to make a proper service or upon the ground that the judgment was obtained by extrinsic fraud on the part of defendant which prevented a fair hearing of the case.

[2-4] Courts frequently set aside judgments rendered against incompetent defendants where it is probable that injustice has resulted. 34 A.L.R. 221, et seq.; Spurlock v. Noe, 19 Ky.Law Rep. 1321, 43 S.W. 231, 39 L.R.A. 775; Cooper v. Greenleaf, 84 Kan. 499, 114 P. 1086, 35 L.R.A., N.S., 1090. In determining the applicability of these cases to the present situation, however, it is necessary to consider the source of the authority under which relief was granted. In many states, including California, the general common law power that courts had to control their own judgments during the term at which they were rendered has been continued in the form of statutory authority. Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 398, 400, 9 P. 646; 31 Am.Jur. 268; 14 Cal.Jur. 1009. Under such statutes the court which rendered the judgment has power, in its discretion (O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220, 72 P. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105; 31 Am.Jur. 267; 14 Cal. Jur. 1072), for a definite period of time and upon specified grounds to open, vacate or modify its own final judgment.

Code Civ.Proc., sec. 473; Code Civ.Proc., sec. 663; 31 Am.Jur. 277. Apart from statutory authority, all courts are said to have an inherent power to correct their records so as to make them speak the truth, and under this inherent power courts have frequently corrected their final judgments when, because of clerical errors or omissions, the judgments actually rendered were not the judgments intended to be rendered. Robson v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 588, 154 P. 8; Wiggin v. Superior Court, supra, 68 Cal. page 402, 9 P. 646; People v. Curtis, 113 Cal. 68, 45 P. 180; Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 120 P.2d 9; 14 Cal.Jur. 993, 1002, 1019. Similarly, a court has inherent power, apart from statute, to correct its records by vacating a judgment which is void on its face, for such a judgment is a nullity and may be ignored. People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 P. 197, 5 Am.St.Rep. 448; 126 A.L.R. 968; 31 Am. Jur. 298; 14 Cal. Jur. 1023, 1024.

Many of the cases in which judgments against allegedly incompetent defendants have been set aside involved an exercise of the general common law power that courts possessed during the term at which the judgment was rendered, or the analogous power which now exists in many states by virtue of statutes similar to Code of Civil Procedure, section 473. Judd v. Gray, 156 Ind. 278, 59 N.E. 849; Brothers v. Brothers, 71 Mont. 378, 230 P. 60; Bucholz v. Harthun, 61 N.D. 547, 239 N.W. 161; Bond v. Neuschwander, 86 Wis. 391, 57 N.W. 54; cf. Farmers' & M. Bank v. Duke, 187 N.C. 386, 122 S.E. 1, 34 A.L.R. 215. These cases would furnish persuasive authority if the attack upon the judgment sought to be set aside in the present action had been made under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, but they cannot be relied upon to support an independent action in equity. Similarly, cases which depend upon special statutes enacted in certain states for the benefit of allegedly incompetent defendants are also unavailing in the present action. Montagne v. Cherokee County, 200 Iowa 534, 205 N.W. 228; Watson v. Horner, 178 Iowa 499, 159 N.W. 1032; Crawford v. Thomson, 161 Ill. 161, 43 N.E. 617; cf. Abbott v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 12 Cal. App.2d 478, 480, 55 P.2d 927; Western Pipe & Steel Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 79 Cal.App. 215, 249 P. 34.

[5] In addition to the situations already discussed, where courts have set aside final judgments under statutory authority or under their inherent power to correct their own records, there exists a well-recognized jurisdiction in equity which has been utilized to relieve incompetent defendants from judgments taken under circumstances of unfairness and injustice. Equity's jurisdiction to interfere with final judgments is based upon the absence of a fair, adversary trial in the original action. "It was a settled doctrine of the equitable jurisdiction—and is still the subsisting doctrine except where it has been modified or abrogated by statute * * * that where the legal judgment was obtained or entered through fraud, mistake, or accident, or where the defendant in the action, having a valid legal defense on the merits, was prevented in any manner from maintaining it by fraud, mistake, or accident, and there had been no negligence, laches, or other fault on his part, or on the part of his agents, then a court of equity will interfere at his suit, and restrain proceedings on the judgment which cannot be conscientiously enforced. * * * The ground for the exercise of this jurisdiction is that there has been no fair adversary trial at law." 5 Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence (Equitable Remedies, 2d Ed.), p. 4671, 4672. Typical of the situations in which equity has interfered with final judgments are the cases where the lack of a fair adversary hearing in the original action is attributable to matters outside the issues adjudicated therein which prevented one party from presenting his case to the court, as for example, where there is extrinsic fraud (Caldwell v. Taylor, 218 Cal. 471, 23 P.2d 758, 88 A.L.R. 1194; McGuinness v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 222, 237 P. 42, 40 A.L.R. 1110; (1921) 9 Cal.L.Rev. 156; (1934) 23 Cal.L.Rev. 79; 15 Cal.Jur. 14, et seq.; 3 Freeman, Judgments [5th ed.], p. 2562, et seq.) or extrinsic mistake. Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P. 317; Sullivan v. Lumsden, 118 Cal. 664, 50 P. 777; Antonsen v. Pacific Container Co., 48 Cal. App.2d 535, 120 P.2d 148; 15 Cal.Jur. 23; 3 Freeman, Judgments [5th ed.], 2593, et seq.

[6] One who has been prevented by extrinsic factors from presenting his case to the court may bring an independent action in equity to secure relief from the judgment entered against him. Caldwell v. Taylor, supra; Purinton v. Dyson, 8 Cal. 2d 322, 65 P.2d 777, 113 A.L.R. 1230; Dunlap v. Steere, 92 Cal. 344, 28 P. 563, 16 L.R.A. 361, 27 Am.St.Rep. 143. Where the court that rendered the judgment possesses a general jurisdiction in law and in equity, the jurisdiction of equity may be invoked by means of a motion addressed to that court. McGuinness v. Superior Court, supra; Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 124 Cal. 134, 144, 56 P. 797; Estate of Estrem, 16 Cal.2d 563, 571, 107 P. 2d 36; Ex-Mission L. & W. Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610, 631, 32 P. 600; Cohen v. Home Life Ins. Co., 273 Mich. 469, 263 N.W. 857; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 278 Mich. 169, 270 N.W. 256; Jarman v. Saunders, 64 N.C. 367; Demelt v. Leonard, 11 Abb.Prac., N.Y., 252. In view of the foregoing cases, the statement in Tinn v. U. S. District Attorney, 148 Cal. 773, 84 P. 152, 113 Am.St.Rep. 354, to the effect that equity jurisdiction can be invoked only by means of an independent action, and not upon motion, is no longer an accurate statement of the law. In determining whether the complaint in the present proceeding states a cause of action, therefore, we may consider those cases in which equitable relief has been granted in favor of an incompetent defendant, whether the jurisdiction of equity was invoked by motion before a court of general jurisdiction or by an independent action in equity.

[7] Plaintiff contends that the complaint states a cause of action upon the ground that the court was without jurisdiction. Emilie Rust, however, had not then been judicially declared of unsound mind, and no guardian had been appointed for her. Under such circumstances, it is settled that personal service upon the alleged incompetent is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of her person (Sacramento Sav. Bank v. Spencer, 53 Cal. 737), and a judgment obtained against the incompetent under such circumstances is not void for want of jurisdiction. Dunn v. Dunn, 114 Cal. 210, 46 P. 5; Nielsen v. Emerson, 121 Cal.App. 415, 418, 9 P.2d 260; 34 A.L.R. 221; 1 Freeman, Judgments, 5th Ed., p. 882; 1 Black, Judgments, 2d Ed., p. 302; Van Fleet, Collateral Attack, p. 654.

[8, 9] Next, it is urged by plaintiff that the conduct of the defendant, Rosaline Grace, in taking a default judgment against her grandmother at a time when she knew, according to the allegations of the complaint, that the latter was incompetent constitutes extrinsic fraud which would justify a court of equity in granting relief against the judgment so obtained. Defendant argues that no fraud was practiced upon Emilie Rust in the former action, because the concealment of information does not constitute fraud in the absence of a confidential relationship between the parties requiring disclosure. It is also urged that since Emilie Rust had not been judicially declared to be incompetent at the time of the former action, defendant could not have had knowledge of her incompetency, but, at most, could have had only an opinion respecting her capacity. Thus, defendant contends, there was no fraud that would justify the relief sought in the present action. This contention cannot be sustained. Incompetency which, as in the present case, is alleged to render a defendant wholly devoid of understanding and incapable of transacting business of any nature is a condition which exists independently of a judicial determination of that fact. Where the defendant is under such a legal disability and the plaintiff has knowledge of his condition, a duty rests upon the plaintiff to disclose such matters to the court and to have a guardian appointed for the purpose of the proceeding. Dunn v. Dunn, supra; Curtis v. Curtis, 250 Mich. 105, 229 N.W. 622; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Cohen, supra; Ammon v. Wiebold, 61 N.J.Eq. 351, 48 A. 950; 1 Black, Judgments, supra. If the plaintiff knows of the defendant's incompetency but conceals such information from the court and, to prevent a true adversary hearing, proceeds to a default judgment by taking advantage of defendant's condition, his conduct constitutes a fraud upon the court as well as upon the incompetent defendant. Since the direct effect of such concealment is to prevent the incompetent from presenting whatever defense he has to the court, it is clear that the fraud is extrinsic in nature. Cf. Flood v. Templeton, 152 Cal. 148, 156, 92 P. 78, 13 L.R.A.,N.S., 579; 15 Cal.Jur. 14, et seq. If the other requirements for equitable relief are present, therefore, allegations such as those found in the present complaint are sufficient to state a cause of action in equity on behalf of the incompetent.

[10-12] It should not be understood, however, from what has been said that fraud on the part of the plaintiff in the former action is essential to equitable relief in cases such as this. Where an adversary hearing has in fact been held, a cause of action for relief in equity can be stated upon the ground that extrinsic fraud prevented a fair adversary proceeding. In cases such as the one here presented, however, where there has been no adversary proceeding at all, the right of the incompetent defendant to equitable relief may be established if the plaintiff's ignorance of defendant's legal disability prevented a true adversary hearing as well as where the plaintiff's fraud prevented such a hearing. Courts have granted such relief on behalf of incompetent defendants aside from the element of fraud on the part of the plaintiff if, in fact, no adversary hearing was held. Craddock v. Brinkley, 177 N.C. 125, 98 S.E. 280; Godde v. Marvin, 142 Mich. 518, 105 N.W. 1112; Lutter v. Neubauer, 100 N.J.L. 17, 125 A. 113; Snyder v. Woolf, 232 Ala. 87, 166 So. 803; 34 A.L.R. 221. Some courts, it is true, have referred to this situation as "constructive fraud" which entitles the incompetent defendant against whom a default judgment has been taken to relief in equity. Cunningham v. Wood, 224 Ala. 288, 140 So. 351; Snyder v. Woolf, supra. We think it more accurate, however, to characterize such a situation as extrinsic mistake, which is a recognized ground for the intervention of equity where the mistake has prevented a fair adversary hearing. Bacon v. Bacon, supra, 150 Cal. page 486, 89 P. 317, and cases cited above. In Winslow v. McCarthy, 39 Cal.App. 337, 178 P. 720, it was held that a default judgment against an incompetent defendant should be set aside where the court failed to comply with section 372 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides that an incompetent person must appear either by his general guardian or by a guardian ad litem. Relying upon Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, supra, 124 Cal. page 144, 56 P. 797, the court which rendered the judgment exercised its equitable jurisdiction upon motion to grant relief from a mistake which prevented the incompetent defendant from having a fair adversary trial. Thus, even if no actual fraud on the part of the defendant could be proved in the present action, the facts set forth are sufficient to justify the intervention of a court of equity if the other requirements for equitable relief can be established.

[13-15] Finally, it is suggested by the defendant that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it does not allege that a different result would have been reached if the interests of the incompetent had been properly protected. It is a general rule that equity will not interfere with a judgment which is unjust unless it appears that the one whose interests were thus infringed can present a meritorious case. 3 Freeman supra, p. 2465, et seq.; 5 Pomeroy, supra, p. 4701; 15 Cal.Jur. 29. The requirement that the complaint allege a meritorious case does not require an absolute guarantee of victory. Cf. McArdle Real Estate Co. v. McGowan, 109 N.J.L. 595, 163 A. 24. It is enough if the complaint presents facts from which it can be ascertained that the plaintiff has a sufficiently meritorious claim to entitle him to a trial of the issue at a proper adversary proceeding. It is here alleged that but for the conduct of the defendant the court in the former action would have considered the testimony of additional witnesses concerning Emilie Rust's intention in executing the original deed and would have reached a different conclusion. This is a sufficient allegation under the rule stated. Defendant argues that the testimony referred to would have been inadmissible, but that is a matter for the court to determine upon a trial of the issues. The complaint states a cause of action for relief in equity and the general demurrer should have been overruled.

[16] The order of the court sustaining the general and special demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint does not indicate that it was based upon any of the grounds of uncertainty specified in the special demurrer. The parties have stressed only the question whether the complaint stated a cause of action. Under such circumstances and where the complaint is sufficient against a general demurrer, it has been held that the trial court ought not to sustain the special demurrer without leave to amend. Guilliams v. Hollywood Hospital, 18 Cal.2d 97, 114 P.2d 1; Payne v. Baehr, 153 Cal. 441, 447, 95 P. 895; Starr v. Slaney, 11 Cal.App.2d 311, 314, 53 P.2d 395; 24 Cal.L.Rev. 604.

The judgment is reversed.

SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

PACIFIC EMPLOYERS INS. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

L. A. 18068.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 27, 1942.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐1420

In proceedings by an employee to recover compensation for a disease allegedly contracted in course of his employment, medical evidence would be given weight to which it was entitled, and proof that the disease was contracted in course of employment was not required to attain absolute certainty or exact demonstration to be sufficient.

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐622, 1364

A disease must be contracted in the course of employment to be compensable, and burden of proof thereof rests upon employee.

3. Workmen's compensation ⇐1939

In reviewing an award of the State Industrial Accident Commission, the question whether a disease was contracted in course of the employment is one of fact for the commission, and all reasonable inferences available are to be drawn in favor of commission's award.

4. Workmen's compensation ⇐609, 610

An injury to be compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Law must "arise out of the employment", that is, occur by reason of a risk or condition incident to the employment, and mere fact alone that the injury occurred while employee was in employer's service is not sufficient.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arise Out of the Employment".

5. Workmen's compensation ⇐1492

In proceedings under workmen's compensation act, opinions of qualified medical witnesses with reference to origin and cause of employee's injury are valid evidence which will support an award.

6. Workmen's compensation ⇐613

Injuries suffered by an employee to be compensable need not be of the kind anticipated by employer or peculiar to the employment.

7. Workmen's compensation ⇐1413, 1414, 1422

Circumstantial evidence is sufficient to support an award of State Industrial Accident Commission, and it may be based upon the reasonable inferences that arise and from reasonable probabilities flowing from the evidence, and neither absolute certainty nor demonstration is required.

8. Workmen's compensation ⇐1526

Evidence that traveling salesman was required to travel through a territory in which the disease of coccidioidal granuloma, commonly known as San Joaquin Valley fever, was endemic, and that risk to which salesman was subjected by his employment was not the same as that of the general public in the endemic area inasmuch as the great majority of inhabitants possessed an immunity to the disease which salesman, living outside the area, lacked, supported finding that the disease contracted by salesman "arose out of and in course of his employment", so as to be compensable.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arise Out of and in Course of Employment".

9. Workmen's compensation ⇐644

When employees whose duties compel them to use the streets and highways suffer injuries in the course thereof, the injury "arises out of and in the course of employment" and is compensable.

10. Workmen's compensation ⇐1935

Where a rehearing was granted by State Industrial Accident Commission and contrary findings were made, and Supreme Court had nothing more than petitioner's bare assertion that commission did not review the record and consider all the facts on rehearing, it would be presumed that the commission did review the record and consider all the facts before making its findings and award. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

In Bank.

Proceeding by the Pacific Employers Insurance Company, insurance carrier for the employer, Alexander-Balart Company, to have annulled an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of W. Allen Ehrhardt, employee.

Award affirmed.

W. N. Mullen, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

CARTER, Justice.

Petitioner, the insurance carrier for the employer, Alexander-Balart Company, seeks to have annulled an award of the respondent Industrial Accident Commission to the employee, respondent Ehrhardt, for disability caused by the disease coccidioidal granuloma, commonly known as San Joaquin Valley fever.

The employer's place of business is in San Francisco. It is engaged in the business of selling coffee. Ehrhardt has been employed by it since July 15, 1932, for the most part as a traveling salesman engaged in selling the employer's products in California, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas. Prior to his employment by Alexander-Balart Company, Ehrhardt had never been in Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, or the San Joaquin Valley in California, except that possibly he passed through the latter place when he was about three years of age. His duties as salesman required him to cover the specified territory by train and automobile. During the time here in question, Ehrhardt lived in San Francisco, except the year 1929, during which he resided in Alameda County. He at all times worked out of the San Francisco office of his employer.

According to his testimony, he made the following trips to the places above-mentioned in the course of his employment. His first tour in April of 1933 lasted about two weeks. He traveled from San Francisco to Arizona by train and thence canvassed Arizona in an automobile over dusty roads. He did not return to San Francisco via the San Joaquin Valley. In May, 1933, he drove into that valley in an automobile, and after spending two days there, proceeded to Arizona where he toured that state and New Mexico, encountering a dust storm while there; the trip consumed about two and a half weeks. In August of 1933, he made two visits to the San Joaquin Valley of a duration of about two weeks; he canvassed said valley in an automobile on those occasions. His next visit there was from September 5th to September 23, 1933, during which time he covered Arizona by automobile, having passed through the San Joaquin Valley en route. In the early part of February, 1934, he spent about two weeks soliciting orders in said valley. He suffered from a bad cold and cough sometime in February or March of that year. A few days prior to April 2, 1934, he commenced to find blood in his sputum, and consulted Dr. Hutchins on that date. The doctor believed the cause to be a nose or throat condition and last saw Ehrhardt on April 9, 1934. Thereafter, the coughing and discharge of blood occurred sporadically, but finally while suffering from a more extended attack he consulted Dr. Duggan in July, 1939, who referred him to Dr. Shipman, a specialist in lung diseases. Dr. Shipman's diagnosis was tubercular infection in the apex of his right lung, and in treatment therefor a pneumothorax was induced and the lung kept compressed. Failing to find any tuberculosis bacilli in his sputum upon repeated tests, Dr. Shipman finally had a more extensive analysis of the sputum made, which revealed in January, 1934, the presence of coccidioides infection. A second laboratory test revealed the same, and a third one in March gave Dr. Shipman undeniable proof of the presence of coccidioides infection or San Joaquin Valley fever. That was the first diagnosis or discovery that Ehrhardt had such a disease. Ehrhardt made several trips to San Joaquin Valley and Arizona on his employer's business after the one in February, 1934. He never traveled about in that valley or Arizona except in the course of his employment.

It appears that the cause of coccidioidal granuloma is a mold or fungus which exists in the soil in San Joaquin Valley and Arizona, and that a person may become infected therewith through the respiratory tract by inhaling the mold which is blown about in the dust. The manifestations of the disease are quite similar to tuberculosis. Ordinarily the symptoms at the onset are practically the same as an ordinary cold. The secondary stage of the disease is coccidioidal granuloma. In most instances the disease does not progress beyond the primary stage. The incubation period is one to three weeks. Dr. Shipman testified that the disease is not contracted in San Francisco or the area to the east or north thereof or the upper Sacramento Valley, that the disease is contracted primarily in the San Joaquin Valley and Arizona, and that Ehrhardt probably contracted the disease when he first began to spit blood. He was asked: "Then, Doctor, on the basis of this information it is, as I understand it, your opinion that the disease in this particular instance was contracted by Mr. Ehrhardt in the San Joaquin Valley or Arizona? A. Yes." He was also asked in connection with the cases of the disease reported in the bulletin of the Department of Public Health of California: "I say—well, let's finish the question—the great majority of these cases, Doctor, show residence in the San Joaquin County area and with that in mind, can it be said that the disease is a disease particularly virulent in that area, in that the likelihood of a person getting it is much greater in that area than elsewhere in the State? A. I think so." Dr. Shipman states in his written report on Ehrhardt's case: "In April of 1934, he (Ehrhardt) showed the first evidence of this disease. It would seem a reasonable conclusion under the facts, regardless of the exact incubation time of the disease, that it is a practical certainty that he acquired it in the San Joaquin Valley and Arizona between April of 1933 and April of 1934. The reasons for this are that 77% of the people constantly resident in the valley get the disease. In areas outside the valley cases of the disease are an extreme rarity and in such cases it is usually felt that through some unknown factor of special contact these cases arise by reason of transportation of spores from the endemic area. Where the patient has been in the endemic area to the extent shown for a year prior to breaking down and has not previously been in the area at all, except possibly over twenty years previously, the probabilities are overwhelming that he contracted the disease in these areas during the year before it first made its appearance. In fact it would seem to be a practical certainty. * * * In summary it would appear that there is only the most remote possibility that the patient here got the disease anywhere but on his business trips during 1933 and 1934 in the endemic area; that the great probability and practical certainty is that he got it on these trips." (Emphasis added.) The evidence also shows that residents of San Joaquin Valley attain a degree of immunity to the disease and are less susceptible to the contraction of it than persons coming into the valley for the first time.

Petitioner's main contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the award; that there is no showing that Ehrhardt contracted the disease in the course of his employment; and that even if he did contract it in San Joaquin Valley or Arizona while performing services for his employer, it cannot be said to have arisen out of his employment or have been incidental to it, or the proximate result thereof.

[1] We have carefully examined the record and cannot agree with those contentions. The Industrial Accident Commission found that Ehrhardt contracted the disease while in San Joaquin Valley on the business of his employer during the period between April, 1933, to April, 1934. The evidence supports that finding. When we consider the evidence that the disease is endemic in San Joaquin Valley, that the spores causing it are found in the soil there, that it is acquired by an inhalation of those spores which are borne on the wind, that Ehrhardt contracted the disease, that he had not been in San Joaquin Valley except in the course of his employment, that Dr. Shipman testified that in his opinion the disease was contracted there by Ehrhardt and Dr. Pearson stated that the probabilities were one hundred to one that he contracted it there, it cannot be said that the trier of fact, the commission, was not justified in its conclusion. Petitioner points to evidence by its medical witnesses contradictory to the above, and to the effect that the disease possibly could be contracted in Alameda County, and the areas north and east of San Francisco, that cattle in those areas have been found infected, that the infection may be carried in clothes and on other articles, and the like, but that merely created a conflict in the evidence which the commission has resolved against the petitioner. It is not the function of this court to weigh conflicts in the evidence. It appears that the incidence of the disease in places other than San Joaquin Valley were sporadic, and the possibility was remote that Ehrhardt received the infection elsewhere. It should be remembered that in cases of this character medical evidence is to be given the weight to which it is entitled and proof that the disease was contracted in the course of the employment need not attain absolute certainty or exact demonstration to be sufficient. In City and County of San Francisco v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 183 Cal. 273, at page 283, 191 P. 26, at page 29, this court said:

"It, of course, cannot be said that from these facts it is certain that Slattery contracted his sickness because of his employment. But certainty is not required. It is not even required that the award be, in our judgment in accord with the preponderance of the evidence, in order that we be not at liberty to annul it. We cannot disturb the award unless we can say that a reasonable man could not reach the conclusion which the commission did. This we cannot say in the present case." See, also, State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 195 Cal. 174, 231 P. 996; Royal Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 70 Cal.App. 435, 233 P. 381; United Dredging Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 92 Cal. App. 110, 267 P. 763; Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 32 Cal.App. 481, 163 P. 225; Santa v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 175 Cal. 235, 165 P. 689.

Petitioner relies upon such cases as Children's Hospital Soc. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 22 Cal.App.2d 365, 71 P.2d 83; Pattiani v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 199 Cal. 596, 250 P. 864, 49 A.L.R. 446, but each case is necessarily dependent upon its particular facts. In the Children's Hospital case it does not appear from a reading thereof that there was any medical testimony that the disease, poliomyelitis, was contracted by the nurse while she was on duty at the hospital, her place of employment, nor was there any substantial evidence that she was exposed to the infection there. In the case at bar there is testimony that in the doctor's opinion Ehrhardt contracted the disease while in the endemic area on his employer's business. Also there is evidence that the mold causing the disease is in that area and that 77% of the inhabitants thereof suffer at least a primary infection. In the Pattiani case the finding of the commission was adverse to the applicant, and it was held that the evidence sustained its findings. It does not appear whether there was any medical evidence that the disease, typhoid fever, was contracted by the applicant while in New York City, there being an epidemic in that city at the time.

[2, 3] It is, of course, a fundamental principle that the disease must be contracted in the course of the employment, and the burden of proof thereof rests upon the applicant. Nevertheless, it must be remembered that in reviewing awards of the commission, that question is one of fact for the commission, and all reasonable inferences available are to be drawn in favor of the award.

[4-8] Petitioner argues, however, that even if it be assumed that the evidence established that Ehrhardt contracted the disease in the course of his employment, the application of the doctrine that an injury to be compensable must be in excess of and different from that to which the commonalty is subjected, requires an annullment of the award. It is unquestionably the law that an injury to be compensable under the Workmen's Compensation laws must arise out of the employment, that is, occur by reason of a risk or condition incident to the employment. There must be at least a causal connection between the employment and the injury; the mere fact alone that the injury occurred while the employee was in his master's service is not sufficient. Newton v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 204 Cal. 185, 267 P. 542, 60 A.L.R. 1279; Larson v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 406, 224 P. 744; San Francisco v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. However, there are other principles to be observed in aid of the application of the foregoing rules to the instant case. It is trite, but pertinent, to observe that the issue of whether the injury suffered arose out of a risk incident to the employment is a question of fact in each case and if there is any evidence or reasonable inferences flowing therefrom which support the finding of the commission, the award will not be disturbed on review. Each case must be decided upon its particular facts and no comprehensive formula is available. Larson v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. The opinions of qualified medical witnesses with reference to the origin and cause of the injury are valid evidence which will support an award. Newton v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. The injuries suffered to be compensable need not be of the kind anticipated by the employer or peculiar to the employment. Larson v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. In the instant case we have the opinion of medical witnesses that Ehrhardt contracted the disease in the San Joaquin Valley while there in the service of his employer, and that the probability of his having contracted the disease elsewhere is very remote. As stated in City and County of San Francisco v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 183 Cal. 273, 283, 191 P. 26, 30:

"Its [the Commission] conclusion is the more justified by the fact that it coincides with the conclusions of most of the physicians who testified. Their opinions upon a point of this character are entitled to consideration, since it is a part of their vocation to observe diseases and how they spread, and to draw conclusions from their observations." (Emphasis added.) And in addition to that evidence are the circumstances that, in the other localities visited by Ehrhardt while not serving his employer during the time here pertinent, the cases of the infection are sporadic and the possibility that he contracted the disease in such places is remote, that approximately 77% of the inhabitants of the San Joaquin Valley area are infected with the disease at some time during the course of their lives although only a few of them develop the secondary phase, coccidioidal granuloma, and that by reason of the prevalence of the infection among those inhabitants they attain an immunity which a person coming into that area for the first time does not possess. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient to support an award of the commission, and it may be based upon the reasonable inferences that arise from the reasonable probabilities flowing from the evidence; neither absolute certainty nor demonstration is required. State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; Royal Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; United Dredging Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; City and County of San Francisco v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; Santa v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. It is reasonable to conclude that if Ehrhardt's duties had not taken him to the endemic area he would not have contracted the disease. It was by reason of and incident to his employment that he came in contact with the infection. The risk to which he was subjected by his employment was not the same as that of the public in the endemic area inasmuch as the great majority of the inhabitants there possessed an immunity to the disease which Ehrhardt, living outside the area, lacked.

[9] There is no substantial distinction with reference to the risk being incident to his employment and the hazards of traffic and travel encountered by an employee whose duties take him onto the streets and highways. The latter hazards are no more closely related to the employment of such an employee as differentiated from the general public, than was the hazard of infection which was met by Ehrhardt in his employment which required his presence in the endemic area. It is the firmly established law that when employees whose duties compel them to travel or to use the streets and highways suffer injuries in the course thereof, the injury arises out of and occurs in the course of employment and is compensable. California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 5 Cal.2d 185, 53 P.2d 758; Burton Auto Transfer Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 37 Cal.App. 657, 174 P. 72; Globe Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 36 Cal.App. 280, 171 P. 1088; Western Pacific R. R. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 413, 224 P. 754; London, etc., Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 35 Cal.App. 681, 170 P. 1074; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 39 Cal.App. 229, 178 P. 542; Real Silk Hosiery Mills v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 86 Cal.App. 189, 260 P. 807. In the case at bar Ehrhardt's employment compelled him to travel over the streets and highways both in cities and in the country in an automobile. The weather being warm he would naturally have and did have the windows of his vehicle open. The spores or mold causing the infection is in the soil in the endemic area, and any breeze would naturally carry the mold to him where it would be inhaled. The case of Roe v. Boise Grocery Co., 53 Idaho 82, 21 P.2d 910, is worthy of note. There the employee, a traveling salesman, in the course of his employment was required to travel over the highways through territory infested with wood ticks infected with the virus which causes Rocky Mountain spotted fever. He was bitten by a wood tick, which resulted in his death from infection with the fever. The Supreme Court of Idaho affirmed an award of compensation of the Industrial Accident Board, and held that the injury arose out of the employment. In answer to the contention that the risk of such infection from wood ticks was no greater than that incurred by the commonalty, the court said at page 912 of 21 P.2d:

"The duties of the deceased required him to make frequent regular trips over the highways, stop at the hotels and visit his customers both to sell and collect; thus the highways he traveled, the hotels he stopped at, and the stores he visited became and were his workshop; they were the places where he constantly spent his time and worked for his employer. That cannot be said of any member of the public not performing similar duties nor similarly employed. Consequently, the deceased was exposed to the danger of being bitten by an infected wood tick in a greater degree than those who lived in the wood tick territory and traveled over the highways traversing it. We think that the rule applied to the servant who, in the course of the master's business, passes along a public street, and sustains an accident by reason of the risks incidental to the streets, should also be applied to a salesman traveling by automobile over the public highways, who sustains an accident by reason of the risks incidental to the highways." In Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 84 Cal.App. 506, 258 P. 698, the employee contracted typhoid fever while in a foreign country in the course of his employment. Although the court based its holding that the injury was compensable chiefly upon the ground that the employer knew of the presence of the disease in that country, it remarked at page 510 of 84 Cal.App., at page 699 of 258 P.:

"Furthermore, the evidence sufficiently shows that the inhabitants of these localities, while not immune from the disease, were less subject to infection therefrom than foreigners, and we are unable to say that the conclusion of the commission that the employee was subjected to an exposure in excess of that of the commonalty was not reasonably supported."

Petitioner cites Pattiani v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, as controlling. There the employee was sent on his employer's business to New York City where he contracted typhoid fever. An epidemic of the fever then existed in the city. The commission found against the employee, and that the epidemic was not caused by contaminated oysters (the employee had eaten contaminated oysters while in the city), and that there was no risk different than that to which the general public was exposed. This court was there concerned merely with whether the injury was compensable in view of the finding of the commission. It pointed out that there was no evidence of his having contracted the disease by reason of the epidemic and that the evidence supported the finding. In the case at bar the medical testimony shows that Ehrhardt contracted the disease in the course of his employment, and that he, a stranger coming into the endemic area was more susceptible to the disease than the residents thereof. Likewise, in Children's Hospital Soc. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, there was no evidence that the employee, a nurse in a hospital, was in a place where she was exposed to the disease, nor was there any medical evidence that she contracted the disease at the hospital. On the contrary the medical evidence was to the effect that nothing was known about the disease or who were carriers thereof and could transmit it to another. In London Guarantee & Accident Co., Ltd., v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 202 Cal. 239, 259 P. 1096, 54 A.L.R. 1392, the employee was not, by reason of his employment, taken away from his place of residence into an area where he was exposed to a special risk.

[10] The findings of the referee in the first instance were against Ehrhardt. The latter petitioned for and was granted a rehearing and the order granting the same also made findings favorable to Ehrhardt and made the award here attacked; no new evidence was taken on rehearing. The order recited: "Good Cause Appearing Therefor: It Is Ordered that the applicant's petition for rehearing, filed herein January 27, 1941, be and the same is hereby granted.

"It appearing to the satisfaction of this Commission that no sufficient reason exists for taking further evidence,

"It Is Ordered that the instant matter be forthwith submitted for re-consideration and re-determination and that the Findings and Award of January 8, 1941, be rescinded and annulled and the following Findings and Award be substituted as Decision on Rehearing:". Petitioner alleges in its petition for a writ of review:

"That there was no finding in said order granting rehearing and decision on rehearing and it is denied that the members of the Commission at any time read the transcripts and record of this case before reversing the decision of W. Lee DeMara."

Petitioner contends that the order of the commission on rehearing was in excess of its jurisdiction claiming that the commission did not review the evidence in the record, citing Taylor v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 38 Cal.App.2d 75, 100 P.2d 511, and Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 42 Cal.App.2d 192, 108 P.2d 698. Whatever may be the rule with respect to the necessity of a review of the record and a consideration of all the facts by the commission where a rehearing is granted by it and contrary findings are made, we have nothing more than petitioner's bare assertion that the commission did not review the record and consider all the facts. Under those circumstances it is our opinion that the disputable presumption that official duty has been regularly performed is controlling. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15. It will be presumed that the commission did review the record and consider all the facts before making its findings and award.

The award is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, HOUSER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 647

NEEL v. MANNINGS, Inc.

L. A. 18116.

Supreme Court of California.

March 2, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 30, 1942.

1. Judgment ⇐199(3)

A trial court's power to set aside jury's verdict for plaintiff and enter contrary judgment is same as power to grant nonsuit, so that motion for judgment non obstante veredicto may properly be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, giving plaintiff's evidence all value to which it is legally entitled and indulging in every legitimate inference therefrom, there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support verdict for plaintiff. Code Civ.Proc. § 629.

2. Negligence ⇐32(1, 2)

One lawfully entering store during business hours to purchase goods does so at implied invitation of owner, on whom law imposes duty to exercise ordinary care and prudence to keep aisles and passageways, in and through which, by their location and arrangement, customer is induced to go in making purchases, in reasonably safe condition, so as not to expose him to danger or accident unnecessarily.

3. Evidence ⇐570

The province of expert opinion testimony is only to aid in coming to conclusion, and it does not exclude consideration of other evidence pertinent to issue involved.

4. Trial ⇐28(1)

In action for injuries to one striking her head against ceiling board while ascending stairway to defendant's restaurant on balcony of public market building, notice, acquired by jury on visit to scene of accident, as to construction of stairway, was independent evidence for jury's consideration in determining issue as to dangerous and defective condition of stairway.

5. Negligence ⇐136(22)

In action for injuries to one striking her head against ceiling board while ascending stairway to defendant's restaurant on balcony of public market building, whether stairway, as maintained by defendant, was unsafe and dangerous for its intended use, to which it was put, because of manner of construction thereof, was question peculiarly proper for submission to jury.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇐169(8)

In action for injuries to one striking her head against ceiling board while ascending stairway to defendant's restaurant on balcony of public market building, undisputed fact that construction of stairs and relation of balcony thereto had remained unchanged during ten-year period of defendant's tenancy was sufficient to sustain jury's finding of constructive notice to defendant of dangerous and unsafe condition of stairway because of manner of construction thereof.

7. Landlord and tenant ⇐169(8)

In action for injuries to one striking her head against ceiling board while ascending stairway to lessee's restaurant on balcony of public market building, architect's testimony that stairway was constructed in conformity with generally approved standards and usual building plans for such type of structure did not absolve lessee from charge of negligence in maintaining stairway in dangerous and defective condition because of manner of construction thereof, as general practice or custom would not exonerate lessee unless it was consistent with due care.

8. Landlord and tenant ⇐169(8)

In action for injuries to one striking her head against ceiling board while ascending stairway to lessee's restaurant on balcony of public market building, evidence that lessee had no knowledge of any like accident having previously occurred on such stairway did not repel suggestion of lessee's negligence in maintaining stairway in dangerous and defective condition because of manner of construction thereof or preclude inquiry as to whether lessee performed legal duty to maintain premises in reasonably safe condition for patrons' use.

9. Negligence ⇐66(2)

Forgetfulness of known danger by one injured as result thereof is not negligence barring recovery of damages, unless it shows want of ordinary care.

10. Negligence ⇐136(27)

Generally, question whether forgetfulness of known danger by one injured as result thereof constituted negligence, barring recovery of damages, as showing want of ordinary care, is for jury.

11. Landlord and tenant ⇐169(11)

In action for injuries to one striking her head against ceiling board while ascending stairway to lessee's restaurant on balcony of public market building, whether plaintiff's action, in stepping toward left wall rail of stairway to avoid collision with persons descending stairs, without observing or remembering dangerous condition incident to proximity of edge of ceiling bordering stairwell, was reasonable and prudent under circumstances, held fact question for jury.

12. Trial ⇐142

Where different conclusions may be reasonably drawn by different minds from same evidence on fact issue, decision thereof must be left to jury.

13. Landlord and tenant ⇐169(11)

In action for injuries to one striking her head against ceiling board while ascending stairway to lessee's restaurant on balcony of public market building, whether natural sway of plaintiff's body, as her weight shifted in moving to left to avoid collision with persons descending stairway, was sufficient to bring her in line to strike her head on edge of ceiling bordering stairwell, was for jury to determine from evidence.

14. Landlord and tenant ⇐169(8)

In action for injuries to one striking her head against ceiling board while ascending stairway to lessee's restaurant on balcony of public market building, evidence held sufficient to support jury's verdict for plaintiff on ground of lessee's negligence, proximately causing injuries, in maintaining stairway in dangerous and defective condition because of improper construction thereof.

TRAYNOR, J., GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by Myrtle Neel against Mannings, Incorporated, for personal injuries. From a judgment for defendant notwithstanding a jury's verdict for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed, with direction.

For prior opinion, see, Cal.App., 115 P.2d 999.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

G. Revelle Harrison and Albert E. Wheatcroft, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sidney A. Moss, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff when she struck her head against a ceiling board while ascending a stairway alleged to have been negligently maintained by the defendant Mannings, Inc. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $1,500. Thereupon the defendant moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict upon the ground that the evidence not only failed to show that defendant was guilty of negligence, but established the fact that the plaintiff's injuries were the result of contributory negligence. The motion was granted and from the judgment entered accordingly for defendant, plaintiff has appealed.

[1] It appears to be the well-established law of this state that the power of the trial court to set aside a verdict and enter a contrary judgment is absolutely the same as its power to grant a nonsuit. Sec. 629, Code Civ.Proc.; Card v. Boms, 210 Cal. 200, 291 P. 190; Hunt v. United Bank & Trust Co. of California, 210 Cal. 108, 291 P. 184; 7 Cal.Jur.Supp. 268, sec. 65c. Therefore, a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto may properly be granted "when, and only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff." Card v. Boms, supra, 210 Cal. at page 202, 291 P. at page 191. In the light of this settled legal principle an examination of the record in this case impels the conclusion that the trial court was in error in determining that there was no evidence which gave substantial support to the verdict rendered by the jury.

The essential facts basis of the plaintiff's claim are briefly as follows: For about ten years prior to May 2, 1939, the date of plaintiff's accident, defendant Mannings, Inc., had conducted a restaurant on the balcony of the Grand Central Public Market in Los Angeles. As the only public means of access to this restaurant defendant maintained a stairway of 14 steps, each approximately 7¼ inches high and 10½ inches deep. The stairway was 44 inches wide and extended from the ground floor of the market to the floor level of the balcony. On each side of the lower half of the stairway was a wall rail or banister approximately 30 inches above the steps. As the stairs approached the level of the ceiling, the open space between the ceiling and each wall rail became narrower. The ceiling did not extend over the stairwell except at the bottom of the stairway, but it did extend over the wall rails to each edge of the stairwell. The upper half of the stairway was bordered on each side by solid walls, from which handrails projected into the stairwell. From the lower part of the stairway, because of the open space on either side thereof, there could be seen various stalls located on the floor of the market.

At about noon on the day in question plaintiff and her friend started abreast up the stairway for the purpose of purchasing luncheon at defendant's restaurant. After having so ascended a couple of steps and because of the presence of other persons on the stairway, plaintiff's companion advanced to the left and ahead of plaintiff. The two ladies proceeded in this position to mount the stairs until plaintiff reached the fourth or fifth step, when plaintiff, who was then about five or six inches from the wall rail on the left side, moved further to the left to permit several people who were descending the stairs to pass. At the same time she stepped upward and struck her head on a sharp board on the edge of the ceiling bordering the stairwell, thereby sustaining serious injuries.

Plaintiff testified that she had used the same stairway on other occasions for a period of about fifteen years, during none of which times she had struck her head against the ceiling in question; that her eyesight was good; that immediately prior to the happening of the accident she was looking straight ahead as she moved up the stairs, and that when she struck her head on the ceiling board upon stepping to the left to allow other people coming toward her to pass, she grabbed the skirt of her friend, who was walking just ahead and who thereupon turned to assist plaintiff in her misfortune. Plaintiff's testimony as to the condition of the stairway with respect to the presence of other persons thereon and her action following her injury was corroborated by plaintiff's friend, who further stated that plaintiff complained that she had hit her head and was in considerable pain. A qualified architect, called as a witness by defendant, testified with reference to approved building standards for structures of the type in question as follows: "In my opinion these steps and stairway and that balcony with respect to its position to the stairway were scientifically constructed. This stairway and its surroundings are constructed in the manner approved generally in the County of Los Angeles. In my opinion this construction of the stairway and the railing and the surrounding conditions are built in accordance with sound architectural practice. It is built in accord with the standard of generally approved stairs of this type. * * * In a construction such as involved in this case, where the edge of the ceiling is on the same plane with the well of the stairs or rail, if one wished to operate a restaurant on that balcony to accommodate from three to five hundred people I would not necessarily recommend that a rail projecting from the side of the well be carried the full length of the stairway, but I would so recommend on the basis of good architectural practice. * * * I would recommend that the projecting rail be carried the full length of the stairway merely as a continuous line of the rail and not in order to prevent people from bumping their heads in walking up." During the course of the trial plaintiff moved that the jury visit the scene of the accident and examine the stairway; and accordingly this was done. In connection with this inspection it was stipulated by the parties that complete measurements as to dimensional facts and floorplan arrangement of the stairway were correctly represented by appropriate exhibits introduced in evidence, consisting of several pictures and a diagram. There was also testimony that defendant had no knowledge of any previous accident having occurred on the stairway, and that about three or four hundred people daily patronized its restaurant on the balcony.

[2] It should be noted at this point that there was no question before the jury as to the legal relationship existing between the parties, for the defendant admitted in its answer that plaintiff entered upon its premises as an invitee. The long-recognized rule governing such status is succinctly stated in Brinkworth v. Sam Seelig Co., 51 Cal.App. 668, 670, 197 P. 427, 428: "One who, during business hours, lawfully enters a store to purchase goods does so at the implied invitation of the owner (Herzog v. Hemphill, 7 Cal.App. 116, 93 P. 899), upon whom the law imposes the duty of exercising ordinary care and prudence to keep the aisles and passageways of the premises, in and through which, by their location and arrangement a customer in making purchases is induced to go, in a reasonably safe condition, so as to not unnecessarily expose him to danger or accident. (Hart v. Grennell, 122 N.Y. 371, 25 N.E. 354; Schmidt v. Bauer, 80 Cal. 565, 22 P. 256, 5 L.R.A. 580; Means v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 144 Cal. 473, 77 P. 1001, 1 Ann.Cas. 206.)"

Under this condition of the evidence the questions presented to the jury for determination were: (1) Whether defendant was negligent by reason of the manner in which it maintained the stairway; and if so, (2) whether its negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's accident. The jury's findings upon these questions entailed consideration of the following matters: (3) whether plaintiff was negligent; and if so, (4) whether her negligence contributed to her injuries. In deciding these issues, the jury was privileged to consider the defendant's legal obligation to an invitee upon its premises. That there was substantial evidence to support the verdict in this case is apparent from the foregoing recital of the record, when viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff and without regard for any asserted contradictions in the proof as the rule requires the court to do in determining the propriety of a judgment non obstante veredicto.

[3-5] Clearly tendered by the pleadings in this case and the basis of plaintiff's charge of negligence against defendant was the issue as to the dangerous and defective condition of the stairs leading to the restaurant on the balcony. Bearing upon this question at the trial was the following evidence: The testimony of plaintiff and her companion as to the general physical aspect of the stairway and their use of it at the time of the accident; the pictures and diagram showing the dimensional facts with respect to the steps and the surrounding premises, and revealing that the edge of the ceiling was on the same line or plane as the inside edge of each of the wall rails located on the lower half of the stairway; and the statement of the architect (on cross-examination) that good architectural practice would require a full-length projecting handrail on each side of the stairway. From these evidentiary factors the jury might reasonably have inferred that the plaintiff, in ascending the steps in the manner presumably contemplated by the defendant, was injured by reason of an unsafe condition associated with the stairway, such as the absence of a continuous projecting handrail along the entire length of each side of the staircase to keep a patron's body clear of the wall rails and edge of the ceiling, or the presence of the wall rails on the lower portion of the stairway inviting a customer to assume a position close to the side of the stairs in allowing others to pass thereon and thus be apt to strike the border of the ceiling in progressing on the way to the restaurant. Or the jury might have concluded that the defendant in the exercise of reasonable care to eliminate the danger of injury as described herein, should have walled in each side of the lower half of the stairway as was done on the upper part thereof. It is true that the architect stated (on direct examination) that the stairway was "scientifically constructed" in the generally approved manner and (on re-direct examination) that his recommendation with respect to the desirability of the full-length projecting handrail related to "good architectural practice" in the sense of aesthetic considerations of beauty and continuity of line rather than in deference to safety principles. But the jury was privileged to reject this testimony as inconsistent with the positive statement elicited in the course of cross-examination of this witness and reasonably referable without qualification to the safety features of the premises whereon plaintiff claimed to have suffered injuries, that in the given circumstances he would "recommend that a rail projecting from the side of the well be carried the full length of the stairway * * * on the basis of good architectural practice." Expert testimony is to be given the weight to which it appears in each case to be justly entitled, and the law makes no distinction between that kind of testimony and evidence of other character. The province of such opinion testimony is only to aid in coming to a conclusion, and it does not exclude consideration of other evidence which is pertinent to the issue involved. 10 Cal.Jur. 971, sec. 228; 974, sec. 232; State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Industrial Accident Commission, 195 Cal. 174, 231 P. 996; Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 228 P. 25; Rolland v. Porterfield, 183 Cal. 466, 191 P. 913. This principle is particularly applicable in the present case when it is remembered that the jury made an inspection of the defendant's premises and observed the pitch or grade of the stairway in relation to the edge of the ceiling bordering the stairwell, the wall rails and handrails in their respective positions, and the probability or likelihood of one striking his head in the fashion above described when ascending the steps in an ordinary manner. The knowledge acquired by this visit to the scene of the accident, supplementing the information embodied in the above-mentioned exhibits relative to the dimensional facts as to the construction of the stairway, was independent evidence in the case, and undoubtedly it had much to do with the jury's determination of this issue in accord with the plaintiff's claim. 24 Cal. Jur. 752, sec. 34; Ethel D. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 219 Cal. 699, 704, 28 P.2d 919; MacPherson v. West Coast Transit Co., 94 Cal.App. 463, 466, 271 P. 509; Vaughan v. County of Tulare, 56 Cal.App. 261, 265, 205 P. 21. Whether the stairway as maintained by the defendant was unsafe and dangerous for the use for which it was intended and to which it was put was a question peculiarly proper for submission to the arbitrament of the jury. Oles v. Kahn Bros., 81 Cal.App. 76, 83, 253 P. 158; Long v. John Breuner Co., 36 Cal.App. 630, 634, 172 P. 1132.

[6] Following its finding that the premises were dangerous and unsafe in the respect alleged by plaintiff, the jury was required to determine whether the defendant was chargeable with knowledge of this condition. Although there was no evidence that defendant had actual notice of the defective character of the stairway, the undisputed fact that the construction of the stairs and the relation of the balcony thereto had remained unchanged during the ten-year period of defendant's tenancy was sufficient to constitute constructive notice to defendant of the condition found to exist by the jury. Papineau v. Distributors Packing Co., 10 Cal.App.2d 558, 52 P.2d 571; Boothby v. Town of Yreka City, 117 Cal.App. 643, 4 P.2d 589; Note, 25 A.L.R. 1295.

[7, 8] The testimony of the architect that the stairway was constructed in conformity with generally approved standards and usual building plans for that type of structure would not serve to absolve defendant from the charge of negligence. The general practice or custom would not exonerate defendant unless such practice or custom was consistent with due care. 19 Cal.Jur. 581, sec. 25; Mehollin v. Ysuchiyama, 11 Cal.2d 53, 57, 77 P.2d 855; Robinet v. Hawks, 200 Cal. 265, 274, 252 P. 1045; Perry v. Angelus Hospital Ass'n, 172 Cal. 311, 315, 156 P. 449. Nor did the showing that defendant had no knowledge of any like accident having previously occurred on the stairway repel the suggestion of negligence and preclude inquiry as to whether it had performed its legal duty to maintain the premises in a reasonably safe condition for the use of its patrons. This circumstance does not negative the possibility that many another person in ascending the stairs to the restaurant may have struck his head against the ceiling as plaintiff claimed she did, but because of slight injury and only temporary pain, no complaint was made. Furthermore, if this absence of report of prior mishaps had the effect urged by defendant, it would furnish a perfect defense, however dangerous and unsafe the stairway might appear to be, as shown by other evidence. Sander v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 38 Cal. App. 222, 230, 175 P. 901.

[9-12] The next question to be considered is whether plaintiff was as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence. In this regard defendant relies on the rule that where one knows a condition to be dangerous and is injured because of failure to take heed thereof, such conduct will bar a recovery. But even though the evidence did establish that the alleged defect in the construction of defendant's premises was patent and observable to any one using the stairway, and that in addition plaintiff by reason of her past visits to the restaurant was familiar with the existing condition, there would still be the question for the determination of the jury as to whether or not it was a want of ordinary care on the part of plaintiff not to have kept in mind such element of danger when stepping toward the wall rail to allow other persons descending the stairs to pass. Meindersee v. Meyers, 188 Cal. 498, 503, 205 P. 1078; Oles v. Kahn Bros., 81 Cal.App. 76, 82, 253 P. 158; Hayward v. Downer, 65 Cal.App. 450, 451, 224 P. 265. Even forgetfulness of a known danger will not operate to prevent a recovery, for to forget is not negligence unless it shows a want of ordinary care. Generally the question is one for the jury (Gibson v. County of Mendocino, 16 Cal. 2d 80, 89, 105 P.2d 105; Smith v. Southern Pacific Co., 201 Cal. 57, 69, 70, 255 P. 500; Meindersee v. Meyers, 188 Cal. 498, 503, 205 P. 1078; Roseberry v. Edward F. Niehaus & Co., 166 Cal. 481, 483, 137 P. 232; McStay v. Citizens' Nat. T. & S. Bank, 5 Cal.App.2d 595, 600, 43 P.2d 560; Rosella v. Paxinos, 110 Cal.App. 299, 302, 294 P. 39), and the record in the present case demonstrates that it comes well within this settled principle. Plaintiff's act in stepping toward the left wall rail to permit several persons approaching her from the opposite direction to pass diverted her from her normal course of progress up the stairs, which line of travel had been five or six inches distant from this mentioned banister. In so doing her attention was distracted by her effort to avoid collision with these other people, and she momentarily did not observe or remember the dangerous condition incident to the proximity of the edge of the ceiling bordering the stairwell. Whether plaintiff's action was reasonable and prudent under the circumstances was for the jury to decide as an issue of fact. Smith v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, and cases there cited at pages 69, 70 of 201 Cal., 255 P. 500. As was said in McStay v. Citizens Nat. T. & S. Bank, supra, 5 Cal.App.2d at page 600, 43 P.2d at page 562: "Where different conclusions may be reasonably drawn by different minds from the same evidence, the decision must be left to the jury."

[13] Defendant's further contention on this phase of the case, that the accident would not have happened if plaintiff had not protruded her head beyond the space occupied by the stairwell and proceeded up the stairs in that position without looking, is purely argumentative and has no evidentiary foundation in the record. Plaintiff testified that she was positive that she was not leaning over to the left, but was standing erect when she "stepped up and over to her left and then struck her head." Her version of the accident does not appear to be inconsistent with the admitted physical facts relative to the construction of the stairway, and it was for the jury to determine from the evidence before it whether it could reasonably be said that the natural sway of plaintiff's body as her weight shifted in so moving on the stairs was sufficient to bring her in line to strike her head on the edge of the ceiling bordering the stairwell. Neilson v. Houle, 200 Cal. 726, 728, 254 P. 891; Parker v. Manchester Hotel Co., 29 Cal.App.2d 446, 456, 85 P.2d 152.

[14] Tested by the foregoing considerations, it is manifest that the jury, as the basis of its verdict in favor of plaintiff, was warranted in concluding that defendant, by reason of its maintenance of the stairway in the condition above described, breached its legal duty to plaintiff to keep its premises reasonably safe, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. Accordingly, the judgment is reversed and the trial court is hereby directed to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,500 pursuant to the verdict of the jury rendered in this action.

SHENK, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

To recover damages for negligence the plaintiff must establish that her injuries were caused by the breach of a duty owed to her by defendant. The occupant of premises open to business visitors is not an insurer of a visitor's safety and need not eliminate every condition that might conceivably cause injury. He is liable only for injuries caused by conditions, of which he knows or should know, that constitute an unreasonable risk to visitors, when he fails to give them adequate warning. Rest.Torts, sec. 343; Prosser, Torts, sec. 79, p. 642; 19 Cal.Jur. 618-622; 8 Cal.Jur. Supp. 349, 350, 353, 354, 1011, 1012.

In the present case there is not sufficient evidence to support a finding that the condition of the stairs subjected visitors to an unreasonable risk. According to the testimony of the architect, the stairs were scientifically constructed in the generally approved manner. While he recommended that a hand rail projecting from the side of the well be carried the full length of the stairway, he made it clear that this was desirable merely to form a continuous line and not to prevent people from bumping their heads in walking up the stairs. His statement affords no basis for concluding that the stairway subjected visitors to unreasonable risk. The fact that the jury viewed the premises is not sufficient to support a finding of negligence, particularly since the parties stipulated that what was viewed by the jury is presented in the exhibits. These exhibits picture a normal, unobstructed stairway, and contain no evidence of unreasonable risk to visitors.

If there is a defective condition in the premises the occupant may discharge his duty to business visitors by giving them adequate warning. Rest.Torts, sec. 343; see cases cited in Calif. Annotations to Rest.Torts, sec. 343; Prosser, Torts, sec. 19, p. 642; 19 Cal.Jur. 618, 619; 8 Cal.Jur. Supp. 349, 353, 354, 1011-1017. If the danger is so apparent that the visitor can reasonably be expected to notice it and protect himself, the condition itself constitutes adequate warning, and the possessor is under no obligation to take further action. Shanley v. American Olive Co., 185 Cal. 552, 197 P. 793; Mautino v. Sutter Hospital Ass'n, 211 Cal. 556, 296 P. 76; Blodgett v. B. H. Dyas Co., 4 Cal. 2d 511, 50 P.2d 801; Dingman v. A. F. Mattock Co., 15 Cal.2d 622, 104 P.2d 26; see cases cited in 8 Cal.Jur.Supp. 351, note 4, p. 1012, note 4; Prosser, Torts, sec. 79, p. 642. "There is no liability for injuries from dangers that are obvious, or as well known to the person injured as to the owner or occupant." Mautino v. Sutter Hospital Ass'n., supra, 211 Cal. at page 561, 296 P. at page 78. As stated in Shanley v. American Olive Co., supra, 185 Cal. at page 555, 197 P. at page 794: "The responsibility of such owner for the safety of such person in such a case is not absolute; he is only required to use ordinary care for the safety of the persons he invites to come upon the premises. If there is a danger attending upon such entry, or upon the work which the person invited is to do thereon, and such danger arises from causes or conditions not readily apparent to the eye, it is the duty of the owner to give such person reasonable notice or warning of such danger. But such owner is entitled to assume that such invitee will perceive that which would be obvious to him upon the ordinary use of his own senses. He is not required to give to the invitee notice or warning of an obvious danger."

In the present case the evidence presented to the jury establishes without question that the condition of the stairway was apparent to any person using it and was as well known to the plaintiff as to the defendant. There is no evidence indicating that plaintiff did not have adequate notice of the condition of the stairway, and there is therefore no basis for concluding that defendant violated any duty owed to plaintiff. The judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 221

McNOWN v. PACIFIC FREIGHT LINES et al.

Civ. 2650.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐996, 1001(1)

Contributory negligence is a "question of fact" for the jury to determine and an appellate court will not disturb the finding of a jury upon that issue if there is any substantial evidence or any reasonable inference in support of such finding.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

2. Automobiles ⇐244(36, 45)

In wife's action for injuries resulting from collision of automobile driven by husband with truck, evidence that truck had been driven upon highway and stopped at an unusual place when it was practically dark at an angle at which headlights were not visible, although truck driver had seen approaching automobile, sustained finding that proximate cause of collision was truck driver's negligence, and that plaintiff's husband was not guilty of contributory negligence.

3. Trial ⇐260(8)

In action for injuries resulting to wife when automobile driven by her husband collided with truck, where court fully instructed jury on rules of contributory negligence and proximate cause and with respect to necessity of keeping a lookout, and charged that any negligence on part of automobile driver was imputable to wife, refusal of defendants' request for instructions on same subjects was not error.

4. Trial ⇐240

A trial judge should instruct the jury fully as to the law in clear and concise language, but it is not necessary or proper for the court to give argumentative instructions.

5. Automobiles ⇐204
Evidence ⇐5(2)

In action for injuries resulting from collision between automobile which was attached by a tow-bar to another automobile, with truck, the automobile being towed was not a "trailer coach" within Vehicle Code requiring trailer coach to be equipped with brakes that can be operated by driver of towing automobile, since it is common knowledge that a "trailer coach" is one thing and that an automobile being towed is another. Vehicle Code, §§ 52, 670.5, St.1937, pp. 1597, 1598.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trailer Coach".

6. Appeal and error ⇐1004(1)

Before an appellate court may interpose its judgment as to the sum which will compensate a plaintiff for personal injuries, it must appear that the recovery is so excessive when compared with the sum reasonably warranted by the evidence showing the nature and extent of the injuries received as to shock the sense of justice and raise the presumption that the amount was arrived at as the result of passion and prejudice rather than upon a fair and honest consideration of the facts.

7. Damages ⇐132(3)

$10,000 for injuries received by married woman 43 years of age who was confined in hospital for nearly three weeks, was still extremely nervous, unable to do housework, and because of the dislocation of her coccyx was unable to sit in a normal position without her legs and back seeming numb, was not so excessive as to warrant appellate court in setting it aside, especially in view of the fact that it had been approved by the trial judge who had a right to weigh the evidence upon the question of damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by Louise McNown against Pacific Freight Lines and another for injuries resulting from motor vehicle collision. From a judgment for plaintiff for $10,000, the defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Calvin H. Conron, Jr., of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Brittan & Mack, of Bakersfield, and Preston, Braucht & George, of Merced, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

Appellants appeal from a judgment awarding respondent $10,000 for personal injuries resulting from a collision which occurred on November 18, 1939, at a point approximately 2 miles north of Lebec on Highway 99 in Kern County.

The accident occurred at about 5:50 p. m., at dusk, but late enough in the evening that driving lights were necessary. The defendant Joseph Frank Stephens was operating a truck and trailer 54 feet in length in a southerly direction toward Los Angeles on U. S. Highway 99. He had turned off the U. S. Highway 99 onto the old highway, which intersects the new highway at an angle, and proceeded some 150 to 200 feet south on the old highway, where he turned his truck and trailer back toward U. S. Highway 99. In returning to the main highway he did not use the roadway or cross-road which was some distance to the south, but turned into an open space between two intersections. After maneuvering his equipment around until it faced in a northeasterly direction, an operation requiring several minutes, he parked two feet from the west edge of the paved portion of U. S. Highway 99, and waited some two minutes. While in this position he saw the headlights of the automobile in which plaintiff was riding, and which was operated by her husband, Darl D. McNown, approaching from the south some 300 to 400 yards away. Watching the approaching lights all the while, he drove upon the highway in low gear at a speed which he estimates from 1 to 4 miles per hour turning toward the north. The paved portion of Highway 99 at that point was 30 feet in width, having three traffic lanes, and as the front of the truck operated by appellant Stephens entered the east lane he saw the McNown car some 150 yards away and noted that it had not slackened its speed. He continued forward until the front of the truck was 3 feet from the east edge of the highway and then stopped. In that position the truck and trailer, facing northeast, blocked the entire paved portion of the highway with the exception of 3 feet on the east side. At the time he stopped in this position the McNown car was only 50 or 60 yards away.

On the right-hand side of the truck, that is the southeasterly side as the truck stood on the highway, there were two small amber clearance lights, one on the front and one on the back, and also clearance lights on the front and back of the trailer. The automobile being driven by the husband of plaintiff was towing a second automobile, a Hudson four-door sedan. The automobiles were coupled with a new late model tow bar. Mr. McNown testified that as he approached the point of the accident he was traveling between 40 and 45 miles per hour and that he knew this because he had glanced at his speedometer. When about 190 feet from the truck he first saw a clearance light on the east side of the road and commenced to apply his brakes. When approximately 175 feet away, he saw the image of the truck before him and applied his brakes firmly, and turned his car slightly to the left. The brakes of the towed automobile were not attached to the car being driven. As the front car was turned, the two automobiles jack-knifed and the front car turned around so that it headed south, the rear car swinging into an arc so that the rear end of the car collided with the right rear end of the truck. Marks of the front car left upon the highway measured 205 feet in length and the skidding or broadside marks left by the towed car as it swung around measured 169 feet.

Appellant's first contention is that the verdict lacks evidentiary support because the undisputed and uncontradicted evidence shows that D. D. McNown, husband of plaintiff, was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law proximately causing the accident (a) in failing to see the lighted truck in time to avoid the collision, (b) in driving a car and towing another without adequate brakes, (c) in traveling at an excessive speed, and (d) in failing to use due care and caution under the circumstances.

[1, 2] In view of the familiar rule so often announced by our courts that contributory negligence is a question of fact for the jury to determine and that an appellate tribunal will not disturb the finding of a jury upon that issue if there is any substantial evidence or any reasonable inference in support of that finding, it is difficult for us to understand how appellant can seriously urge such a contention. We have read the entire record carefully and find therein ample evidence to support the implied finding of the jury that the negligence of appellant Stephens was the proximate cause of the collision and that the respondent's husband was not guilty of contributory negligence. In fact, the testimony of appellant Stephens alone is sufficient to support such finding of the jury. The jury could easily have found from appellant Stephens' testimony alone that he was negligent in driving equipment 54 feet long onto Highway 99 from an unusual place, when it was practically dark, at an angle at which his headlights were not visible from the south, when he saw an automobile approaching from the south only 350 yards away, and in continuing to drive such equipment across the highway until it blocked practically the entire thoroughfare, and that said negligence of appellant Stephens was the proximate cause of the collision. And the jury could easily have found from the testimony of appellant Stephens that respondent's husband was not guilty of contributory negligence.

It is unnecessary to prolong this opinion by reciting the many other parts of the record supporting the finding of the jury upon this issue.

Appellants next contend that the trial court "erred in refusing appellants' instructions pertaining to negligence in two respects: (a) in refusing to fully instruct the jury as to the duty of respondent's husband to look, and (b) in refusing to instruct as to the requirement of brakes on the trailer coach."

The court instructed the jury upon the rules of contributory negligence and proximate cause and specifically, with regard to looking, gave the following instructions:

"You are instructed that 'even though the operator of an automobile may be rigidly within the law he still remains bound to anticipate that he may meet persons at any point on the street, and he must, in order to avoid a charge of negligence, keep a proper lookout for them and keep his vehicle under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with another person using proper care and caution, and, if the situation requires, he must slow up and stop'."

"You are instructed that it is the duty of the driver of a motor vehicle to anticipate that he might meet other persons or vehicles at any point on the highway, at all times, and that he must keep a proper lookout for them, and keep his machine under such control as to enable him to avoid a collision with another person using care and caution, and that a failure, if any, upon his part, to use such care, is negligence."

Defendant offered and the court refused the following instructions:

"If you find from the evidence in this case that the said D. D. McNown, husband of said plaintiff and with whom plaintiff was riding at the time of this accident, did not have such control of his car which he was operating as to enable him to stop the same, or so slacken his speed so as to avoid the collision with the vehicle of the defendants, but that by the exercise of ordinary care and caution in operating said car in the manner in which and at the speed at which an ordinary prudent person could have operated said car, he would have had his car under such control as would have enabled him to avoid the collision which occurred, then the said D. D. McNown was guilty of negligence, which negligence is imputable to the plaintiff herein."

"You are instructed that the said D. D. McNown, husband of the plaintiff and with whom plaintiff was riding at the time of said accident, as he drove along the highway at the time and place stated in this action, was under the duty to exercise ordinary care to anticipate vehicles along the highway ahead of him, and to exercise ordinary care to see such vehicles in sufficient time and at a sufficient distance to avoid a collision."

"You are instructed that the said D. D. McNown, the husband of the plaintiff and with whom plaintiff was riding at the time of said accident, was under the duty and care to keep a lookout for objects and vehicles ahead on the highway, and that it was his duty to see that which was in plain sight, and that the said D. D. McNown was under the duty to act as a person of ordinary prudence under the circumstances in respect thereto."

[3, 4] The court elsewhere instructed the jury that any negligence on the part of respondent's husband was imputable to her, and in our opinion the requested instructions add nothing to those given by the court. A trial judge should instruct the jury fully as to the law in clear and concise language but it is not necessary or proper for the court to give argumentative instructions. The requested instructions were properly refused.

Appellants offered and the court refused the following instruction:

"You are instructed that section 670.5 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 93, as added by St.1937, p. 1598, of the State of California provides as follows: 'Brakes on Trailer Coaches. Every trailer coach having a weight of fifteen hundred pounds or more equipped for the road but exclusive of passengers shall be equipped with brakes which can be operated by the driver of the towing vehicle and which brakes shall be adequate, supplemental to the brakes on the towing vehicle, to enable such combination of vehicles to comply with the requirements of section 670 (a).'"

Appellants argue that the Hudson automobile which was attached to the automobile in which respondent was riding by a tow-bar, was a trailer coach and comes within the following definition in section 52 of the Vehicle Code:

"A 'trailer coach' is a vehicle without motive power designed for human habitation and for carrying persons and property on its own structure and for being drawn by a motor vehicle."

Appellants contend that the automobile attached to the car in which plaintiff was riding by a tow-bar had no motive power, carried a load upon its structure, and was designed for human beings and therefore for human habitation, and that because it weighed more than 1,500 pounds the court below erred in refusing to give to the jury the instruction setting forth the provisions of section 670.5 of the Vehicle Code.

In the Trailer Camp and Coach Law found in Deering's General Laws, Act

5131b, the same identical definition of a trailer coach is given as in section 52 of the California Vehicle Code, and a trailer camp is defined as a place where space is rented to users of trailer coaches.

[5] We think that the court properly refused to give said offered instruction. It is a matter of common knowledge that a trailer coach is one thing and an automobile being towed is another, and there is nothing in the definition above given that can change an automobile into a trailer coach.

[6, 7] Appellants' final contention is that the verdict of $10,000 is excessive and indicates that it must have been the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. The general rule is well stated in Bellman v. San Francisco High School District, 11 Cal.2d 576, 81 P.2d 894, 899, as follows:

"Before an appellate court may interpose its judgment as to the sum which will compensate a plaintiff for personal injuries, it must appear that the recovery is so excessive, when compared with a sum reasonably warranted by the evidence showing the nature and extent of the injuries received, as to shock the sense of justice and raise the presumption that the amount was arrived at as the result of passion and prejudice rather than upon a fair and honest consideration of the facts. * * *" See, also, Sassano v. Roullard, 27 Cal.App. 2d 372, 81 P.2d 213.

The evidence showed that respondent was 43 years of age, and that even though she had suffered an injury in 1937, she was in good physical condition at the time of the accident; that she did her housework, worked in her garden, helped her husband at his place of business, went horseback riding, hunting and fishing, and that she was, at the time of the accident, returning from a 7,000-mile automobile trip; and that as a result of the accident she was confined in the hospital for nearly three weeks; that she suffered great pain; that she had become extremely nervous; that she could no longer do her housework or work in her garden or do any of the other things above enumerated; that she still had severe pains in the back of her head and still had severe pains in her back, due to the dislocation of her "tailbone" or coccyx, which prevented her from sitting in a normal position without making her legs and back seem numb.

Appellants' chief argument on this point is that the dislocation of the coccyx suffered by respondent may be remedied by an operation and therefore cannot be considered permanent, and appellants argue that respondent has failed in her duty to minimize the damages and has failed to use reasonable efforts to restore herself to health. The jury and the trial court had before them medical testimony in this regard. It does not appear from the testimony what would be the extent of the recovery through such an operation. Nor does it appear that such an operation was previously suggested to respondent and refused by her. The trial judge in his minute order denying a motion for new trial stated:

"In the opinion of the Court the verdict in this case is quite liberal. Yet I cannot under the law hold that it is excessive."

The trial judge had the opportunity of hearing all of the witnesses testify and of observing respondent, and in addition to this, the trial judge had a right to weigh the evidence upon the question of damages.

Taking all of the evidence on the question of damages into consideration, we cannot say that the amount of the verdict was so large as to shock the sense of justice and raise the presumption that the amount awarded was the result of passion or prejudice.

In view of the foregoing, the judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 184

PEOPLE v. DUNCAN.

Cr. 3527.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Hearing Denied March 27, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐1134(8)

An attack upon an indictment or an information cannot be considered by District Court of Appeal on appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial.

2. Criminal law ⇐1134(8)

Where accused moved committing magistrate to dismiss complaint on ground that there was complete failure of proof at preliminary hearing, accused also moved, on arraignment in Superior Court, to set aside information on ground that he was not properly committed, and, after verdict of guilty, accused moved for arrest of judgment on ground that court had no jurisdiction of the offense charged, all such motions were denied, and accused was placed on probation without entry of judgment, and appealed from order denying new trial, District Court of Appeal could not review denial of motion to set aside information, since such denial could only be reviewed on appeal from judgment. Pen.Code, § 995.

WHITE, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Roy V. Rhodes, Judge.

Frank Duncan was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Bertram H. Ross, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying motion for a new trial, appellant's appeal from the judgment having been dismissed upon motion made by respondent for the reason that appellant's application for probation was granted by the trial court and, therefore, no judgment was ever entered in the instant cause. People v. Duncan, 48 Cal.App.2d 642, 120 P.2d 708.

Upon his arraignment in the trial court and before he pleaded "not guilty" to the crime of grand theft, as charged in the information, appellant made his motion to set aside said information under section 995 of the Penal Code upon the ground that he was not properly committed before the committing magistrate, which motion was denied.

Appellant states the issues upon appeal as follows:

"No question is raised concerning the sufficiency of the evidence upon the trial of this case. The sole attack on appeal relates to the sufficiency of the proceedings upon preliminary hearing, and to that end by proceedings for diminution of the record the transcript of the preliminary proceedings is before this court.

"It is Appellant's position that jurisdiction to try a felony case attaches to the Superior Court only, as the result of a Grand Jury indictment, or an information filed based upon a preliminary hearing upon which there has been a showing of reasonable cause to believe that a public offense has been committed."

It is further argued by appellant that "The proof of the commission of a public offense before a Magistrate is requisite to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Superior Court and there is no reason why defendant must stand trial where he has been improperly committed. (People v. Bomar, 73 Cal.App. 372, at page 378, 238 P. 758.)"

[1] It appears to be the law that an attack upon either an indictment or an information cannot be considered by this court upon an appeal from an order denying motion for new trial.

In the early case of People v. Turner, 39 Cal. 370, 371, it was stated:

"Objections which go to the form or sufficiency of the indictment, or to the jurisdiction of the tribunal presenting the same, may be presented by demurrer before issue of fact is presented by plea.

"Errors and irregularities in the proceedings, resulting in the presentation of the indictment * * * can only be made available to defendant before plea by motion to set aside the indictment.

"The action of the Court upon the demurrer, and upon the motion to set aside the indictment, can only be reviewed in the appellate Court on appeal from the final judgment.

"Objections which may be presented by demurrer before plea, may further be made available after verdict by motion in arrest of judgment; and the action of the Court on this motion can only be reviewed on appeal from the judgment.

"Thus, it will be seen, that a motion for a new trial presupposes a sufficient valid indictment, upon which, with sufficient legal evidence in support of its allegations, a legal verdict and a valid, binding judgment may be pronounced. The statute does contemplate or authorize a re-trial upon an insufficient or invalid indictment; hence, a motion for a new trial cannot properly be based upon any objection to the sufficiency or validity of the indictment, or any errors or irregularities occurring in the proceedings before issue of fact joined by plea to a good and sufficient indictment, the object and purpose of a re-trial being simply to enable the trial Court to avoid the errors and irregularities claimed to have occurred on the former trial to the prejudice of the rights secured to the defendant."

In the case of People v. Sanchez, 23 Cal.App. 742, 743, 139 P. 820, 821, it was held: "The suggestion in appellant's brief, of a defect in the information cannot be considered, since there is no appeal from the judgment. People v. Turner, 39 Cal. 370; Pen.Code, §§ 1012, 1239."

Again in the late case of People v. Johnston, 37 Cal.App.2d 606, 608, 100 P.2d 307, 308, it was held: "Appellant filed a demurrer to the information which was overruled by the trial court. The action of the court in overruling a demurrer can be reviewed in this court only upon an appeal from a judgment. People v. Turner, 39 Cal. 370; People v. Sanchez, 23 Cal.App. 742, 139 P. 820. Since we have before us no appeal from a judgment, we cannot consider appellant's attack upon the information."

In the case of In re Basham, 24 Cal. App.2d 285, 286, 74 P.2d 781, where petitioners after conviction of the crime of robbery in the first degree, applied for a writ of habeas corpus, "alleging in substance that they were not legally committed by a magistrate on the particular charge of robbery set forth in the information, and to which they pleaded guilty," it was held: "It is well settled, however, that one convicted upon an information is precluded in a proceeding in habeas corpus from raising the objection that he was not examined or held to answer by a magistrate prior to the filing of such information; that the filing of an information gives the superior court jurisdiction to proceed in the case; and that section 995 of the Penal Code provides the exclusive method of trying the question of whether the information is founded on the necessary preliminary examination, which is by way of motion to set aside the information. Ex parte McConnell, 83 Cal. 558, 23 P. 1119; 13 Cal. Jur. 228."

In the instant case, appellant moved the committing magistrate to dismiss the complaint on the ground that there was a complete failure of proof at the preliminary hearing; upon arraignment in the superior court, appellant made his motion to set aside the information under section 995 of the Penal Code upon the ground that he was not properly committed before the committing magistrate, and finally, after the verdict of the jury and before he made his application for probation, appellant made his motion for arrest of judgment on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the offense charged in the information. All of these motions were denied, and appellant was placed on probation.

[2] Since appellant raises no question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of the jury, finding him guilty of the offense charged in the information, and since the action of the trial court in denying appellant's motion to set aside the information under section 995 of the Penal Code can be reviewed only upon an appeal from the judgment, the order denying motion for a new trial is affirmed.

DORAN, J., concurred.

WHITE, Justice.

I dissent. While the cases hold that a defect in the information or the action of the court in overruling a demurrer can be reviewed only on an appeal from the judgment and not when, as here, the appeal is taken from the order denying a motion for a new trial, nevertheless, in the instant case the record shows that when the first witness was called at the trial and before such witness gave any testimony, defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that he had been committed by the magistrate without reasonable or probable cause. Consequently, we are not here confronted with the review of any defect or other impairment appearing upon the face of the information, but with a review of a motion which amounted to a challenge to the jurisdiction of the court. In my opinion, the correctness of the ruling denying such motion is reviewable on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, presenting, as such an appeal does, a question of law involved in a ruling made by the court at and during the trial. Pen.Code, sec. 1259. Prior to making the objection just mentioned to the introduction of any evidence, defendant had made his motion under section 995 of the Penal Code to set aside the information, and in support thereof offered in evidence the transcript of the testimony taken at the preliminary examination, and which transcript is now before us, as it was before the trial court at the time objection was made to the introduction of any evidence.

The case of Greenberg v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.2d 319, 121 P.2d 713, recently decided by our Supreme Court, is authority for the statement that when a grand jury indicts a person without the presentation of evidence to connect him with the commission of the crime charged, it exceeds its authority, and the indictment returned is void and ineffectual to confer jurisdiction upon a court to try a person for the offense charged. By the same token, may it not be said that where a committing magistrate holds a person to answer without reasonable or proper cause therefor, an information predicated upon such a commitment is void and equally ineffectual to confer jurisdiction upon the superior court to try such person for the offense charged in the information?

From a review of the evidence adduced at the preliminary examination, it is at once apparent that no attempt was made to prove the falsity of the representations allegedly made by the defendant, nor to establish that the property admittedly received by the complaining witness was not in fact worth the money she paid therefor. It seems to me these are essential and material elements of the charge made against appellant and form its gravamen or core. I am strongly of the opinion that the evidence presented at the preliminary examination falls far short of establishing that reasonable or probable cause required for commitment of the defendant for trial by the magistrate. Such being the case, the superior court was without jurisdiction to try the defendant (Greenberg v. Superior Court, supra), and the ruling of the court on the motion appropriately made at the trial challenging the court's jurisdiction is in my opinion reviewable on appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial. Therefore, such order should be reversed.

50 Cal.App.2d 76

JONES et al. v. O'NEAL et al.

Civ. 13344.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐931(1), 1010(1)

On appeal, the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to the prevailing party in the lower court, and if the record discloses substantial evidence to support the findings, they must be upheld.

2. Automobiles ⇐244(10, 42)

In action for personal injuries and property damage sustained in truck collision, evidence was sufficient for trial court to find that plaintiff driver was driving properly on his own side of the road at time of collision and that defendant driver approaching from the opposite direction was driving negligently.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1170(7)

In action for personal injuries and property damage sustained in truck collision, error, if any, in permitting plaintiff driver to testify concerning conversation he had with defendant driver immediately after collision with respect to defendant's alleged failure to make a detour with his loaded truck at a bridge nearly a quarter of a mile from point of collision did not result in a miscarriage of justice and did not call for reversal of judgment. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Peirson M. Hall, Judge.

Action by D. E. Jones and another against F. D. O'Neal and another to recover for personal injuries and property damage sustained in a truck collision, wherein defendant O'Neal filed a cross complaint for damages to his truck. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

George H. Moore and Hugh B. Rotchford, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Riccardi, Webster & Donahue, of Pasadena, for respondents.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiffs are the owner and the driver respectively of a truck involved in a collision with a truck owned by defendant O'Neal and driven by defendant Conner. Plaintiff Jones sought a judgment for damages to his truck and plaintiff Timmons sought a judgment for damages for personal injuries. Defendant O'Neal filed a cross-complaint asking for a judgment for damages to his own truck. Each of the various parties denied negligence on his own part and alleged negligence on the part of the opposing parties. The action was tried by the court without a jury and findings and judgment were filed in favor of plaintiffs on both the complaint and the cross-complaint. From this judgment defendants have appealed.

The collision occurred on June 18, 1940, on a desert road in Imperial County. The road had a gravel surface and its width was estimated by the various witnesses at from 16 to 26 feet. Just before the collision the truck driven by Timmons was travelling in a northerly direction and the truck driven by Conner was travelling in a southerly direction. Defendant Conner gave testimony which unquestionably would have supported findings in his favor if the trial court had given sufficient credit to his testimony. It is contended on this appeal that Conner's testimony showed positively that Timmons was on the wrong side of the road and that "there was no evidence that plaintiffs' truck was at any time on the right hand side of the travelled portion of the highway."

[1, 2] Plaintiff Timmons testified that each truck was about 7½ feet in width and that there was sufficient room to pass if each driver had kept his truck on his own side of the road; that he had seen Conner's truck approach when they were 250 to 300 feet apart, at which time he (Timmons) was operating his truck at a speed of from 20 to 25 miles per hour; when he saw the approach of Conner's truck he pulled over to his right "as far as it was safe to do so" and continued to travel "along this ridge of material that was thrown up there"; that he pulled to the east side of the road; that at the time of the impact of the two trucks he was travelling "around 20 miles an hour" and that Conner's truck was travelling "around 40 miles an hour"; that the left front of Conner's truck struck the truck driven by the witness. Under well established rules of law the evidence must, of course, be considered on appeal in the light most favorable to the prevailing party in the lower court and if the record discloses substantial evidence to support the findings they must be upheld. The trial court could draw reasonable inferences from the evidence presented and make findings thereon. We are satisfied that from the testimony of Timmons the court could reasonably draw the inference that Timmons was driving properly on his own side of the road at the time of the impact and that defendant Conner was driving negligently.

[3] Plaintiff Timmons testified concerning a conversation he had with defendant Conner immediately after the collision. This conversation related, in part, to a discussion of several bridges which had been built at different intervals on the road. Signs had been placed by the authorities on some of these bridges requiring loaded trucks to make detours. The accident took place in close proximity to a bridge which did not have such a sign, but at a distance of a little less than one-quarter of a mile north of the scene of the collision there was a bridge which bore a sign calling for a detour by loaded trucks. In relating the conversation Timmons stated that Conner evidently referring to the bridge to the north, said "that he didn't decrease his speed a whole lot when he seen the other truck ahead of me take the detour, and he came right on through the bridge; he said he didn't decrease his speed; he kept right on coming." Conner's truck was loaded. Defendants moved to strike out the testimony of the witness concerning the bridge north of the point of collision. The motion to strike was denied and defendants now assign this ruling as error. It is difficult to perceive the materiality of evidence concerning the alleged failure of Conner to make a detour with his loaded truck at the bridge nearly a quarter of a mile away from the point of the accident, but it is likewise difficult to perceive how defendants could have been prejudiced by the ruling of the court. The error was of such a nature that it did not result in a miscarriage of justice and therefore does not call for a reversal of the judgment. Constitution of California, art. VI, § 4½.

The judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 854

PEOPLE v. WARREN.

Cr. 3543.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Criminal law ⇐1182

Where transcripts on appeal were filed in the District Court of Appeal on December 23, 1941, thereafter, time for filing briefs having elapsed, an order to show cause why appeal should not be dismissed was issued, returnable February 25, 1942, and on that date there was no appearance on behalf of appellant, either by briefs or otherwise, the judgment appealed from and an order denying a motion for new trial were each affirmed pursuant to statute. Pen.Code, § 1253.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence L. Kincaid, Judge.

Proceeding by the People against Clarence E. Warren. From the judgment and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

John S. Cooper, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

December 23, 1941, the transcripts on appeal were filed in this court. Thereafter, the time for filing briefs having elapsed, an order to show cause why the appeal should not be dismissed was issued, returnable February 25, 1942. On the latter date there was no appearance on behalf of appellant, either by briefs or otherwise.

Therefore, pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgment and the order denying motion for new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

50 Cal.App.2d 173

BAUMANN v. HARRISON et al.

Civ. 11712.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Appeal and error ⇐709

Where an order for costs was entered against two defendants who had been directed to turn over to plaintiff's attorney accrued rentals and six other defendants, and a provision in judgment for payment of costs out of the accrued rentals was merely an authorization an order denying motion of the six other defendants to satisfy judgment for costs out of the accrued rentals would not be reversed, where findings were not brought up, and record consisted only of the judgment, the notice of motion and two affidavits supporting, and one opposing, the motion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. Turney Fox, Judge.

Action by Anna Baumann, as bondholder, etc., against H. O. Harrison, Henry G. Bedford and others to foreclose a deed of trust on real property. From an order denying a motion to satisfy a judgment for costs, defendant Henry G. Bedford and others appeal.

Affirmed.

Henry O. Wackerbarth, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Thomas F. McCue, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem.

This appeal was taken from an order denying a motion to satisfy a judgment for costs.

The plaintiff sued to foreclose a deed of trust on real property in Los Angeles. The property was sold at a trustee's sale under a power contained in the deed and a decree was entered confirming the sale and awarding a deficiency judgment against the principal defendants. Rentals had been collected by the defendants W. G. Lane and Lane Mortgage Company and in the same decree the plaintiff was awarded a judgment against them in the sum of $12,584.33, of which $8,584.33 was declared to be immediately payable. The plaintiff was also awarded in the same decree a judgment for costs against the four appellants, as well as against W. G. Lane and Lane Mortgage Company and six other defendants. These costs were ultimately taxed at $532.40. At the time the decree was entered W. G. Lane and Lane Mortgage Company had in hand $2,363.39 of the accrued rentals, and the decree ordered this fund to be turned over by them to Thomas F. McCue, attorney for plaintiff. In this connection the decree directed that: "Said attorney is hereby ordered and directed to hold all of such funds subject to the order of this Court and is authorized and directed to first pay therefrom the sum of $819.15 to George M. Sutherland, and the sum of $612.60 to plaintiff as reimbursement for sums expended by her for title search and reports and recording notices, and is authorized to reimburse plaintiff for her costs and disbursements and to defray from such funds any necessary expenses and costs in the further prosecution of this action and in the execution of this Judgment. It is adjudged that no portion of this sum shall be deemed or construed to be a payment in whole or in part of attorneys fees except as may hereafter be authorized by order of this Court. It is further ordered and adjudged that said $2363.39, upon payment thereof shall be credited upon and applied upon the sums due from defendants W. G. Lane and Lane Mortgage Company."

The judgment was entered on June 21, 1938. On June 29, 1938, the $2,363.39 was paid and a partial satisfaction was entered on the margin of the judgment as follows: "An acknowledged partial satisfaction of the within Judgment, amount collected $2363.39 as to judgt. against W. G. Lane and Lane Mortgage Company dated 6/21 1938 filed 6/23/1938." It will be observed that the language of the satisfaction conforms to the language of the judgment which directed that the $2,363.39 should be "credited upon and applied upon the sums due from defendants W. G. Lane and Lane Mortgage Company" which amounted to $8,584.33. It is true that the last-named defendants were also obligated, together with these appellants and six other defendants, for costs in the sum of $532.40, but at the time the $2,363.39 was paid the costs had not been settled. The order taxing costs was not made until October 6, 1938, which was over three months after the payment.

The appellants rely upon the language in the judgment which authorizes plaintiff's attorney "to reimburse plaintiff for her costs and disbursements and to defray from such funds any necessary expenses and costs in the further prosecution of this action" after Sutherland was paid the $819.15 and the plaintiff was reimbursed in the sum of $612.60. They contend that as there remained, after those two payments, more than enough to satisfy the judgment for $532.40 costs, their obligation for costs has been discharged, even though they themselves did not pay the money. The language upon which they rely, however, is merely an authorization; it is not a direction. The language which follows is in the form of a definite order, directing that the $2,363.39 be credited and applied upon the sums due from W. G. Lane and Lane Mortgage Company, and it appears from the marginal satisfaction that this order was literally complied with and such application made. Indeed it would seem that W. G. Lane and Lane Mortgage Company were entitled to have the payment so applied in reduction of that part of the judgment upon which they, alone, were obligated, for they, and not these appellants, made the payment.

The main case was a very complicated piece of litigation, as appears from the reports of at least five appeals besides this one. Goes v. Perry, 18 Cal.2d 373, 115 P.2d 441; Baumann v. Bedford, 18 Cal.2d 366, 115 P.2d 437; Townsend v. Perry, 43 Cal.App.2d 380, 110 P.2d 1019; Baumann v. Harrison, 46 Cal.App.2d 73, 115 P.2d 523; Baumann v. Harrison, 46 Cal.App.2d 84, 115 P.2d 530. Twenty-seven days were devoted to the trial, including an accounting. The many details were within the knowledge of the trial judge and those details are not before us. The findings were not brought up. The record consists only of the judgment, the notice of motion, and two affidavits supporting, and one opposing, the motion. As there is nothing in this record which convinces us that the order appealed from is erroneous, it is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 854

CARPENTER et al. v. GENSLER-LEE JEWELRY CO. et al.

Civ. 13425.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Appeal and error ⇐787

Where transcripts on appeal were filed in District Court of Appeal on November 19, 1941, time for filing briefs had elapsed and no extension of time for filing had been requested, and an order to show cause why the appeal should not be dismissed was issued returnable on February 25, 1942, and there was no appearance for appellant either by brief or otherwise on such date, the appeal would be dismissed. Rules for Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 5, § 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles, County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by Thomas Carpenter and Ollie Carpenter against the Gensler-Lee Jewelry Company and others. From an adverse judgment, Ollie Carpenter appeals. On order to show cause why appeal should not be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Kemper Campbell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

On November 19, 1941, the transcripts on appeal were filed in this court. Thereafter, the time for filing briefs having elapsed, and no extensions of time for such filing having been requested, an order to show cause why the appeal should not be dismissed was issued, returnable February 25, 1942. On the latter date there was no appearance for appellant, either by brief or otherwise.

Therefore, pursuant to the provisions of section 3, rule V, Rules for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, the appeal from the judgment herein hereby is dismissed.

50 Cal.App.2d 176

STEELE v. INTERNATIONAL AIR RACE ASS'N OF AMERICA (CARRASCO, State Labor Com'r, Intervener).

Civ. 11777.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

1. Attachment ⇐180
Execution ⇐113
Garnishment ⇐108

The right to priority of claim in case of attachment, garnishment, or execution is purely statutory, and may not be extended to claims other than those specified.

2. Master and servant ⇐82(3)

Under statute providing for priority of labor claims where work has been performed for defendant within 90 days prior to the levy of attachment, garnishment, or execution, the granting of statutory priority as to fund sought to be attached to assignee of labor claims was error, in absence of any showing that the work was performed within 90 days prior to the levy of attachment upon the fund. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1206–1208.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Proceeding under Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 1206–1208, by J. A. Steele against International Air Race Association of America, wherein H. C. Carrasco, as State Labor Commissioner, etc., intervened to establish as against an attaching creditor the right of priority for labor claims assigned to him. From a judgment for intervener, the plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

See, also, Cal.App., 117 P.2d 407.

L. L. Steele and John Jewett Earle, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Fred G. Goldsworthy and Olney L. Huff, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment and an amended judgment entered in favor of the intervener in proceedings had under sections 1206 to 1208 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The intervener was the assignee of sixty-four labor claims and said intervener sought to establish the right of priority for said assigned claims under the provisions of the sections above mentioned.

[1] Section 1206 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for such priority where the work has been performed for the defendant "within ninety days prior to the levy" of the "attachment, garnishment, or execution." The right to priority is purely statutory (Legg & Shaw Co. v. Worthington, 157 Cal. 488, 108 P. 284; 11 Cal.Jur. 94) and may not be extended to claims other than those specified.

[2] Plaintiff urges several contentions on this appeal but we may confine this discussion to the contention that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the material findings of the trial court. The trial court found "that attachment was levied by J. A. Steele, plaintiff herein, upon defendant International Air Race Association of America"; that the sum of $1,550.30 was siezed upon said levy; and that the intervener's assignors performed work for said defendant "within ninety days of the date of the levy of the said attachment." The findings do not set forth the date of the alleged levy or the dates when the alleged work was performed.

There is no evidence whatever in the record to show that the work was performed for defendant within ninety days prior to the levy of any attachment, garnishment or execution upon the money in question. We may assume, without deciding, that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the finding that the work was performed for defendant rather than for an independent contractor as claimed by plaintiff. All of the work was performed during the month of May, 1938. This action was commenced on June 2, 1938, but there is nothing to show that any levy was made upon the money in question until February 28, 1939, when the levy was made under a writ of execution. It is apparent that the work was not performed within ninety days prior to said levy.

The record shows that a writ of attachment was issued on June 2, 1938, and that plaintiff attempted to garnish any money of defendant held by the Central Bank of Oakland. It is conceded by the intervener that "nothing was attached under this levy." The intervener apparently claims that another writ of attachment was issued on June 6, 1938, and that a levy was then made under the last mentioned writ upon certain money of defendant which was then held under attachment in another action, which money was subsequently levied upon under execution in this action on February 28, 1939, after the release of the attachment in the other action. There is nothing in the record, however, to support this claim. Plaintiff claims that no such writ of attachment was issued and that no such levy was made thereunder and has offered to stipulate that the alleged writ of attachment and the return thereon, if any exist, may be sent up to this court for consideration. The intervener has not accepted said stipulation. In the absence of any showing in the record that the work was performed within ninety days prior to the levy upon the money in question, the granting of the statutory priority to the intervener cannot be sustained.

The judgment of October 25, 1940, and the amended judgment of December 18, 1940, are reversed.

NOURSE, P. J. and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 204

WEST COAST LIFE INS. CO. v. GLENN-COLUSA IRR. DIST. et al.

Civ. 6698.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1942.

1. Waters and water courses ⇐228½

Under Irrigation District Act, board of directors of irrigation district had power to enter into a contract for sale of land acquired by district because of delinquency in assessments, and the right to "sell" would be construed to include not only a sale for cash, but also a sale in which payment of the purchase price was made in installments. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 3854, §§ 15, 29, 47.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Sell".

2. Waters and water courses ⇐231

Under Irrigation District Act, directors of irrigation district hold land acquired by district because of delinquency in assessments in "trust", but the trust is not for exclusive benefit of creditors of district, but rather property owners in district are also beneficiaries of the trust, and the district may freely transfer, lease, or otherwise deal with the land in so far as it does not abuse its discretion. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3854, §§ 15, 29, 47.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trust".

3. Waters and water courses ⇐231

Evidence supported finding that the consideration for sale by board of directors of irrigation district of approximately 4,000 acres of land acquired by district because of delinquency in assessments was fair, reasonable, and adequate, and hence contract for the sale would not be set aside on suit by creditor of the district. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3854, §§ 15, 29, 47.

4. Judicial sales ⇐39
Trusts ⇐204

Mere inadequacy of price, however gross, is not itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a sale legally made, and such rule is also applicable to a sale by a trustee.

5. Waters and water courses ⇐231

Under Irrigation District Act, directors of irrigation district were not required to give notice of proposed sale of land acquired by district because of delinquency in assessments. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3854, §§ 15, 29, 47.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Warren Steel, Judge Assigned.

Action by West Coast Life Insurance Company against the Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District and others, to cancel a contract. From a judgment for defendants, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Keesling, Wayland & Eliot, of San Francisco, and Huston, Huston & Huston, of Woodland, for appellant.

Hankins & Hankins, of San Francisco, and P. J. Minasian, of Oroville, for respondent Glenn-Colusa Irr. Dist.

George R. Freeman and Elmer Laine, all of Willows, and Rutledge & Rutledge, of Colusa, for respondent Stovall.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This action was brought to cancel a contract executed by defendant district, and defendant H. C. Stovall. Findings were made in favor of defendants upon all issues, and judgment was entered accordingly. The appeal is from the judgment.

The litigation arises out of the affairs of the Williams Improvement District situated within the boundaries of the Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District, and organized under the Statutes of 1927, Statutes of 1927, p. 1415, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 3877a, authorizing such organization to meet the situation of any tract or contiguous tracts of land within any irrigation district and susceptible of irrigation by a system of laterals, ditches and pipes or requiring a system of pumps for the irrigation thereof separate and apart from the main irrigation system of said district.

Section 10 of the act reads as follows: "Said board of directors and all other officers of said irrigation district shall have all the rights, powers and privileges concerning said improvement district, and lands thereof and the proceedings herein provided for, as such board may have concerning the irrigation district, of which it is a part, and including the right of said district, to condemn lands and to acquire, own and hold property within said improvement district."

Under the statute, the Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District, through its directors, had the supervision and control of the Williams Improvement District and exercised the same powers as conferred upon them by the Irrigation District Act.

Plaintiff is the owner and holder of certain obligations of the improvement district, known as warrants, which were issued by the irrigation district, which agreed to pay them. Such warrants matured January 1, 1932. They were unpaid when this action was commenced.

On April 2, 1936, the district was the owner, through tax sales, of practically all the land within the boundaries of Williams Improvement District, legally entitled, "Improvement District Number One of Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District." The price was $28,061.08, the amount of delinquent assessments, penalties and costs. The district was the sole bidder at such sales. On said date the irrigation district, through its board of directors, entered into a contract with defendant Stovall for the sale of said lands. Title to said land was to remain in the district until the full purchase price was paid and all conditions of the contract performed by Stovall. The total acreage sold was about 4000. By the terms of Stovall's contract he was given the right to purchase three thousand nine hundred sixty-five and 11/100 acres of lands in the district for the sum of $22,216.48. There was no cash payment. The first payment of $3,500 was to be evidenced by the promissory note of the buyer due August 1, 1936, with interest at the rate of five per cent per annum. The balance of the purchase price was payable in semi-annual installments of $935.82 with five per cent interest, payable on or before the first day of January and the first day of July in each consecutive year, commencing January 1, 1937. The contract also provided for: Payment by Stovall of all delinquent state taxes, which the evidence shows amounted to $17,000; payment by Stovall annually of "an amount equal to the amount which would be levied by the Irrigation District as assessments on such land for that year if legal title thereof were in buyer"; payment by Stovall annually or semi-annually of "all State and County taxes, levied upon said property during the 10 year term of this agreement"; payment guaranteed by Stovall of all tolls and charges "for water furnished by seller during the term of this agreement to any or all of the land, regardless of the person to whom such water is furnished"; payment by Stovall of an annual stand-by charge of $1,800 in the event a single acre under lift No. 2 uses irrigation water; $1,080 in the event of operating lift No. 1 only.

The complaint, while it does not directly charge fraud, in effect makes such charge. It alleges: "That said contract was entered into by said District without any notice whatever, and without inviting any bids or offers from any person other than the said H. C. Stovall; that said contract was not entered into by said District in such a manner as that a sale of said lands could be effected within a reasonable time at the fair market value thereof, and upon such terms as would serve to protect and benefit the interests of said District, the said landowners and contract-holders, and the plaintiff herein and other owners and holders of warrants issued by said District and unpaid; that said District did not give any information or publicity, or announce its intention to sell said lands prior to the making of said contract; that the said District and the directors thereof and the said defendant Stovall entered into said contract for the purpose of preventing any person other than the said Stovall from buying or offering to buy any or all of said lands at the market value thereof, or at a price higher than that fixed by the terms of said contract; that the prices fixed by said contract will not be sufficient to pay the amounts due the plaintiff herein on the principal and interest of the warrants hereinabove alleged and if said sale is consummated, the said plaintiff will suffer great and irreparable injury; that said contract was made for the purpose and with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud the plaintiff herein in collecting or attempting to collect the amounts due and to become due on said warrants." (Italics ours.)

It thus appears that the action is based upon the premise that there was no notice of the intended sale to Stovall, and the contract was therefore entered into for the purpose of preventing any person, other than Stovall, from buying said lands. It is also alleged that the value of said lands, when the contract was executed, was $150,000. A copy of the contract is made a part of the complaint, so that, in addition to the foregoing, it may be said that plaintiff relies upon inadequacy of price to support its theory of recovery. The charge that the contract was executed to hinder, delay and defraud plaintiff is not alluded to in the briefs, and it may be fairly stated that the action is not regarded by the parties as what is commonly known as "a creditor's suit," under the provisions of part II, title II, division IV, § 3439 et seq. of the Civil Code.

We have before us the sole question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain findings which are adverse to plaintiff upon all the issues made. At the outset we may observe that there is nothing in the record to show actual fraud upon the part of the district, its directors or officers. Out of fairness to appellant, we might add that it does not accentuate that issue. Rather, it relies upon (1) a breach of trust upon the part of the district and its officers, and (2), upon a lack of statutory authority to enter into such contract.

[1] It is contended by appellant that the District had no power to enter into a contract of sale. The extent of statutory direction for the sale of district-owned tax deeded lands, is found in section 29 of the California Irrigation District Act, Gen. Laws 1937, Act 3854, reading in part as follows: "The board of directors of said district may determine by resolution duly entered upon their minutes that any property, real or personal, held by said irrigation district is no longer necessary to be retained for the uses and purposes thereof and may thereafter sell or lease such property upon such terms and conditions as may appear to said board to be for the best interest of the said district."

Section 47 of the California Irrigation District Act reads in part as follows: "Where property has been sold to the district and a deed for it has been given to the district as the purchaser, such district shall have the same rights thereto, and to the rents, issues and profits thereof, as a private purchaser." (Emphasis supplied.)

Section 15 of the California Irrigation District Act reads in part as follows: "The board of directors shall have the power and it shall be their duty to manage and conduct the business and affairs of the district; make and execute all necessary contracts * * *." (Emphasis supplied.)

We think the foregoing sections are sufficient authority for the execution of the contract. The grant of the right to "sell" should be construed to include not only a sale for cash, but a sale in which the payment of the purchase price is made in installments. There is nothing in the cases cited by appellant,—Tulare Irrigation District v. Collins, 154 Cal. 440, 97 P. 1124; Provident Land Corporation v. Zumwalt, 12 Cal.2d 365, 85 P.2d 116, 120—which supports the contention of appellant. On the contrary, in the last mentioned case the court says: "Land coming into other private ownership is again liable for assessments (sec. 33), and land in possession of the district should, if possible, be sold again, so that it may produce the required revenue." (Italics ours.)

[2] It is next contended that the defendant directors held the land in trust for the creditors, and that the sale under the contract, in violation of such trust, was therefore void. We agree with the premise, but not with the conclusions which appellant contends necessarily flow therefrom. In the case of Provident Land Corporation v. Zumwalt, supra, the court said: "Reading the two sections [Cal. Irrigation District Act, Secs. 29 and 47] together, the only reasonable interpretation is that the district may freely transfer, lease or otherwise deal with the lands in so far as its power is concerned, but the lands remain in trust, and the district exercises its powers, however broad, as a trustee.

The foregoing pronouncement does not, however, authorize the judicial branch of the state to substitute its judgment for that of the directors of the district. It only requires that the latter act fairly in all matters respecting the proper discharge of their duties. The economic conditions of the period, and various other factors which would necessarily enter into the transaction, were elements which would tend to move and actuate the directors in the exercise of their sound judgment and discretion. It is impossible for a record of this character to reflect all of such matters, or place them in their proper perspective. We might further add that the trust mentioned is not for the exclusive benefit of the creditors. As stated in Clough v. Compton-Delevan Irrigation District, 12 Cal.2d 385, 388, 85 P.2d 126, 128: "The property is by this language impressed with a public use, and the trust is for all the purposes of the act. Payment of the bondholders is such a purpose, as we have held in the Provident Land Corporation case, supra; but there are other purposes as well, and the bondholders cannot be consid- ered exclusive beneficiaries, even if the doubtful assumption be made that they, as individuals, are beneficiaries at all. Indeed, it is futile to attempt to discover the 'beneficiaries' of the statutory trust created by section 29."

In our opinion, the property owners in the district are also beneficiaries of such trust. Two matters are relied upon by appellant to overthrow the finding mentioned. The first is the alleged inadequacy of price, and the second, the failure of the directors to give notice of the sale.

[3, 4] The attack made by appellant upon the adequacy of the price may be more properly considered as having to do with the consideration which the district received. The trial court found that such consideration was fair, reasonable and adequate. We think the record sustains such finding. In the first place the property is nothing more than "grain land," which was subdivided and covered with an enormous blanket of debt, in order to bring it under irrigation. According to the testimony of the secretary of the district, it was subject to a bonded debt of the irrigation district which amounted to $6 per acre. In addition, it was liable for a debt of $30 per acre to the improvement district. It had all been sold to the district under tax sales, and no property owner or security owner then appeared to protect their interests. In order to place the property upon the assessment rolls, it became necessary to put the title back into the hands of private owners. The sale to Stovall was then discussed at numerous meetings of the directors, and finally the contract in question was executed. Such a policy is approved in the Provident case, supra, in a quotation we have already made. The price was not the sole consideration of the contract. We have pointed out the other obligations assumed by Stovall. For illustration, the latter agreed to pay all delinquent state taxes against the property, which the evidence shows amounted to $17,000. It is true that one witness testified that the land was worth from $35 to $45 per acre. The trial court may not have been satisfied with such testimony. The purchase price and the other payments assumed by Stovall, would make the actual contract price about $10 per acre.

It is the rule that "mere inadequacy of price, however gross, is not itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a sale legally made." Jones v. Sierra Verdugo Water Co., 63 Cal.App. 254-263, 218 P. 454, 457. This rule is also applicable to a sale by a trustee. (26 R.C.L., sec. 145, page 1294.) We therefore conclude that there is no merit in the foregoing contention.

[5] It is contended by appellant that no notice was given of the sale to Stovall. There is no statutory requirement for such notice. The matter is left to the sound discretion of the directors.

We conclude that the charges made by appellant are unfounded, and that the findings have ample evidentiary support. We are satisfied that the directors had no ulterior motives in dealing with Stovall as they did, but that they were applying to the problem at hand their honest, considered judgment. If they were mistaken, or were wanting in business acumen, they were answerable to their electorate, but not to the courts.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 143

COSTERISAN v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION et al.

Civ. 13361.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

1. Negligence ⇐136(9)

Contributory negligence is a matter of law only when from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference.

2. Appeal and error ⇐999(3)

In an action for injuries where question of contributory negligence was left to determination of jury and was decided adversely to the defendant, reviewing court would not disturb the judgment unless it could say as a matter of law that plaintiff was negligent and that her negligence contributed to her injuries.

3. Street railroads ⇐117(28)

In motorist's action for injuries sustained in collision with street car, whether motorist was contributorily negligent in attempting to cross intersection in front of street car was for the jury.

4. Street railroads ⇐118(15)

In motorist's action for injuries sustained in collision with street car at an intersection, a "last clear chance" instruction following approved form was properly given where warranted by evidence.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Last Clear Chance".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lucius P. Green, Judge pro tem.

Action for injuries by Mary Costerisan against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation and others. From a judgment for the plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and E. H. Chapman, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

William B. Gilroy and Paul Taylor, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

This action arose out of the collision between the automobile of plaintiff and the street car of defendant corporation at the intersection of 11th and Hill Streets in the city of Los Angeles. From a judgment, after verdict in the sum of $4,500, defendants appeal upon the grounds of (1) insufficiency of the evidence, and (2) prejudicial error in giving an instruction upon the doctrine of last clear chance.

On July 20, 1939, between 8:30 and 9 p. m., plaintiff while proceeding in her Ford sedan on West 11th Street in a westerly direction approached Hill Street. The traffic signals were not in operation. On arriving at the extended easterly curb line of Hill Street, plaintiff stopped, looked both to the north and to the south, saw no traffic near the intersection and proceeded across Hill Street at ten miles per hour. While she was still 32 feet east of the east curb line of Hill Street, she observed the street car operated by defendant Stall in a position about 30 feet west of the west curb line of Hill Street, moving slowly. She again saw the street car at the time she stopped and observed that it had moved forward. At that intersection some of the street cars traveling on the 11th Street line continue easterly across Hill while others make a left turn and proceed northerly on Hill Street. The route of the street car in question, although not yet indicated, was to turn at Hill Street.

As plaintiff started across the intersection she shifted into second gear on or near the first set of tracks on Hill Street. At that point she again looked to her right for any traffic approaching from the north, which was her only source of immediate danger. But as she looked up and to her left, the street car which had been moving eastward was at this time bearing down upon her. Her automobile was past the center of the street, still headed directly westward when the collision occurred. The rear wheels of her automobile were on the westerly rail of the south-bound tracks. Although she saw the car approaching slowly "she did not take that car into consideration at all," indicating her knowledge that this intersection is a mandatory stop and that of course the car would come to a stand-still before proceeding across the intersection and that therefore she did not consider it a source of peril. Plaintiff and a number of her witnesses testified that the street car did not stop and that no warning was given by the ringing of the bell or otherwise. The conflicts in the testimony as to whether the street car stopped before it began the turn and whether or not the motorman sounded his bell were resolved in favor of plaintiff. Moreover the photograph taken at the scene of the accident shows the rear wheels of the automobile were almost in the center of the path of the street car.

[1-3] Appellant's first assignment is that plaintiff was negligent and that her negligence contributed proximately to cause her injuries. Under the facts recited the primary question for consideration is whether or not there was a question of fact with respect to the negligence of the parties to be determined by the trial court. Contributory negligence is a matter of law only when from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference. If there was a fact properly to be left to the determination of the jury and if that fact was decided adversely to the defendant, the appellate court should not interfere with the judgment. Before the judgment before us could be appropriately and fairly upset we must be able to say as a matter of law that the plaintiff was negligent and that her negligence contributed to cause her injuries. Such is the holding of a long line of decisions. Smith v. Southern Pacific Co., 201 Cal. 57, 64, 255 P. 500; Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513; O'Farrell v. Andrus, 86 Cal.App. 474, 481, 260 P. 957; Barlow v. Crome, 44 Cal.App. 2d 356, 112 P.2d 303, and authorities there cited. That there was a question for the jury as to whether plaintiff was negligent is clear to any one not a partisan. Under the cited authorities it is not difficult to conclude as to the first assignment, that the facts were such that a finding of plaintiff's freedom from negligence was justified by the facts.

The authorities cited by appellant (McHugh v. Market St. Ry. Co., 29 Cal.App.2d 737, 85 P.2d 467; Arnold v. San Francisco-Oakland T. Rys., 175 Cal. 1, 164 P. 798; Flores v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 15 Cal. App.2d 576, 59 P.2d 856) do not apply to the facts of the instant case. In each of them the facts definitely establish that the plaintiff was negligent and that his own negligence caused the injury.

[4] It is next contended that the court erred in instructing the jury upon the doctrine of the last clear chance. No claim is made of any error in the instruction given by the court with reference to that doctrine. The instruction given follows precisely the instruction approved in Girdner v. Union Oil Co., 216 Cal. 197, 13 P.2d 915. Appellant's only contention is that the facts do not warrant the giving of such instruction at all. If the verdict was derived solely by reason of the application of the doctrine it was abundantly justified by the evidence. Girdner v. Union Oil Co., supra; 2 Cal.Jur.Supp. 176; Palmer v. Tschudy, 191 Cal. 696, 218 P. 36; Hoy v. Tornich, 199 Cal. 545, 553, 250 P. 565; Basham v. Southern Pac. Co., 176 Cal. 320, 327, 168 P. 359; Boynton v. Richfield Oil Co., 117 Cal.App. 699, 700, 4 P.2d 614; Smith v. Los Angeles Railway, 105 Cal. App. 657, 288 P. 690; Bailey v. Wilson, 16 Cal.App.2d 645, 649, 61 P.2d 68.

Judgment is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 102

VEDDER PETROLEUM CORPORATION, Limited, v. LAMBERT LANDS CO. (RING OIL CO., Limited, Intervener).

Civ. 2693.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1942.

1. Mines and minerals ⇐79(3)

The "value of all oil produced and saved from wells", within oil and gas lease requiring lessee to pay lessor monthly as royalty the equal one-sixth part of value of all oil produced and saved from wells, was the value of the crude oil as it was produced from the mouth of the wells.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Value of All Oil Produced and Saved from Wells".

2. Mines and minerals ⇐79(3)

Oil and gas lease, requiring lessee to pay lessor monthly as royalty the equal one-sixth part of value of all oil produced and saved from the wells at the posted available market price of district "the day the oil is run into the purchaser's pipeline or storage tank", fixed the time at which the value of the oil was to be determined and did not refer to the condition of the oil.

3. Mines and minerals ⇐79(5)

Where oil and gas lease required lessee to pay lessor monthly as royalty the equal one-sixth part of value of all oil produced and saved from wells at posted available market price of district the day the oil was run into purchaser's pipeline or storage tank, or at "lessor's option delivered into storage tank, or to pipeline within one mile from premises from which oil is being produced", the quoted clause did not support theory that the parties intended to refer to dehydrated oil or intended that lessee should have the share of the lessor dehydrated before delivering it, but supported view that lessor was entitled to his royalty share in kind as the oil came from the well if he so desired.

4. Mines and minerals ⇐79(5)

Where oil and gas lease required lessee to pay lessor monthly as royalty the equal one-sixth part of value of oil produced but did not contain covenants referring to cost of dehydration, and where dehydration permitted sale of oil at higher price than would have been obtained if oil had not been dehydrated, the lessor was required either to pay its proportionate share of the dehydrating expense or to elect to receive its royalty share of oil in kind in its crude state as produced from the wells, since there was no duty on part of lessee to bear expense of dehydrating the lessor's royalty share.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Warren Stockton, Judge.

Action for declaratory relief by Vedder Petroleum Corporation, Limited, against Lambert Lands Company, wherein the Ring Oil Company, Limited, intervened. From a judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff and intervener appeal.

Reversed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Monroe B. Kulberg, B. W. Kemper, and Arthur C. Fisher, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Sullivan, Roche & Johnson and James Farraher, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment in an action for declaratory relief to determine the rights, duties and obligations of the parties under the provisions of an oil and gas lease and to require payment by respondent lessor of the cost of dehydrating oil produced from the properties subject to the lease, and to recover the proportionate cost paid for dehydrating the royalty oil.

Appellant Vedder Petroleum Corporation, Ltd., was the lessee under an oil and gas lease dated April 22, 1936, wherein defendant and respondent Lambert Lands Company, was lessor. On February 10, 1937, appellant Vedder Petroleum Corporation subleased to appellant and intervener Ring Oil Company, Ltd., a portion of the lands covered by the lease. After the commencement of this action and the intervention by appellant Ring Oil Company, Ltd., the appellant Vedder Petroleum Corporation, Ltd., assigned the lease on the parcel covered by the sublease to the intervener Ring Oil Company, Ltd.

It appears that the intervener drilled on the leased premises and produced oil therefrom, and that during the period covered by the present controversy the oil produced was so-called "wet" oil, that is, oil carrying in cohesion with it more than 3 per cent by volume of water and sediment. When this occurred the intervener was able to obtain 12¢ per barrel more for the oil if same was dehydrated than if sold in the state in which it came from the well. Intervener, in accounting to plaintiff, its sublessor, deducted the proportionate cost of such treatment at 6¢ per barrel, and plaintiff in turn made a like deduction in accounting to defendant and respondent lessor for its royalty in the lease. When the respondent protested that this deduction was unauthorized, the deductions were not made either by intervener or by plaintiff and appellant, but the amount of the cost of such dehydration was paid in each instance to respondent lessor and appellant lessee to prevent a default under the lease and sublease; and this action for declaratory relief was commenced. Intervener being primarily interested in the outcome, sought and obtained permission to intervene in the action.

It was stipulated that the case should be tried on intervener and appellant's amended and supplemental complaint in intervention.

The case involved a determination of two primary issues: first, a determination as to whether the lessor was properly chargeable under the provisions of the lease with its proportionate royalty share of the cost of dehydrating the wet oil; and second, if it was so chargeable the amount of the cost per barrel to intervener of such dehydration. At the trial it was stipulated that the first of these issues should be first submitted and decided; and that if the decision was in favor of the lessee, declaring that the lessor was chargeable with its proportionate cost of the dehydration, the trial should then be continued on the issue as to costs.

The royalty provision of the oil and gas lease involved herein reads as follows:

"Lessee shall pay Lessor monthly as royalty the equal one-sixth (⅙) part of the value of all oil produced and saved from wells producing in excess of an average of fifty barrels per day for the month accounted for, and in the same way, one-seventh (⅐) part of the value of all oil produced and saved from wells producing fifty barrels or less oil per day upon the leased premises (except as hereinafter stated), after making the customary deductions for temperature, water and b. s., at the posted available market price of the district in which the premises are located for oil of like gravity, the day the oil is run into purchaser's pipe line or storage tanks, and in this event, settlement shall be made by Lessee on or before the 25th day of each month for accrued royalty for the preceding calendar month; or at Lessor's option exercised not oftener than once in any one calendar year, upon sixty (60) days previous written notice, deliver into Lessor's tanks, which said tanks may be located upon the same section or parcel from which the oil production is being obtained, or, at the option of the Lessee, into tanks located upon any other part of the leased premises; or to pipe line within one mile of premises from which the oil is being produced, free of cost, the one-sixth (1/6) or one-seventh (1/7) part of said oil to which Lessor may be entitled as herein provided;..."

No testimony was introduced at the trial but the case was submitted on stipulations as to the facts which were first made orally in open court and later reduced, in part, to writing. Said written stipulation of facts is as follows:

"The following facts, some of which are admitted in the pleadings of the parties, are stipulated to be true for the purpose of the trial of the above entitled action:

"1. The lease from defendant Lambert Lands Co., Inc., to plaintiff Vedder Petroleum Corporation was executed on April 22, 1936, and is still in full force and effect.

"2. On February 15, 1937, plaintiff Vedder Petroleum Corporation, Ltd., sublet the property referred to in the complaint of plaintiff to Ring Oil Company, Ltd., intervener herein, and on October 27, 1939, plaintiff assigned the lease on the property, in so far as affects the premises involved in this litigation, to said intervener.

"3. A controversy has arisen and is in existence between the parties in respect to and relating to the oil and gas lease executed by defendant as lessor, the basis of which controversy is set forth in the pleadings of the respective parties.

"4. Nine wells have been drilled upon the property by intervener, one of which is unproductive, and at least six wells are being operated at this time and producing oil.

"5. The oil as it comes from the wells on the leased premises contains water in excess of three per cent of the total volume of fluid and must be dehydrated, to make it acceptable for delivery into the pipe line of the purchasing company.

"6. If the oil from the leased premises is not dehydrated, it will not be accepted for delivery into the pipe line of the purchasing company. The maximum price at which it can be sold if not dehydrated is twelve cents per barrel less than the price obtained from the purchasing company after dehydration.

"7. There is no posted price for oil in the field of which the property involved in this controversy forms a part. The nearest field for which there is a posted price for oil of like gravity, is the Round Mountain Field, located approximately fifteen miles south of the premises involved herein.

"8. The posted price for oil in this field, and in all fields throughout the state of California, is for oil containing not to exceed three per cent (3%) water, sand and other foreign substances.

"9. Intervener has been dehydrating the oil to make it acceptable for delivery into the pipe line of the purchasing company, and in order to obtain the best available market price. Defendant has ever since the execution of the lease, and production of oil therefrom, taken its royalty in cash and not in kind.

"10. The purchasing company which is taking the oil from the premises involved in this action is paying therefor the price posted at Round Mountain for oil of like gravity, which price is the current market price for like oil of like gravity in this area, and is the highest available price for like oil of like gravity in this field.

"The foregoing stipulation is made for the purpose of supplementing and clarifying the verbal stipulation made in open court on May 1, 1940, and in the event that any discrepancy may exist between this written stipulation and said oral stipulation, the provisions hereof shall supersede and supplant the verbal stipulation."

Judgment was in favor of respondent lessor, decreeing that neither the appellant lessee nor the appellant's sublessee is entitled to charge lessor with any portion of the cost dehydrating oil produced from the leased lands, and this appeal is from said judgment.

Appellant argues that there is no provision in the lease imposing upon the lessee the burden of dehydrating the lessor's royalty share of the oil produced and that the lessee was compelled to treat the oil to reduce its water content so as to make it acceptable for pipe line delivery, and, as a result, obtained a price for the oil, including lessor's royalty share, which was 12¢ higher than would have been obtained if the oil were not so treated. Appellant argues that, therefore, the cost of dehydration was properly chargeable against respondent lessor in proportion to its royalty share of the oil so treated and that the conclusion of the trial court that the lessor was not obliged to pay to the lessee its proportionate part of the cost of dehydrating the wet oil was erroneous as a matter of law.

Respondent argues that because it has been stipulated that the posted price for oil in this field and in all fields throughout the State of California is for oil containing not to exceed 3 per cent water, etc., and that if the oil is not dehydrated it will not be acceptable for delivery into the pipe line of the purchasing company, the parties in providing in the lease for the payment on the value of the oil at the "posted" price were referring to oil containing not more than 3 per cent water and were not referring to so-called "wet" oil; and further that the parties in setting up said royalty provision were considering pipe line oil or they would not have provided for the payment of the value of the oil "on the day the oil is run into the purchaser's pipe line or storage tanks."

Respondent argues further that in view of the stipulation that the oil, as it comes, from wells on the lease, is so-called "wet" oil and must be dehydrated to make it acceptable for delivery into the pipe line of the purchasing company, and that if the oil is not dehydrated it will not be acceptable for delivery into the pipe line of the purchasing company, therefore the oil produced on the leased premises requires dehydration to give it the value upon which respondent lessor's cash royalty is to be determined, and there being no provision in the lease for any deduction of any cost of dehydration, the lessee is obligated to pay that royalty without deducting anything on account of the cost of dehydration.

The only matter involved in this appeal is whether or not appellant oil companies (plaintiff and appellant and intervener and appellant) have a right to deduct the cost of dehydrating wet oil before accounting to respondent lessor for its cash royalty.

The lease is devoid of any covenant referring to the cost of dehydration or the burden of dehydrating the lessor's royalty share of the oil, so we must look to the language of the royalty clause of the lease, viewed in the light of the admitted facts.

The lease provides that "Lessee shall pay Lessor monthly as royalty the equal one-sixth (1/6) part of the value of all oil produced and saved from wells * * * after making the customary deductions for temperature, water and b. s., at the posted available market price of the district in which the premises are located, for oil of like gravity, the day the oil is run into the purchaser's pipe line or storage tanks * * * or at Lessor's option * * * deliver into Lessor's tanks * * * or to pipe line within one mile of premises from which oil is being produced, free of cost, the one-sixth (1/6) or one-seventh (1/7) part of said oil to which Lessor may be entitled as herein provided."

We must first determine the meaning of "oil" in covenant (1) of said lease. In arriving at its meaning we are greatly aided by the case of Alamitos Land Co. v. Shell Oil Co., 3 Cal.2d 396, 44 P.2d 573, 576. The lease in that case was, in its general terms, quite similar to the lease in the case at bar. In that case, our Supreme Court said:

"We are constrained to hold that the words 'petroleum oil' and 'royalty oil' found in the above-quoted paragraphs of the lease mean the crude petroleum well fluid as produced, less the free water therein, that is, the petroleum fluid together with such water and other foreign matter as may be emulsified therein—the fluid in its natural state. We are strengthened in this conclusion by the context of the lease, wherein, in 38 or more places, these words or similar words are found. For example, by said lease the land was demised, together 'with all petroleum, gas and all other hydrocarbon substances contained therein'. The term of the lease was to be 20 years 'and so long thereafter, not exceeding 10 years, as oil or gas is found thereon or therein in paying quantities', subject, however, to certain conditions, 'for the purpose of drilling and boring for petroleum, oil, natural gas, and all other hydrocarbon substances of whatsoever kind or character'. Again, the following language is found in said instrument: 'upon the discovery of oil in paying quantities in any one of said test wells', etc. Again, 'a well shall be deemed completed when drilling has ceased and said well shall either produce oil in paying quantities, or shall have been drilled to a depth of 3,500 feet or more'; 'for the purpose of this lease, a well shall be deemed to produce oil in paying quantities when it shall produce oil and/or gas in quantities sufficient to pay to pump, or otherwise secure and save'. The lease provides what shall be done within 90 days after oil shall have been discovered on the leased premises in paying quantities. Another paragraph relates to pumping operations and provides that defendant shall pump and operate all the wells to full capacity so long as the same 'produce oil in paying quantities, except when the price of oil in Southern California, similar in quality to that produced hereunder, is depressed to 50 cents or less per barrel of 42 gallons each at the wells of production, as hereinafter set forth.'

"No one can say that the 'cleaned' or 'dry' product is referred to by the above language. Our construction of the lease conforms to the commonly understood meaning of the terms and is in every respect a reasonable deduction. In Hammett Oil Co. v. Gypsy Oil Co., 95 Okl. 235, 218 P. 501, 502, 34 A.L.R. 275, it is said: 'There was no evidence as to what the word "oil" includes, when used in an oil and gas lease, or how the parties to the lease understood it, but a large amount of litigation has arisen over oil and gas leases, and the construction of such contracts, and the word "oil" as used in an oil and gas lease, has always been referred to by the courts and understood to designate the oil produced from a well, or crude petroleum in its natural state. There is nothing either in the contract or in the evidence to disclose that the parties in this lease contract used it in any other sense, but the contract does support the contention that it was used in its ordinary and popular sense, and refers to crude oil as it was produced from the mouth of the well.'"

[1] Upon the authority of the case just cited, we conclude that "the value of all oil produced and saved from wells," etc., was the value of the crude oil as it was produced from the mouth of the wells. If there were a posted available market price of the district where the premises are located for oil of like gravity, the day the oil is run into the purchaser's pipe line or storage tanks, that would be its value for the purpose of determining the amount of cash royalty to be paid but where, as in this case, there is no posted price in the district where the premises are located, then the value must necessarily be its actual market value or, in other words, its selling price in the market.

[2] The provision "the day the oil is run into purchaser's pipe line or storage tanks," in our opinion, is intended to fix the time as of which the value of the oil shall be determined and is not intended to refer to the condition of the oil. It will be noted that the clause just referred to states "on the day the oil is run into purchaser's pipe line or storage tanks." Respondent asserts in its brief that the reference to the storage tanks is of no moment because the oil is delivered to purchaser's pipe line and the posted price in the district is for dehydrated oil only. It is hardly reasonable to assume that the parties would have added the words "storage tanks," if they were considering only pipe line oil. Some purchasers use tanks to store their oil and trucks instead of pipe lines in which to transport it.

[3, 4] Furthermore, there is in the same paragraph of the lease the clause "or at Lessor's option deliver into Lessor's tanks * * * or to pipe line within one mile from premises from which oil is being produced," etc. This clause certainly does not support the theory that the parties intended to refer to dehydrated oil or intended that lessee should have the share of lessor dehydrated before delivering it, but it does support the view that lessor was entitled to his royalty share in kind as the oil came from the well, if he so desired. Under the terms of said lease, lessor could not require lessee to clean the oil before delivery of its royalty share in kind. As we view the matter, respondent should either pay its proportionate share of the dehydrating expense or should elect to receive its royalty share of the oil in kind, in its crude state, as produced from the wells. There is nothing in the stipulated facts nor in the lease itself to justify the conclusion that there was any duty on the part of the lessee to bear the expense of dehydrating appellant lessor's royalty share of the oil produced from wells on the premises, and, if the duty to clean the oil is absent when the royalty oil is delivered in kind, it is also absent when the proportionate share of the value of such royalty oil is to be paid in cash.

There is nothing in any of the authorities cited by respondent that either compels or justifies a different construction of the lease and we believe that the only reasonable construction is that the respondent lessor should bear its proportionate share of the cost of dehydrating the oil produced, if it elects to receive its royalty share in cash.

It follows, therefore, that the trial court erred in concluding that the appellant lessees were not entitled to charge respondent lessor with any portion of the cost of dehydrating the oil produced from the leased premises, and that the judgment must be reversed.

The judgment is reversed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 89

DRAKE et al. v. RUSCONI et al.

Civ. 2663.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 25, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⇐244(7, 35)

In action for injuries sustained by minor bicyclist struck by automobile, evidence that automobile was being driven through blind intersection at from 30 to 35 miles an hour sustained finding that driver was negligent in driving too fast and in not keeping proper lookout.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

In action for injuries sustained by minor bicyclist when struck by automobile in intersection, whether the bicyclist was guilty of contributory negligence in cutting corner and traveling on wrong side of street was for court sitting without jury.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

Where there was conflict in evidence and evidence was sufficient to support the court's findings, the findings could not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Ernest Klette, Judge.

Personal injury action by Carlene Drake, a minor, etc., and others against Alfred Rusconi and others. Judgment for plaintiff and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Hoge, Pelton & Gunther and A. Dal Thomson, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

W. M. Conley, Philip Conley, Matthew Conley, and Conley, Conley & Conley, all of Fresno, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages arising from a collision between a bicycle on which the minor plaintiff was riding and an automobile owned by Alfred Rusconi and driven by his wife.

The accident happened at the intersection of Madera Avenue and D Street, in the town of Kerman. Madera Avenue runs north and south and is 75 feet wide, and D Street runs east and west and is 40 feet wide. On this occasion the minor plaintiff, a girl 12 years old, was riding her bicycle easterly on D Street and across Madera Avenue when a collision occurred between the bicycle and the automobile driven by Mrs. Rusconi at a point within the intersection. The minor plaintiff was thrown to the ground, suffering the injuries complained of. The automobile stopped in anywhere from 15 to 40 feet, depending upon various portions of the testimony. There were skid marks 15 feet back from the automobile after it had stopped, but it cannot be determined from the record at what point the brakes were effectively applied.

This action, which followed, was tried by the court without a jury. The court found in all respects in favor of the plaintiffs and the defendants have appealed from the judgment.

[1] The appellants first contend that there is no evidence to support the court's finding of negligence upon the part of the driver of the automobile. While the evidence is sharply conflicting, there is evidence that Mrs. Rusconi was driving through this blind intersection at from 30 to 35 miles an hour. This evidence is attacked as unsubstantial and unbelievable in view of the alleged physical fact that the automobile stopped within 15 feet. This in turn depends upon the uncertainness to which we have already referred and the entire matter presents but a question of fact. The evidence, in its entirety, justifies an inference that Mrs. Rusconi was traveling too fast at the point in question. Moreover, the evidence amply justifies the inference and conclusion that Mrs. Rusconi was looking in another direction, that she was not keeping a proper lookout for traffic in the direction from which it was to be expected, and that she could have seen the minor plaintiff in time to avoid the accident had she been properly observing conditions in the line of her travel.

[2] It is next contended that it must be held, as a matter of law, that the minor plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. This is based upon the contention that it conclusively appears that the accident occurred near the northerly edge of the northwest quadrant of this intersection, that the minor plaintiff was at the time riding her bicycle across this quadrant in a northeasterly direction, and that she was thus cutting the corner and upon her wrong side of D Street, along which she was proceeding. It appears that the minor plaintiff had just come from the postoffice, which is on the west side of Madera Avenue, a short distance south of D Street. It also appears that she entered D Street a short distance west of Madera Avenue and that she proceeded northerly for some distance on D Street before she turned to her right and proceeded easterly along D Street and across Madera Avenue. While several witnesses testified that she had crossed to within five or six feet of the northerly line of D Street before she turned easterly and proceeded to cross Madera Avenue, she herself testified that she proceeded northerly to about the middle line of D Street and then turned to her right and proceeded east on D Street and across Madera Avenue, and that she was struck by the automobile at about the center of the intersection. This is confirmed by a part of the testimony of several other witnesses and is strongly confirmed by a part of the testimony of Mrs. Rusconi. She testified that she was 15 feet from the center of the intersection when she first saw the girl on the bicycle, and that the minor plaintiff was then 15 or 18 feet away from her. The entire question of contributory negligence, upon the record before us, is one of fact and not of law, and while the evidence would have sustained a contrary finding and conclusion there can be no question that the court's finding thereon is amply sustained by the record.

[3] Nothing more here appears than a conflict in the evidence and there being sufficient evidence to support the court's findings the usual rule applies.

The judgment is affirmed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 181

FEINTECH v. WEAVER et al.

Civ. 13264.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1942.

1. Homestead ⇐5

The homestead laws must be liberally construed. Civ.Code § 1266 et seq.

2. Homestead ⇐43

Where claimant attempted to homestead property on which she was living with an adult son by executing declaration of homestead on a printed blank designed for $5,000 homestead provided for head of family and declaration contained all recitals relative to homesteads of person not head of a family, under liberal construction of the homestead declaration, recital that claimant was head of the family was "surplusage" and instrument was sufficient to secure to the claimant valid homestead which defeated attempt of judgment creditor to take title at execution sale. Civ.Code § 1266 et seq.; Const. art. 17, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Surplusage".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Parker Wood, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Norman Feintech against Alice May Weaver. From a judgment for the defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed. Appeal from order denying a new trial dismissed.

Edward K. Zuckerman and Arthur Edmund Stein, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Don Lake and James R. Jaffray, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff seeks to have title to real property quieted in him. This title was acquired at an execution sale, when the property was bid in by the plaintiff as judgment creditor. The defendant sought to have title quieted in her because of a homestead which she asserted defeated the execution sale. The trial court held that the homestead was good and valid, and judgment was in favor of the defendants, from which judgment the plaintiff has appealed. There is but one question to be determined on this appeal, i. e.: Whether the declaration of homestead is sufficient in form.

When the defendant executed the declaration of homestead she used a printed blank designed for the five thousand dollar homestead provided by our law for the head of a family. She was not the "head of a family" because she was not married, but she was living with an adult son upon the property which she attempted to homestead. It is conceded that the declaration of homestead contains all the recitals prescribed by division 2, part 4, title V, chapter III, § 1266 et seq., of the Civil Code relative to homesteads of a person not "head of a family."

The appellant contends that the additional recital contained in the homestead declaration to the effect that the claimant was head of a family, when in fact she was not, destroyed its effectiveness, made it no declaration of homestead at all, and enabled him, therefore, to cause the property to be sold, and to bid it in at an execution sale.

[1] In the recent case of Greenlee v. Greenlee, 7 Cal.2d 579 at page 583, 61 P. 2d 1157 at page 1159, our Supreme Court states, "The homestead laws have always been given a most liberal construction in order to advance their beneficial objects and to carry out the manifest purpose of the Legislature." This has always been the rule of construction laid down by our California courts. McKay v. Gesford, 163 Cal. 243, 124 P. 1016, 41 L.R.A.,N.S., 303, Ann. Cas.1913E, 1253; Estate of Levy, 141 Cal. 646, 75 P. 301, 99 Am.St.Rep. 92; Keyes v. Cyrus, 100 Cal. 322, 34 P. 722, 38 Am.St. Rep. 296; Southwick v. Davis, 78 Cal. 504, 21 P. 121; Roth v. Insley, 86 Cal. 134, 24 P. 853; Simonson v. Burr, 121 Cal. 582, 54 P. 87; 26 Cal. Law Review 241.

There are California cases in which it would seem that the expressed rule of liberality has not always been followed, particularly in decisions involving homestead declarations, and in which a rather strict compliance with the provisions of the code has been required. Most of these cases have held declarations invalid because of the omission of some one of the matters required by the code to be included in them. Jones v. Gunn, 149 Cal. 687, 87 P. 577; Ashley v. Olmstead, 1880, 54 Cal. 616; Hansen v. Union Savings Bank, 148 Cal. 157, 82 P. 768; Reid v. Englehart-Davidson Mercantile Co., 126 Cal. 527, 58 P. 1063, 77 Am. St.Rep. 206.

The authority closest in point to the facts we are now considering is Roth v. Insley, supra. In that case it was contended that the homestead was invalid because a son made a declaration of homestead as head of a family when his only claim to be such was that his mother resided on the property with him. The decision turned upon the main question as to whether the homestead continued after the death of the mother, but in a concurring opinion Mr. Chief Justice Beatty stated: "The declaration of homestead in this case did not show that the claimant was the head of a family. It merely stated that he was, at the date of the declaration, actually residing on the premises with his mother, and altogether fails to state that she was under his care and maintenance, a condition made essential by the statute. * * * But it was a good declaration for any person other than the head of a family, * * * and sufficient to secure a homestead right of exemption to the extent of $1,000 * * *. Such being the case the homestead could not be sold under execution upon a judgment other than one of those enumerated in section 1241 of the Civil Code, without taking the steps prescribed in section 1245 et seq." [86 Cal 134, 24 P. 855.]

In the case at bar disregarding the recital that the claimant was the head of a family, treating it as surplusage, we have a declaration of homestead which contains every element required by the Civil Code, and which would be upheld without question in any court. To give this effect to the instrument secures to the defendant the right to a home, which the Constitution of our state (article XVII, section 1) enjoins the legislature to protect.

[2] It is therefore concluded that the homestead declaration in this case should be given a liberal construction; that the recital in question is surplusage and unnecessary; and that there was a valid homestead upon the property in question which defeated the attempt of the judgment creditor to take title at an execution sale.

The judgment is affirmed; the appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 66

BAYLESS v. MULL et al.

Civ. 12890.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 16, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1942

1. Automobiles ⇐193(10)

A salesman of used automobiles who was authorized to demonstrate any used automobile to any prospective purchaser without restrictions as to locality to which he might drive or the length of time he could use automobile, who upon being informed in the afternoon that prospective purchaser would return in the evening, had dinner with a friend and in taking the friend home before proceeding to prospective purchaser's home, passed prospective purchaser's home and injured a pedestrian near the friend's home, as matter of law was not engaged in furthering the business of his employer and hence employer was not liable to pedestrian under doctrine of "respondeat superior".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Respondeat Superior".

2. Statutes ⇐184, 215

In determining the scope of statute imposing upon automobile owner liability for negligent operation of automobile with owner's permission, the statute must be read in light of the conditions which existed at and prior to its passage and the evils it sought to remedy. Vehicle Code § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

3. Automobiles ⇐192(1), 193(8), 245

The statute imposing upon automobile owner liability for negligent operation of automobile with owner's permission applies whether driver is owner's agent or servant or not, but if he is not an agent or servant damages recoverable are limited, and if driver is an agent or a servant and is within scope of his employment damages are not limited by statute, and it is immaterial whether he is or is not within scope of his employment or has deviated from his employer's business except so far as either fact bears on question of owner's permission and the amount of recovery. Vehicle Code § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

4. Automobiles ⇐192(1)

While statute imposing upon automobile owner liability for negligent operation of automobile with owner's permission does not permit the owner to restrict its use to a given territory or to a particular route, the statute has no extraterritorial operation and hence use of vehicle may be restricted to the state. Vehicle Code § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

5. Automobiles ⇐192(1), 193(10)

Under statute imputing negligence of driver to owner of motor vehicle whenever driver at time of accident is operating it "in the business of such owner or otherwise" with owner's permission, by use of quoted phrase legislature eliminated as a condition of liability of owner that driver should be on owner's business, and the necessity as a basis of liability of master-owner that servant should be on his master's business rather than on his own. Vehicle Code § 402, St. 1937, p. 2353.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "In the Business of Such Owner or Otherwise".

6. Automobiles ⇐192(1)

The statute imposing upon automobile owner liability for negligent operation of vehicle with express or implied permission of owner must be liberally construed notwithstanding statute imposes a new liability unknown to the common law. Vehicle Code § 402, St.1937, p. 2353; Civ.Code § 4.

7. Automobiles ⇐193(8)

Where salesman of used automobiles was authorized to demonstrate any used automobile to any prospective buyer without restrictions as to locality to which he might drive or length of time he could use automobile, and salesman who took automobile for purpose of demonstrating it to a prospective buyer struck a pedestrian at time when he was not engaged in furtherance of his employer's business, the employer was liable with the salesman for the latter's negligence under statute imposing upon automobile owner liability for negligent operation of automobile with express or implied permission of the owner. Vehicle Code § 402, St.1937, p. 2353.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1004(1)

A judgment would not be reversed for inadequacy of damages awarded for personal injuries where no reason was shown for supposing that jury did not correctly appraise the extent of injuries and compensation allowable therefor.

9. Appeal and error ⇐110

An order denying a new trial is not appealable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William S. Baird, Judge.

Action by Delia Bayless against Troy Mull and the Central Chevrolet Company to recover for injuries sustained by plaintiff who was struck by an automobile driven by named defendant. From an order of nonsuit in favor of last named defendant and from a judgment against first named defendant on ground of its inadequacy and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Appeal from order denying new trial dismissed, and order of nonsuit reversed and the judgment affirmed.

Hearing denied; CURTIS and EDMONDS, JJ., dissenting.

Donald Kolts, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jennings & Belcher and Louis E. Kearney, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Central Chevrolet Co.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is an action brought by appellant against the Central Chevrolet Company and its employee Mull to recover for injuries she sustained as the result of being run down in a pedestrian lane by a motor vehicle driven by Mull and owned by the Chevrolet Company. The trial court granted a nonsuit in favor of the company but submitted the case of the plaintiff against Mull to the jury, which returned a verdict of $2,000 in plaintiff's favor. Plaintiff's appeal is not only from the action of the trial court in granting a nonsuit but also from the judgment entered upon the verdict, on the ground of its inadequacy.

The main question presented by the appeal from the judgment of nonsuit is whether by reason of the imputed negligence provisions of the Vehicle Code the employer is liable for the negligence of its employee entrusted with driving its motor vehicle, where the accident occurred while the servant was furthering his own business and not that of his master. A subsidiary question is whether the trial court correctly ruled that as a matter of law the servant was not engaged in furthering the business of his master at the time of the accident.

The facts necessary to be stated are these: Mull was employed as a salesman by Central Chevrolet Company to demonstrate and sell its used cars. In that capacity he was privileged to take any car on his employer's used car lot to show and demonstrate it to any prospective purchaser. No restrictions were imposed upon him as to the locality to which he might drive the car nor the manner in which or the length of time he could use it; except that where he expected to be gone for some period of time it was his duty to indicate on the company's bulletin board such fact. On the day of the accident he took the car here involved at 4:30 in the afternoon and made notation of the necessary facts on the bulletin board. As he had a prospective purchaser on 61st Street just off Broadway he drove the car to the prospect's home. There he learned the prospect was not at home but would return later in the evening. He then drove down town and had dinner with a friend who lived on 79th Street just off Broadway. As he planned to return to his prospect's home he offered to take his friend to her home. Accompanied by his passenger he drove down Broadway and passed 61st Street, on which the prospect lived, in order to take his friend to her home on 79th Street before proceeding to the home of his prospect. The accident occurred at 79th Street and Broadway, where, as heretofore stated, the plaintiff was run down in a pedestrian lane crossing Broadway. Because of the view we take of plaintiff's appeal from the judgment entered on the verdict it is unnecessary to recite the injuries.

[1] We think that under the holdings of the Supreme Court the trial court did not err in its refusal to submit to the jury the question of the employer's liability under the doctrine of respondeat superior. While the jury could have found that up to the time the driver reached 61st Street he was on business for the employer, it would not have been entitled to so find after he passed 61st Street on his way to the home of his guest, located on 79th Street. Gordoy v. Flaherty, 9 Cal.2d 716, 72 P.2d 538.

[2] Whether plaintiff's case against the employer owner should have been submitted to the jury on the theory that it was equally liable with the driver for his negligence, but with damages restricted to $5,000, depends upon the construction which should be given to section 402 of the Vehicle Code, St. 1935, p. 153, as amended by St. 1937, p. 2353. In determining the sweep of that statute we must read it in the light of the conditions which existed at and prior to its passage and the evils it sought to remedy. The statute was enacted in 1929 and, so far as is here material, reads:

"(a) Every owner of a motor vehicle is liable and responsible for the death of or injury to person or property resulting from negligence in the operation of such motor vehicle, in the business of such owner or otherwise, by any person using or operating the same with the permission, express or implied, of such owner, and the negligence of such person shall be imputed to the owner for all purposes of civil damages.

"(b) The liability of an owner for imputed negligence, imposed by this section and not arising through the relationship of principal and agent or master and servant is limited to the amount of five thousand dollars for the death of or injury to one person in any one accident and subject to said limit as to one person is limited to the amount of ten thousand dollars with respect to the death of or injury to more than one person in any one accident and is limited to the sum of one thousand dollars for damage to property of others in any one accident." (Italics ours.)

While the language of the statute seems clear and unambiguous, it will be noted it does not define the phrase "permission * * * of the owner"; nor does it lay down any formula or test for ascertaining what amounts to a "permission" within the meaning of the statute. Moreover, the statute does not indicate whether the owner's potential liability runs with the car, so to speak, wherever it may be operated or used by the person who is entrusted with it, or whether the liability runs with the car only when it is operated or used at such times and places as the owner expressly or impliedly designates. The solution of these and other questions arising out of the statute will be aided, we think, by reference to the legal doctrines of tort liability which prevailed prior to the passage of the statute, and the conditions then existing which gave rise to it.

When the one-cylinder motor car first made its appearance on the highways the liability of its owner who was not operating it at the time of the accident was predicated solely upon the theory of agency, or respondeat superior. In short, if the driver was a servant operating the car in the course of his master's business and in the scope of his employment the master was liable for the servant's tort, otherwise not; if the operator was a bailee not engaged upon the business of the owner, the latter was without liability. Initially there was an attempt to impose an absolute liability on the owner of a motor car for damage caused by it when driven by another, on the theory that the car was a dangerous instrumentality. However, this endeavor quickly fell by the wayside when possession of the "dangerous instrumentality" became so common that it was no longer in the hands of the few but of the many. Accordingly, efforts to curb the growing menace of death and injury in the operation of motor vehicles was sought in numerous other ways. Prominent among these were statutes requiring registration of motor vehicles, licenses to drive, and revocation of licenses to drive in cases where the driver had failed to satisfy an automobile injury judgment. The hope that the latter method would tend either to more careful driving or to the driver's procuring liability insurance was only partially successful, as the financially irresponsible eliminated judgments against them by adjudications in bankruptcy. It was not until 1937 that the legislature of this state hit upon the device of providing that a discharge in bankruptcy should not be effective in requiring the Department of Motor Vehicles to issue an operator's license so long as a judgment against the operator was not satisfied by actual payment.

The validity of that statutory provision, in view of the language of the Bankruptcy Act, was determined only last November by the Supreme Court of the United States in Reitz v. Mealey, 314 U.S. 33, 62 S.Ct. 24, 86 L.Ed. 21. Viewing the conditions then as they were presented to the legislature in 1929, it is apparent that the emphasis had shifted from the earlier view that the motor car was inherently a dangerous instrumentality to the view that it was such only in the hands of an incompetent or irresponsible driver. Indicative of what had transpired in the period 1905–1929 is the fact that when John D. Spreckels on May 5, 1905, appeared before the Secretary of State with $2 to have his White Steamer registered—the first in this state—there were less than 6,000 motor cars owned and operating in the state. As license plates were unknown, Mr. Spreckels was simply assigned number one. By May 11, 1929, when the governor approved the statute above quoted, more than two million cars were registered in this state. In this setting and under the conditions narrated the legislature was urged to pass legislation requiring that all drivers take out compulsory liability insurance so as to do away with the evil of the unsatisfied judgment.

But objections to that solution were both numerous and obvious. The only practical alternative, as it appeared to the legislature, was to impose an absolute or limited liability on an owner in the position of a bailor of his car, or to extend the liability of a master for the acts of his servant in driving the car beyond the strict limits of the scope of his employment as enunciated in the doctrine of respondeat superior, or in imposing both these liabilities. For imposing a liability on a person in a situation analogous to that of a bailor there was legislative precedent in other states; for expanding the liability of the master and at the same time restricting the amount recoverable from him there was guiding legislative precedent not only in other states but in this state as well, in the then existing Workmen's Compensation Acts. The need and motivation for a new statutory liability in automobile injury cases were parallel to the conditions which some years before gave rise to workmen's compensation acts. Under the latter acts a liability for the injury of the employee without the employer's fault was placed on the employer where no such liability existed before; but by way of alleviating the new burden definite and arbitrary financial limits were placed upon the liability. The acts, as is well known, resulted from the changes in industry from that of few low-speed machines to a highly mechanized industry of powerful high-speed machines. In the light of these conditions and factors we think the language of the statute gives clear answer to the intent of the legislature and the alternative it adopted.

[3] The statute, Vehicle Code, § 402, by apt language imputes the negligence of the driver of a motor vehicle to its owner whenever the driver, at the time of the accident, is operating or using it with the permission, express or implied, of the owner; and this regardless of whether he is or is not on business for the owner. Moreover, as has already been stated, the statute applies whether the driver is the owner's agent or servant, or not; but if he is not an agent or servant the damages which may be assessed against the owner may not in any case exceed the limits set forth in the statute. However, if the driver is an agent or servant, and at the time of the accident is within the course of his employer's business and in the scope of his employment, damages are not then limited by the statute. Consequently, if the driver is an employee or agent of the owner it is of no legal significance, under the terms of the statute, whether he is or is not within the scope of his employment or has deviated from his employer's business to that of his own, except so far as either fact may be deemed to bear on the question of the owner's permission and the amount of the recovery.

[4, 5] On its surface and in its context the statute is broad, comprehensive and unequivocal in its terms and meaning. The sweeping language of the statute provides no toe-hold for a construction that would restrict the liability of the owner of a car for the negligence of the driver once he has entrusted him to take it upon the highways. But in saying that we do not imply, nor does the statute say, that the owner may not limit the time it shall continue on the highway. After all, an owner by granting to another permission to drive the car does not make him a gift of it. Moreover, while the statute does not in terms permit the owner who entrusts his car to another to restrict its use to a given territory, much less to a particular route, the statute has no extra-territorial operation and so the use may clearly be restricted to this state. Whether the statute may be read as permitting a restriction of use to some lesser general territory is not involved in this case. We assume, without deciding, that a rule of reason may here be applied. But what we do say is that the legislature did not intend by the language it used to permit an owner to show any and all restrictions he may have placed on the use of his car and thus escape liability. By the use of the phrase in the statute reading "in the business of such owner or otherwise" the legislature eliminated as a condition of liability of the owner that the driver should be on the owner's business; and by the same token, the statute being applicable to the master and servant relation, it eliminated the necessity as a basis of liability of the master-owner that the servant should be on his master's business rather than on his own.

The two decisions of our Supreme Court so heavily relied upon by respondent company do not rule contrary to what we have said herein. In Henrietta v. Evans, 10 Cal. 2d 526, 75 P.2d 1051, the owner loaned his motor vehicle to a prospective purchaser for the sole purpose of driving from Desert Center, California, to Beaumont, California, to pick up some papers needed to complete the sale. The prospective purchaser instead of stopping at Beaumont and returning to Desert Center drove on to Colton, California, where he had an accident. In ruling the owner was not liable the court placed its ruling on the ground that an owner was entitled to restrict the use of his car to a particular place or locality for a special purpose. The opinion makes it clear that nothing short of a substantial violation of restrictions is ground for avoiding liability. In the instant case there were no express restrictions or limitations. In the case of Engstrom v. Auburn Automobile Sales Corporation, 11 Cal.2d 64, 77 P.2d 1059, the defendant automobile agency lent one of its automobiles to a prospective purchaser with instructions to return it not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the same day. The purchaser kept it over night and was involved in an accident the next day. It was held that the permissive use had ceased prior to the accident and hence the owner was not liable under the statute. The case is not in point as we have here no question involving a limitation of time. The only other case in the Supreme Court which is cited and relied upon by respondent is Gordoy v. Flaherty, supra. That was a case where the employee at the time of the accident was driving his personally owned automobile, and a fortiori the case is not within the statute and possesses no legal significance in the problem before us.

In the District Courts of Appeal only three cases have had occasion to construe and apply the phrase "permission * * * of such owner." One, the case of Di Rebaylio v. Herndon, 6 Cal.App.2d 567, 44 P. 2d 581, is merely another case of express limitation of time. Another is Gousse v. Lowe, 41 Cal.App. 715, 183 P. 295, which involved the taking of the employer's automobile by a chauffeur contrary to instructions and for the personal use only of the chauffeur, and so it is not of any controlling importance here. In the third case, Montanya v. Brown, 31 Cal.App.2d 642, 88 P.2d 745, hearing denied by the Supreme Court, the defendant owners of the motor car involved in the accident conceded they had given the driven permission to drive their car, but asked that the jury be instructed that their liability could not exceed $5,000. The trial court refused to so instruct, and upon the return of a verdict for $35,000 refused to restrict the judgment to $5,000 or to grant a new trial. The only issue in the case was whether there was sufficient evidence of the agency of the driver to sustain a verdict not limited to $5,000. On its facts the case is not in point on any question raised in the instant case.

[6] In construing statutes of other states which contain the exact language or the substance of that which is found in the first paragraph of our statute above set forth, several of the courts of such states have held that the language has no application to a master-servant case; others have held the contrary. The argument for excluding the master and servant, principal and agent cases is that the statute is essentially penal and so should be strictly construed. These holdings are not persuasive here, as we think it plain from the language used in the second paragraph of our statute that it is applicable to a master and servant, principal and agent, and any other case where an owner of a motor vehicle has granted permission, express or implied, to another to drive his motor vehicle. By the language found in the second paragraph reading, "The liability of an owner for imputed negligence imposed by this section and not arising through the relationship of principal and agent or master and servant is limited to * * *", it is made plain that the relationships mentioned are within the sweep of the statute. If it were intended to exclude such relationships either they would not have been mentioned at all, as is the case where the courts have held them excluded, or express language would have been used to exclude them, and not language of the character used in the second paragraph of our statute. Moreover, we are not entitled strictly to construe the statute because it imposes a new liability unknown to the common law, but rather are required by reason of the provisions of Civil Code, section 4, to give it a liberal construction.

Aside from the questions we have already passed upon, the only real difficulty, apparently, which the courts of last resort have encountered, in these imputed negligence statutes, is in interpreting what is meant by the phrase "with the permission, express or implied, of such owner," as found in the first paragraph of our statute. In some states where the statutory phrase is substantially identical or similar to ours it is held that when an owner consents to the use of his motor vehicle by another he is equally liable with such other for the latter's negligence, even though he expressly or impliedly restricted his consent to its use for a particular or limited purpose, as, for example, to a specific place and return, or by a certain route, or for a limited time. Other courts have construed the phrase somewhat more narrowly. This divergence of opinion has come about in various ways. Courts which hold that the imputed negligence statutes do not apply to cases where the doctrine of respondeat superior is applicable argue that the legislature could not have intended to impose on a bailor a greater liability than is imposed upon a master under the respondeat superior doctrine, and so permit the owner to introduce evidence bearing on a restricted use as permitted and limited in the master-servant cases. Other courts take the position that the purpose of the legislature was to increase the liability of a non-culpable owner of a motor vehicle for its operation on a public highway. In the view of these courts the foundation of the statutory liability is the permission given to another to use an instrumentality which if improperly used is a danger and a menace to the public. They reason that as the owner can avoid the liability by refusing to permit the use of his motor car by another or procure insurance to protect him, he should not be permitted to avoid the consequences of the operator's negligence and escape liability therefor by secret restrictions limiting the right to use the motor vehicle. The view of these courts is well expressed by the Massachusetts court in Guzenfield v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 286 Mass. 133, 190 N.E. 23, 24, where it said "the liability * * * so to speak, run[s] with the car unaffected by the owner's action unless its presence on the public ways was without his sanction." The question before us, as to the liability of a master for the negligence of his servant who at the moment of the accident is not furthering his master's business, is an open one in the Supreme Court of this state. The question has not been passed on in any of the District Courts of Appeal except in Gammon v. Wales, 115 Cal.App. 133, 300 P. 988, petition for hearing denied by the Supreme Court, where the court expressly held that an owner of a motor vehicle is liable under the statute for the negligence of its employee-driver even though at the time of the accident he was not acting in the course of his employment.

[7] From what we have said it is plain that the master was equally liable with the servant for the latter's negligence, and so the case should have been submitted to the jury on the basis of the statutory liability.

So far as the case of the employer is concerned, it only remains to say a word in response to its oblique suggestion that there is a question as to whether it was the owner of the car. If it was not, it is to be noted that its argument stops with the suggestion. We see no reason to doubt the employer was the owner, and every reason to say it was. The suggestion merits no further discussion. See Swing v. Lingo, 129 Cal.App. 518, 19 P.2d 56, and McCalla v. Grosse, 42 Cal.App.2d 546, 109 P.2d 358.

[8] The remaining question is whether the verdict against the employee was inadequate and should be set aside. Aside from a recital of the injuries of the plaintiff as testified to by her and her witnesses, she fails to point out a single valid reason for supposing that the jury did not correctly appraise the extent of her injuries and the compensation that should be allowed therefor. Accordingly, we see no basis for a reversal of the judgment against the employee Mull.

[9] For the reasons indicated the order granting the nonsuit in favor of respondent Central Chevrolet Company is reversed and the judgment against respondent Mull is affirmed. As no appeal lies from an order denying a new trial, it is dismissed.

So ordered.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 155

KELLER et al. v. MARKLEY.

Civ. 6527.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1942.

1. Trial ⇐139(1)

The trial court has power to direct a verdict in favor of defendant where there is no substantial evidence tending to prove all the controverted facts necessary to establish plaintiff's case, and it is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence, since to deprive the court of the right to exercise such power, the conflict must be a substantial one.

2. Automobiles ⇐245(8)

Where motorist making right turn into street struck minor bicyclist who was on wrong side of street, in action for injuries to the bicyclist evidence that bicycle had made tracks across highway right in front of where automobile was standing after accident, and that motorist had driven entirely off highway onto shoulder, indicated that motorist was operating his automobile with extreme due care and justified directed verdict for motorist.

3. Automobiles ⇐244(7)

Where motorist making right turn into street struck minor bicyclist who was on wrong side of street, in action for injuries to bicyclist evidence did not disclose that motorist was under duty to use his horn. Vehicle Code, § 671, St.1935, p. 223.

4. Negligence ⇐4

Negligence in a particular case is to be determined by the application of the standard of the ordinarily prudent or reasonable person.

5. Negligence ⇐134(1)

It is necessary, in order to conclude that an individual has been guilty of negligence, that there be present in the record some substantial evidence indicating that the individual has failed under the circumstances to conform to the duty of care required of the ordinarily prudent or reasonable person.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; James O. Moncur, Judge Assigned.

Personal injury action by Walter Keller, Jr., a minor, by and through his father, Walter Keller, Sr., guardian ad litem, for personal injuries, and by Walter Keller, Sr., for expenses incurred, against H. C. Markley. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

J. O. Goldstein and Burton J. Goldstein, both of Chico, and Ray Manwell, of Marysville, for appellants.

Yale S. Kroloff, of Oakland, and Rich & Weis, of Marysville, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered pursuant to a verdict rendered in favor of defendant, under directions of the court.

The action is prosecuted by plaintiff, Walter Keller, Jr., a minor of the age of eleven years, by and through his father, Walter Keller, Sr., guardian ad litem, and Walter Keller, Sr., individually, against H. C. Markley, the defendant and respondent above named. The plaintiff, Walter Keller, Jr., seeks to recover damages in the sum of $25,030, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant, arising out of an automobile accident. The father, Walter Keller, Sr., asks for damages in the sum of $3,345.83, the amount of expenses incurred in caring for the injuries received by his minor son.

[1] The question presented is the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the negligence of defendant, and thus sustain a verdict against defendant. In Newson v. Hawley, 205 Cal. 188-190, 270 P. 364, 365, it is said: "It is a settled rule of law regarding trials by jury that in a proper case the court has full power to direct the jury to render a verdict. This power exists in favor of the defendant where there is no substantial evidence tending to prove all the controverted facts necessary to establish the plaintiff's case. It is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence. To deprive the court of the right to exercise this power, if there be a conflict, it must be a substantial one."

In order to determine this question, it becomes necessary to set forth the evidence rather fully.

The injuries to plaintiff (the Keller boy), which were serious in effect, were received as a result of a collision between his bicycle, which he was operating, and the car being driven by defendant, which was a 1929 Ford Pickup model. The accident took place at the intersection of U. S. Highway 99E, and what is known as "Kent Avenue." This is situated at a place called "Lomo" in Sutter County. Highway 99E runs due north and south, up to a point referred to in the evidence as "Lomo Curve." Proceeding north on this highway, and approximately three hundred to four hundred feet beyond this curve, an intersection is formed by the junction of Kent Avenue and Highway 99E. Kent Avenue cuts off from the highway in a northeasterly direction, forming a triangle between these two thoroughfares. A stop-sign is located on Kent Avenue, approximately fifty feet from the intersection, and about one hundred fifty feet further north, and on the same side of the avenue as the stop-sign, there is a grocery store.

Shortly before the accident, which took place at about 3:00 o'clock p. m. on February 25, 1939, the Keller boy and a friend, Sterli Epperson, who was fifteen years of age, were proceeding, on bicycles, south on Kent Avenue toward the intersection with Highway 99E. The Epperson boy was to the right hand side of the Keller boy, and the Keller boy, in position, was closer to the center of Kent Avenue. The testimony of Epperson, on the question as to whether the Keller boy was in front or behind him at the time of the collision, is contradictory, as well as his testimony bearing upon the question as to whether he saw the Keller boy from the time they left the grocery store up until the moment of impact between the bicycle and the car. Epperson testified, at one stage of the direct examination, and in answer to the question as to what direction the Keller boy was going, that: "It looked to me like he was trying to go across the highway." The evidence is not conclusive as to the position of the Keller boy's bicycle, at the time of impact, with relation to the stop-sign, although Epperson testified that he was just even with this stop-sign, or had gotten a short distance beyond it when he heard the noise of the collision. This witness testified that as he reached the stop-sign, he glanced up and saw the car (defendant's) making the turn into Kent Avenue. He stated that the car was on the paved portion, and on the right hand side of the road. At the point of impact, there is no question, and it is not disputed, that plaintiff was over on defendant's side of the highway. Subsequent to the collision, and before defendant's car had been moved in any manner, the evidence establishes the fact that at least the right front and rear wheels of defendant's car were off the pavement on his right side, resting upon the gravel or dirt shoulders of the highway.

The injuries to the Keller boy were of such serious consequence that as a result his memory was affected, and at the time of the trial, some fourteen months after the date of injury, he was unable to testify as to any of the facts concerning the accident. The loss of memory was apparently a result of having received a blow about the head which caused a severe concussion. He also received a severe injury to one of his legs, and injury to his eyesight.

Defendant was the only eyewitness who saw the collision between defendant's car and the bicycle operated by plaintiff. There were, however, a number of witnesses who arrived at the scene of the accident shortly after the collision. These witnesses, called by plaintiff, included H. C. Williams, a traffic officer, S. B. Castleman, the owner and operator of the grocery store located at the intersection in question, A. L. Chandler, a laborer, and Joseph Reheremann and Norbert Reheremann, brothers, who are engaged in farming. These two brothers were performing carpentry work, at the time of the accident, on a small building located near the grocery store.

The defendant, Markley, was called under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and testified in answer to plaintiff's questions concerning the circumstances connected with the accident. The defendant stated that he was a farmer; had resided in Sutter County for thirty years; and that he was thoroughly familiar with the intersection which was the scene of the accident, as he ordinarily turned onto Kent Avenue from Highway 99E in going to his ranch. Markley testified that just prior to the collision with plaintiff's bicycle, and before making a right hand turn into Kent Avenue, that he was traveling at approximately twenty-five miles per hour. He stated that before he reached the intersection, he saw the two boys on their bicycles on Kent Avenue, proceeding toward the intersection. He judged that they were one hundred or one hundred fifty feet away from him at that time, and that he was about twenty feet from the intersection. The boys, at this time, the defendant states, were riding alongside one another, four or five feet apart. The defendant stated that after he made the turn into Kent Avenue, he drove off of the concrete portion of the highway onto the dirt shoulder on his right hand side, as the plaintiff, who was about seventy feet away at this time, was riding his bicycle some five or six feet out from the opposite side of the road, toward the center of the highway, and that the road was quite narrow. The testimony of defendant, relating the circumstances just prior to the collision, is as follows:

"Q. When you saw him toward the center of the highway, did you blow your horn? A. No.

"Q. Did you ever, at any time, from the first minute you saw those boys on their bicycles, coming down the Avenue, ever blow your horn? A. No, sir.

"Q. Why not? A. It happened so quick. The boy run in front of the car, and I put on my brakes and tried to stop and wheel my car to the right.

"Q. The whole thing happened very quickly? A. Yes.

"Q. How fast were you going when you made the turn around the intersection? A. Between twenty and twenty-five.

"Q. How do you know you were going twenty or twenty-five miles an hour? A. I turned across 'Death Curve,' and had to slack up there to cross that, and I was going to turn into Kent Avenue, and had my car down so I could turn at Kent Avenue.

"Q. At the time you were making the curve there and saw that boy, as I asked you before, when he was close to the center of the highway there, did you then believe that you should pull to the left (right) or off onto the shoulder, or something was going to happen? A. I didn't know anything was going to happen, but I pulled off on the shoulder.

"Q. How far was the boy away from you when you first saw him before you hit him? A. I couldn't say that. One hundred or a hundred and fifty feet.

"Q. Did you ever see the boy after that? A. Yes.

"Q. When? A. Just before I hit him.

"Q. How far away from him were you before you hit him? A. Maybe fifteen feet; I couldn't say.

"Q. What did you do when you saw him fifteen feet away? A. I put on my brakes and wheeled my car to the right. That is all I could do."

The traffic officer, H. C. Williams, who testified for plaintiff, stated that at the time of the accident he was patrolling the highway in the vicinity, and that he arrived, by coincidence, at the scene of the collision within a very few minutes after its occurrence. The Keller boy had not yet been removed to the hospital. Mr. Williams testified that Kent Avenue was a paved highway, ten or fifteen feet in width, with shoulders composed of a mixture of dirt and gravel; that defendant's car was located with all four wheels off of the paved portion of Kent Avenue; and that the only skid marks from the car of defendant were two small skid marks approximately two feet long located back of the two wheels. This witness stated, in answer to the question as to whether there were any tracks going from the right hand side of Kent Avenue across to the position of defendant's car, that there were bicycle tracks, and he testified in the following language: "There were tracks from the bicycle that started on the edge of the pavement and circled right over on to the car. About in that position. These tracks were made by dust and dirt that is usually made when a rubber tire pulls off of the dirt onto a pavement. These bicycle tracks hit across the highway right in front of where the car was sitting. Q. How many tracks did you find? A. Just two. The front and rear wheels, and after the bicycle straightened up, there was just one."

Mr. Williams stated that at the time he saw the Keller boy, some few minutes after the accident, he was lying on a blanket, approximately four feet in front of defendant's car. He believed the boy had been moved prior to that time.

S. B. Castleman, the owner and operator of the grocery store located near the intersection and scene of the accident, testified that at the time of the collision he was engaged in carpentry work on a building situated near the intersection; that he did not see the collision, but heard the crash and ran toward the scene of the accident; that plaintiff was lying ten or twelve feet in front of defendant's car, and that plaintiff's bicycle was under the axle and between the two front wheels of the car; that the right front wheel and right rear wheel of the car were off of the pavement on the grass shoulder of the highway; and that the left wheels of the car were a foot or so on the pavement.

A. L. Chandler, who arrived at the scene of the accident some seven minutes after the collision, gave substantially the same testimony in regard to the position of the defendant's car, the plaintiff's bicycle, and the position of plaintiff as he lay on the highway. He testified that defendant's car was approximately thirty feet from the intersection of Highway 99E.

Joseph Reheremann and Norbert Reheremann, who were working on the building with S. B. Castleman, both arrived at the scene of the accident at approximately the same time as Mr. Castleman. Their testimony as to the location of defendant's car, the bicycle, and the Keller boy, conforms substantially to the testimony given by the other witnesses. They all testified that the Keller boy lay some eight to ten or twelve feet in front of the car.

Walter Keller, Sr., the father of plaintiff, arrived at the place of the accident a few minutes after its occurrence, and he testified, as did the others, that the plaintiff was lying ten or twelve feet in front of defendant's car. He also testified that the ground was torn up between the place where the plaintiff lay upon the highway and the location of the car, and that there were marks which were similar in form and size to the pedals of the bicycle.

The questions presented in considering the motion for a directed verdict, were those of negligence on the part of defendant, and contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. If, under the evidence, as a matter of law, the defendant was not guilty of negligence, or if as a matter of law, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, the action of the trial court in directing the verdict for defendant was perfectly proper. The question of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff becomes immaterial if it be concluded that defendant, as a matter of law, is free from negligence.

[2] We are of the opinion, after a careful consideration of the evidence presented in the record before us, that not only is there a lack of evidence of sufficient substantiality in support of a verdict which might have been returned in favor of plaintiff, but that on the contrary, all the evidence indicates that defendant, at the time of the collision with plaintiff, was operating his automobile with extreme due care. Granting to plaintiff's evidence all the weight to which it is legally entitled, it is not reasonably possible to draw from that evidence any legitimate inference of negligence on the part of defendant in the operation of his automobile. The evidence indicates clearly that defendant was not driving his car at an unlawful rate of speed. There are two important physical facts disclosed by the evidence which conclusively indicate that the defendant was not traveling more than fifteen or twenty miles per hour, as he so testified, at the time of the collision. Those physical facts are: First, the defendant's car was brought to a stop a very short distance from the intersection, and completely over on the defendant's right hand side of the highway. In fact, the right front and rear wheels of the car were off on the shoulders. If defendant had been traveling, at an excessive rate of speed, there would have been the tendency, in the maneuvering of this right hand turn, to throw his car toward the center of Kent Avenue. At least his car would not have been brought to a stop far over on his right hand side, as was the case, so short a distance from the actual turn in the highway. Secondly, the skid marks from the tires of defendant's car were only two or two and one-half feet in length. This fact indicates that defendant's car was traveling at a very low rate of speed, and was quite completely under the control of its operator. There is no evidence in the record, nor was there any attempt to prove, that the brakes of defendant's car were faulty.

The testimony given by defendant, in explanation of the cause of the accident, and which we believe is fully supported by other evidence, including the testimony of the traffic officer, relating to the course of plaintiff's bicycle tracks, indicates that he was operating his car with necessary care in regard to the safety of plaintiff, and that he did all that could reasonably be required of a prudent man in attempting to avoid the collision.

The defendant stated that prior to making the turn onto Kent Avenue, he observed the two boys on their bicycles, one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet away, proceeding toward the intersection, and riding side by side on their own right side of the highway. There was no obstruction of Kent Avenue at this point on Highway 99E, and there is no reason to discredit defendant's testimony in this regard. The defendant then testified that when he was about seventy feet from the boys, he pulled off on the shoulder of the highway on his right hand side, because one of the boys (the Keller boy), was out five or six feet toward the center of the highway. The position of defendant's car and plaintiff's bicycle, immediately after the accident, together with the evidence of the bicycle tracks leading from the opposite side of Kent Avenue across the highway to the point of impact, is in support of defendant's testimony just related, that is, that he observed plaintiff some seventy feet away, riding his bicycle toward the center of the highway, and pulled his car off onto the right shoulder. The defendant's statement that the Keller boy, when approximately fifteen feet distant, suddenly turned directly in front of the car, is also consistent with the foregoing evidence pertaining to the physical facts.

It is true that during the examination of defendant, he gave testimony that might be construed to indicate that he did not constantly watch the boys on their bicycles after having observed them from the point on Highway 99E, some one hundred to one hundred fifty feet distant, and appellant would have us believe that defendant failed to observe them at all after having seen them from the distance of one hundred to one hundred fifty feet. This conclusion is based upon the following testimony:

"Q. How far was the boy away from you when you first saw him before you hit him? A. I couldn't say that. One hundred or a hundred and fifty feet.

"Q. Did you ever see the boy after that? A. Yes.

"Q. When? A. Just before I hit him.

"Q. How far away from him were you before you hit him? A. Maybe fifteen feet—I couldn't say."

It is to be remembered, however, that defendant had already testified that he saw the boys about seventy feet away after having observed them from a distance of one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet, and that it was at this time, that is, when they were seventy feet away, that he started to pull off onto the shoulder of the highway. In view of this testimony, and again referring to the position of defendant's car, as located after the accident, it is our opinion that it would not be fair or rational to deduce from the quoted testimony that defendant had failed to observe the plaintiff, after having first seen him, until just before the impact. If defendant had not observed plaintiff and his position on the highway, it is highly improbable that defendant's car would have been entirely off the highway onto the shoulder.

[3] It is our opinion that there is absolutely no evidence of any substantiality from which it might be concluded that defendant was guilty of negligence in the operation of his car at the time of the accident. The evidence fails to disclose that defendant was under a duty to use his horn, as required by section 671 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 223.

[4, 5] Negligence in a particular case is determined by application of the standard of the "ordinarily prudent or reasonable person." Fouch v. Werner, 99 Cal. App. 557, 279 P. 183. It is necessary, in order to conclude that an individual has been guilty of negligence, that there be present in the record some substantial evidence indicating that the individual has failed under the circumstances to conform to the duty of care required of the "ordinarily prudent or reasonable person." There is no evidence in the present case from which it might be concluded that defendant failed to act as an "ordinarily prudent or reasonable person."

Concluding, as we do, that as a matter of law, there is insufficient evidence in support of a determination of negligence on the part of defendant, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the question of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff (the Keller boy). Contributory negligence and the consideration of the presumption that the Keller boy exercised reasonable and ordinary care for his own safety, are issues which were material to the disposition of this appeal, only in the event that there was sufficient evidence from which a jury might have found, as a question of fact, that defendant was guilty of negligence.

We believe we have sufficiently answered all material issues raised by this appeal.

The motion for a directed verdict in favor of defendant was properly granted, and the judgment entered pursuant thereto is hereby affirmed.

50 Cal.App.2d 92

BIAGGI v. PHILLIPS et al.

Civ. 2688.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

1. Taxation ⇐658(1)

The purpose of notice before a sale of property for taxes is to give taxpayer an opportunity to pay taxes before title, by operation of law, passes from him.

2. Taxation ⇐679(5)

Under 1937 amendment to tax law providing that no sale of property "except property sold to the State for delinquent taxes in the year 1930, or at any time prior to 1930" shall be made in accordance with provisions of certain sections of Political Code after effective date of amendment and prior to the first day of February, 1939, the quoted language refers to the sale by operation of law mentioned in section 3771, and Legislature intended that any property sold to the state under that section in 1930, or prior thereto, even though deeded to the state under section 3785 after 1930, is subject to sale under section 3897. Pol.Code, §§ 3771, 3785, 3817d, 3897.

3. Evidence ⇐48

It is common knowledge that in the publication of every delinquent tax list there is a statement, as required by statute, that on a date fixed the property will, by operation of law, be sold to the state. Pol.Code, § 3767.

4. Taxation ⇐421(1), 630, 658(4)

The test to be applied in determining whether descriptions of land in assessment rolls, delinquent tax lists, addenda sale notice, and notice of sale were sufficient was whether descriptions were sufficient to identify the property, the question of sufficiency being a "question of fact" to be determined by the court from evidence. Pol.Code, §§ 3650, 3897.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

5. Taxation ⇐421(1), 630, 658(4)

Where there was a recorded map of territory in which land sold for taxes was located, and land could be easily identified in various steps of tax proceedings, and lots, blocks and sections were correctly stated in descriptions of land, and at least 20 notices containing description of land, as stated on assessment roll, were sent to owner prior to tax sale, the description of land in tax proceedings was sufficient to satisfy statute requiring the description to be sufficient to identify land. Pol.Code, § 3897.

6. Taxation ⇐658(3)

Where notice of sale of land for taxes stated that land was assessed to "Wm. A. Bradford, Jr.," and owner's correct name was "Wm. A. Radford, Jr.," the discrepancy in names was fatal, notwithstanding that owner received notice mailed to him. Pol. Code, § 3897.

7. Taxation ⇐614

It is a fixed "rule of property" in California that in proceedings to sell property for unpaid taxes, no requirement of statute can be disregarded and that parties who purchase property at tax sales acquire title to property purchased only if all proceedings for levy of taxes and sales are in strict conformity to requirements of statutes governing tax proceedings.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Rule of Property".

8. Taxation ⇐614

Tax proceedings in California are "in invitum" and are strictly construed.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "In Invitum".

9. Taxation ⇐734(9)

Failure of the tax collector to correctly state in the notice of sale the name of person to whom land was assessed was an irregularity which rendered a tax sale of the land invalid and was fatal to title based upon a deed issued at tax sale. Pol.Code, § 3897.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Ernest Klette, Judge.

Suit by William R. Biaggi against Ethel M. Phillips and others to quiet title to land, wherein defendant David F. Appling filed a cross-complaint. From a decree adjudging that defendant David F. Appling was the owner of the land, plaintiff appeals opposed by David F. Appling.

Reversed.

Wm. R. Biaggi, in pro. per, of San Jose, for appellant.

Iener W. Nielsen, Harold V. Thompson, and W. O. Watters, all of Fresno, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a decree adjudging that defendant and respondent David F. Appling is the owner of three parcels of real property in Fresno County, described in the appellant's complaint and in respondent's cross-complaint, as follows:

"Lots 48, 56 and 66 in Block 8; Lots 95 to 98 inclusive, in Block 9, as said Lots and blocks are laid down and delineated upon the Map of the East Coalinga Oil Fields, Fresno County, California, being a subdivision of the Southwest quarter of Section 30, Township 19 South, Range 16 East, M. D. B. & M. Surveyed June 1919 by T. F. Harrold, C. E. Said map having been filed for record July 15, 1919 in Volume 8, pages 50 to 54 of Plats, in the office of the County Recorder of Fresno County, California."

It was stipulated at the trial that the appellant, by virtue of a deed from Wm. A. Radford, Jr., introduced in evidence by appellant, was the owner and holder of the record title subject to the validity of respondent's tax deed and of the tax proceedings leading up to the issuance of the same.

Respondent Appling claims title to the said three parcels of land by virtue of a tax deed executed and delivered to him on June 14, 1938, by L. V. Hatch, Tax Collector of Fresno County, pursuant to a tax sale held under the provisions of section 3897 of the Political Code.

The tax collector testified that on June 11, 1932, and in consideration of $1.63, a deed was executed conveying said three parcels to the State of California.

The property in question appears on the 1926 assessment roll as assessed to Wm. A. Radford, Jr., 1827 Prairie Avenue, Chicago, Ill., and described as "East Coalinga Oilfields; Lots 48, 56, 66 Blk 8, Sec. 30, Twp. 19 S., Range 16 E."

The property was originally marked on the assessment roll "Sold to the State" under section 3771 of the Political Code on June 26, 1927, because of nonpayment of taxes levied and assessed for the year 1926, amounting to $1.64. The delinquent tax list, as published in 1927, states the total amount of taxes, penalties and costs due and payable amounted to $1.64. In the Addenda Notice attached to the delinquent tax list published in 1932, the least acceptable bid or amount necessary to redeem the property prior to its being sold or deeded to the state is set forth as $1.63. In the Addenda Notice, as so published in 1932, the property is described as "East Coalinga Oil Fields, Lots 48, 56, 66 Block 8, Sec. 30, Twp. 19, Rg. 16." In the Notice of Sale published on May 9, 1938, the property is described as "East Coalinga Oilfields, Sec. 30, Twp. 19 S., Rg. 16 E., Lots 48, 56, 66 Block 8, assessed to William A. Bradford, Jr., for the fiscal years 1926 to 1932, inclusive. Said property was sold to the State June 21, 1927, for delinquent taxes of 1926, Certificate of Sale No. 788. Deed No. 788 was issued to State of California June 30, 1932, and recorded in Vol. 1225, Page 360 of Official Records of Fresno County. All of the above lots and blocks being in East Coalinga Oilfields Subdivision in Section 30, Twp. 19, Rg. 16, M. D. B. & M., according to the map filed July 15, 1919 in Vol. 8, Pages 50 to 54 of Plats in the office of the Recorder of Fresno County."

A copy of said Notice of Sale was sent by registered mail to Wm. A. Radford, Jr., and was received by him, as were approximately twenty other notices mailed to him between the first sale of delinquency and the final sale.

The records in the various steps in the tax proceedings were introduced in evidence and will be referred to hereafter, so far as it is necessary to do so.

The court below found in favor of respondent and judgment was entered decreeing that respondent was the owner of said real property, and this appeal is from said judgment.

Appellant's first contention is that the sale of said property on June 2, 1938, was in violation of section 3817d of the Political Code, as amended in 1937, which section, so far as pertinent here, reads as follows: "Notwithstanding the provisions of section 3764 and 3771a of this code no sale at auction to the public shall be made of unredeemed property in the years of 1937 or 1938 or in the month of January, 1939, but at the day and hour fixed in accordance with subdivision (2) of section 3764 of this code all property otherwise subject to sale to the public shall be deeded to the State as provided in section 3785 of this code. No sale of any property, except property sold to the State for delinquent taxes in the year 1930, or at any time prior to 1930 shall be made in accordance with the provisions of section 3897, 3897a and 3897b of this code after the effective date of this act and prior to the first day of February, 1939. Property sold to the State for delinquent taxes in the year 1930 or prior to 1930, and deeded to the State pursuant to section 3785 of this code, shall be subject to sale under the provisions of section 3897 of this code."

The section just quoted was a continuation of a series of so-called tax moratorium laws which began with the enactment of the original section 3817d at the 1933 session of the legislature, which laws were the result of the economic depression and which were enacted as urgency measures. In 1933, the legislature provided in said section that no sale at public auction should be made of unredeemed property in the years 1933 and 1934. At the special session of 1934 said section 3817d was amended to provide that no such sale should be made prior to July, 1936. In 1935, said section was amended to read practically the same as at present except as to dates, and it was provided therein that "No sale of any property, except property sold to the State for delinquent taxes in the year 1925, or at any time prior to 1925, shall be made in accordance with the provisions of section 3897 of this code after the effective date of this act and prior to the first day of January, 1938." (Italics ours.) At the 1937 session section 3817d was again amended, the principal change being to make the above-quoted clause read "No sale of any property, except property sold to the State for delinquent taxes in the year 1930, or at any time prior to 1930 shall be made in accordance with the provisions of section 3897, 3897a and 3897b of this code after the effective date of this act and prior to the first day of February, 1939." (Italics ours.)

Appellant contends that in the 1937 amendment to section 3817d the legislature intended that the tax moratorium should apply to all property sold and deeded to the state subsequent to 1930, and that no valid sale of said property could be held until after February 1, 1939.

Appellant argues that the language in section 3771 reading "shall by operation of law and the declaration of the tax collector, be sold to the State, and said tax collector shall make in appropriate columns on the delinquent list, opposite each parcel of land to be sold an entry, 'Sold to the State,'" was not the real sale to the state and was not the sale referred to by the legislature in the language in section 3817d, "sold to the State for delinquent taxes." (Italics ours.) Citing Sawyer v. Berkeley Securities Co., 99 Cal.App. 545, 279 P. 217, and Ducey v. Dambacher, 27 Cal.App.2d 658, 81 P.2d 597.

[1] These cases, cited by appellant, do not aid us in arriving at what the legislature intended in enacting section 3817d. A case more in point is Kipp v. Billingham, 217 Cal. 527, at page 528, 20 P.2d 318, at page 319, where the court said: "The purpose of the notice is to give the taxpayer an opportunity to pay his taxes before the title, by operation of law, passes from him. Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 90 P. 936. While we use an expression denoting that he is divested of title, it is not literally true where the deed is not to be issued until after five years have elapsed. It is said in Santa Barbara County v. Savings & Loan Soc., 137 Cal. 463, 70 P. 457, 458: 'Such sale vests an equitable title in the state, and at the expiration of five years, if the property is not redeemed in the meantime, the deed of the tax collector to the state vests in it the legal title, and the controller may then direct the tax collector to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at a sum not less than all the delinquent taxes, penalties, and interest.'"

[2,3] As we view the matter, it is quite clear to us that when the legislature used the language "except property sold to the State for delinquent taxes in the year 1930, or at any time prior to 1930," it referred to the sale by operation of law mentioned in section 3771. It is a matter of common knowledge that in the publication of every delinquent tax list there is a statement, as required by section 3767, that on a date fixed the property "will, by operation of law, be sold to the state." (Italics ours.) To uphold appellant's contention we would have to believe that the legislature, in 1937, intended to pass a law preventing the sale at public auction of land upon which taxes had not been paid since 1925, a period of twelve years. Had the legislature so intended, it could very easily have said so. The great majority of taxpayers understand that if they permit their taxes to become delinquent, the property assessed is "sold to the State" and we believe that the only reasonable construction of the statute here involved is that the legislature intended that any property sold to the state under section 3771 in 1930, or prior thereto, even though deeded to the state under section 3785 after 1930, was subject to sale under section 3897.

Appellant's second contention is that respondent's tax title is void "because the descriptions contained in the 1926 assessment roll, in the 1927 delinquent tax list, in the Addenda Sale Notice attached to the 1932 delinquent tax list, and in the Notice of Sale of May 9, 1938, given by the tax collector of Fresno County pursuant to section 3897 of the Political Code, are insufficient, invalid and void."

The property herein involved is described in the 1926 assessment roll as follows: "East Coalinga Oilfields, Lots 48, 56, 66, Blk. 8, sec. 30 Twp. 19 S. Range 16 East." In the 1927 delinquent tax list the property in question is described as: "East Coalinga Oil Fields, Lots 48, 56, and 66, Block 8."

In the Addenda Notice of Sale at public auction of property for delinquent taxes of 1926, attached to the 1932 delinquent tax list, the property is described as: "East Coalinga Oilfields, Lots 48, 56, 66 Block 8, Sec. 30, Twp. 19 S., Rg. 16 E."

In the Notice of Sale of property of the state given by the tax collector pursuant to section 3897, the property is described as "East Coalinga Oilfields, sec. 30, Twp. 19 S., Rg. 16 E., Lots 48, 56, 66, Block 8."

Appellant contends that all of the foregoing descriptions are uncertain and void, and cites numerous cases in support of his contention.

Section 3650 of the Political Code provides for the contents of the assessor's assessment book and states that it must show, among other things,: "Land, by township, range, section, or fractional section; and when such land is not a congressional division, or subdivision, by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify it." (Italics ours.)

Section 3897 of the Political Code requires that the Notice of Sale of real property thereunder shall contain "a description of the property to be sold, sufficient for identification."

[4] The true test to be applied in this case is to determine whether or not the various descriptions of the property are sufficient to identify the property. The question of sufficiency is a question of fact to be determined by the court from the evidence.

In Lummer v. Unruh, 25 Cal.App. 97, at page 104, 142 P. 914, at page 916, the court said: "Says Mr. Cooley in his work on Taxation: 'The designation of the land will be sufficient if it affords the owner a means of identification and does not positively mislead him, or is not calculated to mislead him.' To the same effect are the decisions of the Supreme Court of this state. See Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. [733] 736, 78 P. 293; San Francisco v. Pennie, 93 Cal. 465, 29 P. 66; [City and County of] of San Francisco v. Flood, 64 Cal. 504, 2 P. 264." See also, Numitor Gold Mining Co. v. Katzer, 83 Cal.App. 161, 256 P. 464; Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 733, 736, 78 P. 293.

In the case at bar, plaintiff's complaint described the property as: "Lots 48, 56 and 66, in Block 8, Lots 95 to 98, inclusive, in Block 9, as said lots and blocks are laid down and delineated upon the Map of the East Coalinga Oil Fields, Fresno County, California, being a subdivision of the Southwest quarter of Section 30, Township 19, South, Range 16 east, M. D. B. & M. Surveyed June 1919 by T. F. Harrold, C. E. Said map having been filed for record July 15, 1919 in Volume 8, pages 50 to 54 of Plats, in the office of the County Recorder of Fresno County, California."

In the deed from Wm. A. Radford, Jr., to appellant, introduced in evidence by appellant, the property is described the same as in the complaint. The evidence thus shows that there was a recorded map of East Coalinga Oilfields and that the land could easily be identified in the various steps of the tax proceedings, as the lots and block and section were correctly stated. Furthermore, the evidence shows that at least twenty notices containing the description of the property, as stated on the assessment roll, were sent to Wm. A. Radford, Jr., prior to the tax sale in 1938.

[5] We believe that the record in this case is ample to satisfy the requirement of section 3897, and of the other sections, that the description of the property should be "sufficient to identify it."

The fourth contention urged by appellant is that the Notice of Sale of June 2, 1938, did not set forth the correct name of the taxpayer and that the tax sale and respondent's deed are, therefore, void.

Section 3897 provides that the Notice of Sale published and mailed shall "contain the name of the person to whom the property was assessed, on the county assessment roll for each year on which there may be delinquent taxes against said property."

The Notice of Sale pursuant to section 3897, here attacked, as published in the newspaper and as mailed to Wm. A. Radford, Jr., and received by him, stated that the property was assessed to Wm. A. Bradford, Jr., for the fiscal years 1926 to 1932, inclusive.

In construing a similar requirement contained in section 3785, our supreme court, in the case of Henderson v. De Turk, 164 Cal. 296, at page 297, 128 P. 747, said:

"Defendant claims solely under a deed from the state based on a sale and alleged deed to the state on account of delinquent taxes. The deed to the state recited the name of the person assessed as 'E. W. Davies,' while the assessment was to 'E. W. Davis.'

"The law in force both at the time of the sale and the time of the execution of the deed provided that the deed to the state must recite, among other things, 'the name of the person assessed.' Section 3785, Pol.Code. This means, of course, the name of the person assessed as it appears upon the assessment roll. It has uniformly been held in this state that a tax deed which misrecites or omits to recite any one of the facts required by the statute to be recited has no effect at all as a conveyance, the theory being that it is competent for the Legislature to prescribe the form of instrument which, as the result of a proceeding in invitum can alone divest the citizen of his title, and that, where the statute prescribes the particular form of the tax deed, the form becomes substance, and must be strictly pursued, and it is not for the courts to inquire whether the required recitals are of material facts or otherwise. See Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 564, 89 P. 352, and cases there cited. The particular point here involved was decided in Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522, where the assessment was to 'Charles Grimm,' and the tax deed recited that the property was assessed to 'Charles Grimm and all owners or claimants known or unknown.' It was held, upon the theory above stated, that the deed was void because it failed to correctly recite the name of the person assessed. There are other decisions holding that any such deed is void when it misrecites or omits to recite any one of the facts required by statute to be recited therein, and there is no decision laying down a different rule. As is substantially said in respondent's petition for a rehearing, these decisions constitute a rule of property from which the court should not depart.

"The deed cannot be held valid by applying the rule of idem sonans, if we are to adhere to the ruling in Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 465, 27 P. 356. There the assessment was to 'Castero,' while the owner's name was 'Castro.' The court said: 'It is not a case to which the rule of idem sonans applies. Tax proceedings are in invitum, and, to be valid, must closely follow the statute, and idem sonans applies to cases of pleas of misnomer and issues of identity, where the question is whether the change of letters alters the sound—not to assessments and other cases of description, where the written name is material. "Different letters will make different names, though the sound be the same." The deed to Pollard described the land sold as having been assessed to "Castro," and does not purport to be made in pursuance of an assessment to "Castero."' While there is a diversity of opinion in other jurisdictions on this point, we think this ruling should be followed in this state." See, also, Bruschi v. Cooper, 30 Cal.App. 682, 159 P. 728, 734; Cooley on Taxation, vol. 3, p. 2801; Clayton v. Schultz, 22 Cal.App.2d 72, 70 P.2d 512.

[6] Respondent, in answer to appellant's argument, contents himself with the very brief statement that appellant has cited cases "which would purport to hold that a slight misspelling of the taxpayer's name in the notice of sale is fatally defective" and respondent cites the case of Bell v. Fee Title Co., 69 Cal.App. 437, 231 P. 598, where it is held that the fact that the notice of sale contained the owner's name spelled Leonide Ducommun, while the deed showed the name to be spelled Leonide Ducommen did not render the tax sale void. Respondent asserts that this case "is to the effect that delinquent taxpayers cannot rely on such a trivial mistake to defeat the purpose of tax legislation," and respondent calls attention to the fact that the record shows that the tax owner received the notice of sale mailed to him. We do not believe that appellant's contention and authorities on this point can be brushed aside thus lightly. Respondent has cited no authority, and we have been unable to find any, holding that the fact that the tax owner received the notice mailed to him served to cure errors or omissions occurring in the published notice. It cannot reasonably be argued that Wm. A. Radford, Jr., and Wm. A. Bradford, Jr., are not entirely different names.

[7,8] It is clear from the authorities that it has become a fixed rule of property in California that in proceedings to sell property for unpaid taxes, no requirement of the statute can be disregarded, and that parties who purchase properties at tax sales acquire the title to the property purchased only if all the proceedings for the levy of taxes and the sale are in strict conformity to the requirements of the various statutes governing the same. Tax proceedings in California are in invitum and are strictly construed. Galbreath v. Dingley, 43 Cal.App.2d 330, 110 P.2d 697; Jordan v. Beale, 172 Cal. 226, 155 P. 990; Warden v. Ratterree, 215 Cal. 215, 9 P.2d 215, 86 A.L.R. 1204; Knoke v. Swan, 2 Cal.2d 630, 42 P.2d 1019, 97 A.L.R. 841.

[9] In view of the authorities hereinbefore referred to, we must conclude that the failure of the tax collector to correctly state in the notice of sale the name of the person to whom the property was assessed, was an omission and irregularity which rendered the tax sale invalid and is fatal to the title of respondent, which is based upon a deed issued at said sale.

Appellant raises several additional points, but because the point just discussed is fatal to the judgment it is not necessary to prolong this opinion unduly by discussing them.

The judgment is reversed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 152

SMITH et al. v. YOUNG.

Civ. 13272.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

1. Judgment ⇐443(3)

Finding that defendants in an action in municipal court were prevented from making their defense because they "believed" that nothing further would be done by plaintiff, together with fact that two automobiles attached by plaintiff were released from the writ of attachment, even though coupled with production of receipt for amount sued for, was insufficient to establish "extrinsic fraud" of plaintiff precluding defendants from their day in court, so as to justify vacating the judgment.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Extrinsic Fraud".

2. Judgment ⇐435

A judgment vacating a municipal court judgment could not be sustained on ground of "mistake of fact", notwithstanding introduction in evidence of a receipt for amount recovered in the judgment, where the findings did not determine ultimate fact whether account had or had not been paid, since the receipt, although evidence tending to show payment, was not conclusive.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mistake of Fact".

3. Appeal and error ⇐1122(3)

Where several of the most important issues which were presented to trial court had not been made the subject of findings, and it appeared that a determination thereof would entail an extended hearing, District Court of Appeal would not indulge the powers granted it by constitution to make additional findings on appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 956a, Const. art. 6, § 4¾.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Suit by George W. Smith and another against E. M. Young to vacate a municipal court judgment on ground of extrinsic fraud. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Roy A. Linn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hugh G. Maddox, of Long Beach, for respondents.

SCHAUER, Presiding Justice.

This is a suit in equity to vacate a judgment of the municipal court on the ground of extrinsic fraud. Issue was joined on the complaint and the answer. This appeal upon the judgment roll alone is well taken in that the findings do not support the judgment.

Paragraphs VI, VII, VIII, IX, and X of the complaint comprise allegations that the account sued upon in the municipal court action had been paid before the action was filed, that a receipt evidencing such payment had been given to plaintiff herein Geo. W. Smith (defendant therein), that when summons was served in such municipal court action the defendant Smith exhibited such receipt to the attorney for the plaintiff in that action, told him that his (Smith's) attorney was out of the city and was told by such attorney for the plaintiff that "a mistake had been made * * * that it would not be necessary for him to consult his attorney, as he intended doing nothing further in the said action; and that at said time and place [such attorney for the municipal court plaintiff] executed and delivered to the plaintiff * * * a release of the property theretofore attached in said action; and * * * then and there represented * * * that if the said Geo. W. Smith was willing to drop the matter that he would also. * * * That the aforesaid representations [made by the attorney] were untrue, and were made in order to influence the plaintiff to prevent him from interposing his defense to said action. * * * That the plaintiffs [defendants therein] relied upon said representations * * * in that they failed to file their answers in said action."

The answer in this action denies each and all of the recited allegations of the complaint, but the trial court made no finding of fact on any of such issues except that it found that plaintiff Geo. W. Smith did go to the office of the attorney for the plaintiff in the municipal court action, did exhibit a receipt in the form of a statement for the account endorsed "paid in full," and that a release of attachment of two automobiles was given to Mr. Smith by the attorney. The trial court also found that plaintiffs here "were prevented from filing an answer and offering a defense to said Municipal Court action by reason of the fact that the defendants George W. Smith and Mary E. B. Smith believed that when the cars were released from the writ of attachment * * * that nothing further would be done in said Municipal Court action."

[1, 2] The issues upon which no findings were made were material and the mere finding that plaintiffs "were prevented" from making their defense because they "believed" that nothing further would be done is insufficient to support the judgment on the theory of fraud in that it does not establish fraud, extrinsic or otherwise, in the inducement of such belief. The fact that a release of attachment was given, even though coupled with production of the receipt, certainly does not, in the absence of further facts, even tend to establish an effort to preclude plaintiffs from their day in court, to mislead them, or otherwise to show fraud. (For a definition of extrinsic fraud see Godfrey v. Godfrey, 1939, 30 Cal.App.2d 370, 379, 86 P.2d 357, and cases there cited.) Likewise the judgment cannot be sustained on the ground of mistake of fact because, aside from the fact that the complaint pleads fraud, not mistake, the findings do not determine the ultimate fact whether the account had or had not been paid; the receipt was evidence tending to show payment but was not conclusive. In the absence of a finding that the account had been paid the conclusion that it would be unconscionable to enforce the municipal court judgment is untenable. See Wattson v. Dillon, 1936, 6 Cal.2d 33, 40, 56 P.2d 220.

[3] As several of the most important issues which were presented to the trial court have not been the subject of findings and as the determination thereof would apparently entail an extended hearing, this is not a proper case for us to indulge the powers granted by section 4¾ of article VI of the Constitution. Code Civ.Proc., § 956a. See Tupman v. Haberkern, 1929, 208 Cal. 256, 269, 280 P. 970.

The judgment is reversed.

SHINN, J., and PARKER, WOOD, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 111

IDEN et al. v. ZEEMAN CLOTHING CO., Inc., et al.

Civ. 2914.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1942.

1. Negligence ⇐136(27)

Whether forgetfulness of a known danger shows want of ordinary care so as to constitute negligence is a "question of fact".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

2. Negligence ⇐135

In action against proprietor of store and owner of building in which it was operated for injuries sustained by customer while leaving ladies' rest room, which opened from a hallway through center of the building, finding that customer, who had without difficulty entered rest room, the floor of which was 8¼ inches above the hallway floor, was guilty of negligence in leaving which was the proximate cause of fall to hallway floor and resulting injuries, was supported by substantial evidence.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)

An appellate court will not disturb trial court's finding of fact, if supported by substantial evidence in the record.

4. Negligence ⇐134(5)

In action against proprietor of store and owner of building in which it was operated for injuries sustained by customer while leaving ladies' rest room, which opened from a hallway through the center of building, finding that premises were not negligently maintained was supported by substantial evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank A. Leonard, Judge.

Action by Josephine Lewis Iden and W. A. Iden against Zeeman Clothing Company, Incorporated, and others for personal injuries sustained by first named plaintiff as the result of a fall in a store. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Upon the death of W. A. Iden pending the appeal, Josephine Lewis Iden was appointed special administratrix of his estate and was substituted in the action in such capacity.

Judgment affirmed.

N. C. Peters and R. Bruce Findlay, both of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Victor Hyatt, Donald E. Ruppe, and C. W. Bowers, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Zeeman Clothing Co., Inc.

Joe Crider, Jr., Clarence B. Runkle, and Stephen J. Grogan, all of Los Angeles, for respondent M. J. Connell, Inc.

WEST, Justice pro tem.

The appeal herein was taken by plaintiffs from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendants. Following the institution of the appeal, the plaintiff and appellant, W. A. Iden, died, and Josephine Lewis Iden was appointed special administratrix of his estate, and was substituted in the action in such capacity. Plaintiffs instituted the action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff Josephine Lewis Iden, which were alleged to have been caused by negligence on the part of the defendants. Defendants by their answer denied that they were guilty of any negligence which had caused injury or damage to plaintiffs, and as an affirmative defense alleged that any injuries sustained by plaintiffs had been contributed to, directly and proximately by negligence upon the part of the plaintiff Josephine Lewis Iden.

Respondent M. J. Connell, Inc., was at the time of the accident the owner of a business building in the city of Los Angeles. Respondent Zeeman Clothing Company, Inc., was a tenant of the building and operated a retail clothing store on the fourth floor thereof. On February 6, 1939, plaintiffs, who were husband and wife, visited the Zeeman store for the purpose of purchasing merchandise. While in the Zeeman premises, Mrs. Iden had occasion to go to the ladies' rest room, which opened from a hallway proceeding through the center of the building. She procured a key, proceeded to the door of the rest room and unlocked the door. The floor of the rest room was 8¼ inches above the floor of the adjacent hallway, and the step was negotiated by a single rise, there being no intermediate step or landing between the two floor levels. The door from the hall into the rest room opened inward, the edge of the step being almost flush with the north wall of the hallway. Directly across the hall from the rest room door was located the salesroom of a business concern which had frosted glass windows in the partition facing the hall and through which some light entered the hall. Other illumination was afforded from a skylight located several feet along the hallway from the rest room door. The door also had a panel of frosted glass. Several light fixtures hung from the ceiling along the hallway, each fixture containing a 60 watt lamp. The cement floor and baseboard of the hall were gray in color. The plastered walls of the hall were cream or tan and the floor of the rest room itself was of neutral color. At the time of the accident the light in the rest room was not lighted, and whether or not the ceiling lamps in the hallway were turned on was disputed. The sufficiency of illumination in the hall generally was also a point of contention.

Mrs. Iden proceeded safely into the rest room after unlocking the door, and stepping up to the elevated floor of the rest room from the hallway. Shortly thereafter, when she was ready to leave the rest room, she opened the door and fell into the hallway, sustaining serious injuries.

The case was tried before the court without a jury. Upon the conclusion of the trial, the court made findings that defendants were not guilty of negligence in the maintenance of the premises; that plaintiffs were guilty of negligence in that Mrs. Iden negligently failed to look where she was walking or stepping at the time that she fell, and judgment was duly entered in favor of the defendants.

Appellants contend that the findings of the trial court were not supported by the evidence. They contend that the premises where the accident took place were being maintained at the time of the accident in violation of the provisions of the municipal safety ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, and therefore defendants were guilty of negligence as a matter of law. They further urged that the evidence disclosed a failure on the part of respondents to provide sufficient illumination in the hallway adjacent to the door of the rest room, and finally, while conceding that appellant Josephine Lewis Iden momentarily forgot that it was necessary to step down from the rest room into the hall, that such momentary forgetfulness upon her part did not constitute negligence under the facts of the case.

Referring first to the last contention, appellants call attention to the case of Giraudi v. Electric Improvement Company, 107 Cal. 120, 40 P. 108, 110, 28 L.R.A. 596, 48 Am. St.Rep. 114, where the rule is stated as follows: "It is said that, if one was aware of a fact which should have put him upon his guard, he cannot rebut the presumption of contributory negligence by showing that he momentarily forgot it. This is true as a general proposition, but, like all other rules upon this subject, it must have a reasonable construction. To forget is not negligence, unless it shows the want of ordinary care, and it is a question for the jury."

[1] The purport of the foregoing excerpt is that forgetfulness of a known danger may or may not show want of ordinary care, and whether it does or not is a question of fact. The following cases enunciate the same rule: Roseberry v. Edward F. Niehaus & Co., 166 Cal. 481, 137 P. 232; Oles v. Kahn Bros., 81 Cal.App. 76, 253 P. 158; Smith v. Southern Pacific Co., 201 Cal. 57, 255 P. 500.

[2, 3] The trial court found that appellants' conduct amounted to negligence which was the proximate cause of her fall and resulting injuries. In our opinion there was substantial evidence to support such finding. It is elementary that where there is evidence in the record giving substantial support to the finding under attack, an appellate court will not disturb such finding.

[4] In view of what has just been said, there is no occasion to dwell on the contention of appellants that there was inadequate illumination in the hallway at the point where the fall took place. It is sufficient to observe that appellant admitted that she had no difficulty in finding her way to the door of the rest room, finding the keyhole and inserting the key therein, nor was there any evidence that she had any difficulty in determining that it was necessary for her to step up from the hallway to the rest room level. From all the facts the court found that the premises were not negligently maintained, and we are of the opinion that there was substantial evidence to support the finding.

In view of the foregoing, it is unnecessary to consider the application of the city ordinance of the city of Los Angeles respecting the maintenance of office buildings.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

MOORE et al. v. CALIFORNIA OREGON POWER CO.

Civ. 6648.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 23, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐934(1)

On appeal from judgment for defendant notwithstanding verdict for plaintiffs, if there was evidence of sufficient substantiality to support the verdict in favor of plaintiffs it must be upheld, otherwise the judgment appealed from must stand.

2. Waters and water courses ⇐137, 138

The right asserted by upper riparian proprietor to detain, regulate, and artificially control the entire flow of a river in operation of power facilities was an "appropriative right", constituted an actionable invasion of the riparian rights of the lower owner, and notwithstanding the waters would be ultimately returned to stream bed below the appropriator's plant and above lower proprietor's diversion ditch, and continued exercise of such right for five years established it by prescription.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Appropriative Right".

3. Waters and water courses, 151, 152(3)

A riparian owner may not enjoin the use by an appropriator of excess waters, but he may still lose his rights unless he acts to have them declared before an adverse use ripens into a right. Const. art. 14, § 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; Arthur Coats, Judge Assigned.

Action by C. F. Moore and another against the California Oregon Power Company for damages for an alleged violation of riparian rights. From a judgment for defendant notwithstanding verdict for $7,500 for plaintiffs, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Hearing granted; CARTER, J., not participating.

Carter, Barrett & Carlton, of Redding, for appellants.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison and Jas. S. Moore, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

COMSTOCK, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs by this action originally sought both an injunction and damages for an alleged violation of riparian rights. The prayer for an injunction was abandoned in view of the public use to which the defendant puts the water of the river in question and the issues as to damages were submitted to a jury which returned a verdict in plaintiffs' favor for $7,500. Defendant, having moved for a nonsuit and for a directed verdict and these motions having been denied, moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. This motion was granted and judgment was entered in favor of the defendant. Plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment.

The controversy arises from the acts of the defendant public utility corporation in the operation of a power plant on the Klamath River in which said defendant claims the right to impound, regulate and control the flow of the river for the generation of electric energy for sale to the public.

The Klamath River has its principal source in Klamath Lake in Oregon, which is fed by the Sprague and Williamson Rivers. In their natural state the rivers of this region are heavily influenced by winter rains and melting snows and the natural summer flow is much lower than in the winter and spring. Defendant maintains a storage dam at the outlet of Upper Klamath Lake, known as the Link River Dam, which was completed in 1921. This dam makes of Upper Klamath Lake a seasonal storage reservoir, accumulating the heavy run-off of the fall, winter and spring for release during the dry months of the summer. The United States Government exercises certain superior rights of control over the amount of water permitted to be drawn from the lake by the defendant, to protect irrigation requirements of government projects dependent on the lake for their water. Heavy irrigation requirements occur from about May to September of each year, although the demand for water may arise earlier and be subject to change in exceptionally dry seasons.

Among other of its works, defendant operates a dam and generating plant at a place known as Copco in Siskiyou County, California, some miles above plaintiffs' lands. This project was initiated about 1909 or 1911 by defendant's predecessors. Notices of appropriation were posted and recorded in each of those years. A dam was built across the river to a height of 113 feet and the first unit of the power plant known as Copco No. 1 was installed in 1917 and placed in operation in 1918. In 1922 the dam was raised to a height of 126 feet and an additional unit was installed, making two units at Copco No. 1 with a total capacity of 25,000 kilowatts. The plant here has existed and been in operation without change since 1922. In 1925 a plant known as Copco No. 2 was installed downstream from Copco No. 1 for the purpose of utilizing the water after it passes through the No. 1 plant. Copco No. 2 does not detain or impound water or otherwise affect the flow of the river.

The reservoir at the Copco plant has a total storage capacity of about 80,000 acre feet. The plant is of the high-head type. To obtain the necessary head for efficient operation of the generators, the upper five feet of water only is normally used, the outlets being located near the top of the dam and the upper 5,000 feet being drawn upon.

A large part of northern California is supplied with electric energy through defendant's facilities. When the works at Copco were constructed it was a widely-publicised project and a matter of common notoriety throughout the locality.

Upon the completion of the dam in 1917 the entire flow of the river was cut off for a period of about three weeks while the reservoir was being filled. Subsequently on numerous occasions in further construction, and in repair and maintenance the river has been completely shut off. In the production of energy, defendant's method of operation has continuously been to impound and release water according to the extent of the demands of its customers upon its facilities.

Plaintiffs originally took possession of the property described in the complaint in 1927 under a contract of sale. A deed was delivered to them after the commencement of this action in 1934, and in 1938, before the trial, they disposed of the property. The entire property is a ranch of about 400 acres, of which about 240 acres are riparian to the Klamath River. Prior to 1931 plaintiffs, during the period of their occupancy, had been using the water for beneficial purposes, irrigating about 70 acres of land and growing alfalfa and a garden thereon. They took water from the river at a point about 1½ miles upstream from their land, by means of a ditch, which is about 4 feet wide and 2½ feet deep and of uniform size from its head to plaintiffs' land. Copco No. 1 dam is located about 8½ miles upstream from the head of plaintiffs' ditch.

The complaint points exclusively to defendant's Copco plant as the objectionable operation. Certain pertinent parts of the complaint are to the following effect: That said defendant, among other of its works, owns, operates and maintains at Copco, California, a hydro-electric power and generating plant on the Klamath River some miles northerly from plaintiffs' land and at that place operates and maintains its power-generating plant and has there constructed and erected and maintains a concrete dam across the natural channel and course of said Klamath River for the purpose of impounding and confining the waters of said river to be used and employed in the generation and manufacture of electrical power and current; that by means of said dam the defendant can and does, for the purposes aforesaid, regulate and control the natural flow of the waters of said river and more particularly during the irrigating season thereof which extends from the month of May to the following September or later, depending upon seasonal conditions; that during said irrigating season the waters and the natural flow of said river is lower than at other seasons of the year; that by reason of the impounding and confining of the waters of said stream and the regulation and control thereof, the said defendant by its acts frequently reduces the flow of said stream to a minimum during said irrigating season and thereby and by reason thereof deprives the plaintiffs from diverting any of the waters of said river through their ditches for the purpose of irrigating said land; that the impounding and confinement and such harnessing, regulation and control of the natural flow of the waters of said stream is and ever has been unreasonable and in violation of plaintiffs' natural rights to the natural flow of the waters of said stream; that as riparian owners of said tract of land the plaintiffs have and of right ought to have the free, natural and unobstructed flow of the waters of said river upon and adjoining their premises; that the climate at the location of said lands is very dry and the annual rainfall is very slight and said lands unless irrigated otherwise than by natural rainfall are unfit for cultivation and pasturage; that the soil of said land is fertile and by irrigation can be rendered very productive; that during the fall, winter and spring months of each year there is a large increase in the volume of water flowing down the Klamath River other than that which ordinarily flows therein during other portions of the year; that the increased flow of water which comes down said river at such times has, from time immemorial, except as the waters of said river have been wrongfully diverted by defendant, caused said river to overflow its banks and to cover with such overflow an extended area of said land; that the waters causing and constituting such overflow have each year brought down from the mountains and valleys, through which said river flows, quantities of material which it has by said overflow deposited on said land; that the material so brought down by the floods to said land has fertilized and enriched said lands and has caused the said lands annually to yield increased crops of grass and cereals and has largely increased the value of said lands; that such annual overflow and flooding of said lands has also wet and irrigated said lands so that they would without further irrigation produce and have produced large and valuable crops of grass and cereals and do maintain and have maintained abundant pasturage and feed for stock; that without such flood and overflow said lands unless otherwise artificially irrigated would have produced little or no grass, feed or other crops; that the increase in the volume of water so flowing down said river causes a greatly increased percolation of said waters to the bank of said river into and through all of said lands belonging to plaintiffs and below the surface or soil thereof and has thereby so irrigated said lands that they would without further irrigation produce and have produced large and valuable crops of grass, cereals and pasturage which would not otherwise have been produced on said lands; that the plaintiffs, their grantors and predecessors in interest under their rights as riparian proprietors in said Klamath River and by virtue of their ownership of said lands bordering on the channel of said river have for more than twenty years last past used and are now using the waters of said river, except as such use has been wrongfully interfered with by said defendants as hereinabove alleged for watering of stock, domestic and agricultural purposes for which an owner of land bordering on a stream has a right to use the waters thereof; that any rights of the defendant to the waters of said stream are subsequent to the rights of plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest as riparian owners to the waters of said river, and that the said power plant and dam were built and constructed by defendant long after plaintiffs' said premises were brought under cultivation and irrigated by the waters of said river by plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest; that the only source of water which plaintiffs have for the irrigation of their lands is from the aforesaid Klamath River to which plaintiffs' said tract of land is appurtenant and riparian; that for many years last past the plaintiffs have been unable to profitably cultivate and irrigate their said lands by reason of the confinement and control of the waters of the said Klamath River by said defendant which resulted in a deprivation to plaintiffs of said waters for irrigation purposes and in denial of plaintiffs' said rights as riparian owners; that the same has greatly damaged plaintiffs and has rendered their said lands worthless for agricultural purposes for which the same are principally valuable and to which purpose they have been devoted since on or prior to the year 1877; that by reason of the premises and the acts of the defendant the said lands have been rendered dry and sterile and that the value thereof has been greatly and irreparably reduced in this, that with water available for the irrigation thereof for the raising of crops of hay and grain and the furnishing of pasturage the value of the same is at least six times greater than the value of the lands deprived of their riparian water rights and of the water for irrigation thereof; that by reason of the manipulation of the waters of said Klamath River by said defendant the plaintiffs are being deprived and will be deprived of the natural fertilization of their said lands by the flood waters of said Klamath River and the natural irrigation of said lands accomplished by the natural flow of the waters of said Klamath River and of the natural irrigation of said lands resulting from the seepage and percolation of said waters through the bank of said river into and through said lands below the surface of the soil thereof which would be the natural course without interference by defendant; that in case the defendant continues to impound, confine, harness, regulate, control and manipulate the waters of said Klamath River plaintiffs will be deprived of their rights to have the natural flow of the waters of said Klamath River through, over, across, by, upon and past their said riparian lands and will be deprived of the natural irrigation of their said lands by said water and by reason thereof plaintiffs will suffer great and irreparable damage and injury.

[1] It appears from the briefs and from the record that the principal and probably the sole ground upon which the lower court granted the motion and rendered its judgment, notwithstanding the verdict, is that the evidence shows without substantial conflict that the defendant obtained and owns a prescriptive right to impound, detain, regulate and control the entire flow of the river, if necessary, in operating its plant for the purpose of generating electric energy for sale to the public in accordance with such demands as its customers may make upon its facilities, which right is paramount to plaintiffs' rights as lower riparian owners. This defense was properly pleaded by the defendant. On settled principles, if there was evidence of sufficient substantiality to support the verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, it must be upheld; otherwise the judgment appealed from must stand.

There is no controversy between the parties in respect to the period of limitation of actions which applies, the plaintiffs asserting and the defendant admitting that the superior right claimed by it depends upon its having taken the water for a continuous period of five years under conditions sufficient to fulfill all of the requirements of title by prescription. Defendant's claim is that the use ripened into an adverse right in 1927, its control of the river having been exercised continuously, adversely and under a claim of right since 1922.

Appellants admit that they have lost the right to the nighttime, Sunday and holiday use of the water, but contend that until 1931 there was no invasion of their right to the daytime use of the water in sufficient quantity to meet their needs and that their cause of action did not arise until that year; that having brought their action in 1933 they are in time. Their position in this respect is summed up in the following statement quoted from their brief:

"In the first place, the evidence establishes beyond quibble that, although defendant constructed all of its dams but one prior to five years before the commencement of this action, there was an ample supply of water flowing in the river to meet plaintiffs' needs before 1931, but after 1931 there has been no water available to plaintiffs. The injury to plaintiffs or the taking of the property occurred in 1931, and plaintiffs, not having any cause of action until the taking or the injury, their cause of action did not accrue until 1931; and they commenced their action in 1933."

This is a wide departure from the allegations in the complaint, heretofore referred to, wherein the substance and effect of plaintiffs' charge was that the invasion of their rights consisted in the facts that defendant had constructed and was maintaining at Copco a dam and hydro-electric generating plant whereby it could and did, for the purpose of generation and manufacture of electrical power and current, impound, confine, regulate and control the waters of the river, both winter and summer, in violation of plaintiffs' natural rights to the free, natural and unobstructed flow thereof, as they and their predecessors in interest had enjoyed and used them for more than twenty years last past, except as wrongfully interfered with by defendants, for watering of stock and domestic and agricultural purposes. But passing any consideration of the admissions of the pleading as to the nature and character of the defendant's claim and use of the water, we shall examine appellants' contentions as to the effect of the evidence apart from the admissions and the application of the law thereto.

[2] The gist of appellants' claim is that since they personally were accustomed to and desired only to do their irrigating during certain times of the day when between 1927 and 1931 they had found sufficient water flowing in the river to satisfy this need, they were not injured until there was in 1931 an actual, physical interruption of this limited time and method of use. The argument proceeds upon the general principle that in order to establish a right by prescription, the acts by which it is sought to establish it must operate as an invasion of the right of the party against whom it is set up. The principle is well enough established, but the facts in the case at bar are such that the rule aids the respondent rather than appellants. Here the controversy is between a lower owner of riparian lands who did not possess the lands until long after the acts of the defendant in impounding and controlling the flow of the entire stream commenced, and an upper appropriator adversely claiming the right to harness and regulate the entire flow at will for the production and sale of power and to engage extensively in a large and permanent public enterprise. It is not a dispute between riparian owners as such. Whether there has been an invasion of rights giving rise to a cause of action must depend upon the nature, character and extent of the use and adverse rights asserted. The evidence shows, without contradiction, that since 1922 when the Copco plant was put in operation the right claimed and the use made by the defendant was to detain, regulate and artificially control the entire flow of the river as was expedient in the operation of its existing facilities for the production of power for sale to the public as a public utility serving a large territory to the extent of the demands upon it, including the myriad of acts inherent in the nature of such an operation. The assertion of such a right and the carrying on of such an enterprise is an invasion of the rights of private lower riparian owners from its inception. Taking into consideration the nature of the country, the stream and the climate, notwithstanding the waters would be ultimately all returned to the stream bed below defendant's plant and above plaintiffs' diversion ditch, the very nature of the undertaking is such that the river would not flow as it was wont to do in a state of nature. As was said in Herminghaus v. Southern California Edison Co., 200 Cal. 81, at page 110, 252 P. 607 at page 619: "* * * as to said waters as a whole and to the extent of their retention in said reservoirs, their ultimate return to the river would depend, not at all upon the claims and asserted rights of lower riparian owners to the usual, natural, and ordinary flow of said waters, but altogether upon the will and convenience of the defendants in their proposed utilization of said waters for power production."

Passing upon one of the claims of the defendants in that case that their right was solely a riparian one and distinguishing those cases which hold that riparian owners as such have a right to use waters for the production of power under certain circumstances and those which deal with a mere temporary detention of water by dams during periods of scant flow, the court said, 200 Cal. at page 111, 252 P. at page 619: "Such cases have no bearing upon such an extensive, prolonged, and indefinite storage, withdrawal, and sequestration of the waters which form the usual and ordinary flow of such a stream as the San Joaquin river to the inevitable detriment of not one but all of the lower riparian owners and users of such waters."

We are convinced that the nature of the right asserted and the use made of the waters of the Klamath River by the defendant here is of the same kind as was involved in the Herminghaus case and that it is well established that such a use is an appropriative one and constitutes an actionable invasion of the riparian rights of the lower owner in a case of the sort here presented. Seneca Consol. Gold Mines Co. v. Great Western Power Co., 209 Cal. 206, 287 P. 93, 70 A.L.R. 210; Colorado Power Co. v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 218 Cal. 559, 24 P.2d 495.

Appellants argue very earnestly that the case of City of San Diego v. Cuyamaca Water Co., 209 Cal. 105, 287 P. 475, supports their position. Also cited are Anaheim Water Co. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., 64 Cal. 185, 30 P. 623; Faulkner v. Rondoni, 104 Cal. 140, 37 P. 883; Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 211 P. 11; Scott v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co., 202 Cal. 47, 258 P. 1095, and certain cases from other jurisdictions. We do not find these cases in point. City of San Diego v. Cuyamaca Water Co., involved certain rights which were governmental in character. Among other things which distinguish it from the case at bar is the principle there involved that no prescriptive right may be gained by adverse use against a governmental body. The other California cases involved the relative rights of riparian owners. Pabst v. Finmand, supra [190 Cal. 124, 211 P. 14], expressly recognizes the doctrine applicable here in the following language: "As to a nonriparian owner the riparian owner is under no duty to share the waters * * * and the slightest use by such nonriparian owner diminishes to some extent the flow of the stream. Obviously, there is no question of reasonable use in the sense in which that term is applied to the rights of respective riparian owners, since a riparian owner, as against a nonriparian owner, is entitled to the full flow of the stream without the slightest diminution. The initial step in the diversion of the water by the nonriparian owner is therefore an invasion of the right of the lower riparian owner, and every subsequent diversion is a further invasion of that right."

It is unnecessary to specifically analyze the other cases mentioned.

[3] It is asserted by appellants that since under the 1928 amendment to section 3, article XIV of the Constitution, and cases construing the effect thereof, they had not right to divert any more water than could be put to present beneficial uses on their property, they had no cause of action until they were deprived of water for which they had and were making an actual present beneficial use, which they say did not occur until 1931. The contention is not sound. While the riparian owner may not enjoin the use by an appropriator of excess waters, he may still lose his rights unless he acts to have them declared before an adverse use ripens into a right. In Peabody v. City of Vallejo, 2 Cal.2d 351, at page 374, 40 P.2d 486, at page 494 the court said: "When there is no substantial infringement of the right, that is, when there is no material diminution of the supply by reason of the exercise of the subsequent right, the owner is entitled to a judgment declaring his preferential and paramount right and enjoining the assertion of an adverse use which might otherwise ripen into a prescriptive right. * * * If the exercise of the appropriative right cause a substantial diminution of the supply the owner is entitled to compensation for the resulting damage to his lands. But the technical infringement of the right is not actionable * * * except to establish priority." See, also, Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist., 3 Cal.2d 489, 45 P.2d 972.

Great reliance is placed by appellants upon the principle that a seasonal or periodical use cannot afford a basis for a prescriptive right to take water continuously, as applied in Northern California Power Co. v. Flood, 186 Cal. 301, 199 P. 315, and Bazet v. Nugget Bar Placers, Inc., 211 Cal. 607, 296 P. 616. The rule referred to has no application here. The distinction is that in the case of the diversion of measured quantities of water for irrigation or mining uses at fixed and determinable intervals, there is no invasion or threatened invasion of the rights of lower riparian owners to quantities beyond those used nor of a use at other periods of time than those appropriated, whereas in such an extensive, prolonged and indefinite withdrawal of waters at all seasons from their accustomed course and flow as is here involved, for nonriparian use, there is inherently present from the time of the initiation of such a claim and use not only the actual harnessing, regulation and control of the entire stream at all times, but a continuing threat to do so, dependent only upon the will of the appropriator and the demands of the public upon the facilities of the utility for the production of so much power as they may require for all of their uses. Naturally and inevitably in such an operation, if the demand for power increase, larger amounts of water must be released from storage if required, followed by periods of accumulation sufficient to build up the supply again and if there be seasons of scant flow it must occur that there are corresponding periods when no water may spill over the dam and all that may flow on down in the natural channel is that which is passed through the generating machinery at the will of the operator. That water reached appellants' ditch during the period of their possession and ownership prior to the shortage of 1931 was but an incident which in no way limited the broad nature and character of use and control claimed and exercised by defendant from the time of completion of its Copco dam to its present height or imposed upon it any duty or obligation to supply appellants' needs.

We have not overlooked appellants' contention that this appeal involves merely a case of conflicting evidence. This contention might have been sound had the case depended upon whether the quantity of water reaching appellants' ditch was regular or irregular in its fluctuations. However, we think it does not turn upon that point but upon the extensive nature and character of the defendant's claim and exercise of the right to control and regulate at will the entire flow of the stream at all times for the purposes of power production and sale, which, as we have stated, constituted an invasion of the riparian rights of the lower owners from the beginning.

The contention that there is substantial evidence that the dam at Keno, above the Copco plant and dam, was responsible for plaintiffs' alleged damages is not borne out by the record: No issue as to this dam is tendered by the pleadings. The evidence on behalf of plaintiffs is to the effect that the fluctuations of flow complained of commenced in May, 1931, and the testimony as to the diminution in value of plaintiffs' property by reason of defendant's acts related to May, 1931. The undisputed evidence is that the Keno dam was not completed until November, 1931. Furthermore, the evidence does not show that the operation of the Keno dam had any effect upon the general control and regulation of the river exercised by defendant through the Copco plant since 1922.

We need not pass upon defendant's contention that plaintiffs' predecessors, and not plaintiffs, owned the cause of action, if any. This is predicated upon the claim that the invasion of the right of the lower riparian owner took place in 1922, and inasmuch as we have already held that it did, and that consequently defendant has established its prescriptive right, that is determinative of the case.

We have carefully considered the other points urged by appellants but find no merit in them and deem it unnecessary to discuss them in detail.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

WALKER v. CITY OF SAN GABRIEL et al.

Civ. 13392.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

As Modified March 20, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 20, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 23, 1942.

1. Licenses ⇐38

Where issuance of license to conduct an automobile wrecking yard was governed by a city ordinance, the power to revoke such license must be found within such ordinance.

2. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

On appeal from judgment of nonsuit in mandamus proceeding to compel reinstatement of a license which was revoked for specified violations contained in letter to city council from chief of police, where not all of ordinance pertaining to such license was contained in record and no proof was made of other city ordinances which regulated the conduct of licensee, in absence of such enactments from the record the appellate court would assume that all the violations specified referred to city ordinances or to provisions of general statutes.

3. Licenses ⇐38

The trial of a licensee by administrative board for revocation of his license is not governed by strict, technical, legal rules, but to afford "due process of law" accused licensee must receive notice of hearing for revocation and must be permitted to testify and to produce his witnesses to defeat the charges brought against him.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

4. Licenses ⇐38

Hearsay testimony alone may support the order of an administrative body revoking a business license, the weight to be given to such testimony being for determination of the board or commission, and it is not necessary that an administrative board should enforce the strict requirement of the hearsay rule which is not indispensable to the administration of justice.

5. Licenses ⇐38

A licensee whose license to operate automobile wrecking yard was revoked by city council was not entitled to invoke the hearsay rule in objection to letter of chief of police which was read in licensee's presence, which letter itemized the numerous violations of law which the chief found had been committed by licensee. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

6. Evidence ⇐83(2)

Every presumption is in favor of the lawful exercise of his duties by chief of police. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

7. Licenses ⇐38

The city council in proceeding to revoke business license was entitled to assume that findings of chief of police with reference to business involved were correct.

8. Constitutional law ⇐318

In proceedings before administrative boards "due process of law" is complied with when the report of an officer or expert appointed especially to investigate, survey and recommend has been filed with the board as a part of the proceedings and upon its presentation and filing the burden shifts to party affected by such report to show that findings of such expert or official are unfounded.

9. Constitutional law ⇐80(3)

Quasi judicial functions may be intrusted to boards, commissions, and agents to the end that ever-increasing complexity of administrative affairs may be simplified and business of complex civilization expedited, and delegation of such powers to a city council or other duly constituted board is authorized.

10. Mandamus ⇐172

A court hearing the application for mandate to secure the restoration of a license, revoked by order of an administrative board of state-wide jurisdiction, is required to exercise an independent judgment and, if requested, grant a trial de novo, but such rule has no application to the review of decisions of an administrative tribunal of local jurisdiction.

11. Municipal corporations ⇐63(1)

Where the act of a local administrative board, such as city council, involves discretion and exercise of judgment concerning a matter of which it has jurisdiction, the courts cannot interfere unless it be shown that the tribunal has exceeded its powers or unless its discretion has been fraudulently or corruptly exercised.

12. Officers ⇐103

The findings of a board, whether of local or state-wide jurisdiction, come before the courts with a strong presumption in their favor based primarily on the disputable presumption contained in statute that official duty has been regularly performed. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

13. Licenses ⇐38

An ordinance authorizing city council to revoke a business license if "satisfied that any condition of the license or terms of this ordinance have been violated" means that the council must honestly determine upon evidence presented to it in an open hearing in presence of licensee that his conduct of licensed premises has violated conditions of his license.

14. Mandamus ⇐174

Where it appeared that satisfactory evidence was presented to city council at an open hearing and in presence of accused licensee that ordinance authorizing the license for operating an automobile wrecking yard and other ordinances had been violated and that licensee was given an opportunity to present his defense, trial court could not interfere with order of the council revoking the license.

15. Municipal corporations ⇐103

An action of the city council is presumed to have been correctly performed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Alfred E. Paonessa, Judge pro tem.

Mandamus proceeding by O. P. Walker against the City of San Gabriel and others to compel the reinstatement of a revoked business license to operate an automobile wrecking yard. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Keller & Smith, of Alhambra, for appellant.

Herbert S. Farrell, of Alhambra, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The question for determination in this case is whether a city council may revoke a business license upon finding (1) that the licensee has violated the statutes and ordinances which regulate his business, and (2) that the continuance of such license would be contrary to the public welfare.

The license of appellant to operate an automobile wrecking yard in the city of San Gabriel having been revoked by the city council, he procured the issuance of an alternative writ of mandate to review the proceedings. The matter came on duly to be heard and resulted in a judgment of nonsuit which comes here on plaintiff's appeal.

Appellant had conducted his business in the same location for the preceding thirteen years. On January 22, 1941, he received from the city clerk a letter which advised him that the city proposed to revoke his license to operate the wrecking yard and that he should appear before the city council six days later. At the time designated he appeared before the council in company with his attorney, Richard J. Keller. When the matter was called up for consideration the attorney stated that appellant was ready, able and willing to produce evidence as to why his license should not be revoked, but that he should first hear the evidence as to why it should be revoked. Thereupon Officer Jorgenson read a communication from the chief of police of San Gabriel setting forth that appellant had been arrested for dismantling a motor vehicle without informing the state; that he had been convicted of dismantling a motor vehicle without notifying the chief of police; that upon an inspection of appellant's yard, it had been discovered that the conditions of his license had been violated by parking in front of his yard two automobiles incapable of being operated under their own power, by having three fire extinguishers not in working condition, and by possessing seven wrecked automobiles concerning which neither the city nor the state had been notified of their dismantling; that Harold L. Walker, a son of appellant, had been cited for parking his tow car in the public alley in the rear of the wrecking yard, thereby creating a traffic hazard in violation of a city ordinance; that upon an inspection of the premises at a later date appellant was warned of three violations of the law; that seven months thereafter, following an inspection, twelve violations had been committed by appellant's parking eight cars in front of his premises on Valley boulevard, a main traffic artery, which cars were not in running condition; that one car was undergoing repair on the highway; that parts of dismantled vehicles extended above the fence surrounding the premises; and that the road west of appellant's premises was used to wreck, repair and store used automobiles, contrary to a city ordinance to one of which violations appellant had pleaded guilty and been fined. In addition to the foregoing, complaints had been made against appellant's methods of operating his wrecking yard, in that the public area in the rear of the yard was constantly being used to repair and test automobiles, creating a public nuisance and a hazard to children. Finally, complaints had been made to the chief of police of the use by appellant's employees and visitors, on the premises, of intoxicants, whose empty bottles lay about the place.

The mayor having requested appellant to produce his proof and having offered to continue the hearing to a later day, Mr. Keller again stated that "until the witnesses making the complaints were presented" and subjected to cross-examination there was no evidence to refute. A vote was thereupon taken by the council, resulting in the unanimous revocation of appellant's license. Three days later he was notified by the city clerk that his business license had been revoked.

When the matter came on for hearing before the superior court Attorney Keller testified that the only evidence presented at the hearing before the city council was the letter from the chief of police, and that following the reading of such letter he had requested that the persons making the charges contained in the letter should be present to testify. Appellant was sworn but was precluded from testifying as to whether any complaints had been made to him with reference to the manner in which he conducted his business. He admitted that at the hearing before the city council that body was ready to hear any evidence that appellant might desire to offer. Also it was established at the trial that appellant had received proper notice of the proceeding to be had before the council and that he had in no way been prevented from introducing his evidence. Thereupon, following argument, respondent's motion for judgment of non-suit was granted.

[1, 2] The issuance of licenses for the operation of such places of business as that conducted by appellant is governed by section 42 of Ordinance 408 of defendant city, which is as follows:

"All licenses issued under this ordinance, or any section thereof, are granted and accepted by all parties receiving licenses with the express understanding that the City Council of said City may revoke the same at any time * * * if satisfied that any condition of the license or terms of this ordinance have been violated * * * or that the holder of any such license is an unfit person to be trusted with the privileges granted by such license; provided, however, that no license shall be revoked * * * without first giving the holder thereof an opportunity to appear before the City Council in his own behalf by notification in writing to the holder of such license, giving and fixing the time and place of such hearing * * *." It follows that the power to revoke the license of appellant must be found within the cited ordinance. Barron v. Board of Dental Examiners, 109 Cal.App. 382, 293 P. 144; Schomig v. Keiser, 189 Cal. 596, 209 P. 550; Cavassa v. Off, 206 Cal. 307, 274 P. 523. Not all of the ordinance is contained in the record. Neither was proof made of other city ordinances which regulate the conduct of a licensee to operate a wrecking yard. In the absence of such enactments from the record we may assume that all of the "violations" specified in the chief's letter referred to city ordinances or to provisions of general statutes.

It is contended by appellant that a business license cannot be revoked without first giving the licensee notice and without granting him a hearing thereon, citing Carter v. Stevens, 211 Cal. 281, 295 P. 28; Irvine v. State Board of Equalization, 40 Cal.App.2d 280, 104 P.2d 847; Martin v. Board of Supervisors, 135 Cal.App. 96, 26 P.2d 843; Abrams v. Daugherty, 60 Cal.App. 297, 212 P. 942; Angelopulos v. Bottorff, 76 Cal.App. 621, 245 P. 447. In the instant case the record shows beyond a peradventure that appellant did receive notice of a hearing; that in response thereto he appeared before the city council at the time appointed; that he was there afforded the opportunity to present his evidence and even a willingness was expressed by the presiding officer to accommodate appellant's convenience by a postponement of the hearing.

[3] The trial of a licensee by an administrative board for the revocation of his license is not governed by strict, technical, legal rules. It is indispensable to a proceeding before an administrative board that the accused licensee receive notice of the hearing which is called for the purpose of considering the revocation of his license, provided that upon his appearance before the board in response thereto he be permitted to testify and to produce his witnesses for the purpose of defeating the charges brought against him and the evidence introduced in support thereof. When these things are done, due process has been complied with and the proceedings of the board are in all respects legal.

[4] It is contended that a license cannot be revoked by the city council upon hearsay evidence, citing Thrasher v. Board of Medical Examiners, 44 Cal.App. 26, 185 P. 1006; Dyment v. Board of Medical Examiners, 93 Cal.App. 65, 268 P. 1073; Martin v. Board of Supervisors, supra. These authorities are not in point. In the cases against the board of medical examiners hearsay evidence was held insufficient as a basis for revoking the medical license for the reason that the statute which created the medical board makes it a quasi judicial tribunal and requires legal proof for the conviction of an accused. In the Martin case the appellant was denied a license without a formal hearing, without the testimony of the appellant and without any legal proof. The hearing was held to be unofficial, arbitrary and irregular. Hearsay testimony alone may support the order of an administrative body. Independent Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 2 Cal. 2d 397, 410, 41 P.2d 320; Sada v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 11 Cal.2d 263, 78 P.2d 1127. The weight to be given to it is for the determination of the board or commission. Sada v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. It is not necessary that an administrative board should enforce the strict requirement of the hearsay rule. That rule is not indispensable to the administration of justice.

[5, 6] But appellant misconceives the nature of such a proceeding as that under review by the trial court. He is not entitled to invoke the hearsay rule in such a proceeding. Upon his request for evidence, the letter from the chief of police was read in his presence. It itemized with meticulous care the numerous violations of the law which that officer found had been committed by appellant. The letter was prepared by the proper officer in the course of his official duties and every presumption is in favor of the lawful exercise of his duties by the chief of police. Code Civ. Proc. 1963, subd. 15; People v. Chambers, 22 Cal.App.2d 687, 719, 72 P.2d 746.

[7, 8] The council was entitled to assume that the findings of the city's principal law enforcing officer with reference to a matter that concerned his official duties were correct. Such findings had the same weight as that accorded to a city electrician who is authorized to determine whether an electrical installation is dangerous and upon whose opinion the city council might act requiring the dangerous condition to be eliminated. Gaylord v. Pasadena, 175 Cal. 433, 166 P. 348. In such proceedings before administrative boards, due process is complied with when the report of an officer or expert, appointed especially to investigate, survey and recommend, has been filed with the board as a part of the proceedings in the matter. There it reposes for the consideration of the board, for the inspection, answer and proof of those under rule to show cause, and for public information. Upon its presentation and filing, the burden shifts to the party affected by such report to show that the findings of such expert or official so reporting are unfounded. In re Willow Creek, 74 Or. 592, 144 P. 505, 146 P. 475; Pacific Live Stock Company v. Lewis, 241 U.S. 440, 454, 36 S.Ct. 637, 60 L.Ed. 1084. In the event the board attempts to act upon the mere ipse dixit of the officer who has made the investigation and survey and without a knowledge of his report and without hearing argument, due process is not complied with and the action taken would be based upon vicious hearsay and not upon facts found to exist. Evidence for a hearing may be taken and analyzed by a competent person duly authorized for the task. Assuming that this has been done and all other constitutional requirements have been complied with and the respondent has been allowed to present his proof, he then has no just ground for complaint. Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Public Utilities Comm., 301 U.S. 292, 57 S.Ct. 724, 81 L.Ed. 1093; Morgan v. United States, 298 U.S. 468, 56 S.Ct. 906, 80 L.Ed. 1288.

[9] It has become a universal rule throughout America that quasi judicial functions may be entrusted to boards, commissions and agents to the end that the ever-increasing complexity of administrative affairs may be simplified and the business of our complex civilization expedited. The delegation of such powers to a city council or other duly constituted board must be done or the wheels of government would be so clogged and the public mind would become so confused that progress would be rendered extremely difficult, if not impossible. Gaylord v. Pasadena, supra.

[10-12] When we consider the extent to which courts may go in reviewing decisions of administrative tribunals, the line of demarcation between review of decisions of boards having statewide jurisdiction and those having only limited, local jurisdiction is clear. A court hearing the application for mandate to secure the restoration of a license, revoked by order of an administrative board of state-wide jurisdiction, is required to exercise an independent judgment and, if requested, grant a trial de novo. Laisne v. California State Board of Optometry, Supreme Court, 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457, decided March 16, 1942. However, as pointed out in the Laisne case, that rule has no application to the review of decisions of administrative tribunals of local jurisdiction. Where the act of a local administrative board, such as the city council, involves discretion in the exercise of judgment concerning a matter of which it has jurisdiction, the courts cannot interfere unless it be shown that the tribunal has exceeded its powers or unless its discretion has been fraudulently or corruptly exercised. Berkeley High School District v. Coit, 7 Cal.2d 132, 137, 59 P.2d 982; Nickerson v. San Bernardino County, 179 Cal. 518, 177 P. 465. The findings of a board, whether of local or state-wide jurisdiction "come before the courts with a strong presumption in their favor based primarily on the disputable presumption contained in section 1963, subsection 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure 'that official duty has been regularly performed.'" Drummey v. State Board, 13 Cal.2d 75, 86, 87 P.2d 848, 854.

[13-15] The city council of San Gabriel was authorized to revoke the license of appellant if "satisfied that any condition of the license or terms of this ordinance have been violated." This means nothing more than that the city council must honestly determine, upon evidence presented to it in an open hearing, in the presence of the licensee, that his conduct of the licensed business has violated the conditions of his license. So long as it is made to appear that satisfactory evidence was presented to the city council, at an opening hearing and in the presence of the accused, showing that the ordinance authorizing the license and other ordinances have been violated, and that the licensee was given an opportunity to present his defense, the trial court was without power to interfere with the order entered by the council revoking the license. Shorr v. City of Azusa, 38 Cal.App. 709, 177 P. 513; City of Stockton v. Frisbie & Latta, 93 Cal.App. 277, 270 P. 270. An action of the city council is presumed to have been correctly performed. City of South Pasadena v. San Gabriel, 134 Cal. App. 403, 417, 25 P.2d 516.

There appearing to have been neither a denial of due process nor an abuse of discretion on the part of the city council in revoking the license of appellant, the order of the trial court in granting the nonsuit is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD, and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 136

McDORMAN v. MOODY.

Civ. 13333.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐854(2)

Judgment which was just was required to be affirmed, notwithstanding the trial court adopted an untenable theory.

2. Corporations ⇐121(5)

In assignee's action to recover balance due under contract for sale of corporate stock, evidence that the assets of the company were not sufficient to justify issuance of permit for any stock and that the company had been adjudged bankrupt sustained finding that stock had not been delivered to buyer and that assignee was not able or ready to deliver stock and precluded recovery.

3. Corporations ⇐121(5)

In assignee's action to recover balance due under contract for sale of corporate stock, where answer denied assignee's allegation that assignee had exercised option to declare remaining unpaid balance due and payable and had demanded payment which had been refused, evidence showing acceleration and demand for payment prior to filing of action was necessary to prove assignee's case.

4. Corporations ⇐121(2)

In assignee's action to recover balance due under contract for sale of corporate stock, tender of stock was a necessary "condition precedent" before assignee could enforce payment of unpaid balance.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Condition Precedent".

5. Corporations ⇐118

Before assignee of contract for sale of corporate stock could require buyer to pay unpaid balance, the assignee was obliged to fulfill the conditions imposed upon the seller. Civ.Code, § 1439.

6. Corporations ⇐121(2)

In action by seller's assignee for balance due under contract for sale of corporate stock which contained provision that, in event corporation should be adjudicated a bankrupt, buyer should not be liable for further payment and that, if corporation executed assignment for benefit of creditors, payment should be held in abeyance until it was conclusively determined that the corporation was again able to operate free from assignment, it was incumbent on the assignee not only to tender stock in a solvent corporation but also to make good that offer by making an appropriate deposit of the shares. Civ.Code, § 1439.

7. Contracts ⇐278(1)

Generally, one who cannot perform his part of a contract is not entitled to performance on the part of his contractee.

8. Sales ⇐345

If buyer notifies seller before seller is in default that buyer will not perform his obligation and does not retract such notice before time fixed for his performance, the seller is entitled to enforce the obligation without previously performing or offering to perform his part of the contract, but, on the trial, there must be proof of the ability of the seller to perform his obligations. Civ. Code, §§ 1440, 1495.

9. Sales ⇐347(3)

A contract for the purchase of property cannot be enforced by the seller when the consideration for the purchase price wholly fails in a material respect. Civ.Code, § 1689.

10. Corporations ⇐121(1)

Where promise of seller to deliver corporate stock has failed without fault on part of buyer, the consideration of the buyer's promise fails in a material respect and seller or his assignee cannot enforce the contract.

11. Sales ⇐151

An agreement to sell implies the ability to deliver the thing sold, and, where the seller becomes unable to execute his part of the contract, his right to enforce payment of the purchase price fails.

12. Sales ⇐14

A covenant for title applies to the time of conveying rather than to the date of the contract for sale.

13. Sales ⇐195

Although the payment of purchase price of an article may be due under contract, if the article sold will not be substantially forthcoming, the payment of the purchase price is excused.

14. Corporations ⇐118

Buyer was released from making further payments to assignee of contract for sale of corporate stock after discovery of inability of seller to deliver the stock he had agreed to sell.

15. Corporations ⇐121(1)

Where contract for sale of corporate stock contained an acceleration clause but provided that buyer should not be liable for further payment, if corporation was adjudicated a bankrupt, seller's assignee could not recover balance due on theory that buyer's default in making January payment caused total balance to be immediately due and payable and that assignee put buyer in default and filed suit before corporation was adjudged bankrupt in February, in view of fact that stock had not been delivered and seller and assignee were unable to deliver stock.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Peirson M. Hall, Judge.

Action by Genevieve McDorman against Joseph M. Moody for breach of contract. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Elbert E. Hensley, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. Bruce Murchison, John Bricker Myers, Jr., and Richard C. Hart, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

This action arose out of an alleged breach of contract whereby plaintiff's assignor, one Messimer, agreed to sell to respondent Moody 1,500 shares of stock in the United Trading Stores, Inc., an Arizona corporation.

The contract was made May 20, 1939. By its terms Messimer agreed to sell and transfer to Moody all of his right, title and interest in and to the 1,500 shares of stock of the corporation for the sum of $12,000, payable as follows: $150 June 20, 1939, and $150 on the 20th day of every month thereafter until the full sum of $12,000 is paid. The instrument then proceeds:

"* * * in the event the United Trading Stores, Incorporated, should file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy and be adjudicated a bankrupt, or should be declared an involuntary bankrupt, then in either of said cases the party of the second part, from and after the date of adjudication of the United Trading Stores, Incorporated, as a bankrupt, shall no longer be liable by reason of this agreement for any further payments for the purchase of said stock; and

"* * * should the United Trading Stores, Incorporated, execute a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors * * * all payments to be made under this agreement by the party of the second part to the party of the first part shall cease from the date of the execution and delivery of the deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, and such payments shall be held in abeyance until such time as it shall be conclusively determined that the United Trading Stores, Incorporated, is again able to operate free from such assignment, at which time the party of the second part shall resume payments provided for herein and shall continue to make such payments until the full sum of $12,000 provided for herein is paid, and nothing contained herein shall be understood to require the party of the second part, upon the resumption of business of United Trading Stores, Incorporated, free from the said assignment, to pay to the party of the first part in a lump sum the payments falling due during the assignment period, but the assignment period shall lengthen the period of time necessary to complete the payment of the $12,000 provided for herein, and the party of the second part shall, upon the resumption of business as aforesaid, be obliged to pay only the monthly installments provided for herein during the length of time remaining and necessary to pay the balance of the consideration provided for herein; but if the said corporation should not be able to operate again free from the assignment and should it be liquidated, then * * * the party of the second part shall not be liable any longer under the terms and conditions of this agreement.

"* * * in case of default by the party of the second part for any other reason than those mentioned in this agreement in making any of the payments above described, that * * * the full amount of the balance then due upon this agreement shall become immediately due and payable."

There is no indication that an application had ever been made for a permit to issue the stock of the corporation or that it ever had sufficient assets to justify the granting of such permit.

Respondent made seven monthly payments during 1939, aggregating $1,050. On January 20, he forwarded his check for the installment then due to the assignor, but six days later, on discovering that a petition to have the corporation adjudicated a bankrupt was about to be filed, he stopped payment on his check and advised the assignor that "proceedings were in progress for a petition in bankruptcy" against the corporation and that he would make no further payment on the contract. Neither did Messimer make demand upon respondent for the payment of the balance of the purchase price after the latter's refusal to make further payments nor did he make tender of the stock prior to or during the trial.

After hearing respondent's declaration not to make further payments Messimer assigned his interest in the contract to appellant who alleged in her complaint that she had "exercised the option to declare the remaining unpaid balance under the terms of said contract due and payable." Also, she alleged that she and her assignor "have duly performed all conditions of said contract on their part to be performed and are ready, willing and able to deliver the articles described in said contract." She demanded the balance of $10,930 and $2.50 protest fees. Her complaint was filed February 8, 1940. At the trial the only evidence received was the contract, the assignment, the check, the notice of protest, the adjudication of bankruptcy dated February 26, 1940, and the testimony of the parties.

The findings of the court which are pertinent to our discussion include the following: That the corporation was adjudicated a bankrupt on February 26, 1940; that prior to that date the 1,500 shares had never been issued and could not then be issued to respondent; that the corporation did not have assets sufficient to warrant the issuance of the shares; that plaintiff's option did not exist to declare the unpaid balance due; that the assignor and plaintiff have not duly performed all conditions of the contract; that they are not ready, able and willing to deliver the stock.

[1] With the foregoing the court made other findings which are not justified by the documentary proof and which led it to adopt an untenable theory; at the same time the judgment is just and must be affirmed.

[2] Appellant pleaded that she and her assignor had "duly performed all conditions of said contract on their part to be performed and are ready, willing and able to deliver the articles described in said contract." The denial of these allegations created a material issue of fact upon which the court found that no part of the 1,500 shares had been delivered and that plaintiff and her assignor "are now unable or ready to deliver all or any part thereof to the defendant." Under the contract, the assignor was obliged to deliver the 1,500 shares. The findings and the evidence are emphatic and clear that they were not delivered within the seven months during which respondent regularly made his monthly payments. When the denouement occurred and the insolvency of the corporation was revealed, the assignor was utterly unable to make delivery. He could not, and the plaintiff did not, establish her right to have the shares issued. The assets of the company were not even sufficient to justify the issuance of a permit for any stock. Upon the entry of the order of adjudication in bankruptcy it was thereafter vain to expect the issuance of any shares. Competent proof establishes that appellant was not able or ready to deliver or will ever be able to deliver any part of the shares sold under the contract. The findings against appellant upon this material issue foreclosed her right to prevail.

[3] The complaint alleges: "that said plaintiff has exercised the option to declare the remaining unpaid balance * * * due and payable; that demand has been made upon defendant * * * of the unpaid balance and that defendant has refused to pay such balance." These allegations also declare certain facts which are denied by the answer. Not a word of evidence was introduced to establish either an acceleration of the unpaid balance or that demand for payment thereof was made prior to the filing of the action. These are facts the evidence of which was necessary to prove appellant's case.

[4] Neither did appellant tender the stock. Such offer was a necessary condition precedent before she could enforce payment of the unpaid balance. 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 480, p. 985.

[5, 6] Before appellant could require respondent to pay she was obliged to fulfill the conditions imposed upon the vendor. Civ.Code, sec. 1439; 6 Cal.Jur. 399. If she had been authorized to accelerate the payment of the unpaid balance, her declaration to that effect would have made performance on her part concurrent with performance on the part of respondent. It was incumbent on her not only to tender the stock in a solvent corporation but also to make good that offer by making an appropriate deposit of the shares.

[7, 8] It is a general rule that one who cannot perform his part of a contract is not entitled to performance on the part of his contractee. 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 452, p. 934. Notwithstanding that if a vendee under a sales agreement notifies the vendor before the latter is in default that the vendee will not perform his obligation and does not retract such notice before the time fixed for his performance, the vendor is entitled to enforce the obligation without previously performing or offering to perform his part of the contract (Civ.Code, sec. 1440), yet upon the trial there must be proof of the vendor's ability to perform all of his covenants. Dickey v. Kuhn, 106 Cal. App. 300, 303, 289 P. 242. Even if the vendor had offered to deliver the stock sold under the agreement such offer would have been of no effect in view of the inability of the vendor to perform according to his offer. Civ.Code, sec. 1495.

[9-12] The principle is universally recognized that a contract for the purchase of property cannot be enforced by the vendor when the consideration for the purchase price wholly fails in a material respect. Civ.Code, sec. 1689; Walker v. Harbor Business Blocks Co., 181 Cal. 773, 782, 186 P. 356. Where the promise of the vendor to deliver corporate stock has failed without fault on the part of his vendee, the consideration for the promise of the vendee thereupon fails in a material respect. 3 Williston on Contracts, sec. 814. An agreement to sell implies the ability to deliver the thing sold. When the vendor becomes unable to execute his part of the contract, his right to enforce the payment of the purchase price thereupon fails. Williams v. Miller, 68 Cal. 290, 9 P. 166; Ogren v. Inner Harbor Land Co., 83 Cal. App. 197, 256 P. 607. It was held in the Ogren case, supra, that where buildings upon property, sold under contract and remaining in the possession of the vendor, were destroyed by fire the petitioner could not compel the vendee to complete the purchase but that the latter might rescind and secure the return of what he had paid on the contract. Under an agreement to agist and pasture the cattle of B for a year, A cannot compel payment of the amount charged for the pasturage where it is shown that there was no grass on A's land upon which B's herds might feed. Williams v. Miller, supra. A covenant for title applies to the time of conveying rather than to the date of the contract for sale. Kares v. Covell, 180 Mass. 206, 62 N.E. 244, 91 Am. St.Rep. 271.

[13] No promise in a bilateral contract is wholly independent of the counter-promise. Although performances under the contract are not necessarily to be rendered at the same time, yet the price of a chattel, which is the subject of the contract, is the agreed exchange for the chattel whether the price be payable before or after delivery. (Restatement of Contracts, sec. 266.) Although the payment of the purchase price of an article may be due as under the contract, at the same time if the article sold will not be "substantially forthcoming" the payment of the purchase price is excused. 3 Williston on Contracts, sec. 828. See Gentry v. Recreation, Inc., 192 S.C. 429, 7 S.E.2d 63, 128 A.L.R. 743; Hoefer v. Fortmann, 219 Iowa 746, 259 N.W. 494; Street v. Commercial Credit Co., 35 Ariz. 479, 281 P. 46, 67 A.L.R. 1549.

[14] The foregoing authorities indicate clearly the legal concept and ethical standard which should determine the rights of parties where a vendor cannot make delivery of the thing which he has sold on contract. Because of the inability of plaintiff's assignor to deliver what he sold, the vendee was released from making further payments after discovery of such failure.

[15] Appellant contends that under the agreement the default of respondent in making the January payment caused the total balance to be immediately due and payable and that she put respondent in default and filed suit before the bankruptcy of the corporation was adjudicated. She cites authority (Harris v. Kessler, 124 Cal. App. 299, 301, 12 P.2d 467) justifying her election to treat the sale as absolute and to sue for the balance due, ignoring the fact that she owed a concurrent obligation which she was unable to perform.

The contention that respondent could have caused the issuance of the stock and thereby have been possessed of the consideration for his money is a meaningless gratuity. To hold the evidence of a right to corporate stock adds no value to it. There could have been no virtue in the certificate unless the stock had substantial value.

The judgment is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

MIRAMAR CO. v. CITY OF SANTA BARBARA.

Civ. 13244.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 23, 1942.

1. Eminent domain ⇐277

Constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation first having been made to owner does not permit maintenance of action to recover compensation, based on theory that private property was taken by city for construction and maintenance of public improvement, without complying with statute requiring verified claim to be filed within 90 days after occurrence of injury. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5149, § 1; Const. art. 1, § 14.

2. Eminent domain ⇐2(1)

Under constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation first having been made to the owner, the state is liable only when the damage to, or taking of private property, is not so essential to the general welfare as to be sanctioned under the police power. Const. art. 1, § 14.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐857

Compliance with statute, requiring verified claim to be filed with secretary of city council within 90 days after occurrence of injury upon which alleged cause of action is based, is essential to the maintenance of an action against a city for damage resulting from a dangerous public property, since the act was intended to apply in every case in which the claimant's demand is based on injury to property resulting from dangerous or defective condition of public improvement. Gen.Laws 1937, Acts 5149, 5619.

4. Eminent domain ⇐277

Where in June, 1927, city began construction of breakwater which was completed in June, 1930, claim filed in May, 1937, for damages resulting from washing away and taking of certain sandy beach, did not satisfy statute requiring claim against city to be filed within 90 days after occurrence of injury, and precluded recovery of damages. Gen.Laws 1937, Acts 5149, 5619.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐741(1)

Under statute requiring verified claim against city for damages to be filed within 90 days after occurrence of injury, neither age nor infirmity will excuse a claimant from filing claim within 90 days. Gen.Laws 1937, Acts 5149, 5619.

6. Municipal corporations ⇐741(3), 742(5)

A city is powerless to waive compliance with statute requiring verified claim for damages to be filed with city within 90 days after occurrence of injury upon which alleged cause of action is based, and where a claimant fails to prove that he has complied with the statute, his action should be dismissed. Gen.Laws 1937, Acts 5149, 5619.

7. Municipal corporations ⇐741(1)

The statutory requirement, that claim against city be filed within 90 days after accident, is to enable the city promptly to investigate the claim and, if it is to be rejected, to prepare a defense to the potential action that may be filed to enforce payment of claim before facts have become stale and witnesses have departed. Gen.Laws 1937, Acts 5149, 5619.

8. Eminent domain ⇐277

The statute requiring claim against city to be filed within 90 days after occurrence of injury upon which alleged cause of action is based applies in case where municipality damages or takes without paying from an owner his private property in violation of constitution. Gen.Laws 1937, Acts 5149, 5619; Const. art. 1, § 14.

9. Constitutional law ⇐30

Even though the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to the owner is self-executing, the legislature is authorized to enact measures to facilitate its operation and to provide convenient limits for the protection of rights established and for the determination thereof, and the regulation of claims thereto. Const. art. 1, § 14.

10. Eminent domain ⇐267

All claimants of compensation, under constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to the owner, must comply with reasonable statutory procedural requirements. Const. art. 1, § 14.

11. Eminent domain ⇐98

City's construction of breakwater was a "governmental function" and where the swish and swirl of ocean waves and currents carried away sands of claimant's land, the destruction of the claimant's beach was not the "taking" or "damaging" of private property for public use within constitutional provision prohibiting the taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation. Const. art. 1, § 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Damaging", "Governmental Function" and "Taking".

12. Limitation of actions ⇐5(1)

The "public policy" of California favors statutes of limitations, since they are essential to the maintenance of a tranquil society.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

13. Municipal corporations ⇐741(1)

Under statute requiring claim to be filed against city within 90 days after occurrence of injury, the failure to assert a claim within the prescribed time constitutes a bar to any subsequent action thereon. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5149, § 1.

14. Eminent domain ⇐2(10)

Where breakwater constructed by city in authorized development of harbor resulted in landowner's sandy beach being washed away by ocean waves and currents, the landowner had no right of recovery against the city notwithstanding constitutional provision prohibiting the taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation, since the construction of the breakwater was a lawful project done under police power. St.1927, p. 2064, § 2; Const. art. 1, § 14.

15. Eminent domain ⇐2(1)

Under constitutional provision prohibiting the taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation, liability of city arises only when damage to private property was not so essential to the general welfare as to be justified under the police power, and where in the proper exercise of that power by a municipality the construction of a public work inflicts, as a consequence thereof, injury to private land, the owner thereof has no right of recovery. Const. art. 1, § 14.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Ernest D. Wagner, Judge.

Action by Miramar Company against the City of Santa Barbara for damage to real property as the result of erection and maintenance of a breakwater. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Leland Crawford and Robert M. Jones, both of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Norris Montgomery, City Atty., and Heaney, Price, Postel & Parma, all of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals upon the judgment roll from the judgment entered following a trial upon the complaint and the 4th and 5th special defenses.

Plaintiff, an existing California Corporation, owned certain littoral lands adjacent to Miramar Bay, Montecito, in the county of Santa Barbara. Such lands lie 2½ miles east of the city of Santa Barbara, a municipal corporation. Plaintiff operated upon its property the Miramar Hotel and Cottages. Commencing at the shore line about 3 miles west of plaintiff's property, defendant city began the construction of a permanent breakwater about June 8, 1927. It was completed June 30, 1930. It extended from the line of high tide for a distance of about 2,500 feet into the waters of the Pacific Ocean.

The complaint alleged that as the littoral drift and current along the shore line is from west to east, the effect of the breakwater was to stop the normal and natural flow of sand so that plaintiff's property was in time denuded which condition allowed the waters of Miramar Bay to advance the line of ordinary high tide until plaintiff's property was covered by the sea. This action was progressive and continuous, always taking but never depositing sands in the place of those carried away, which was at all times known to defendant; that with the disappearance of the sands the hotel ceased to be a beach resort.

On May 15, 1937, seven years after completion of the breakwater, plaintiff presented its written claim or demand to the city council of defendant for the sum of $750,000, consisting of two items: (1) loss of the sandy beach used in connection with the hotel "resulting from the washing away and taking of that certain sandy beach * * * said damages being caused by the erection and maintenance of a certain breakwater owned and constructed by the city of Santa Barbara and the consequent erosion of the shore to the east thereof, from May 15, 1932, to the date hereof", $500,000; (2) loss of the value of the remainder of the hotel property by reason of the severance of the beach, $250,000. The claim was disallowed by defendant on October 15, 1937, On October 4, 1939, plaintiff filed the present action upon its rejected demand.

Following the overruling of defendant's demurrer, answer was filed consisting of a general denial and six separate affirmative defenses. Pursuant to written stipulation of the parties, the case came on for trial before the court without a jury, upon the issues created by the complaint and the 4th and 5th special defenses on March 20, 1941. The 4th special defense alleged that plaintiff has failed to comply with the provisions of Act 5149 relating to the liability in damages of municipalities in the case of injuries to property resulting from the defective or dangerous condition of public works, etc. (Statutes of 1931, p. 2475, Deering's Gen. Laws 1937, Act 5149) in that plaintiff failed to present or file its verified claim with the secretary of the city council within ninety days after the occurrence of the injury upon which the alleged cause of action is based.

The 5th special defense was based upon an ordinance of defendant limiting the time of the filing of certain claims for damages against the city to six months. Inasmuch as the trial court properly made no finding upon that defense, further reference need not be made thereto.

The trial court found to be true all of the facts relative to the corporate existence of both parties, the date of the commencement and completion of the breakwater and the date of the filing of plaintiff's demand with the city council, all as hereinabove recited. Also it found to be true all of the facts set forth in the 4th special defense and that plaintiff had failed to file its claim in compliance with the provisions of Act 5149, Deering's General Laws, Stats. 1931, supra, which provides that "Whenever it is claimed that any person has been injured or any property damaged as a result of the dangerous or defective condition of any public street, highway, building, park, grounds, works or property, a verified claim for damages shall be presented in writing and filed with the clerk or secretary of the legislative body of the municipality, county, city and county, or school district, as the case may be, within ninety days after such accident has occurred. Such claim shall specify the name and address of the claimant, the date and place of the accident and the extent of the injuries or damages received." Section 1.

Upon the findings made the court adjudged that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that defendant is entitled to judgment upon the 4th special defense and that plaintiff take nothing.

[1, 2] Upon this appeal plaintiff maintains that its failure to file its verified claim within 90 days after the commencement of the damage does not bar its right to recover compensation under the provisions of Act 5149 by reason of the fact that plaintiff's private property was taken by the city for the construction, maintenance and public improvement constructed by it and that defendant is entitled to compensation by virtue of section 14, article I of the Constitution which provides: "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner * * * ." But notwithstanding the language of that section, plaintiff is not relieved of its duty to follow the procedural requirements contained in the cited act. The state is liable under the quoted section of the Constitution only when the damage to, or taking of private property "is not so essential to the general welfare as to be sanctioned under the 'police power' ". Archer v. City of Los Angeles, 19 Cal.2d 19, 119 P.2d 1, 19.

[3] Compliance with Act 5149 is the sine qua non to the maintenance of any action brought against a municipality for damage resulting from a "dangerous" public property. The act was intended to apply in every case, in which the claimant's demand is based upon injuries to property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of a public improvement. Act 5619, Deering's General Laws, 1937, Stats. 1923, p. 675. A careful reading of that statute will lead to no other conclusion.

[4-6] The claim of plaintiff did not meet the requirements of Act 5149 with respect to the dates upon which its beach was impaired. Neither was it filed within 90 days after the injury began nor within 90 days after the beach had all been washed away. The claim does not say when the "accident" occurred. It merely recites, that as a result of the erection and maintenance of the breakwater, the normal action of the tides, currents, and waves was changed and the natural drift of sand was intercepted, depriving the Miramar Beach of its normal supply of sand and causing the waters of the ocean "gradually, continuously and progressively to come upon, inundate, wash away and destroy, during the five years next preceding the filing of the claim attached hereto, all of the sandy beach included in the real property described. * * *" "From May 15, 1932, to the date hereof" is not a substantial compliance with Act 5149 for the reason that it failed to include occurrences of other dates not mentioned in the claim. Kahrs v. County of Los Angeles, 28 Cal.App.2d 46, 82 P.2d 29. To come within the language of the act, the claim must not only contain the dates of the occurrences but it must be filed "within ninety days after such accident has occurred." If the encroachment of the waters of the Pacific were progressive and continuous from May 15, 1932, to the date of the filing of the claim some five years thereafter, it is evident that plaintiff's property had suffered some detriment during this progressive and continuous encroachment. Neither age nor infirmity will excuse the claimant from filing within 90 days. Johnson v. City of Glendale, 12 Cal.App.2d 389, 55 P.2d 580. Even the city itself is powerless to waive compliance and when a plaintiff fails to prove that he has complied with the act, his action should be dismissed. Hall v. City of Los Angeles, 19 Cal.2d 198, 120 P.2d 13.

[7] The requirement that the claim be filed within 90 days after the accident is to enable the municipality promptly to investigate the claim and if it is to be rejected, to prepare a defense to the potential action that may be filed to enforce payment of the claim before the facts have become stale and the witnesses have departed. Young v. County of Ventura, 39 Cal.App. 2d 732, 104 P.2d 102. There is no date alleged in the complaint on which any damage occurred or when the erosion commenced. The only dates mentioned are those of the commencement of the construction and of the completion of the breakwater and of the beginning of consequent erosion "from May 15, 1932." Since the claim was not filed until May 15, 1937, clearly it was more than four years too late when computed from the last date mentioned in the claim.

[8, 9] But plaintiff contends that Act 5149 applies only to torts and not to the case of a municipality which damages or takes without paying from an owner his private property, forbidden by section 14, article I of the Constitution. The same contention was made to this court in the case of Young v. County of Ventura, supra, in which the plaintiff sought damages for the flooding of their lands after the county had widened a storm ditch and constructed upon privately owned lands a steel and wire revetment which diverted the storm waters from their natural channel and flooded plaintiff's land to its detriment. We there held that compliance with the 90-day provision of Act 5149 for filing of a claim is mandatory and that by failing to comply with the statutory procedure plaintiffs were deemed to have waived their right to enforce payment, citing Musto-Keenan v. City of Los Angeles, 139 Cal. App. 506, 34 P.2d 506. Even though the constitutional provisions were self-executing, the legislature is authorized to enact measures to facilitate its operation and to provide convenient limits for the protection of rights established and for the determination thereof and the regulation of claims thereto. Powers Farms, Inc., v. Consolidated Irrigation District,[1] — Cal.App.2d —, 110 P.2d 112. Since the facts alleged and found show that the invasion of plaintiff's land by the waters of the ocean was caused by a dangerous condition of the breakwater, Act 5619 unquestionably applies. Under the provision of 5149 a claim for damages to property as a result of a dangerous public improvement must be presented in the form and manner prescribed by the latter act. Davis v. East Contra Costa Irrigation District,[1] — Cal.App.2d —,

[1] Opinion of Supreme Court after hearing granted, 19 Cal.2d 123, 119 P.2d 717.)

109 P.2d 986; Yonker v. City of San Gabriel, 23 Cal.App.2d 556, 73 P.2d 623.

[10-13] In the foregoing we have referred to plaintiff's contention that it is entitled to compensation by virtue of section 14, article I of the Constitution. By nothing said have we intended to imply that the damage suffered by plaintiff is the result of a taking or damaging for public use. The detriment to plaintiff's land was not caused by the breakwater: it was caused by the swish and swirl of the ocean waves and currents which carried away the sands of Miramar Beach. The construction of that improvement was a governmental function. Yonker v. City of San Gabriel, supra. It was not intended by the authors of section 14, article I of the Constitution to relieve those who claimed damages under that section from following statutory procedure enacted for the guidance of claimants against a municipality for injuries to their properties. Neither was it intended to vouchsafe protection in a high degree to one owner and a low degree to another. Whatever the intention, all claimants of compensation for damages must comply with reasonable statutory requirements. By nothing contained in the cited constitutional section can we divine that the destruction of plaintiff's beach was the taking or damaging of private property for a public use. Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536; Green v. State, 73 Cal. 29, 11 P. 602, 14 P. 610; Lamb v. Reclamation District, 73 Cal. 125, 14 P. 625, 2 Am.St.Rep. 775. But if the section so provided there is not the slightest intimation therein that the owner of the property injured is immunized from the bar of the statute. Crescent Wharf & Warehouse Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 207 Cal. 430, 278 P. 1028. The public policy of this state favors statutes of limitation. They are essential to the maintenance of a tranquil society. It is an established rule that a failure to assert a claim within the prescribed time shall constitute a bar to any subsequent action thereon. Sala v. City of Pasadena, 162 Cal. 714, 124 P. 539.

[14, 15] Finally plaintiff has no right of recovery. The construction of the breakwater was a lawful project done under the police power, authorized to be done in the development of defendant's harbor. § 2 of the Charter, Stats. 1927, Chapter 14, pp. 2061, 2064; Patrick v. Riley, 209 Cal. 350, 287 P. 455. Its charter specifically authorizes the acquisition and maintenance of streets, rights of way, harbors and other local improvements and the exercise of any and "all rights, powers, privileges and procedures now or hereafter established or authorized for municipalities" etc. Under that provision there is no doubt of the legality of the project. City of Long Beach v. Lisenby, 175 Cal. 575, 166 p. 333. Liability of a city for an act done under section 14 of article I of the Constitution arises only when the damage to private property was not so essential to the general welfare as to be justified under the police power. When, in the proper exercise of that power by a municipality, the construction of a public work inflicts, as a consequence thereof, injury to private lands, the owner thereof has no right of recovery. Archer v. City of Los Angeles, supra.

Judgment affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurred.

W. J. WOOD, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment. The ruling in Archer v. City of Los Angeles, 19 Cal.2d 19, 119 P.2d 1, prevents recovery by plaintiff. In my opinion the claim filed with the secretary of the council containing the statement that the damage was caused continuously "during the five years next preceding the filing of the claim" should not be held insufficient.

50 Cal.App.2d 146

PEOPLE v. CORDERO.

Crim. 3524.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

Hearing Denied March 27, 1942.

1. Aliens ⇐17

The statute providing that no person not a citizen of the United States shall own or have in his possession any pistol, etc., authorized the conviction of a Filipino who possessed a prohibited weapon, since he was not a "citizen of the United States", in view of the express provision of the federal statute relating to immigration that Filipinos shall be considered as if they were aliens. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1970, § 2; 48 U.S.C.A. §§ 1002, 1238.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Citizen of the United States".

2. Aliens ⇐17

The statute providing that, when it is alleged in a pleading that a privilege was exercised by a defendant who was not a citizen, upon proof that privilege was exercised the burden is on defendant to establish that he was at the time a citizen and legally entitled to exercise the privilege, is valid. Code Civ.Proc. § 1983.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Bobby Cordero was convicted of having in his possession a firearm having a barrel less than 12 inches in length capable of being concealed upon his person, he being at the time of such possession not a citizen of the United States. From a judgment of conviction and an order denying a new trial, he appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

Harvey J. Lindstrom and Robert Porter, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was convicted of having in his possession a firearm having a barrel less than twelve inches in length, capable of being concealed upon his person, he being at the time of such possession not a citizen of the United States. The statute under which he was accused is known as the Deadly Weapons Act, chapter 339, Statutes of 1923, p. 695, as amended statutes 1931, p. 2316; section 2, Act 1970, Deering's General Laws. His violation was evidently deemed to have been free of any criminal intent by reason of the fact that while the statute makes the offense a felony, appellant's punishment was fixed at one day in the county jail.

Two facts were established at the trial, namely that defendant is an unnaturalized native of the island of Luzon and that he did in fact possess the firearm in question. His only contentions before this court are: (1) That his conviction was in violation of the due process clause of the 14th amendment to the federal Constitution and (2) that section 1983 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which placed upon an alleged alien the burden of proving his citizenship, does not apply to members of the Filipino race.

The police power is the power inherent in the government itself to enact laws within constitutional limits for the protection of the order, safety, health and general welfare of society. 12 C.J. 904; 16 C.J.S., Constitutional Law, § 174. Since the right of the legislature to exercise that power is not to be denied on account of any grant heretofore made, it is appropriate to enact legislation restricting privileges commonly exercised by citizens by denying the enjoyment thereof to foreigners. The 14th amendment was not designed to interfere with the police power of the several states. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 5 S.Ct. 357, 28 L.Ed. 923. Therefore if section 2 is a valid exercise of the police power no constitutional guarantee of the defendant has been violated. The enactment of such laws as the Deadly Weapons Act is a proper exercise of the police power. It was especially authorized by section 1, article XIX of the Constitution which requires the legislature to protect the state from "the burdens and evils arising from the presence of aliens, who are, or may become * * * criminals * * * and from aliens otherwise dangerous or detrimental to the well-being or peace of the State * * *." The section is proof that the people had taken cognizance of a social condition fraught with such peril to the state as to require regulation. Since the statute is equal in its operation, it does not violate due process. In re Kemmler, 136 U.S. 436, 10 S.Ct. 930, 34 L.Ed. 519; In re Rameriz, 193 Cal. 633, 226 P. 914, 34 A.L.R. 51. If the law makers find conditions that require regulation by statute, they are acting within the scope of their powers to enact appropriate legislation to meet the requirements. Miller v. Wilson, 236 U.S. 373, 35 S.Ct. 342, 59 L.Ed. 628, L.R.A.1915F, 829.

[1] In proving its case against the defendant, the people relied on section 1983, Code Civ.Proc. It provides that, when it is alleged in a pleading that a privilege has been exercised by the defendant who is not a citizen of the United States, after it has been established that such privilege was exercised by defendant, then "the burden shall be upon such person * * * to establish the fact" that he was at the time a citizen of the United States and was legally entitled to exercise such privilege. Prior to 1927 it was the law that the foreign nativity of an accused person was a part of the corpus delicti of the offense denounced. People v. Quarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363. But in that year the legislature enacted section 1983, supra. This statute established the "rule of convenience." Its purpose was to relieve the state of the burden of proving the alienage of the accused because such fact is "intimately and peculiarly within the knowledge of the person who by the exercise of certain rights has assumed to be native born." People v. Osaki, 209 Cal. 169, 192, 286 P. 1025; People v. Bruno, 209 Cal. 782, 286 P. 1037; People v. Guzman, 209 Cal. 783, 286 P. 1037; People v. Cortez, 112 Cal.App. 22, 296 P. 98. However, in 1934 the United States Supreme Court reversed a conviction (Morrison v. State of California, 291 U.S. 82, 92, 54 S.Ct. 281, 78 L.Ed. 664) where a citizen had been jointly convicted with an alien for conspiracy to violate section 9a of the Alien Land Law. But that case is not authority for appellant's position here for the reason that Morrison was an American and he could not be denied his rights under the due process clause. The court cited a long line of authorities holding that a statute which casts the burden of proving citizenship upon an alleged alien, after establishing his commission of the crime, is valid and holding that a former decision (Morrison v. People of the State of California, 288 U.S. 591, 53 S.Ct. 401, 77 L.Ed. 970) correctly held that section 9b of the Alien Land Law which cast the burden upon the accused of proving his citizenship was not an impairment of his immunities under the federal Constitution.

[2] Appellant contends that in the enactment of section 2 of the Deadly Weapons Act, it was not comtemplated that a native of the Philippine Islands should be included among those persons not citizens of the United States. He maintains that, since he owes allegiance to the Government of the United States, he is therefore a national and entitled to enjoy all privileges shared by citizens. He suggests that the absence from the law books of decisions involving the alienage of Filipinos indicates a universal view that they should not be subjected to the enforcement of this act. A review of the statutes discloses the futility of his claims.

Section 57 of the Political Code does not avail appellant. That section merely attempts to classify the population of California with a view of assigning to each its political rights. But, in enacting the Deadly Weapons Act the paramount aim was to protect the security and tranquillity of the state and of the members of each alien group. It was conceived that such purpose might be promoted by denying to all persons not citizens of the United States the right to possess firearms which could be concealed upon the person.

It might be conceded that a native of Luzon was not an alien insofar as he owed allegiance to the United States as against other sovereignties until the complete independence of the Philippines. Such allegiance was the natural reaction of a proud people to a benevolent protector.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Governments of the United States and the Philippines have amiably collaborated for the improvement of the economy, for the increase of liberty and for the upbuilding of the civilization of the islands, yet the Philippine Islands have never been incorporated into the United States. They constitute merely an insular possession appurtenant to the United States. By the Treaty of Paris in 1898, 30 Stat. 1754, the civil and political status of the Filipinos was to be determined by Congress. 42 Harvard Law Review, 809. No act of that body has ever conferred citizenship upon them. Ibid. The islands are a dependency until admitted into the union or until this government surrenders its jurisdiction over that territory. Opinion U. S. Attorney General, 1924, 34 Op.Atty.Gen. page 287; 1925, 34 Op.Atty.Gen. page 460. The inhabitants of those islands are deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands and its people "shall be considered as if they were aliens." Secs. 1002, 1238, chap. V, title 48 U.S.C.A. "For [immigration] purposes the Philippine Islands shall be considered as a separate country." Sec. 1238, supra.

Finally, in 1933 at the request of the government of that domain Congress enacted a statute granting complete independence to the Philippine Islands effective as of July 3, 1946. See title 48, sec. 1231, U. S.C.A. If they are to be granted such independence, their people could not now be our citizens and the islands could not now be a part of the United States. If they were, their complete independence would be a secession—a right which perished forever in the flames of civil war. Their present status makes the natives of the Philippines our associates in peace and our allies in war. The policy of the government since the Treaty of Paris has been that of protecting the Filipinos as our nationals in foreign lands and of rendering paternal beneficences to them, to the end that they might take a dignified position among the commonwealth of nations as a separate and independent republic. No legislation was ever enacted nor any treaty approved which placed the Philippine Islands in the same status as that of territorial possessions belonging to the United States.

It has been repeatedly held that the inhibition against the possession of firearms by aliens applies to any unnaturalized foreign-born person. In re Rameriz, supra; People v. Cannizzaro, 138 Cal.App. 28, 31 P.2d 1066. Since a native of Luzon is an unnaturalized foreign-born, his possession of such firearm as that inhibited by the Deadly Weapons Act constitutes a violation thereof.

Judgment and order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, Justices (concurring).

We concur in the order affirming the conviction.

[1] The statute under which defendant was convicted provides that "no person not a citizen of the United States of America * * * shall own or have in his possession * * * any pistol * * *." Defendant does not present the contention that he is a citizen of the United States, a contention that would be futile in view of the express provision in a federal statute relating to immigration that the Filipinos "shall be considered as if they were aliens." (48 U.S.C.A. §§ 1002, 1238).

[2] The Supreme Court of California has on several occasions held that section 1983 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which places the burden on a defendant to establish citizenship, does not violate any constitutional provision. (People v. Osaki, 209 Cal. 169, 286 P. 1025; People v. Bruno, 209 Cal. 782, 286 P. 1037; People v. Guzman, 209 Cal. 783, 286 P. 1037).

50 Cal.App.2d 79

SOUTHERN PAC. MILLING CO. v. BILLI WHACK STOCK FARM, Limited, et al.

Civ. 12895.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 24, 1942.

Rehearing Granted March 24, 1942.

1. Sales ⇐82(2)

When a contract for the sale of personal property does not fix the time for payment of the price, the law fixes the time of delivery as the time of payment, and, where the time for a part only of the price is fixed by the contract, the same rule applies to payment of the remainder. Civ.Code, § 1762.

2. Contracts ⇐168
Evidence ⇐448

As regards contracts, it is a well-settled principle that that which is implied by law becomes as much a part of the contract as that which is therein written, and if the contract is clear and complete, when aided by that which is imported into it by legal implication, it cannot be contradicted by parol in respect of that which is implied any more than in respect of that which is written.

3. Sales ⇐87(3)

In action by seller for breach of contract covering sale of rolled barley, evidence not fixing the time or the commodities covered was insufficient to show a course of dealing between the parties by which the buyer had 30 days in which to pay for all the purchases which became a part of the written contract.

4. Contracts ⇐238(2)

An oral modification of a written contract is effective only to the extent that it is "executed", that is, carried out. Civ.Code, § 1698.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Executed".

5. Sales ⇐181(11)

In action by seller for breach of contract covering rolled barley, evidence did not show that seller had breached contract by failing to deliver barley that had been ordered.

6. Sales ⇐384(2)

Under contract providing for shipment of rolled barley as required in lots of ten tons or more during the month of August, 1937, to July 31, 1938, mere failure of buyer to order any more barley after February, 1937, was not a breach of contract so as to fix damages as of such time.

7. Sales ⇐153

Where buyer of rolled barley informed seller's agent that buyer did not intend to take delivery of undelivered balance and seller was not then in default and such refusal was not withdrawn, seller was excused from making a tender of the barley and invoicing it as provided by contract. Civ.Code, § 1440.

8. Sales ⇐151

Refusal by buyer to accept undelivered portion of contract for rolled barley did not relieve seller from the requirement that, in order to recover, seller must have been able to perform.

9. Sales ⇐181(11)

In action by seller for breach of contract covering rolled barley, evidence showed that seller was able to perform contract.

10. Witnesses ⇐247

The general statement of a witness can have no greater force or effect than his immediately ensuing explanation of the meaning of such statement.

11. Sales ⇐384(2)

Under statute providing that, where there is an available market for the goods in question, the measure of damages is the difference between contract price and the "market or current price" at the time or times when the goods ought to have been accepted, the words "market price" and "market value" mean the same thing, or the price or value of the articles established or shown by sales in the way of ordinary business; "market value" being the price at which goods are freely offered in the market to all the world. Civ.Code, § 1784(3).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Market or Current Price", "Market Price", and "Market Value".

12. Sales ⇐383

In action by seller for breach of contract covering rolled barley, mere proof of what unrolled barley would have cost seller at time of breach and the cost of rolling it and transporting it with a profit added did not show the "market or current price" within statute fixing the measure of damages. Civ.Code, § 1784(3).

13. Appeal and error ⇐1178(6)

Where there was no error affecting the determination of buyer's liability for damages, but the evidence was insufficient to show what seller's damages were, only the issue of damages was required to be retried. Civ.Code, § 1784(3).

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Louis C. Drapeau, Judge.

Action by Southern Pacific Milling Company against Billiwhack Stock Farm, Limited, and another, for damages for breach of contract for the sale of rolled barley. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

Judgment reversed with directions.

E. Neal Ames, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Schauer, Ryon & McMahon, of Santa Barbara, and Charles F. Blackstock, of Oxnard, for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

This is an action for damages for breach of a written contract for the sale of rolled barley by plaintiff to defendant. Plaintiff had judgment, from which defendant appeals. Since the appeal requires us to construe several provisions of the contract, we set it forth here in full: "Santa Barbara, Calif. Aug. 12th, 1937 (Confirmation) Seller—Southern Pacific Milling Co. Santa Paula, Calif. Purchaser—Billiwhack Stock Farm, Ltd., Santa Paula, Calif. Article—Rolled Barley. Quantity—Two Hundred (200) tons. Quality—Good Field-run Barley. Price—Thirty-four ($34.00) Dollars per ton delivered to purchaser's dairy plant in Alisio Canyon, near Santa Paula, Calif. Shipment—As required in lots of 10 tons or more, during the months of Aug. 1937 to July 31,/38 purchaser to give seller sufficient notice to permit of rolling and making delivery as required. Payments—Purchaser to advance Five Hundred ($500.00) Dollars on Sept. 1st, 37, and * * * Five Hundred ($500.00) Dollars on Oct. 1st, 37, to apply on purchase price of 200 tons rolled barley. It is also understood and agreed that unless the full purchase price is paid on or before November 1st, 1937, an additional carrying charge of Twenty (20¢) cents per ton per month shall be added to the contract price of Thirty-four Dollars per ton; for example, all rolled barley delivered on this contract during month of November will be charged for at rate of Thirty-four and 20/100 ($34.20) Dollars per ton; all deliveries made during month of December will be charged for at rate of Thirty-four and 40/100 ($34.40) Dollars per ton, and so on. Any rolled barley remaining undelivered on this contract on July 31, 1938, will be invoiced to purchaser and is to be paid for immediately at the prices shown above. The Seller is not responsible for nondelivery, or delay of delivery caused by Strikes, Fire, Floods, Draughts, Accidents, Wars, Insurrections, Lockouts or any other contingencies beyond the Seller's control. Seller: S. P. Milling Co., By Lonnie Hobson, Agt. Accepted by: W. G. Schwindt Buyer."

Defendant made the payments called for by the contract on September 1, 1937, and October 1, 1937, but did not pay the remainder of the price on or before November 1, 1937. Deliveries of rolled barley were made to defendant, on its orders, until about February 23, 1938. The total amount delivered was 205,320 pounds, for all of which defendant made payment. The remainder of the 200 tons mentioned in the contract was never delivered, and plaintiff sued for and has recovered damages on the theory that defendant breached the contract by not taking and paying for that remainder.

[1] The two payments required by this contract on September 1, 1937, and October 1, 1937, cover the price of slightly less than 59,000 pounds of barley, leaving approximately 146,000 pounds of the barley received by the defendant to which the provision for these payments does not apply. The provision for payment on July 31, 1938, applies only to barley then remaining undelivered. The provision regarding payment on November 1, 1937, does not fix the time for payment of any part of the price; it merely provides for a sliding scale of increases in price, to become effective if payment is not made by the date stated. It gives defendant an option to avoid these price increases by paying in full on or before that date, but it imposes on him no obligation to do so. The contract is thus entirely silent as to the time for payment of the price of the 146,000 pounds of barley above mentioned, and of any additional amounts which defendant might order for delivery before July 1, 1938. When a contract for the sale of personal property does not fix the time for payment of the price, the laws steps in and fixes the time of delivery as the time of payment. Civ.Code, sec. 1762; Gilfallan v. Gilfallan, 1914, 168 Cal. 23, 29, 141 P. 623, Ann.Cas.1915D, 784; Stum v. Hadrich, 1907, 7 Cal.App. 241, 243, 94 P. 82; Romer v. Wehner, 1923, 61 Cal. App. 411, 417, 214 P. 993. Where the time for payment of a part only of the price is fixed by the contract, this rule applies to payment of the remainder. Gilfallan v. Gilfallan, supra, 168 Cal. at page 30, 141 P. 623, Ann.Cas.1915D, 784; see, also, Stum v. Hadrich, supra. It should be noted that the provision now in section 1762 of the Civil Code was formerly contained, in substance, in section 1784 of that code; hence the references to section 1784 in the cases cited.

[2] Defendant contends that there was a course of dealing between the parties by which defendant had thirty days' time in which to pay for all purchases, that this course of dealing became a part of the contract, and that when plaintiff demanded cash on delivery it therefore committed a breach of the contract which affords defendant a sufficient defense to this action. Regarding contracts in general, "It is a well-settled principle that that which is implied by law becomes as much a part of the contract as that which is therein written, and, if the contract is clear and complete when aided by that which is imported into it by legal implication, it cannot be contradicted by parol in respect of that which is implied any more than in respect of that which is written." Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., 1909, 10 Cal.App. 746, 750, 103 P. 938, 939. This application of the parol evidence rule has been approved and followed in several subsequent cases. See Calpetro P. Syndicate v. C. M. Woods Co., 1929, 206 Cal. 246, 252, 274 P. 65. However, section 1791 of the Civil Code, which is a part of the Uniform Sales Act, adopted in this state in 1931, seems to suggest a possible exception to the parol evidence rule in case of sales, for it provides, in part: "Where any right, duty or liability would arise under a contract to sell or a sale by implication of law, it may be negatived or varied by * * * the course of dealing between the parties."

[3] The question whether this provision does make an exception to the parol evidence rule as applied by the cases need not be decided here, for on examination of the evidence relating to the supposed course of dealing we find it insufficient to raise that question. The evidence relied upon by defendant on this point came wholly from plaintiff's witness Hobson, who was and had been for several years plaintiff's agent in the territory in which defendant's place of business was situated, and who negotiated the contract for plaintiff. He testified on cross-examination:

"Q. Now, Mr. Hobson, Mr. Fratkin—Billiwhack Stock Farm had been purchasing rolled barley from you prior to entering into this contract, had they not? A. I believe they had. I can't say positively, because I don't remember exactly.

"Q. Didn't you handle the sales to them of rolled barley prior to August 1937? A. Yes. They were buying various things. There could have been rolled barley in that so far as I remember now.

"Q. And rolled barley and other things were all bought on 30 days time, were they not? A. For rolled barley?

"Q. Yes. A. It was bought on 30 days time, yes, they were supposed to clear their account every 30 days.

"Q. Did you have any discussion in regard to payments, the time of payment, at the time when you entered into this contract with Mr. Fratkin? A. They knew at the time it was supposed to be paid."

After further questioning had brought out the fact that before the contract was made the witness discussed with two of defendant's agents the time of payment, he testified:

"Q. Does the contract contain a statement of the method of payment which was discussed at that time? A. I don't remember. * * *

"Q. The question was, did you at any time in these conversations tell Mr. Fratkin this grain would be delivered only on cash with delivery, prior to the signing of the contract? A. No."

This witness also testified that on February 23, 1938, he insisted on cash payment for barley because defendant's account "wasn't kept up to a 30 day period."

We find no further evidence in the record on this subject. While this evidence may generate a suspicion of a previous course of dealing, it does not fix the time or the commodities covered thereby or enable us to determine whether there was a real course of dealing or were merely occasional purchases each separately agreed on. It is too nebulous and uncertain to justify us in holding, in the face of the trial court's decision adverse to defendant, that there was a prior course of dealing, even if such a course of dealing would become part of the contract.

[4] Insofar as the testimony relates to the handling of the account after the contract was made, it goes no further than to suggest an oral modification of the written contract, as the terms of that contract were fixed by the rule of law above stated. Such a modification of a written contract is effective only to the extent that it is executed, that is, carried out. Civ.Code, sec. 1698; Columbia Casualty Co. v. Lewis, 1936, 14 Cal.App.2d 64, 72, 57 P.2d 1010; Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., supra, Rottman v. Hevener, 1921, 54 Cal.App. 474, 479, 202 P. 329. If there was any oral agreement here to modify the implied terms of the contract regarding the time for payment of the price, obviously that agreement was not executed as to the orders for which plaintiff demanded cash on delivery.

[5] Defendant claims, also, that on or about February 23, 1937, it ordered 10 tons of barley, and that when plaintiff demanded cash on delivery defendant acquiesced in that demand, but that plaintiff did not completely fill this order and thus committed a breach of the contract. The evidence does show that 2 tons of barley were delivered to defendant at this time and paid for on delivery. But we discover no evidence requiring a finding that any more than this 2 tons of barley was ordered on the cash basis and not delivered. Suggestion of a 10-ton order was made in questions asked of plaintiff's witness Hobson on cross-examination, but his answers were that he did not remember such an order. Defendant's witness, after stating that before plaintiff's demand for cash on delivery he gave an order for an unspecified amount, part of which was not delivered, further said:

"Q. How many tons had you ordered at that time? A. Well, they usually roll us about 100—about 10 ton at a time.

"Q. And that was—did you put in an order for about that much? A. Well, that is about what they would roll us every time I would order it * * *

"A. Well, after they called and after I called them and they told me it was cash I never did order any more at all."

On this testimony the trial court may well have concluded that no barley other than that delivered was ordered on the cash basis.

[6] Another contention of defendant is that the contract requires it to order a minimum of 10 tons of barley per month, that when it failed to order any more barley after February, 1937, it at once committed a breach of the contract and the damages should have been fixed as of the time of such breach. This contention is based on the clause of the contract headed "Shipment." We see no sufficient reason for so construing the contract. Had such been the intention it would have been easy so to provide by inserting the words "per month" after the reference to "lots of 10 tons or more," but those words or their equivalent do not appear. Instead the whole clause is introduced by the words "as required," which, with the subsequent provision for notice by the purchaser, give it an option as to the time for delivery and the amount thereof, limited only by the statement of the period of time in which this may be done, and by the specified minimum for a single order.

[7-9] The evidence shows that on July 31, 1938, the plaintiff did not have on hand for delivery under the contract an amount of rolled barley equal to that then remaining undelivered, that plaintiff made no tender of barley to defendant on that date, and that this undelivered barley was never "invoiced to the purchaser," as the contract provides. Defendant contends that by reason of these omissions on plaintiff's part it cannot recover. But the evidence shows that on July 31, 1938, Upton, the plaintiff's agent, had a conversation with Fratkin, representing the defendant, in which, as Upton testified: "I asked Mr. Fratkin if they expected to take delivery of the undelivered balance of the contract, and he stated to me that they didn't intend to, and I asked him why, and he said because we had refused delivery without the cash. * * * I told him that I was supposed to collect the account." This constituted an unequivocal refusal by defendant, made at a time when plaintiff was not in default, and not later withdrawn, to proceed further in performance of the contract, and excused plaintiff from the necessity it might otherwise have been under to make a tender of the barley and invoice it. Civ.Code, sec. 1440; Cossins v. Hershell, etc., Co., 1930, 103 Cal.App. 524, 529, 284 P. 1038. Such refusal does not relieve the plaintiff from the requirement that in order to recover it must have been able to perform on its part. Dickey v. Kuhn, 1930, 106 Cal. App. 300, 304, 289 P. 242. But such ability appeared here. While plaintiff did not have the necessary amount of rolled barley on hand on July 31, it did have that quantity of unrolled barley and the necessary machinery for rolling it and could have rolled and delivered the barley if defendant had been willing to accept it. The evidence shows that such a quantity of barley cannot be rolled and kept for any considerable time because of its tendency to spoil, and the contract allows plaintiff sufficient time for rolling after the barley is required.

[10-12] Finally, defendant contends that the evidence does not support the finding of damages, and this contention must be sustained. In discussing this point defendant erroneously assumes that the measure of damages here is fixed by section 3353 of the Civil Code. That section declares what is "the value of property to a seller" in estimating damages, and prior to the adoption of the Uniform Sales Act in this state in 1931, section 3311 of the Civil Code, which then fixed the measure of damages in such a case as we have here, adopted "the value to the seller" as one of the factors to be used in estimating such damages. But in 1931 section 3311 was repealed, and the Uniform Sales Act was adopted, and the matter is now covered by section 1784 of the Civil Code, adopted as part of that act. Respondent contends that the applicable part of this section is subdivision (3) thereof, which provides that "Where there is an available market for the goods in question, the measure of damages is * * * the difference between the contract price and the market or current price at the time or times when the goods ought to have been accepted." The evidence does not suggest that any other part of section 1784 is to be considered. The only evidence on the subject is the hereinafter stated testimony of plaintiff's witness Furman. After testifying that he was familiar with the market value of rolled barley delivered in quantities of 10 tons or more in the Santa Paula area (defendant's place of business was in that area) on July 31, 1938, and that this market price was $23 per ton, he continued:

"Q. How do you arrive at that price, Mr. Furman? A. Because on that date the barley market, the barley was selling and was worth 90 cents a hundred in the valley where it was grown, Santa Inez. Santa Inez is a section where we buy our barley. We add 10 cents transportation and 10 cents for rolling, a dollar a ton profit, that makes an aggregate of $23."

On cross-examination he said that the price he added for rolling included a profit of about 75 cents per ton. The witness' first general statement of market price here can have no greater force or effect, even on appeal, than his immediately ensuing explanation of its meaning. According to the explanation, it merely states what would have been the cost to plaintiff at the time in question of buying whole barley elsewhere, rolling it and transporting it to Santa Paula, with a profit added, what the statute calls for is "the market or current price." " 'Market price' and 'market value,' when applied to any article, mean the same thing. They mean the price or value of the article established or shown by sales in the way of ordinary business. * * * 'Market value' is the price at which goods are freely offered in the market to all the world." Kings County Packing Co. v. Sunland Sales Co-op. Ass'n, 1929, 100 Cal.App. 126, 133, 279 P. 1036, 1039—emphasis by the court. The evidence quoted does not show that there was an available market, or that there was a current or market price for rolled barley at the time and place of the breach. In the absence of all these factors, section 1784 Civil Code provides other rules for estimating damages, but there is no evidence by which they can be applied.

[13] However, since we find no error affecting the determination of defendant's liability for damages, only the issue of damages need be retried following the reversal which must be ordered.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the superior court to retry the issue of plaintiff's damages only, all the present findings on other issues to stand, and thereupon to enter judgment in plaintiff's favor for such amount of damages as it may find plaintiff to have suffered by the defendant's breach of contract.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concurred.

PEOPLE v. KELLEY.

Cr. 3531.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

Hearing Granted March 27, 1942.

1. Gaming ⇐98(5)

Evidence was sufficient to warrant conviction of occupying an apartment with books, papers, apparatus, device and paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets on results of horse races. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

2. Criminal law ⇐1159(1)

If the circumstances given in proof of crime are such as would warrant a jury of reasonably minded persons in inferring guilt of accused, appellate court is not justified in disturbing verdict, even though innocence might as readily have been inferred.

3. United States ⇐22

An act of Congress does not have sanctity of constitutional provision, and even though the act is valid within orbit of activities of Congress, the operation of the act can affect only those subjects over which the central government has jurisdiction.

4. Telegraphs and telephones ⇐79

The provision in Federal Communications Act that no person not authorized by sender shall intercept or divulge contents of any communication to any person, and that no person not being entitled thereto shall receive any intercepted communication by wire or radio, was intended for activities of officials and courts of federal government and for no others. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605.

5. States ⇐4

In matters involving procedure, state courts are not affected by acts of Congress, and the state can establish its own court procedure in accordance with the genius of its own laws and institutions, subject only to limitations of Federal Constitution.

6. States ⇐4

The provision in California Constitution making California an inseparable part of American union and acknowledging Federal Constitution as supreme law of land does not deprive California of its own sovereignty and of power to regulate its own adjective law. Const. art. 1, § 3.

7. United States ⇐1

The purpose of framers of Federal Constitution was to establish a government which should be supreme within its own sphere of action but which should not usurp any of powers reserved to states.

8. Constitutional law ⇐254

Whether provision in Federal Communications Act of 1934 that no person not authorized by sender shall intercept or divulge contents of any communication to any person, and that no person not entitled thereto shall receive any intercepted communication by wire or radio, should govern proceedings in state court, does not involve the principle of due process. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

9. Constitutional law ⇐257

Whenever a criminal prosecution in state court is based upon a law not in itself repugnant to Federal Constitution, and trial of prosecution is conducted with due process and according to established procedure for judicial proceedings by law of state, no clause of Federal Constitution is violated.

10. States ⇐4

The power of state to regulate its own court procedure is substantially unrestricted by any power the state has granted.

11. Commerce ⇐7, 80

Under interstate commerce clause, Congress has power to regulate intrastate transactions when necessary for protection of interstate commerce, but such power does not enlarge authority of Congress to make rules of procedure for state courts. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

12. Criminal law ⇐394

Since provision in Federal Communications Act of 1934 that no person not authorized by sender shall intercept or divulge contents of any communication to any person, and that no person not entitled thereto shall receive any intercepted communication by wire or radio, was designed as a rule for federal courts, evidence procured by means of intercepting any wire or wireless communication is not admissible in the federal courts. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605.

13. Criminal law ⇐394
Telegraphs and telephones ⇐79

The provision in Federal Communications Act of 1934 providing that no person not authorized by sender shall intercept or divulge contents of any communication to any person, and that no person not entitled thereto shall receive any intercepting communication by wire or radio, does not extend to intrastate telephonic conversations, and it is only when an intrastate communication gained by tapping telephone wires is offered in a federal court that such communication is inadmissible. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605.

14. Commerce ⇐28

The intercepting of intrastate communications is not violative of Federal Constitution.

15. United States ⇐5

The Federal Constitution was not intended to confer on central government power to prescribe rules of evidence for the courts of the several states, in absence of specific grant of such power to the central government.

16. Criminal law ⇐394

The admission into evidence by California court of telephonic communications obtained by the interception thereof is not prohibited by Federal Constitution or by provision in Federal Communications Act of 1934 that no person not authorized by sender shall intercept or divulge contents of any communication to any person, and that no person not entitled thereto shall receive any intercepted communication by wire or radio. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605.

17. Criminal law ⇐394

In prosecution for occupying apartment with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets on results of horse races, allowing police officers to testify without consent of sender of messages, to contents of messages which came to apartment over telephone after officers had gained entrance thereto, was not violative of the Federal Communications Act of 1934, since such act does not constitute a restraint on state court. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605; Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

18. Criminal law ⇐394

In prosecution for occupying apartment with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets on results of horse races, defendant could not assert that Federal Communications Act of 1934, if applicable, rendered inadmissible, without sender's consent, police officer's testimony as to contents of messages which came into apartment over telephone after officer gained entrance thereto, where identity of sender was never disclosed, and proof was not made of lack of consent of sender. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605; Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

19. Constitutional law ⇐206(1)

In prosecution for occupying apartment with paraphernalia for purposes of recording bets on results of horse races, admission of testimony of police officers concerning contents of messages which came to apartment over telephone after officers had gained entrance thereto, even if interception of messages was violative of Federal Communications Act of 1934, did not deprive defendant of a privilege or immunity of national citizenship guaranteed by Fourteenth Amendment against abrogation by the states, where no sender of message objected to the interception and defendant at all times disclaimed all interest in the messages intercepted. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605; Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

20. Criminal law ⇐394
Telegraphs and telephones ⇐79

The provisions of second and fourth clauses of federal statute regarding the intercepting and divulging of communications which on their face purport to relate to all persons do not relate to the regulation of communication carriers, and merely constitute a rule of evidence for federal courts. Communications Act 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605.

21. Criminal law ⇐386

In prosecution for occupying apartment with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets on results of horse races, telephonic communications which came to apartment of defendant at time of his arrest and which were received by officers were proper evidence in proof of use of apartment. Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

22. Criminal law ⇐448(7)

A person properly qualified may testify to the significance and meaning of signs and symbols used in the business of bookmaking.

23. Criminal law ⇐1169(1)

In prosecution for occupying apartment with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets on results of horse races, testimony of officers in establishing from scratch sheet that a horse race was being run on day of defendant's arrest, was harmless, if error, where offense was complete when it was established that defendant occupied an apartment with paper and paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets on horse races, and whether the race was run was immaterial. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Roy V. Rhodes, Judge.

George Kelley was convicted of occupying an apartment with books, papers, apparatus, and paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets on results of horse races. From an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals.

Order affirmed.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Lewis Drucker, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was convicted of occupying an apartment with books, papers, apparatus, devise and paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets on the results of horse races in violation of section 337a, subdivision 2 of the Penal Code. His appeal is based upon the grounds: (1) insufficiency of the evidence; (2) error in admitting intercepted telephonic messages without the consent of the sender as in violation of section 605 of the Federal Communication Act of 1934, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605, and of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; (3) error in the admission of evidence of discoveries made by unreasonable search and seizure, contrary to section 19, article 1 of the Constitution; (4) other errors in admitting evidence.

[1, 2] (1) A brief synopsis of the facts will serve as a complete refutation of the first claim. When the police knocked at the door of appellant's apartment, they were advised by the lady attendant that it was vacant and that the number they were looking for was upstairs. Having found the upstairs apartment vacant, they returned and rang appellant's door bell three times before he responded. In answer to the inquiry as to his immediate occupation, appellant replied that he was reading; but at that very moment the blinds were drawn and the room was dark. On their way upstairs, the officers heard appellant's telephone ringing; upon their entry into his apartment they found the telephone wires were cut. Upon reconnecting the wires, the telephone rang not less than fifty times, each of which calls was answered by an officer. Each patron gave his name and stated the bet that he wished placed. When the officers called appellant stated that his name was Jimmy. When a message came for Jimmy, appellant then stated that his name was George, the party addressed by practically all of the invisible clientele. The officers found in a drawer within the apartment a number of blank forms of A B C betting markers ordinarily used in bookmaking places. They found upon the person of appellant the key to the door of the apartment. The toilet contained small bits of paper containing figures. The dial of his radio was turned to the station which was at that time broadcasting horse races. Comparing the numbers given to them by the patrons who called over the telephone with names and numbers appearing in a racing bulletin of the same day, the officers found that each horse and each number designated over the telephone appeared in the bulletin and that the names of the race tracks mentioned in one of the telephonic requests were operating on that day in the United States.

The foregoing facts were sufficient to establish the purpose for which the room was occupied notwithstanding the denials of appellant of any knowledge of the use of the apartment for placing bets on horse races as well as claiming that he was a mere guest of the tenant for the time being. People v. Tepper, 36 Cal.App.2d 525, 527, 97 P.2d 1002; People v. Ryan, 15 Cal.2d 492, 102 P.2d 320. If the circumstances given in proof of the crime are such as would warrant a jury of reasonably minded persons in inferring the guilt of the accused, the appellate court is not justified in disturbing the verdict even though innocence might as readily have been inferred. People v. Martinez, 20 Cal. App. 343, 128 P. 952; People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778.

[3-5] (2) Appellant contends that the court committed prejudicial error in allowing police officers to testify to the contents of messages which came to the apartment over the telephone after they had gained entrance thereto. This contention is based upon the inhibitions of section 605 of the Federal Communications Act of 1934, Title 47, U.S.C.A., which provides that no person not authorized by the sender shall intercept or divulge the contents of any communication to any person, and no person not being entitled thereto shall receive any intercepted communication by wire or radio. Appellant proceeds upon the theory that an act of Congress has the sanctity of a constitutional provision. This is so fundamentally erroneous as to make a refutation thereof super-erogation. Even though the act of Congress is valid within the orbit of the activities of that department of the government, the operation of the statute can affect only those subjects over which the central government has jurisdiction. Section 605 was intended for the activities of officials and courts of the federal government and for no others. In matters involving solely procedure, state courts are not affected by acts of Congress. Subject only to the limitations of the federal Constitution, the state may establish its own procedure, People v. Nolan, 144 Cal. 75, 80, 77 P. 774.

[6, 7] Section 3, article 1 of the Constitution which makes California an inseparable part of the American union and acknowledges the Constitution of the United States the supreme law of the land does not deprive the state of its own sovereignty and of the power to regulate its own adjective law. Ibid. The purpose of the framers of the federal Constitution was to establish a government which should be supreme within its own sphere of action but which should not usurp any of the powers reserved to the states. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L.Ed. 579. Accordingly the state may regulate its own court procedure in accordance with the genius of its own laws and institutions so long as it does not offend some vital principle, the protection and operation of which has been made a part of the organic law of the union. Snyder v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 54 S.Ct. 330, 78 L.Ed. 674, 90 A.L.R. 575.

[8-12] The principle of due process is not involved in the question as to whether section 605 should govern proceedings in a state court. Whenever a criminal prosecution in a state court is based upon a law not in itself repugnant to the federal Constitution and the trial of the action is conducted with due process and according to the established procedure for judicial proceedings by the law of the state, it violates no clause of the federal Constitution. Frank v. Mangum, 237 U.S. 309, 326, 35 S.Ct. 582, 59 L.Ed. 969. In truth the power of a state to regulate its own court procedure is substantially unrestricted by any power it has granted. Jordan v. Massachusetts, 225 U.S. 167, 176, 32 S.Ct. 651, 56 L.Ed. 1038. The cases of Weiss v. United States, 308 U.S. 321, 60 S. Ct. 269, 84 L.Ed. 298, and Nardone v. United States, 302 U.S. 379, 58 S.Ct. 275, 82 L.Ed. 314, relied upon by appellant, do not support his contention. Both of these decisions arose out of prosecutions in the district courts of the United States. The proof offered in each case was such as congress sought to inhibit in the enactment of the Federal Communications Act. Merely because it was by those decisions held that under section 605 intrastate messages may not be divulged in a federal court they are not for that reason authority for controlling procedure in a state court. Under the interstate commerce clause, Congress has the power to regulate intrastate transactions when necessary for the protection of interstate commerce. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3. But that power does not enlarge the authority of congress to make rules of procedure for state courts. Since the act was designed as a rule for federal courts the evidence procured by means of intercepting any wire or wireless communication is not admissible in such courts.

[13-17] The act does not extend to intrastate telephonic conversations. United States v. Bruno, 2 Cir., 105 F.2d 921; Bruno v. United States, 308 U.S. 287, 60 S.Ct. 198, 84 L.Ed. 257. It is only when an intrastate communication gained by tapping telephone wires is offered in a federal court that it is inadmissible. Sablowsky v. United States, 101 F.2d 183, 189. No provision of the federal Constitution is violated by intercepting intrastate communications. Valli v. United States, 1 Cir., 94 F.2d 687; Id., 303 U.S. 632, 58 S.Ct. 760, 82 L.Ed. 1092. In the absence of a specific grant in the federal Constitution, it cannot be said that it was the intention of the framers of that instrument to confer upon the central government the power to prescribe rules of evidence for the courts of the several states. Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th Ed., vol. 1, 68; Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 48 S.Ct. 564, 72 L.Ed. 944, 66 A.L.R. 376; Hawes v. State of Georgia, 258 U.S. 1, 42 S.Ct. 204, 66 L.Ed. 431. From the foregoing, we conclude that there is no constitutional inhibition upon the courts of this state to admit into evidence telephonic communications obtained by the interception thereof. Neither does section 605 of the Federal Communications Act constitute a restraint upon the state courts. Rowan v. State, 175 Md. 547, 3 A.2d 753; McIntyre v. State, 190 Ga. 872, 11 S.E.2d 5, 10, 134 A.L.R. 813.

[18] Even though section 605 applied to the interception of intrastate messages, it would not avail appellant here for the very good reason that there was no proof made of the lack of consent of the sender of any of the messages. In fact, his identity was never disclosed. If an invisible seeker of easy money by the bookmaking route would promote his forbidden venture by the telephone, he must pay the price of his intangibility when his message is intercepted by the agencies of the law. His position is not one to invoke unsolicited judicial protection.

[19, 20] (3) It is argued that the admission of the evidence received by the interception of telephonic communications by the police officers deprived appellant of privileges granted to him by the federal constitution. There is no authority in support of such argument. The act of intercepting telephonic orders directed to the apartment of appellant was completed at the moment of its receipt by the police. The act of divulging the contents of such orders to the court was a totally different act from that of taking the messages over the wires. If a right of appellant was violated either by the interception of the messages or by divulging the contents thereof, appellant may pursue his appropriate remedy against the officer. But he cannot relate his quarrel with the police as a defense to a long series of crimes which he would extend without limit.

The interception of messages might not have been in accordance with the noblest of ethical standards but at the same time it is a fact of social significance that the history of crimes and criminals has demonstrated that the successful detection and apprehension of defiant evildoers has been in a large measure made successful by the bold conduct of those in authority who either apprehended the criminal in the commission of his crime or made themselves ostensible parties to the conspiracies in order to complete the chain of evidence against the miscreants. Olmstead v. United States, supra. If deception may with approval be practiced by law-enforcing agencies upon men engaged in the pursuit of organized crime, surely the conduct of an officer who, upon invading the lair of an offender and in his presence seizes evidences of the suspected crimes, does not so poison the stream of justice as to defeat the residual decree. For those reasons the construction of section 605 as suggested by appellant would be a subversion of a universal practice which is approved by the highest legal and judicial authorities. Olmstead v. United States, supra. Even though the officer violates the rights of a suspect by making an unreasonable seizure, the use of the seized effects is no part of his offense against the constitutional immunity. People v. Wong Toy, 131 Cal.App. 455, 21 P.2d 465.

There is no principle of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution violated by the reception in evidence of intercepted telephonic messages as forbidden by section 605. In the first place the section was primarily designed to regulate the behavior of those "receiving or assisting in receiving or transmitting * * * any interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio * * *." The first and third clauses prohibit employees of communication agencies from divulging the contents of messages transmitted by the carrier. Clauses 2 and 4 of the section do not relate to the regulation of the carriers but are merely a rule of evidence for federal courts. Sablowsky v. United States, 3 Cir., 101 F.2d 183, 189. Following the Sablowsky decision, it was held that there is no fundamental difference between evidence obtained by tapping telephone wires or any other method of detection so long as the immunities of the federal Constitution are preserved. United States v. Polakoff, 2 Cir., 112 F.2d 888, 890, 134 A.L.R. 607. No such immunity was shown to have been violated because no sender of a message objected to the interception. Moreover, appellant at all times disclaimed all interest in the messages intercepted. If neither the sender nor the sendee objected, how can it be said that the act was violated? Such is not a privilege or immunity of national citizenship guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment against abridgement by the states.

[21] (4) It is urged that the court committed prejudicial error in permitting officers to testify to the contents of the telephonic communications which came to the apartment of appellant at the time of his arrest. It has been repeatedly held that such communications are proper evidence in proof of the use of the occupied premises. People v. Joffe, 45 Cal.App.2d 233, 235, 113 P.2d 901; People v. Reifenstuhl, 37 Cal.App.2d 402, 99 P.2d 564.

[22, 23] The contention that the court erred in allowing the officers to explain the meaning of the words, signs and symbols found in the bulletin is without support. A person properly qualified may testify to the significance and meaning of the signs and symbols used in the business of bookmaking. People v. Cohen, 48 Cal. App.2d 459, 119 P.2d 995. But the testimony of the officers against appellant was not in explanation of signs or symbols but was the result of his comparison of the numbers and names of horses given him by the patrons of appellant over his own telephone, with those appearing in a current scratch sheet. From such comparison the officer found the horses and numbers mentioned in the telephonic conversations were found in the scratch sheet. The testimony of the officers in establishing from the scratch sheet that a horse race was being run on the day of appellant's arrest was harmless, if it was error, for the reason that the offense was complete when it was established that appellant occupied an apartment with paper and paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets on horse races. Whether the race was run is immaterial. People v. Hinkle, 64 Cal.App. 375, 221 P. 693.

Order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

MacNICOL v. EAST COALINGA OIL FIELDS CORPORATION et al.

Civ. 6730.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 26, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 23, 1942.

1. Dedication ⇐19(4)

The filing of a subdivision map with the streets and avenues delineated thereon constituted an offer to dedicate the streets and avenues to a public use, and acceptance of all streets and avenues by county board of supervisors on behalf of the public constituted a complete paper "dedication".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Dedication".

2. Dedication ⇐19(5)

Where the owner of a subdivision after recording a map showing streets and avenues sells lots designated thereon by reference to the recorded map, he irrevocably dedicates the streets and avenues shown thereon to the use of the public.

3. Dedication ⇐15

An intention to dedicate to a public use is a material element to be considered in determining whether there has been a dedication.

4. Dedication ⇐1

A "dedication" is a voluntary transfer which partakes both of the nature of a "grant" and also of a "gift", and it is governed by the fundamental principles which control those transactions.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Gift" and "Grant".

5. Dedication ⇐15, 31, 44

A dedication consists of an offer and acceptance, and to constitute a dedication there must be an intention on the part of the owner to dedicate to public use, clearly indicated by his words or acts, and unequivocal proof of acceptance.

6. Mines and minerals ⇐54(2)

Where deed conveying subdivision lots, drilling contract entered into in connection with conveyance, and corporation commissioner's permit to sell lots were all part of the same transaction, they were required to be considered together to ascertain the parties' intent on question whether conveyance carried title to center of proposed road on which lots were located. Civ.Code, §§ 831, 1112.

7. Dedication ⇐44

Evidence that subdivision was made for sole purpose of selling lots to finance drilling of oil wells, that grantor and grantees did not intend to lay out any streets or avenues, that approximately 20 years had elapsed since county board of supervisors had accepted streets and avenues designated on filed map, and that no streets or avenues had been constructed, showed that grantor and grantees intended that there should be no dedication vesting in grantees of lots and their successors any title to portions of lots embraced within boundaries of streets and avenues designated on map. Civ.Code, §§ 831, 1112.

8. Mines and minerals ⇐54(2)

Where deed to mineral lands, drilling contract, and corporation commissioner's permit to sell land were all executed as part of one transaction and were thus required to be construed together, facts as shown from dates of instruments to date of filing of complaint in action for declaratory relief, together with construction which parties placed on instruments, were also required to be considered in determining the respective rights of the parties.

9. Contracts ⇐147(1), 164

The intent of the parties at the time of the execution of several instruments as part of a single transaction is controlling, and that intent must be ascertained from all of the instruments considered together.

10. Mines and minerals ⇐55(4)

Where an interest in minerals sold and conveyed or reserved is unlimited in duration, it is a "freehold" interest, that is, an "estate in fee in real property".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estate in Fee in Real Property" and "Freehold".

11. Mines and minerals ⇐55(4)

Under deed conveying title in fee and drilling contract limiting grantor's exclusive right to drill for oil to a period of 50 years but reserving to grantor the right to participate in profits perpetually, grantees were vested with fee-simple title to the surface, excepting therefrom rights expressly, inferentially, and incidentally reserved by grantor in deed and contract considered together.

12. Mines and minerals ⇐55(4)

Where it was stipulated that there was no intention at time of conveyance of mineral lands to vest title in grantees to any gas or carbohydrates, rights to gas and carbohydrates produced were reserved to grantor irrespective of whether title in fee was attempted or intended to be conveyed.

13. Mines and minerals ⇐55(5)

Casing-head gas was not intended to be governed by stipulation that there was no intention at time of conveyance of mineral lands to vest title in grantees to any gas or carbohydrates, since casing-head gas is a component part of "oil", and if any was produced it should be classified as oil.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Oil".

14. Mines and minerals ⇐55(8)

Evidence was insufficient to show that oil company which reserved exclusive right to drill for oil on certain premises for 50 years and reserved the right to participate in profits perpetually waived anything more than its drilling rights by consenting to the execution and delivery of an oil and gas lease.

15. Appeal and error ⇐1008(3)

Where the construction given an instrument by a trial court appears to be reasonable and consistent with the intent of the parties making it, appellate courts will not substitute another interpretation even though it seems equally tenable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; H. S. Schaffer, Judge.

Action by Lee Alex MacNicol against the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation and others to quiet title and for declaratory relief. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment modified and, as modified, affirmed.

L. A. MacNicol, of Merced, in pro. per.

C. Ray Robinson and W. Eugene Craven, both of Merced, for respondents.

MONCUR, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment against appellants and in favor of respondents in an action brought to quiet title to certain lots and parcels of land and for declaratory relief under certain written instruments. The property involved is situated in Fresno County and the action was brought in the superior court of that county, and, by stipulation, was transferred to Merced County for trial. The action was tried before the court without a jury and certain of the facts were stipulated to by the parties. Oral and documentary evidence also was introduced in support of the respective issues raised by the pleadings.

Appellant's opening brief contains a statement of the facts and respondent, in its brief, states that the statement of facts set forth in appellant's opening brief is sufficient for a determination of the questions involved on this appeal. Therefore, for the purposes of this opinion, that statement of facts is adopted and it is as follows: About 1919 one George Schwinn and Mattie Kearns were the owners of a tract of land in Fresno County; the tract was subdivided into blocks and lots and a map of said subdivision showing certain portions to be designated as County Roads was filed for record on July 15, 1919; the subdivision contained 20 blocks, each block containing 120 lots, making a total of 2400 lots. 2160 of the lots of the subdivision were designated as single lots and 240 of the lots were designated as double lots.

On July 29, 1919, the respondent, East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation was incorporated under the laws of the State of California, the incorporators thereof being said George Schwinn, one Gordon Griffith, and P. B. Miller.

By deed dated September 1, 1919, the owners of said tract of land conveyed blocks 1 to 20 inclusive of said subdivision to the Alameda County Title Insurance Co., as trustee, with instructions to said title company to execute and deliver deeds to purchasers of lots upon receiving certain moneys therefor.

At about the time of the conveyance of said blocks and lots to said title company, the owners of said tract authorized the respondent, East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, to act as sole sales agent of said lots.

Pursuant to said authorization to act as sales agent of said lots, respondent made application to and obtained from the Commissioner of Corporations of the State of California, a permit, authorizing it to sell said lots for the amount and for the purposes and upon the conditions set forth in said permit.

According to the provisions of said permit, issued by the Commissioner of Corporations, respondent was authorized to sell lots in said subdivision and to issue to each purchaser of such lots an instrument representing the deed of the lot sold together with a contract or agreement to drill for and produce oil from said tract of land, said contract or agreement to be in the form and containing the terms and conditions as evidenced by a copy thereof attached to the amended complaint filed herein marked Exhibit "C."

Upon the issuance of said permit the respondent commenced the sale of lots in said subdivision by reference to the map thereof, appellant's predecessor purchasing the two lots described in the amended complaint.

At the time of the sale of each lot each purchaser, including appellant's predecessor, executed a drilling contract, according to the terms of which it was agreed, among other things, that each lot contained 2500 square feet; that lots in the northerly tier of blocks 1 and 2 and in the southerly tier of blocks 19 and 20, should be computed as double lots as to price and as to participation in profits; that each purchaser should receive a proportionate share of 80 per cent of all net profits arising from the sale of oil derived from any oil well or wells drilled on any part of said quarter section and respondent should retain 20 per cent of said profits which were reserved; that the tract was believed to be oil bearing and not otherwise productive and that the subdivision was made for mining purposes only; that the grantee was an independent purchaser of a parcel of land in fee simple, having as an incident thereto a right to receive a portion of the net proceeds from the sale of oil produced from any well or wells drilled upon said tract by respondent or its successors or assigns.

Prior to the date of the execution and delivery of any deeds covering any lots in said subdivision but subsequent to the execution of drilling contracts by purchasers of lots, the Alameda County Title Insurance Company, as trustee, by deed dated April 28, 1921, conveyed blocks 1 to 20, inclusive, of said subdivision to respondent, and about the same time the owners of said tract, George Schwinn and Mattie Kearns executed and delivered to respondent their deed to said quarter section subdivision.

Subsequent to the time that said blocks 1 to 20, inclusive, of said subdivision were deeded to respondent and commencing about May 10, 1921, respondent made, executed, and delivered numerous deeds covering lots in said subdivision to purchasers thereof. Respondent conveyed lots 58 and 59 in block 4 of said subdivision to one J. P. Cackler, appellant's predecessor in interest. Each purchaser of lots in said subdivision, including appellant's predecessor, executed and delivered to respondent a drilling contract, a copy of which is attached to the amended complaint and marked Exhibit "C."

Pursuant to the drilling contracts executed by purchasers of lots in said subdivision, and out of the funds received by respondent from the sale of lots therein, and pursuant to the permit issued by the Commissioner of Corporations and the rights reserved by respondent under its deeds of conveyance of said lots, respondent drilled an oil well on said tract to a depth of about 4780 feet. About May, 1923, respondent discontinued its drilling operations and abandoned said well, its funds being completely exhausted and the drilling fund being expended.

After May, 1923, no further drilling operations were attempted by respondent by reason of its inability to finance such operations.

About 1938 oil was discovered in paying quantities in the general locality of the subdivision and efforts were made toward causing the tract to be prospected for oil.

As a result of these efforts, a community oil and gas lease was executed by the respondent, dated July 19, 1938, wherein one Zeb A. Terry was named as lessee, said lease covering property situated in said N. W. ¼ of said section 30 and numerous owners of lots in said subdivision, including appellant's predecessor, executed counterparts of said community oil and gas lease. According to the terms of said oil and gas lease the lessee is entitled to drill and to produce oil, gas, and other hydro-carbon substances from the quarter section and is required to pay to the lessors thereunder a royalty on oil equal to a ⅛th of the market price of oil produced and saved from the premises and a ⅛th of the proceeds from the sale of gas produced therefrom. Respondent consented in writing to the execution of counterparts of said lease by owners of lots.

Subsequent to the 19th day of July, 1938, and prior to the filing of this action the lessee under said community oil and gas lease assigned all of his right, title, interest, and estate in and to said lease and each of the counterparts thereof covering the N. ⅜ths of said subdivision, including the counterpart thereof executed by appellant's predecessor, to the Pure Oil Company, a corporation, and said lessee assigned to the Pacific Western Oil Corporation and George F. Getty, Inc., the S. ⅝ths thereof. Drilling operations were commenced in said subdivision by the owners of said lease and oil and gas are now being produced therefrom.

No county roads or streets or roads or streets whatsoever were ever laid out, maintained, or used on said quarter section as designated on the map thereof.

The land lies in the foothill area on the west side of the San Joaquin Valley. It is a general rolling foothill area used for sheep pasture, with no manifestation of ownership or development or subdivision.

In addition to the foregoing statements of fact, it was stipulated by the parties herein as follows: "That it was not the intention of the grantors or of the grantees of said property that any county roads or streets or avenues ever be laid out, maintained or used on, over or across said premises as designated and delineated upon said map of said subdivision, a copy of which said map is attached to plaintiff's amended complaint and marked 'Exhibit A', and that said subdivision was made for the sole purpose of selling pieces or parcels of land therein in order to finance the drilling of an oil well or oil wells thereon and for no other purpose whatsoever."

[1, 2] Under the first cause of action seeking to quiet title there is involved the question as to whether the conveyance of the two lots described in the complaint carried title to the center of the proposed road upon which these lots were located. Section 831 of the Civil Code of this state provides that an owner of land bounded by a road or street is presumed to own to the center of the way, but the contrary may be shown; and section 1112 of the Civil Code provides that a transfer of land bounded by the highway passes the title of the person whose estate is transferred to the soil of the highway in front of the center thereof, unless a different intent appears from the grant.

The filing of the map with the streets and avenue delineated thereon constituted an offer to dedicate the roads, streets, and avenue to a public use. In supplement to the agreed statement of facts it was stipulated beween the parties that there was endorsed upon the map filed for record the following: "State of California, County of Fresno, ss. The Board of Supervisors, in and for said County and State, hereby approve the accompanying map and accept on behalf of the public and for public use, all the streets, avenues, Court, Highways, Alleys and Lanes, offered for dedication thereby. In Witness Whereof, said Board of Supervisors by resolution duly adopted has caused these presents to be signed by its Chairman, and attested by its clerk, this 14th. day of July, 1919. J. B. Johnson, Chairman, Attest: B. M. Barnwell, Clerk, By J. R. Schaeffer, Deputy."

The filing of the map and the foregoing acceptance by the board of supervisors constituted a complete paper dedication and when the owner, after recording such a map, sells lots designated thereon by reference to said recorded map, he thereby irrevocably dedicates the streets and alleys shown thereon to the use of the public. Larkey v. Los Angeles, 70 Cal.App. 635, 233 P. 991, and cases therein cited. In the case of Elliott v. McIntosh, 41 Cal.App. 763, 183 P. 692, 693, it is said: "Proceeding from this proposition it must follow that if lots are sold by number and not by metes and bounds, reference being made to such a map, the original dedicator is es-topped to deny that the portions designated as streets on the map were not in fact dedicated or accepted. Furthermore, conveyances of such a character carry title to the center of the street. Colegrove Water Co. v. Hollywood, 151 Cal. [425] 426, 431, 90 P. 1053, 13 L.R.A.,N.S., 904; section 1112, Civ.Code. But this, of course, is not the case if the portion claimed as a street is not such in fact. Sanchez v. Grace Methodist [Episcopal] Church, 114 Cal. 295, 299, 46 P. 2."

[3] As to whether there is a valid and complete dedication, an intention to dedicate to a public use is a material element to be considered in determining if there has been in fact such a dedication. In People v. Rio Nido Co., Inc., 29 Cal.App.2d 486, at page 491, 85 P.2d 461, at page 465, it is said: "To constitute a valid and complete dedication, there must be an intention by the owner, clearly indicated by his words or acts, to dedicate the lands to public use (City of Venice v. Short Line Beach L. Co., 180 Cal. 447, 450, 181 P. 658), and an acceptance either by public user or formal resolution. (Brown v. Bachelder, 214 Cal. 753, 7 P.2d 1027)."

[4, 5] A dedication, being a voluntary transfer, as pointed out in County of Inyo v. Given, 183 Cal. 415, 191 P. 688, partakes both of the nature of a grant and also a gift, and is governed by the fundamental principles which control such transactions. It consists of an offer and acceptance and both of those elements must be clearly and definitely established. There must be the intention of the owner to dedicate to public use clearly indicated by his words or acts, and unequivocal proof of the acceptance.

In Manhattan Beach v. Cortelyou, 1938, 10 Cal.2d 653, at page 668, 76 P.2d 483, at page 490, the court said: "In order to constitute a valid dedication, there must be an intention on the part of the owner to devote his property to the public use. California Nav., etc., Co. v. Union Transp. Co., 126 Cal. 433, 58 P. 936, 46 L.R.A. 825; Niles v. Los Angeles, 125 Cal. 572, 58 P. 190."

[6, 7] In the instant case the public is not seeking the use of any of the roads or of the avenue specified on the map and it is not necessary to consider the rights of the public to their use. In the case of the City of Santa Clara v. Ivancovich, 47 Cal.App. 2d 502, 118 P.2d 303, 307, it is said: "There is a distinction between the rights accruing to the public generally and the purchasers of lots according to a map upon an offer of dedication. Eltinge v. Santos, 171 Cal. 278, 152 P. 915, (Ann.Cas.1917A, 1143); People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 70, 79, 22 P. 474, 15 Am.St.Rep. 22." The deed conveying the lots in question to the predecessors of applicant, the drilling contract entered into in connection with the conveyance and the permit of the corporation commissioner are all a part of the same transaction and must be considered together to ascertain the intent of the parties. The subject matter of the transaction was the sale and conveyance of the lots for the purpose of securing the necessary finances to drill for and produce oil from the quarter section of land of which the described lots were a part, and if oil was found and produced, to provide for its sale and the distribution of the proceeds thereof. The transaction was one for mining purposes only. Considering the stipulated fact that there was no intention on the part of respondent as grantor and the grantees that on the described subdivision no county roads, or streets, or avenues should ever be laid out, maintained, or used on, over, or across said premises as designated and delineated on said map of said subdivision, and that said subdivision was made for the sole purpose of selling pieces or parcels of land thereof in order to finance the drilling of an oil well or oil wells thereon, and for no other purpose whatsoever; the fact that the single lots were of the area specified and contained 2500 square feet and that the larger lots contained double the area of the single lots, and that a period of approximately twenty years elapsed after the acceptance by the Board of Supervisors of Fresno County and no streets, roads, or avenues were located on the ground or constructed, it seems apparent that as between the grantor, respondent herein, and its grantees, to whose rights appellant herein has succeeded, there was the clear intention that there should not be such a dedication as would vest in the grantee of the lots and their successors any title to the portion of the tract embraced within the boundaries of the streets, roads, and avenues delineated and designated upon the map.

We are satisfied that the finding of the trial court that no title is vested in appellants to the portion of the subdivided tract to the center of the street upon which the lots bounded as designated upon the map is sustained by the evidence, and that it should not be the province of this court to disturb such finding.

The consideration of the second count of the amended complaint wherein a determination of the rights of the parties as to the declaratory relief sought also requires a construction of the several instruments upon which such rights are predicated and, specifically, as to the rights of the parties to the gas and other hydrocarbon substances produced in connection with the drilling operations for oil, which are to be ascertained. The question as to these rights will first be considered as they existed prior to the execution of the Zeb A. Terry leases.

[8] We have said that the deed, drilling contract, and corporation commissioner's permit must be construed together to ascertain the contractual relations between the parties to this action. Also, the facts as shown from the dates of these instruments to the date of the filing of the complaint, together with the construction which the parties have placed upon the transactions must be considered. This latter construction enters very materially into the determination to be reached as to the respective rights of the parties. In the statement of facts into which the parties entered, it is stipulated as follows:

"That at the time of the execution and delivery of the deeds by the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation covering said lots in said subdivision and at the time of the execution of said drilling contracts by the purchasers of said lots by the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, 'gas' was of no particular or special value and the right of the grantees of said lots to participate in any profits derived from the sale thereof was not within the contemplation of the parties and it was not intended that any rights to any gas was to be transferred or conveyed by the grantor to said grantees of said lots."

The deed to J. P. Cackler, appellant's predecessor in interest, is in form a grant deed and conveys the lots involved, together with other lots of the subdivision, free and clear of all incumbrances other than therein contained, reserving unto said East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, for a period of fifty (50) years from the date hereof, the exclusive right to drill for oil upon said described quarter section. The drilling contract referred to provided that upon payment in full of the purchase price, the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation by good and sufficient deed, will convey, or cause to be conveyed, to each purchaser, the lot or lots so paid for, which conveyance shall provide that the grantee in said deed, his heirs or assigns, shall receive a proportionate share of the eighty per cent (80%) of all of the net profits arising from the sale of oil derived from any oil well or wells which the East Coalinga Oil Fields may drill on any part of the above quarter section, and in the proportion that the number of lots conveyed by said deed bears to the total number of lots in said quarter section subdivision, and the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation shall retain twenty per cent (20%) of the said net profits, as its share and proportion of the net production of said well or wells, which is hereby reserved, together with the exclusive right to drill for oil on said quarter section.

The corporation commissioner's permit provides that with the purchase of each lot, the purchaser received in addition to the conveyance of the tract purchased, a drilling contract, or agreement, of this corporation to drill for oil within certain reserved lots in said tract, together with the right of participation proportionately in 80 per cent of the net profits arising from the sale of oil derived therefrom.

Pursuant to its application, said company is permitted to sell 1000 lots at the price of $110 per lot for each single lot, or $220 per lot for each double lot, as indicated in the application herein, and to issue to each purchaser of such lots, an instrument representing the deed of the respective lot sold, together with a contract or agreement to drill for and produce oil from the drill sites in said tract.

[9] The above tract of land is believed to be oil bearing and not otherwise productive, and the subdivision is made for mining purposes only. It is further understood that the grantee is an independent purchaser of a parcel of land, in fee simple, having as an incident thereto a right to receive a portion of the net proceeds from the sale of any oil produced from any wells drilled upon said tract, by the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, its successors and assigns. The deed, on its face, conveys title in fee and the drilling contract states the title to be one in fee. It is the intent of the parties at the time of the execution of the several instruments which is controlling, and this intent must be ascertained from all of the instruments considered together. This rule of construction we deem to be so well settled as not to require a citation of authorities. In view of the provisions of the stipulation of the parties herein, a detailed analysis of the terms of the several instruments involved is considered unnecessary. It is sufficient to say that the whole transaction evidenced a scheme or method by which the oil from the whole subdivision might be developed and produced, and the resulting profits therefrom distributed.

[10, 11] The kind or character of title vested in the respective parties hereto under the conveyances and drilling contract involved herein has been before the courts of this state a number of times in cases wherein there were involved written instruments similar or analogous to those involved herein. In the drilling contract involved herein it is provided that "the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation shall retain twenty per cent (20%) of the said net profits, as its share and proportion of the net production of said well or wells, which is hereby reserved, together with the exclusive right to drill for oil on said quarter section." Under this drilling contract the exclusive right to drill for oil upon the premises was, by the deeds, limited to a period of fifty years but the rights of the grantor to participate in the profits resulting therefrom was not limited but was to continue perpetually. It appears to be well settled in this state that where the interest sold and conveyed or reserved is unlimited in duration, it is a freehold interest, an estate in fee in real property. Callahan v. Martin, 3 Cal.2d 110, 43 P.2d 788, 101 A.L.R. 871; Dabney-Johnston Oil Corporation v. Walden, 4 Cal.2d 637, 52 P.2d 237; Schiffman v. Richfield Oil Co., 8 Cal.2d 211, 223, 64 P.2d 1081; Dabney v. Edwards, 5 Cal.2d 1, 12, 53 P.2d 962, 103 A.L.R. 822; Pimentel v. The Hallbaker Co., 32 Cal. App.2d 697, 703, 90 P.2d 588; Lever v. Smith, 30 Cal.App.2d 667, 87 P.2d 66. We are of the opinion that grantees of the lots were vested with title not only to the surface of the lots but also with a fee simple title thereto but excepting therefrom the rights expressly, inferentially, and incidentally reserved by the grantor as contained in the deed and the drilling contract when considered together but that any title to the portion of the subdivision embraced within the proposed roads or avenue delineated upon the map did not vest either as to surface or soil but remained in the grantor.

[12] From the stipulated fact that there was no intention at the time of the conveyance to vest title in the grantees in and to any gas or carbohydrates taken in connection with the purposes of the transactions, as we construe the conveyances and drilling contract, it is clear that, irrespective of whether title in fee was attempted or intended to be conveyed, the rights to the gas and carbohydrates produced were reserved by the grantor. Those rights remained in the grantor unless relinquished by the Zeb A. Terry leases.

The record herein does not disclose whether casing-head gas has been found upon the quarter section subdivision involved and no mention of casing-head gas appears in the proceedings before the trial court but in the Terry lease the subject of casing-head gas is mentioned, the provision being as follows: "If casing-head gas is manufactured or extracted on the premises, or elsewhere, by lessee, or others under contract, or lease on a royalty basis, from gas produced from wells on said premises, the lessee reserves the right and option to add such gasoline to the oil produced on the premises, in which case it shall be classed as crude oil. No separate accounting or settlement shall be required of lessee; if sold as gasoline, then the lessee shall pay to lessor one-eighth of such royalty or proceeds received by lessee from the sale thereof * * *."

In respondent's brief the question of the classification of casing-head gas is discussed. Our attention is not directed to any California cases bearing upon this subject but we are referred to a discussion thereof appearing in 34 A.L.R. at page 291, and in 82 A.L.R. at page 1304. In 82 A.L.R., beginning at page 1304, it is said: "It will be observed that, while the question has frequently arisen as to whether casing-head gas is gas or oil, the solution of this question does not depend primarily on any abstract inquiry as to the nature of such gas, i. e., the question is not fundamentally an academic or scientific one, to be solved by an analysis of the component parts of the gas, but is a question of construction of the terms of the lease or other contract, in the effort to determine the intent of the parties thereto; and the popular rather than the scientific understanding of the term is the more important usually in determining the rights of the parties. * * So, casing-head gas was held in Livingston Oil Corp. v. Waggoner, Tex.Civ.App., 1925, 273 S.W. 903, to be a constituent of oil, as the term 'oil' was used in the contract of lease * * *." After referring to the testimony of an expert witness concerning the method of extracting casing-head gas, the court says:

"'From this statement of the witness's testimony, it will be observed that casing-head gas is a constituent element of oil; that, in place, it is realty, not personal property. Whether gas or oil, it is, as announced by Chief Justice Hall, speaking for this court in the case of American Ref. Co. v. Tidal Western Oil Corp., Tex.Civ. App., 1924, 264 S.W. 335, writ of error denied in 1924, 114 Tex. 583, 278 S.W. 1114, the settled law in Texas that they are, in place, realty. It is conclusively shown by the testimony of appellant's own witness that casing-head gas is in liquid form in the earth, that it is a constituent of oil, and in order to remove it from the earth it must be vaporized and then carried to the surface, where it is again condensed in liquid form. We think the trial court, upon the evidence before him, rightly concluded that casing-head gas was included within the term "oil," and that the appellant (lessee) was required under his contract to account to appellee Waggoner for one-eighth thereof on the basis of oil.' The construction of the contract of lease placed by the parties upon it was one of the factors taken into consideration by the court in reaching the above conclusion. * * *

"And the view was taken in George v. Curtain, 1925, 108 Okl. 281, 236 P. 876, that, where the lease was made prior to the time when casing-head gasoline was known to have a special value, and no mention was made of casing-head gas to be taken from oil wells, it must be held that that subject was not within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into, and was therefore not covered or controlled thereby.

"So, in Hammett Oil Co. v. Gypsy Oil Co., 1923, 95 Okl. 235, 218 P. 501, 34 A.L.R. 275, the position was taken that gasoline manufactured from casing-head gas is neither oil nor gas within the contemplation of an oil and gas lease which makes no reference to such gas, if nothing appears to indicate that the parties have contracted concerning the same.

"And in Ludey v. Pure Oil Co., 1932, 157 Okl. 1, 11 P.2d 102, the court in the syllabus says that 'casinghead gas is neither oil nor gas within the contemplation of an oil and gas lease which makes no reference to casinghead gas and nothing appears to indicate that the parties have contracted concerning the same.' The lease in this instance was the common one providing for a royalty of one-eighth of the oil and a fixed sum per year per well where gas was marketed and used off the premises. None of the wells produced gas only, but all were oil wells. And it was held that casing-head gas therefrom belonged to the landowners, because in the lease no mention was made of casing-head gas. * *

"* * * In Reynolds v. McMan Oil & Gas Co., Tex. [Com.App.], 1928, 11 S.W. 2d 778, rehearing denied in 1929, Tex. [Com.App.], 14 S.W.2d 819, in which the lease did not expressly refer to casing-head gas, and, at the time it was made, gas, whether wet or dry, was considered practically as waste, except for the purpose of fuel. The court held that the lessee must pay for casing-head gas as oil, where it used the same for the manufacture of gasoline.

"And in Gilbreath v. States Oil Corp., [5 Cir.], 1925, 4 F.2d 232, writ of certiorari denied in 1925, 268 U.S. 705, 69 L.Ed. 1167, 45 S.Ct. 639, it was held that casing-head gas or gasoline must be considered as part of the oil, since it partook of the nature of that substance, rather than what is ordinarily known as natural gas, so as to entitle the lessor to the stipulated royalty of one-eighth of the oil. * * *

"In Twin Hills Gasoline Co. v. Bradford Oil Corp. [D.C., 264] F. [440], supra, the court said that the evidence showed that casing-head gas is a component part of oil; that it is not made from dry gas, but is a product of wet gas, which exists only with oil."

[13] It appears from the foregoing authorities defining the term "casing-head gas" that casing-head gas is a component part of oil, and we are of the opinion that as the stipulation herein as to the fact of the intention of the parties as to the gas having been entered into subsequently to the determination reached in the foregoing cited cases, that as between the parties herein casing-head gas was not intended to be covered by the stipulation and that casing-head gas, if any was produced, should be classified and considered as oil.

[14] It is the contention of appellant that respondent waived any interest it may have had in and to the proceeds derived from the sale of oil and gas produced, saved and sold from the premises by consenting to the execution and delivery of the Terry oil and gas lease. On the other hand, respondents contend that by this consent it did not waive any of its rights, except its right to drill and prospect the premises for oil and gas as provided in the Terry lease. In determining this question the situation existing at the time of the execution of that lease to Terry by respondent and its consent to the execution of identical Terry leases by the lot owners, must be considered.

In connection with this situation, C. Ray Robinson, president of the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, testified substantially that "under the deeds and in accordance with the stipulated facts, the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation had a reserved right to drill for oil on this property for a period of fifty years, and had a right to take twenty per cent received from the sale of oil under the terms and conditions reflected by the contract and deed; the lots had been sold for taxes, a substantial portion of them, and, in addition to that, the thing was in a hopeless state of confusion by virtue of diversified ownership. I might say at the present time there are approximately eight hundred owners in this subdivision. Various interests and groups were seeking, through one theory or another, to get control of this property or some part of it, the thought being to get an acre drilling site or something in a position where you could put down a well. I acquired an interest and represented others who owned the balance of the interest in the corporate stock. * * * Various large lot owners and those of us interested in the corporation, and I might say that the corporation owns interests in some of the lots there, finally worked out a plan to where this property could be developed or drilled if we could get our title cleared under this community lease. The community lease was then signed by a large number of people. The question of whether the lease was of any effect or not by virtue of our reserving drilling rights was of vital importance. The land owners took the attitude they put their money in and were entitled to a play on the situation. In other words, entitled to have the property developed. We had no desire to hinder the matter so we simply worked together with them, consenting that they could lease the property under the drilling contract, reserving to us whatever rights that we had in the particular subdivision at that time. In other words, the main thought being to get the property developed and see whether or not there was any oil there and whatever the rights of the parties were would be retained in status quo by virtue of these agreements."

The consent of respondent to the Terry lease is as follows:

"Whereas, East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation is the owner of the exclusive right to drill on the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Thirty (30), Township Nineteen (19) South, Range Sixteen (16) east, M. D. B. & M., Fresno County, California, said right to drill being reserved in deeds issued by East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation covering the lots sold in the East Coalinga Oil Fields Subdivision in said quarter section to various grantees; and

"Whereas, under date of July 19, 1938, the owners of various lots or parcels of land in the aforesaid quarter section, have executed lease agreements to Zeb A. Terry, reference to which lease agreements is hereby made; and

"Whereas, at a regular meeting of the board of directors of the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, duly convened and held on Saturday, December 17, 1938, at eleven o'clock A. M., at the office of said corporation, it was agreed that the said East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation would consent, upon certain conditions, to each and every lease in similar terms and import to said lease agreement dated July 19, 1938, heretofore or hereafter given to Zeb A. Terry or the Pure Oil Company on any lot or lots in the above described quarter section, and that the President and Secretary of this corporation be authorized to execute such consent for and on behalf of this corporation; and

"Whereas, all of the stockholders of the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation agreed to said action by the Board of Directors of said Corporation;

"Now, therefore, the East Coalinga Oil Corporation hereby consents to each and every lease agreement bearing date July 19, 1938, heretofore given to Zeb A. Terry by the owners of any lot or lots in the above described quarter section, and to each such lease agreement in similar form hereafter given to Zeb A. Terry or the Pure Oil Company, bearing the same date, by the owners of any lot or lots in the aforesaid quarter section, provided, however, that all such leases shall be executed prior to July 1, 1940.

"It is specifically understood and agreed that nothing herein stated shall affect the rights of the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation in, on or to any lot or lots in the said quarter section not leased to Zeb A. Terry or the Pure Oil Company, in accordance with the aforesaid lease agreement."

The successors in interest under the so-called Terry leases are not parties to this action and we are not called upon to consider the effect of such leases between respondent and the successors in interest under the Terry leases, on the one hand, and as between the lot owners and such successors in interest on the other hand, as we have held that the lot owners had no right or title in or to the land embraced within the proposed roads and avenue delineated upon the map and in or to any gas, as distinguished from casing-head gas, produced in connection with the drilling for any production of oil. Therefore, specifically, we are called upon to determine whether respondent, by its consent intended to and did waive the rights which it had in and to the oil, gas, and other carbohydrates, and by such consent, to vest the title so waived in appellant and the other lot owners, or that such consent was intended to be a waiver only of its drilling rights. Also, there should be taken into consideration the fact that respondent's consent is limited to the oil and gas leases referred to as the Zeb A. Terry oil and gas leases, and that in the event of forfeiture or surrender of the lessee thereunder, respondent's right to drill the premises would be restored; and, further, that respondent's interests extended to the whole subdivision and that only a part of the subdivision was covered by the Terry leases. Under all of the circumstances appearing, we are of the opinion that if there was intent on the part of respondent, by its consent to waive more than its drilling rights, such intent should be made to appear by clear, convincing and unequivocal evidence. Such intent is not so shown but, on the contrary, considering the evidence, the written instruments in connection with all of the transactions and the circumstances appearing from the record, we are satisfied that there was no intent on the part of respondent to waive, by its consent, anything more than its drilling rights.

In its finding of fact and conclusions of law the trial court, in finding X, found that the said quarter section was subdivided only for the purpose of selling the surface rights in and to the lots and parcels of land therein. In finding XV it found that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the surface of a total of 2500 square feet represented by lot 58 of block 4 of said subdivision, and the sum of 2500 square feet in lot 59 of block 4 of said subdivision. In finding XVI, referring to the lots, "the surface of which is owned by plaintiff," and in its conclusions of law in paragraph I, it is found that plaintiff, Lee Alex MacNicol, is the owner of and entitled to the surface rights, in, over, and upon all that certain real property (describing said lots) and that in the decree it is determined that plaintiff, Lee Alex MacNicol, is the owner of, and entitled to the surface rights in, over, and upon all that certain real property (describing said lots).

We are of the opinion that it is not necessary to a decision in this case to limit plaintiff's ownership merely to the surface rights but that plaintiff is the owner of a fee title in the lots subject to the rights, reservations, and exceptions as hereinbefore indicated. Therefore, the findings and conclusions of law and decree should be amended so as to effect this modification.

[15] The whole situation was before the trial court and it reached its determination of the intention of the parties from a construction of the instruments involved, together with the evidence and stipulated facts. This construction appears to be reasonable and in accordance with the intent of the parties. Under these circumstances, the principle set forth in the case of Bodkin v. Silveira, 49 Cal.App.2d 1, 120 P. 2d 910, 914, particularly applies: "It is a well established principle of law that when the construction given an instrument by a trial court appears to be reasonable and consistent with the intent of the parties making it, courts of appellate jurisdiction will not substitute another interpretation, even though it seems equally tenable. Estate of Bourn, 25 Cal.App.2d 590, 78 P.2d 193; Adams v. Petroleum Midway Co., Ltd., 205 Cal. 221, 270 P. 668; Kautz v. Zurich Gen. A. & L. Ins. Co., 212 Cal. 576, 300 P. 34; Estate of Boyd, 24 Cal.App.2d 287, 74 P.2d 1049; Estate of Burnett, 42 Cal.App.2d 427, 109 P.2d 26; Coviello v. Moco Fruit Co., Inc., 42 Cal.App.2d 637, 109 P.2d 765."

Modification of the findings of fact and conclusions of law by the trial court is directed in accordance with the foregoing ruling, and it is ordered that upon such modification the judgment be affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 164

PEOPLE v. WALSH.

Cr. 469.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⇐1160

A finding of the jury which has been approved by the trial court on motion for new trial is conclusive on appeal, and reviewing court may disturb it only where it can be said as matter of law that there was no sufficient and substantial evidence to support it.

2. Criminal law ⇐1144(13)

The reviewing court must assume in favor of decision of jury which has been approved by the trial court, the existence of every fact which the jury could reasonably have deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether guilt is deducible therefrom.

3. Homicide ⇐253(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for first-degree murder.

4. Criminal law ⇐308

Accused who was charged with first-degree murder and entered plea of not guilty was conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time the offense was alleged to have been committed. Pen.Code, § 1026.

5. Criminal law ⇐761(12)

Where jury was repeatedly told that it must be convinced of accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt before it could find him guilty, and that unless it was convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that accused and no other person committed the homicide charged, jury must find accused not guilty, an instruction that accused was conclusively presumed to have been sane at time of commission of offense charged was not objectionable on ground that instruction insinuated that accused committed the crime. Pen.Code, § 1026.

6. Criminal law ⇐822(1)

All the instructions given must be taken together to see whether the instruction complained of is erroneous.

7. Criminal law ⇐761(12), 822(1)

Instruction on first-degree murder, when construed with other instructions, was not objectionable on ground that it informed jury that if a homicide was committed, not necessarily by accused but by any other person, jury would be justified in finding accused guilty and that it impressed on jury a definite assumption that the accused committed the homicide.

8. Criminal law ⇐808½

An instruction concerning expert testimony, which was in the language of the Penal Code provision relating thereto, was sufficient and the trial court did not err in refusing instruction proffered by accused, which involved question of weight to be given opinions of expert witnesses. Pen.Code, § 1127b.

9. Criminal law ⇐829(1)

The refusal of instruction which was sufficiently covered by given instructions was not error.

10. Criminal law ⇐807(1)

The refusal of purely argumentative instructions was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Gordon Thompson, Judge.

Joseph F. Walsh was convicted of first-degree murder, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Geo. A. Westover and Edward W. Goodman, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Thomas Whelan, Dist. Atty., and H. Pitts Mack, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Appellant was charged with the crime of murdering his wife Olga Walsh, on May 7, 1941. He entered a plea of not guilty and stood trial before a jury, resulting in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree with punishment fixed at life imprisonment. Appellant sets forth no statement of facts in his brief and relies upon the court to review the evidence set forth in over 2,000 typewritten pages of reporter's transcript. Respondent has prepared a brief resume of the evidence produced and it is a fair statement of the facts as disclosed by the record. The case is one of circumstantial evidence. The murder is claimed to have been committed at 4249 Morena Boulevard, in San Diego, in the home of the deceased and the appellant. The house was a wooden frame type of residence, of a story and a half variety, painted white, surrounded by considerable foliage and trees of various kinds and was located on a lot about one and three-quarters acres in size at the time appellant and the deceased were living together as man and wife. They were married July 22, 1938, and had no children. The appellant had met the deceased about September, 1936, at which time she was Mrs. Eckhardt. The deceased was then living on the premises with her then husband, Mr. Eckhardt. Prior to Mr. Eckhardt's death and Walsh's subsequent marriage to the deceased, he (appellant) lived on the premises in a trailer. The appellant, at the time of the trial, was 56 years of age and the deceased at the time of her death was 62 years of age. On May 7, 1941, at about 7 a. m. the appellant claimed to have discovered the dead body of his wife in the ground-floor bedroom north of the living room lying on a bed. He called the police. The police arrived a few minutes later. They were met at the front gate by appellant, who took them to the rear door of the house into the bedroom where they saw the body of the deceased. There were no tears in appellant's eyes. The officer asked appellant if he (the officer) could leave by the front door to call the police station. The appellant said "Yes," glanced at the front door and stated: "My God, it is unlocked. He went through this way." No one was then allowed by the officer to pass through that door. The body of the deceased had blood about the face and mouth and a club commonly referred to as a "billy club" was protruding from her mouth. This "billy club" belonged to deceased and was ordinarily kept under her pillow. Appellant had knowledge of this fact. The autopsy surgeon testified that death was caused by the separation of the atlas and axis, the first and second cervical vertebra, caused by some form of violence not self-inflicted, which separation of the atlas and axis was caused by some blunt instrument. From the entire testimony of the autopsy surgeon, the injury which caused death was violent and brutal, the injuries being practically confined to the face and head bruises in addition to the separation of the atlas and axis. There was no evidence to indicate any rape or attempted rape on the body of the deceased. There was no evidence of any property of any kind missing from the premises or that anything else was disturbed. The only thing of any value in the house was approximately $35 in cash which was found under the pillow on the bed, in the room of the deceased, by the police officer on the morning after the body had been removed from the premises. The dining room of the house had a French bay window composed of three sections in the south part thereof. The appellant pointed out the window in the dining room to one of the officers upon his arrival after viewing the body. The officer observed that the shade to this window was up, that it was open and the screen to it was hanging unhooked with an "L" shaped tear in it. The front door was observed by the officer to have three locking devices. In addition, there was a piece of wire which apparently was used to loop around the knob and then inserted through the key so that the key could not be pushed out of the lock from the outside. This piece of wire was lying on the floor.

The officer testified that when he first arrived at the home there was a large dog (Great Dane type) chained to a nearby tree in the rear of the house near the back door; that this dog barked at him and lunged at him when he approached and so continued until appellant threatened the dog with his cane and waved him back. Another large barking dog (Police dog type) was chained a short distance from the French window, and a third dog was running loose about the premises. There were two signs "Beware of Dogs" on the front fence. The appellant stated to the officer that on the preceding evening, May 6th, he, the appellant, had gone to bed a few minutes before 11 p. m., and had gone to sleep almost immediately, hearing nothing during the night; that he awakened a few minutes before 6 a. m. on May 7th, when he heard one of the dogs barking and a car pull away from the house; that he later went downstairs where he dressed in the kitchen, obtained his clothes from the living room, and then unlocked the back door and went outside where he turned off some alarms on the chicken houses; that he then went to the front of the house and obtained the morning paper and took it to the kitchen where he made some coffee; that he looked at the paper for a few minutes and then at about 7 a. m. he went into the sitting room to put up the shades on the windows; that he raised the shade on the above-mentioned window, at which time he saw that it was open and the screen unhooked and cut; that he immediately thought something was wrong and went to his wife's room where he found her lying as described; that he immediately left to telephone the police by way of the back door, which he locked.

No one touched the window, the window sill ledge, screen, or shade after the officers arrived. All officers used the rear door to enter the premises. No one went out or in the front door. Appellant at all times denied that he had killed the deceased. He claimed that the reason he had been sleeping upstairs and his wife downstairs was that in April he had injured his foot and that the injury caused him considerable pain; that he was taking "Seconal" to ease the pain and to produce sleep; that he therefore heard no noises during the night. The deceased was killed sometime between 11 p. m. on May 6th and 5 a. m. on May 7th. The last known person to see deceased alive other than appellant was a dog-license collector, who lived about 400 yards northwest of the Walsh house. He saw the deceased and the appellant together at about 7 p. m. on May 6th, when he called to see about collecting for a dog license tax for the dogs on the Walsh property. He testified that on the evening of May 6th, when he went to the appellant's house, the dogs barked at him. He further stated that he was at home on the night of May 6th-May 7th, and did not hear the dogs bark during any of that time. The collector's wife corroborated this testimony and testified that about 4:30 a. m. on December 7th she heard the rear screen door of the Walsh house slam and that she heard no dogs bark. No finger prints or foot prints which would indicate the presence of any stranger on the Walsh premises were found by the police officers. One officer examined the window and the cut screen which were pointed out to him by appellant. He observed a film of dust and black particles on the outside portion of the sill or ledge. On the outside and on the ground immediately under this window was planted some sort of a succulent plant, the foliage of which was undisturbed. The side of the house below the window and cut screen was composed of wooden side boards painted with white paint. This portion was examined and no marks of any kind were found. The wires on the cut screen were pointed upward and outward. All of the other windows of the house were examined and no evidence was found of any disturbance of any other window or screen. There was observed a cobweb about waist high which stretched between the two posts at the head of the steps leading up to the front porch. There was no evidence of any entry into the house other than through the cut screen and window which the appellant claimed to have found open with the screen open and hanging in the position already referred to. The window screen with the cut in it was introduced into evidence at the trial and in its original condition was turned over to a forensic chemist for examination, together with certain other evidence in the case which will be referred to later. The front door was examined and found to lead onto a wooden porch from which steps led down to the walk in front of the house. This door had not been used by anyone other than the alleged unknown assailant, according to the appellant. The surface of the porch was observed to have an even coat of dust with no footmark or disturbance in the dust. The property on which the appellant and deceased were living was free and clear of incumbrances and stood of record in the name of the deceased as her separate property. The coroner produced a will dated June 21, 1939, which was found June 24, 1941, in the safe deposit box of the deceased. By its terms appellant was named sole beneficiary of her estate. Although appellant denied knowledge of the existence of the will, the evidence indicates that he was quite familiar with all of her financial and legal affairs. One witness testifying for the people and who qualified as an expert in forensic chemistry, said that to duplicate the "L" shaped cut as bent in the screen, it would be necessary to groove the screen with his fingers; that he examined certain glass phials which contained the scrapings from underneath the respective fingernails on the fingers of each hand of the appellant; that from a spectro-chemical examination of the four largest particles taken from the fingernails of the appellant and from a miscroscopic examination of the particles of paint from the screen, the particles were "similar"; that in his opinion, from an examination of the screen (being cut from the inside), the dust particles in the sill and the surrounding circumstances, no one went through that window on the occasion related. Several pin-point scratches were noticed on appellant's hand. He said they were caused by his "pet rooster."

[1, 2] Appellant contends that this evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict. We must keep in mind and be guided by the rule that after the finding of the jury has been approved by the trial court on a motion for a new trial, it is conclusive upon appeal and the appellate court may disturb it only when it can be said as a matter of law that there was no sufficient and substantial evidence to support it, and we must assume in favor of the decision of the jury, the existence of every fact which the jury could reasonably have deduced from the evidence and then determine whether guilt is deducible therefrom. People v. Hennessey, 201 Cal. 568, 258 P. 49; People v. Rose, 26 Cal.App.2d 513, 79 P.2d 737; People v. Tedesco, 1 Cal.2d 211, 34 P.2d 467. With the foregoing in mind, we find that there is substantial evidence upon which the jury could have based its verdict.

[3] A summary of the evidence referred to in the statement of facts bears out this contention, for it will be remembered that (1) appellant had a motive for killing the deceased in that he was the sole beneficiary under her will, and if she died he would take her entire estate. (2) There is some evidence that appellant had threatened the deceased. (3) If the deceased were murdered by appellant, naturally he would not expect to partake of the fruits of her estate. It would therefore be necessary for the killing to be made to appear to have been done by an unknown intruder, which evidence indicates that the appellant attempted to do, thus further illustrating his preconceived intention to do away with the deceased and to make it appear that he had nothing to do with it. (4) There was ample evidence to justify the jury in believing that the screen was cut from the inside of the house. Once the jury concluded that no one went through the window, upon which there was ample evidence to base this conclusion, the appellant could naturally be concluded to be the killer, as the evidence is also uncontradicted that the deceased could not have inflicted the injuries of which she died by her own hand or accidentally. (5) There was evidence that the cut in the screen was creased by someone's hand, and that the cut had many pointed wires. The right wrist of appellant had some pin-point abrasions on it. The jury could have found that these abrasions were caused by appellant cutting and creasing this screen. (6) As to the presence of the dogs on the premises, it will be remembered that the neighbors did not hear them bark the night of May 6th-7th. There was ample evidence to show that they ordinarily barked on the approach of strangers. (7) The noise of the rear screen door slamming at 4:30 a. m. is also significant. This would indicate that appellant was up an hour or so earlier than he stated. (8) The evidence shows that appellant claimed that the back door was locked when he came downstairs and that he unlocked it when he went out on the morning of May 7th. The unlocked front door with no disturbance in the dust on the porch leading from the door, and the presence of the spider web woven between the posts over the porch steps indicated that no one went out the front door that night and that appellant himself unlocked the three locks on it to further the appearance that someone left by that exit. (9) No valuables in the house were missing, which dispels any intent to rob the deceased or burglarize the house. Considering all the circumstances and evidence produced, when taken in a light most favorable to the conclusion reached by the jury, we are convinced that there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict and judgment.

[4, 5] The only remaining question involved the claimed error of the court in giving and refusing to give certain designated instructions. In this respect appellant states that the court gave 60 instructions to the jury and then he sets them forth in what he terms "synoptic enumerations." The first instruction about which appellant complains reads: "You are instructed that the defendant in this case is conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time of the commission of the offense charged." It is argued that the instruction as worded strongly insinuates that appellant committed the crime. There is no merit to this argument. Appellant entered the single plea of "not guilty." He was conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time the offense "is alleged to have been committed." Sec. 1026, Pen.Code. While the instruction is not worded in the language of the statute, the jury was repeatedly told in other instructions that it must be convinced of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt before it could find him guilty and that unless it was convinced from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt "that the defendant and that no other person committed the offense charged, then they must find the defendant not guilty." The challenged instruction, even standing alone, clearly means that the appellant is conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time of the commission of the offense charged in the information, regardless of who committed it.

The next instruction given as to the definition of murder and its degrees was in the same language as the instruction given on that subject and approved in People v. Nichol, 34 Cal. 211, and reapproved in People v. Dowell, 204 Cal. 109, 266 P. 807. The instruction as given, when considered with the other instructions on the subject, is not erroneous.

[6, 7] The next instruction criticized is this: "If you find from the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a homicide and that it was neither justifiable nor excusable, and that said homicide was wilful, deliberate and premeditated and with malice aforethought and accomplished by a clear intent to take life, you would be justified in finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree." It is argued that this instruction told the jury that if a homicide was committed, "not necessarily by the defendant but by any other person, then the jury would be justified in finding defendant guilty of murder in the first degree," and that it "impressed upon the jury a definite assumption that the defendant committed the homicide." This argument disregards the complete set of instructions and the rule of law that all of the instructions must be taken together to see whether the complained of instruction is erroneous. People v. Ellena, 67 Cal.App. 683, 228 P. 389; People v. Jordan, 24 Cal.App.2d 39, 74 P.2d 519; People v. Countryman, 115 Cal.App. 36, 300 P. 871; People v. Maggio, 140 Cal.App. 246, 35 P.2d 369; People v. Brittan, 118 Cal. 409, 50 P. 664. Considered with the other instructions given, the jury was fairly told that the defendant could under no circumstances be convicted unless the jury believed from the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant and no one else committed the offense alleged in the information. There is no merit to this complaint.

[8-10] Appellant next complains because of the refusal of the trial court to give three of his proffered instructions. One involved the question of the weight to be given the opinion of expert witnesses. The trial court gave an instruction in the language of Penal Code, section 1127b. This was sufficient. People v. Norton, 138 Cal.App. 70, 31 P.2d 809. We have examined the other refused instructions. They were sufficiently covered by other instructions given or were purely argumentative.

Appellant next contends that the court erred in "certain decisions of law" and makes certain assertions as to particular parts of the evidence without citing any specific error or giving any authority in support of the assertion. The following is but an example. Complaint is made that certain witnesses for the prosecution were shown to be enemies of the defendant and his deceased wife; that over objections, their "testimony was admitted by the court"; that the prosecution "flaunted" gruesome photographs in front of the jury; that an expert witness demonstrated that it was "his whole effort * * * to seek evidence that would incriminate the defendant"; that "how could the jury believe that it was normal and reasonable that the defendant cut the screen from the inside of the house when had he been guilty, it would have been much easier with the means and opportunity at hand, for him to cut it from the outside?"; that "the evidence in this case points much more convincingly to the perpetration of the homicide by some outsider than it does to the defendant." The claimed errors of law, if they may be classified as such, are not meritorious. We have read the argument of counsel and sufficient evidence in the voluminous transcript to satisfy ourselves that appellant had a fair and impartial trial. Appellant was accorded every opportunity by the trial judge to fully cross-examine all witnesses who testified and he allowed eleven days of trial in the examination of witnesses and jurors. The jury was fully and fairly instructed as to the law. There was ample evidence on which the jury was justified in reaching its verdict.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are and each of them is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 40

BARR v. MOUNTJOY et al.

Civ. 12814.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 18, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐302(6)

Where trial court granted a new trial to plaintiff upon grounds stated in notice of motion, and order granting new trial did not specify as a ground the sufficiency of evidence to sustain decision, such ground was eliminated on appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

2. Appeal and error ⇐854(6)

If order granting motion for new trial can be justified upon any of the grounds stated in the notice of motion, it must be sustained though reasons given by the court for its action are immaterial. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

3. Automobiles ⇐160(4)

Where motorist making a left turn at an intersection on a green light struck pedestrian who was also crossing on green in crosswalk, motorist's failure to yield right of way to pedestrian constituted "negligence per se". Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence Per Se"

4. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

In action tried by court by pedestrian to recover for injuries received when struck by an automobile, whether failure of motorist to yield right of way to plaintiff, who was using a crosswalk, considered with all the circumstances, required a holding against plaintiff, was for trial court to determine. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

5. New trial ⇐79

In action by pedestrian to recover for injuries received when struck by automobile at crosswalk, where motorist was guilty of negligence per se in failing to yield right of way, failure of trial court to consider that element on trial of case constituted error in law justifying order granting a new trial. Code Civ.Proc. § 657; Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

6. Appeal and error ⇐977(2)
New trial ⇐95

Where plaintiff moved for new trial and filed an affidavit in support of claim of accident and surprise, the sufficiency of affidavit to show proper diligence on part of plaintiff to obtain a witness or seek a continuance was addressed to discretion of trial court and its action thereon will not be disturbed on appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

7. Appeal and error ⇐901, 933(1)

All presumptions are in favor of order granting new trial, and burden is upon appellant to make it affirmatively appear by a proper record that the order complained of is erroneous.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1078(6)

In action against wife as driver of an automobile which struck plaintiff, and husband as principal, where parties on appeal from order granting new trial did not discuss the several grounds upon which order granting new trial was based, except as to sufficiency of evidence to fasten liability upon husband and there was nothing in record upon which it could be determined whether order was justified as to husband upon any of those grounds, order granting new trial both as to husband and wife was affirmed. Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Henry M. Willis, Judge.

Action to recover for injuries sustained in automobile accident by Mary Barr against Jeannette Mountjoy and another. From an order granting a new trial, after judgment for defendants, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Thomas F. McCue, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Paul Palmer, of Hollywood, for respondent.

J. E. STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

Action for damages resulting from a collision between an automobile driven by defendant Jeannette Mountjoy and plaintiff, a pedestrian. Defendant Holton C. Mountjoy is the husband of Jeannette Mountjoy, and the complaint alleges "that in operating said automobile as aforesaid said Jeannette Mountjoy was acting as the agent of and for and on behalf of the other defendants named herein." The only defendant served or appearing herein other than the driver is the husband. The trial was before the court without a jury and resulted in judgment for defendants.

Plaintiff made a motion for new trial upon all the statutory grounds and filed an affidavit setting forth the testimony which would have been given by an absent witness, alleging that plaintiff had relied upon his testimony, reciting the circumstances of his failure to be present and claiming "accident and surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." The testimony of this witness concerned the accident itself and had no bearing upon the alleged agency or other facts connecting the defendant husband with liability. No answering affidavit was filed. After argument the court granted the motion for new trial, and appeal is taken by both defendants from this order.

There is no reporter's transcript of the proceedings before us, but only the clerk's transcript which includes therein an engrossed bill of exceptions. From the record it appears that the accident occurred on September 11, 1939, at about 6:35 p. m., at the intersection of Hollywood and Cahuenga boulevards in the city of Los Angeles. The traffic signal system was in operation at the time, and upon the "Go" signals appearing plaintiff started to walk southerly in the marked pedestrian lane across Hollywood Boulevard on the west side of Cahuenga. Defendant Jeannette Mountjoy at the same time, and in compliance with the "Go" signal, drove northerly on Cahuenga Boulevard into the intersection and made a left turn into the pedestrian lane, after hesitating in the intersection to allow a southbound automobile to pass in front of her. In the pedestrian lane the front bumper or fender of her car struck plaintiff causing the injuries complained of.

In its findings of fact the court found that neither plaintiff nor defendant driver was guilty of negligence, and that the collision was an unavoidable accident. The findings also state that defendant Jeannette Mountjoy "was driving her own separately owned automobile upon her own personal business," and declare that the allegation in the complaint heretofore referred to concerning agency is untrue.

At the conclusion of the hearing on motion for new trial the trial judge announced that "he had come to the conclusion that the decision was against law, in that he had made an error in law in failing to bear in mind that the conduct of defendant driver in entering the pedestrian zone while plaintiff was there located, and regardless of whether or not defendant driver saw plaintiff, constituted negligence per se on the part of defendant driver." Thereupon the court caused a minute order to be entered granting the motion for new trial "upon the grounds stated in the notice of intention to move for new trial filed herein."

[1, 2] As the order did not specify that it was granted upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision this ground must of course be eliminated. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 657. If the order can be justified upon any of the other grounds stated in the notice of motion it must be sustained. While the reasons given by the court for its action are immaterial (Power v. Fairbanks, 146 Cal. 611, 615, 80 P. 1075), the statement does indicate that the court failed to consider an element that is vital to the decision, and this amounts to error in law.

[3-5] Section 560 of the California Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 188, requires the driver of an automobile to yield the right of way to the pedestrian using the crosswalk, and defendant driver's failure to do so constituted negligence per se. Nicholas v. Leslie, 7 Cal.App.2d 590, 594, 46 P.2d 761; Coursault v. Schwebel, 118 Cal.App. 259, 264, 5 P.2d 77. Whether this, considered with all the other circumstances present in the case, required a holding against plaintiff was of course for the trial court to determine. Clearly, however, it was an element to be considered by the court, and its failure to do so constituted error in law justifying the order granting a new trial.

[6] It is to be noted also that the affidavit based upon accident and surprise was before the court; and while it might not appear to this court that the affidavit shows proper diligence on the part of plaintiff to obtain the presence of a witness or to seek a continuance when he did not appear, this was addressed primarily to the discretion of the trial court, and action thereon will not be disturbed except where abuse of discretion is shown.

[7, 8] Appellants contend that in any event the granting of a new trial as to the husband is not justified in view of the court's findings. Respondent replies that the court having at that time taken the view that the wife, who was driving, was not liable, the question of whether the husband would share her liability, if she had been liable, became moot. Respondent also claims there is testimony indicating that the car was purchased with community funds and was a community asset; and also that the wife was on an errand for the benefit of the husband at the time of the accident. No further discussion appears in the briefs concerning the several grounds upon which the order granting a new trial was based, and there is nothing in the record before us upon which it can be determined whether or not said order, so far as the husband was concerned, was justified upon any one or more of these grounds.

All presumptions are in favor of an order granting a new trial, and the burden is upon the appellant to make it affirmatively appear by a proper record that the order complained of is erroneous. Stoneburner v. Richfield Oil Co., 118 Cal. App. 449, 5 P.2d 436. In Laumann v. Conner, 12 Cal.App.2d 631, 55 P.2d 1225, 1226, quoting from Power v. Fairbanks, supra, it was said: "We must assume in favor of the action of the trial court that the motion for a new trial was based upon some one or more legal grounds upon which a sufficient showing was made to warrant the action of the trial court in regard thereto. The record before us does not show the contrary." See, also, Petroff v. Nunes, 136 Cal.App. 416, 29 P.2d 293, and Phillips v. Powell, 210 Cal. 39, 290 P. 441.

The order granting the motion for new trial is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., concurred.

W. J. WOOD, Justice (concurring). I concur in the judgment. The appellants have not shown by a proper record that the order from which the appeal is prosecuted was erroneous. The bill of exceptions repeats the findings and judgment and sets forth the notice of intention to move for a new trial and an affidavit (which in my opinion is wholly insufficient) in support of the motion for a new trial. The bill of exceptions also contains the "memorandum for decision" in which the trial judge states that the accident was "unavoidable" and the statement made by the judge upon granting the new trial. The bill of exceptions is barren of any reference to the evidence or to the rulings made by the court during the course of the trial. For aught that appears in the record the order may have been granted because of errors occurring during the course of the trial. The record being in this condition, no course is open to us other than to affirm the order.

50 Cal.App.2d 211

PECKWITH et al. v. LAVEZZOLA.

Civ. 6703.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1942.

1. Waters and water courses ⇐101, 154(1)

In action to quiet title to water from springs appurtenant to defendant's land and to an easement for its conveyance, evidence, including showing that plaintiffs tapped water pipes belonging to defendant and his predecessor in title, not with a claim of right but by defendant's consent and with his permission, showed that plaintiffs did not acquire title to any portion of the water or to the easement either by purchase or by adverse possession.

2. Appeal and error ⇐930(1), 931(1)

Knowledge of facts obtained by a judge or a jury in viewing premises may be presumed on appeal in support of findings or a judgment, but mere speculation regarding the effect of impressions which may have been obtained in that manner may not be indulged to offset the judgment when there is substantial evidence in the record to the contrary.

3. Trial ⇐28(1), 375

Conditions observed by a judge or a jury while inspecting premises constitute "independent evidence" which may be considered by them in determining issues involved.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Independent Evidence".

4. Appeal and error ⇐931(1)

Where the trial court found in an action to quiet title to water from springs and to an easement for its conveyance that water was taken by plaintiffs and necessarily used by them for the benefit of the public, the reviewing court could not assume that the finding was nullified by contrary facts ascertained by the judge while he was viewing the premises in absence of proof thereof in the record, since an appeal must be determined on the record which is properly presented for review.

5. Waters and water courses ⇐152(11)

Where plaintiffs continued to use water from springs appurtenant to defendant's land for eight years with defendant's knowledge to augment their supply of a privately-owned utility company which sold water for domestic and irrigation purposes, defendant was "estopped" from asserting his right to water and could not interfere by injunction or otherwise with the public right to continued use of water in that manner, and hence he was not entitled to an absolute decree quieting title to the water and an easement for its conveyance in him.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

6. Eminent domain ⇐288(1)

Where water from springs or from any other private source is appropriated and used for the benefit of the public for a considerable period of time with full knowledge on part of owner, he may be "estopped" from interfering with that vested use by means of injunction, ejectment, or a suit to quiet title, and his remedy will be confined to a mere right to recoup adequate damages to compensate him for the loss of his property on account of the appropriation. Const. art. 1, § 14.

7. Eminent domain ⇐288(1)

Where water from springs or from any other private source is appropriated and used for the benefit of the public for a considerable period of time with full knowledge on part of owner, though intervening public rights prevent interference with use and control by owner, he is entitled to compensation on the principle applicable to a proceeding in reverse condemnation. Const. art. 1, § 14.

8. Eminent domain ⇐122

Private property may not be taken even for the benefit of the public without just compensation. Const. art. 1, § 14.

9. Eminent domain ⇐271

In an equitable action to quiet title, damages for the taking of property for the public use may be awarded under a general prayer for such other and further relief as may seem meet in the premises. Const. art. 1, § 14.

10. Eminent domain ⇐271

Where there was no evidence in action to quiet title to water from springs appurtenant to defendant's land to support plaintiffs' claim to water either by purchase or by adverse possession, but it did appear that water was appropriated by plaintiffs and used with defendant's consent to augment their supply of a privately-owned public utility company which sold water for domestic and irrigation purposes, the only theory on which judgment for plaintiffs could stand was that water was used incident to a public utility, and defendant was entitled to just compensation for his property which was converted to a public use. Const. art. 1, § 14.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sierra County; Arthur Coats, Judge Assigned.

Action by W. J. Peckwith and others against Antone Lavezzola to quiet title to water from springs and to an easement for its conveyance, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From the judgment, defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed with directions.

A. J. Just, of Downieville, for appellant.

James Snell, of Grass Valley, and Thomas McCraney, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is a suit to quiet title to water from springs and to an easement for its conveyance, which are appurtenant to the land of the defendant. The water was appropriated by the plaintiffs and used by consent of the defendant to augment their supply of a privately owned public utility company which for many years has sold water to the inhabitants of Downieville for domestic and irrigation purposes. This is not an action to partition the water of springs. Each party sought to quiet title to the water of the springs. The plaintiffs' chief contention is that the defendant is estopped from interfering with the use of the water because for several years it was used with his knowledge for sale to the public, as an essential exercise of the power and duty of a public utility company.

The complaint alleges, in effect, that the plaintiffs acquired title to the water of the McDougall Springs, and to the easement for its conveyance to their plant, in 1932, by adverse possession, and that all of the water has been used by them in connection with their Durgan Flat Water Company, a public utility, to supply the inhabitants of Downieville, Sierra County, with water for domestic and irrigation purposes.

The answer denies the material allegations of the complaint. In a cross-complaint, the defendant asserts that plaintiffs only temporarily used a portion of the water from said springs, by express consent of the defendant and that the water was not essential for public use. It is alleged that the water was appurtenant to and necessary for use on defendant's land situated on Piety Hill in Downieville. The cross-complaint asks that title to the water of said springs and to said pipe line and easement be quieted in the defendant. It also prays for such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

At the trial it was stipulated that plaintiffs own and operate the Durgan Flat Water System in Downieville, Sierra County, as a public utility, and that they have supplied the families at twenty-five dwelling houses in that town, for a period of twelve years, with water for domestic and irrigation purposes; that the bulk of the water of plaintiffs' system is obtained from sources other than the springs in question; that the water piped from McDougall Springs, which is sometimes called Davidson Springs, was stored temporarily in a large tank which is situated 350 feet below the springs, from which tank a pipe conveys the water to defendant's land on Piety Hill, and that said water, for many years, has been and now is beneficially and necessarily used on said land for domestic and irrigation purposes; that plaintiffs tapped said pipe in 1932, at a point 150 feet below the tank, and diverted said water into their Durgan Flat Water System, and sold it to the inhabitants of Downieville for a period of eight years; that in 1939, shortly before the commencement of this action, the defendant disconnected said pipe and thus prevented plaintiffs from continuing to use the water from said springs. The evidence satisfactorily shows that the water of McDougall Springs was acquired by the defendant's predecessors in title to his Piety Hill land in 1864, as an appurtenance thereto and that it has been used continuously for the benefit of that land ever since that time.

The court found that the defendant's predecessors in title owned, and that the defendant still owns, several lots on Piety Hill, to which the water from said springs and the pipe line are appurtenant, and from which source he has continuously supplied his land and premises with necessary water for domestic and irrigation purposes.

The court further found that plaintiffs own and operate the Durgan Flat Water System as a public utility, by means of which they have supplied water for domestic and irrigation purposes for a period of twelve years to twenty-five families who reside on Piety Hill in Downieville; that plaintiffs, in effect, acquired title in 1932 to the water of McDougall Springs by adverse possession, and by purchase from the defendant and his predecessors for a valuable consideration; that the plaintiffs are now the owners and entitled to possession of said water subject to the right of defendant to use the residue thereof which is not consumed by plaintiffs. It is also found that plaintiffs mingled said water from the McDougall Springs with the water of their Durgan Flat Water System, a public utility, and sold it to the residents of Downieville, for a period of eight years, with full knowledge thereof on the part of the defendant, and that he is therefore estopped from claiming title thereto or from interfering with such vested public rights to the water of said springs.

[1] The finding that plaintiffs purchased for a valuable consideration, from the defendant's predecessor in title, the water of McDougall Springs, or the easement in question, is not supported by the evidence. We are directed to no evidence that plaintiffs ever purchased from the defendant or any other person, the springs, or any portion of the water therefrom, or the easement appurtenant thereto; nor does the record support title in the plaintiffs to any portion of the water, or to the easement, by adverse possession. Indeed, the court did not specifically find that plaintiffs acquired title to the water of the springs, or to the easement, by adverse possession. We do not understand that the respondents now contend they acquired title by adverse possession. Their use of the water from those springs lacks the elements necessary to constitute title by adverse possession.

We are thoroughly convinced the plaintiffs did not acquire title to any portion of the water of the McDougall Springs, or to the easement, by either purchase or by adverse possession. On the contrary, it clearly appears that the defendant and his predecessors held title to the water of those springs as an appurtenance to the land which they owned on Piety Hill in Downieville. Those springs were commonly known as the McDougall Springs or the Davidson Water Works. It does not satisfactorily appear those water rights were ever abandoned. They were appurtenant to the land on Piety Hill which was owned by the defendant and his predecessors in title since 1864. They used the water from those springs whenever they had occasion to do so. Those springs were always taxed with their land. The records show that they paid taxes on the "Davidson Water Rights."

The court found that the defendant owns four particularly described lots on Piety Hill; that he and his predecessors in interest "have owned, possessed and occupied said Piety Hill for more than eighty years last past"; that "the predecessors in interest of defendant acquired and constructed said McDougall Springs Water System * * * (which) ever since has been and now is appurtenant to Piety Hill, subject to the rights of plaintiffs as hereinafter set forth." The last mentioned findings are supported by the evidence.

The court then finds that for a period of twelve years the plaintiffs owned and operated the Durgan Flat Water System at Downieville as a public utility by means of which they supplied and sold to twenty-five of the inhabitants of that town water for domestic and irrigation purposes, and that they connected the water pipes of the McDougall Springs Water System, about 1929, with their Durgan Flat Water System, and appropriated the water from said springs, thus augmented, to supply the public needs; that plaintiffs have ever since maintained such diverting pipes and have used the water from said springs "openly, continuously and uninterruptedly," without objection. But the court did not find that plaintiffs diverted or used the water with a claim of title thereto. The court then found that the plaintiffs and the defendant were joint owners of the water of said springs on the theory, we assume, that the defendant is estopped from denying title to such portion thereof as he has permitted plaintiffs to use for public purposes. Finally, as a conclusion of law, the court found that plaintiffs are the owners and entitled to possession of the water of said springs and to the pipes and easement incident thereto, subject to the right of the defendant to use so much of the remainder of said water of the springs as is necessary and beneficial to his Piety Hill property for domestic and irrigation purposes, each party to pay one-half of the expense of maintaining the McDougall Springs Water System.

The evidence clearly shows that the plaintiffs tapped the water pipes belonging to the defendant, and his predecessor in title, not with a claim of right, but by defendant's consent and with his permission. Mr. Charles E. Herron, a former owner of the defendant's land, to which the springs are appurtenant, testified that Mr. John Peckwith told him they were short of water sufficient with which to supply their customers and that he asked permission to connect their water system with defendant's pipes leading to the McDougall Springs, and that he, Mr. Herron, replied, "I don't care if you use it temporarily until I get ready to hydraulic." That permissive use of the water was testified to by another witness. That evidence is not contradicted. It appears to be undisputed and conclusive in that regard. Pursuant to that request, the plaintiff tapped the pipes of the defendant and continued to use at least a portion of the water from those springs for several years without opposition. We assume the record establishes the fact that plaintiffs used the water from the springs by mere permission and not with a claim of ownership. That evidence refutes the theory of possession of the water by either purchase or by adverse possession.

[2] Incidentally it is contended plaintiffs are not entitled to retain the use of the water from the McDougall Springs because they maintained a defective system of pipes which permitted waste of a great quantity of water. It is conceded the record does not establish that fact, but it is asserted the trial judge observed that fact while he was viewing the premises. We have no way of determining what facts the judge may have acquired in viewing the premises. His impression of conditions observed on the premises remain hidden in his own mind. They are not a part of the record on appeal. Knowledge of facts secured by a judge or a jury in viewing premises may be presumed on appeal in support of findings or a judgment, but mere speculation regarding the effect of impressions which may have been secured in that manner may not be indulged in to upset a judgment when there is substantial evidence in the record to the contrary.

[3, 4] It is true that conditions observed by a judge or a jury, while inspecting the premises, constitute independent evidence which may be considered by them in determining the issues involved. Gibson Properties Co. v. City of Oakland, 12 Cal.2d 291, 83 P.2d 942; Hatton v. Gregg, 4 Cal.App. 537, 88 P. 592. Since the court found in this case that the water was taken by plaintiffs and necessarily used by them for the benefit of the public, on appeal we may not assume that finding is nullified by contrary facts ascertained by the judge while he was viewing the premises in the absence of proof thereof in the record. An appeal must be determined on the record which is presented for review pursuant to the method required by the statute.

The remaining and the most important question to be determined on this appeal is whether the defendant is estopped from asserting title to the water of the springs and to the easement, so as to interfere with plaintiffs' use and control thereof, as a public utility, for the reason that the water was sold to the public for several years with defendant's knowledge, and that the public interest is therefore paramount to defendant's title to the water. Apparently that is the theory upon which the court quieted title to the water and to the easement, in plaintiffs. If that public interest prohibits the defendant from asserting his title and control of the water on account of the public utility nature of the use to which the property is devoted, is it not necessary that a court of equity should award the defendant just compensation for the appropriation of his property, on the theory that the doctrine of reverse condemnation is involved?

[5] There is no doubt the record contains ample evidence to support the findings of the court that plaintiffs continued to use the water from McDougall Springs for a period of eight years, to augment the supply of their Durgan Flat Water System, a public utility, from which they continuously sold water to the inhabitants of Downieville with knowledge thereof on the part of the defendant. It follows that the defendant may not interfere by injunction or otherwise with that public right to the continued use of the water in that manner. The defendant is therefore not entitled to an absolute decree quieting title to the water and easement in him.

[6-8] Where water from springs, or from any other private source, is appropriated and used for the benefit of the public for a considerable period of time, with full knowledge on the part of the owner, he may be estopped from interfering with such vested public use by means of injunction, ejectment or a suit to quiet title. Under such circumstances, his remedy will be confined to a mere right to recoup adequate damages to compensate him for the loss of his property on account of such appropriation. This remedy is based on the theory that although the intervening public rights prevent interference with the use and control of the property on the part of the owner, he is, nevertheless, entitled to compensation on the principle applicable to a proceeding in reverse condemnation. Private property may not be taken, even for the benefit of the public, without just compensation. That principle has been frequently announced by the decisions of our courts. Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 160 Cal. 699, 117 P. 906, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 185; Collier v. Merced Irr. District, 213 Cal. 554, 563, 2 P.2d 790; Peabody v. City of Vallejo, 2 Cal.2d 351, 377, 40 P.2d 486; Hillside Water Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal.2d 677, 688, 76 P.2d 681. In the Collier case, supra [213 Cal. 554, 2 P.2d 793], it is said in that regard:

" 'It is perfectly true that not even a corporation possessing the power of eminent domain may under the Constitution (article 1, § 14) take or damage private property without first making adequate compensation. But this right may be waived by the owner, and, in order to prevent the obstruction of progress, he must be held to diligence in asserting his right as against a concern administering such a public use. If he allows his property right to be invaded and either taken or damaged for a public use, and the public right has so far intervened as to justify the belief that objection has been waived, then in law the property right so taken or damaged is to that extent dedicated to the public use.' Conaway v. Yolo Water & Power Co., 204 Cal. 125, 131, 266 P. 944, 946, 58 A.L.R. 674."

In the Gurnsey case, supra, 160 Cal. at page 709, 117 P. at page 910, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 185, quoting with approval from page 53 of

Jones on Telegraph and Telephone Companies, the court says with respect to the foregoing principle:

"'In many cases Telegraph and Telephone Companies enter upon the land of another without the latter's knowledge or consent, but the fact that they do, or that he permitted them to do so, does not give the company a title or right of way or estop him from maintaining an action for damages; and yet it may preclude him from maintaining any action of ejectment; * * * and should he stand by until the line is completed and in operation, and public interests have become involved, he will be denied the right to maintain an action of ejectment or the right to enjoin them. His only remedy under such circumstances is a proceeding brought to recover damages.'" (Italics added.)

After citing many cases in support of the foregoing principle, the court continues to say:

"In these latter cases, it is true, there were oral agreements under which the railroad companies went into possession of the land, and in the last case the construction of the canal was with the tacit consent of those who sought to have it abated and removed from their land as a nuisance. The principle, however, upon which the right to maintain ejectment or to quiet title or to abate the canal was denied in those cases was that, as public interests had intervened through the construction and operation of these public agencies before the actions in those cases were commenced, any right of the parties to disturb them in their possession of the property was thereby lost, and only an action to recover compensation for the land taken could be available. In principle there can be no difference, as far as the application of the rule of public policy is concerned, whether the entry is by original consent of the owner, or he permits it to be made and attempts to assert no right until after the public interests have intervened." (Italics added.)

In both the Peabody case and the Hillside Water Company case, supra, the courts held that the defendants, under such circumstances, could not interfere with vested public rights acquired in property by means of injunction or otherwise, but on the contrary that the owners were confined to their remedy for damages for the appropriation of the property, on the theory of reverse condemnation.

[9, 10] In the present case the court has properly held that the defendant is not entitled to a decree quieting title to that portion of the water of McDougall Springs which has been appropriated and used by the plaintiffs for a number of years in operating a public utility in the name of Durgan Flat Water System, by selling the water to the inhabitants of Downieville, because of the intervention of the public right, and that the defendant is therefore estopped from asserting his right to the water. But the court neglected to ascertain and fix the amount of damages to which the defendant is entitled as just compensation for the value of the property thus appropriated and used for the public benefit. This is a suit in equity. It is inequitable to deprive the defendant of his property, even though it be taken for public use and benefit, without awarding him just compensation therefor. Such damages may be awarded in an equitable action to quiet title under the general prayer for "such other and further relief * * * as may seem meet in the premises." Having acquired jurisdiction in this equitable action complete justice should be afforded by compensating the defendant for the value of his property which is taken. Since there is no evidence to support plaintiffs' claim of title to the water by either purchase or by adverse possession, the only theory upon which the judgment for plaintiffs may stand is that the water was used incident to a public utility. That being so, the defendant is entitled to just compensation for the property which is converted to a public use.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court is directed to ascertain the value of the water and easement taken and appropriated for the benefit of the public, and award judgment to the defendant for that amount. Title to the water and easement should be quieted in plaintiffs, subject to payment of compensation therefor, and subject also to defendant's right to use and enjoy the benefit of whatever portion thereof is not required for public use, as heretofore decreed by the court. It is so ordered. The appellant may recover his costs.

TUTTLE, J., concurred.

49 Cal.App.2d 550

PRATT et al. v. ROBERT S. ODELL & CO. et al.

Civ. 11906.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 9, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 11, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 8, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐138

It is not necessary that a receiver authorize an appeal by a corporation claiming to be aggrieved by order appointing him if the corporation is a party of record to the proceedings from which the appeal is taken. Code Civ.Proc. § 938.

2. Appeal and error ⇐138

Where receiver appointed for corporation did not object to corporation's appeal taken by attorneys who represented corporation, its officers and directors sued in representative action by minority stockholders, there was no sufficient divergence of interest between the corporation and its officers and directors to preclude the corporation in behalf of stockholders from a fair presentation of issues involved in appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 938.

3. Appeal and error ⇐776

An appeal should not ordinarily be dismissed on motion of a respondent without the consent of appellant.

4. Appeal and error ⇐138

Where corporation retained its corporate entity after appointment of receiver for it in stockholders' derivative action against officers and third persons, appeal by defendants would not be dismissed when upon its face there was no evidence of alleged lack of good faith.

5. Corporations ⇐665(3)

A foreign corporation doing business in California is amenable to process of the state courts and relief may be granted against such corporation, irrespective of the effect upon its internal affairs.

6. Corporations ⇐636

California has power to reasonably regulate foreign corporations doing business in the state and to determine by legislative enactment the law of which state shall be applicable to the settlement of controversies between such corporations and others.

7. Statutes ⇐179

Under codal provision that corporation unless otherwise expressly provided refers only to a domestic corporation, a provision referring to loans and obligations incurred by officers of a "corporation" applied only to a domestic corporation. Civ.Code, §§ 278, 366.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Corporation".

8. Corporations ⇐640, 665(3)

The liability of a director of a foreign corporation doing business in California may be enforced in California but only according to the laws of the state of incorporation. Civ.Code, § 412.

9. Corporations ⇐207½

A representative action against corporate directors and others is not an action by minority stockholders against majority stockholders.

10. Evidence ⇐35, 43(4)

In action against directors of foreign corporation doing business in California, judicial notice of the laws of Delaware and the interpretation thereof may be taken. Civ. Code, § 412.

11. Contracts ⇐1

A "loan" is a contract by which one delivers a sum of money to another and the latter agrees to return at a future time a sum equivalent to that which he borrows.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Loan".

12. Corporations ⇐316(1), 432(12)

Where there was no evidence that signing of contract by corporate president was detrimental to other party, nor that president did not believe he was authorized to sign it, and contract met with approval of corporation, no reasonable inference could be drawn that president knew he was not authorized to make the contract so as to make moneys paid to other party by parent Delaware corporation an advancement to president personally contrary to Delaware statute. Rev.Code Del.1935, § 2068.

13. Corporations ⇐212

In representative action against directors and third persons because of money unlawfully expended, evidence as to the good faith of the defendants is vital and admissible where it is alleged that expenditure was not in good faith for corporation's benefit.

14. Building and loan associations ⇐42(3)

The corporate entity of a building and loan association continues for purpose of contesting seizure by commissioner. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

15. Building and loan associations ⇐42(3)

Where statute gave right to building and loan association to contest seizure by commission, it must be assumed that there was no intention to deprive association of right to prepare for contest and use all proper means in good faith to maintain it to successful conclusion. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

16. Building and loan associations ⇐42(3)

The statutory provision that building and loan association may contest seizure by commissioner must be liberally construed. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

17. Building and loan associations ⇐42(3)

It cannot be assumed that commissioner would expend funds of seized building and loan association in defense of seizure and at the same time advance funds to support an attack thereon, as regards right of association to seek financial assistance to contest seizure. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

18. Building and loan associations ⇐42(3)

An appeal by seized building and loan association to trial court for allowance of fees to attorneys and expenses in action to enjoin seizure would make proper for the court's consideration whether the action was brought in good faith, a finding on which would rest in the court's reasonable discretion. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

19. Building and loan associations ⇐42(3)

A seized building and loan association may in good faith secure financial assistance from stockholders or others to contest in the interest of the stockholders seizure by commissioner. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

20. Building and loan associations ⇐42(3)

A building and loan association which had been seized by commission had power to contract for appraisement of its property and pay salaries of its officers who performed services in assisting company to contest the seizure. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

21. Corporations ⇐439

If a corporation acts in good faith it may expend funds in prosecution of litigation to which it is not a party but in which it has an interest, or in assistance of other organizations from which it lawfully expects to benefit.

22. Corporations ⇐439

A parent corporation may ordinarily expend money in defense of its subsidiary.

23. Corporations ⇐439

A parent corporation could not expend money in contesting seizure of its subsidiary building and loan association if it knew or ought to have known that no defense existed to the seizure. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

24. Corporations ⇐312(1)

Where directors of parent corporation act in good faith in expending money to defend seizure of subsidiary building and loan association, they are not liable for such expenditure, but they are liable where they know or should have known that commissioner had valid grounds for the seizure and that the contest was brought in bad faith. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 986, § 13.12.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Anthony F. Pratt and others on behalf of themselves and other minority stockholders of State Guaranty Corporation against such corporation, its officers and directors, and others, to compel restitution of funds expended on behalf of such corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendants appeal.

Judgment reversed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Freston & Files, Gordon L. Files, and John L. Mace, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Baldwin Robertson and Russell Breckenridge, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WARD, Justice.

This is an action brought by plaintiffs on behalf of themselves and other minority stockholders of the State Guaranty Corporation against that body, its officers and directors and others to compel restitution of funds alleged to have been unlawfully expended on behalf of such corporation by said officers and directors. The appeal is by the defendants from the whole of the judgment in plaintiffs' favor, which also brings here for review an order appointing a receiver.

Respondents presented to this court a motion to dismiss the appeal upon the grounds that it was not taken by the Guaranty Corporation or pursuant to its authority; that the notice thereof was signed by attorneys for the individual judgment debtors not purporting to act for such corporation, and that the appeal was not prosecuted in good faith.

[1, 2] It is not necessary that a receiver authorize an appeal by a corporation claiming to be aggrieved by the order appointing him if the corporation is a party of record to the proceedings from which the appeal is taken. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 938; Luckenbach v. Laer, 190 Cal. 395, 212 P. 918; Golden State Glass Corp. v. Superior Court, 13 Cal.2d 384, 90 P.2d 75; Berylwood Investment Co. v. Graham, 43 Cal. App.2d 659, 111 P.2d 467; Braun v. Brown, 13 Cal.2d 130, 87 P.2d 1009; Lilienkamp v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 293, 93 P.2d 1008. It is not the receiver but the plaintiffs who object to the appeal of the corporation taken by the same attorneys who at the trial represented such body, its officers and directors. There is not sufficient divergence of interest between the corporation and its officers and directors to justify precluding the corporation, in behalf of its stockholders, from a fair presentation of the issues involved on this appeal.

[3, 4] State Guaranty Corporation retains its corporate entity and has regularly appealed. Ordinarily an appeal should not be dismissed on motion of a respondent without the consent of appellant. Woodbury v. Nevada, etc., Ry. Co., 120 Cal. 367, 52 P. 650. An appeal will not be dismissed upon such a technical objection (Sharick v. Galloway, 12 Cal.App.2d 733, 55 P.2d 1196), when upon its face there is no showing of lack of good faith. The motion to dismiss was denied after oral argument before the submission of the cause upon its merits.

There was also filed by respondents an application for leave to produce additional evidence under section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The purpose of the application was to introduce a certified copy of a decision, in the form of a memorandum opinion, directing counsel to prepare findings in an action wherein Pacific States Savings & Loan Company, a corporation (subsidiary of the State Guaranty Corporation, appellant herein), was plaintiff, and Ralph W. Evans, individually and as Building and Loan Commissioner of the State of California, and others appeared as defendants. The order, subsequently signed, set forth that the Pacific States Savings & Loan Company, hereinafter referred to as Pacific States, did not commence that action in good faith; and that a petition for allowance and payment of attorneys' fees on its behalf was denied but that there was reserved to plaintiff or its attorneys the right to subsequently apply for a proper allowance "for legal services heretofore rendered." In the opinion rendered by the trial court in that case, the court stated: "The justification or non-justification of the seizure [of the assets of Pacific States] will not be and cannot legally be determined until there is a decision rendered in the main case."

The parties to the action by the Pacific States are different from those in the present case, and the above-mentioned order is not final, but subject to possible reversal by a reviewing court, the legal effect thereof simply being that a particular controversy in the trial of that action has been decided, but its correctness and conclusiveness is an open question until affirmed on appeal or it becomes final by failure to appeal. Eliminating questions of difference in parties in the respective actions, and of the identical issues involved—which need not be definitely stated or determined at this time—the litigants herein would be placed in an awkward and anomolous position if on review the above order should be regarded as binding, and subsequently it should be set aside on motion for a new trial on the merits of that case, or reversed on appeal. The application for leave to produce additional evidence before this court was denied, without prejudice, prior to submission of the present appeal.

The Guaranty Corporation is a holding company whose principal asset is all of the guarantee stock of Pacific States. It also owns investment certificates of the latter company of the face value of approximately $80,000, and, through the Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation, of which it owns all of the outstanding capital stock, the Guaranty Corporation owns additional investment certificates in Pacific States of the face value of approximately $88,000.

The board of directors of the Guaranty Corporation is composed mainly of persons who are officers and directors of its subsidiary, Pacific States.

On March 4, 1939, under the authority of section 13.11 of the Building & Loan Act (Stats.1931, pp. 483, 539; Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 986), the Building & Loan Commissioner of the State of California, to whom we will refer as the commissioner, took possession of the property, business and assets of Pacific States. Two days thereafter, under the provisions of section 13.12 of the same act (Stats. 1931, p. 540), Pacific States as an aggrieved party filed an action against the commissioner in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco to enjoin the seizure. Pacific States v. Evans, Superior Court Civil No. 286,830. A final judgment has not as yet been rendered in that action.

The material facts do not seem to be a subject of controversy. The trial court herein found that, following the seizure by the commissioner, "Robert S. Odell, as President of Pacific States Savings and Loan Company, acting in the name of the said corporation, entered into a contract with the American Appraisal Company, engaging that company to make an appraisal of the properties of Pacific States Savings and Loan Company." The latter thereupon requested its parent company, Guaranty Corporation, to pay any and all expenses incurred in connection with the prosecution and resistance of a liquidation of its affairs, including salaries of its officers whose employment was necessary to the success thereof, agreeing to reimburse the parent company for any and all amounts and expenses advanced upon its written request, signed by its president, or any vice-president, and secretary, and under the corporate seal of the company. These matters were duly set forth by resolution in the minutes of regular meetings of the Guaranty and Pacific States corporations. The resolutions in this respect refer to the seizure as unauthorized and unjustifiable, and state that the retention of the assets of Pacific States by the commissioner will have a detrimental effect upon such company and its investors; that the Guaranty owns all of the outstanding capital stock of the Pacific States, and through subsidiary companies, a large block of its investment certificates; that liquidation would result in the sacrifice of properties to the great loss of Pacific States and the Guaranty Corporation. In its resolution the Guaranty Corporation agreed to assume indebtedness incurred and to pay certain salaries of officers of Pacific States from the date of the seizure until further order of the board of directors. These amounts were subsequently paid by Guaranty. It does not appear that any of the funds were used in any manner except as authorized by the resolutions of the two companies.

Subsequently an investors' committee, composed originally of about 30 certificate holders of Pacific States, was formed. There is evidence that the organization was inspired by officers of Pacific States. From a small body it grew until there were over 8000 members, "who owned face value of investment certificates of about $12,000,000." Its purpose was to intervene in the suit of Pacific States v. Evans, supra; subsequently it took an active part in legislative matters wherein Pacific States and Guaranty were materially interested. The Guaranty Corporation paid all expenses incurred through the activities of the investors' committee. The record shows that in excess of 85 per cent of the Pacific States investors favored the return of management from the commissioner to the directorate of that company. During this period the commissioner served upon the Guaranty Corporation, the sole stockholder of Pacific States, an assessment upon the stock of the Pacific States in the amount of $628,600.

Judgment was entered herein that plaintiffs "for the benefit of State Guaranty Corporation, and, State Guaranty Corporation * * * do have and recover * * * jointly and severally" from named defendants certain specified sums. In addition the judgment provided: "That plaintiffs, for the benefit of State Guaranty Corporation, and State Guaranty Corporation, a corporation, do have and recover from defendants Robert S. Odell, A. E. Falch and C. F. Adams, Jr., jointly and severally, the sum of one hundred fifty-eight thousand, two hundred two and 65/100 dollars ($158,202.65), making in the aggregate the sum to be had and recovered against said last-named defendants, jointly and severally, the sum of one hundred eighty thousand four hundred seventy-two and 65/100 dollars ($180,472.65), together with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum from the 4th day of May, 1940, until the same be repaid into the treasury of State Guaranty Corporation." The officers and directors of the Guaranty Corporation, individually and as such officers and directors, were restrained from paying from the treasury of the Guaranty Corporation or that of the Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation any debts or obligations incurred by Robert S. Odell, Robert S. Odell & Company or any defendant individually or jointly in the name of such parties or of the Pacific States. Payment of salaries to any officers, agents or employees of Pacific States was likewise enjoined, as was the payment of any further sums for the account of the investors' committee, or the advancing of any funds on behalf of the prosecution or defense of Pacific States. A receiver was appointed for the Guaranty Corporation for the purpose of enforcing the collection of the judgment in his own name as such receiver. Plaintiffs were awarded counsel fees of $5,000, plus "a sum equal to thirty-three and one-third per cent (33⅓%) of the first thirty thousand dollars ($30,000) so recovered; fifteen per cent (15%) of the next fifty thousand dollars ($50,000) so recovered; and ten per cent (10%) of all of the balance of such recovery." The $5,000 amount was based upon a finding that $50,000 drawn from the Guaranty treasury several days prior to the filing of this action and placed in a San Francisco bank as a "defense fund," and repaid to the Guaranty several days after the commencement of this suit, would not have been so repaid except for the force of a restraining order.

The trial court found that it was unlawful for the Guaranty Corporation to finance the action of Pacific States v. Evans, supra. For the purpose of consideration herein such expenditures consisted of: $35,000 to the investors' committee, and the remainder, salaries of officers and directors as compensation, fees and charges of an appraisal company, etc. The first amount, $35,000, was declared to be "an unlawful use and diversion of the assets of State Guaranty Corporation"; the others, to be "a loan of money and a payment of the obligation of the officers and directors of State Guaranty Corporation and * * * of Pacific States Savings and Loan Company * * * in violation of the provisions of sec. 366 of the Civil Code of the State of California."

Among the various questions raised on appeal are the following: Is the injunction proper? Did the trial court have the right or power to appoint a receiver for the Guaranty Corporation? Is plaintiffs' counsel entitled to $5,000 additional attorney's fee for "saving" money which the Guaranty Corporation merely reserved and never expended? May a judgment be properly entered against the Odell Company, which merely received, and later paid out, some of the money alleged to have been wrongfully used? Are plaintiffs estopped and barred by laches? In view of the conclusion on the main issue of this case, which follows, it is not necessary to determine the foregoing questions.

In support of the declaration in the conclusions of law that the acts and conduct of the defendants were in violation of the provisions of section 366 of the Civil Code, respondents contend (1) that Guaranty is a foreign corporation only nominally, and that under its Delaware articles of incorporation it is bound by the laws of California; (2) that payment of the amounts authorized by its board of directors was a payment by individuals, and constituted a loan to individual directors of Pacific States; upon the theory that after the seizure of such company by the commissioner, its officers and directors became personally liable for any obligations assumed by them in the name of the corporation.

[5-7] A foreign corporation doing business in this state is amenable to process of the courts of this state, and relief may be granted against such corporation irrespective of the effect upon its internal affairs. Sharp v. Big Jim Mines, 39 Cal.App. 2d 435, 103 P.2d 430; Wait v. Kern River Mining, etc., Company, 157 Cal. 16, 106 P. 98. California has power to reasonably regulate foreign corporations doing business in this state, and to determine, by legislative enactment, the law of which state shall be applicable to the settlement of controversies between such corporations and others. The regulation in the instant controversy is plain and specific. Section 366, found in div. 1, pt. 4, tit. 1, ch. 14 of the Civil Code, refers to loans and obligations incurred by officers of a corporation. The definitions of the terms used in title 1 are found in section 278, Civil Code, which in part read: "'Corporation,' unless otherwise expressly provided, refers only to a domestic corporation." There is no express provision otherwise in section 366. It must be held, therefore, that the section does not apply in the present case. The liability of a director in a foreign corporation is determined by Civil Code, section 412: "The directors of a foreign corporation transacting business in this State shall be liable to the corporation, its shareholders, creditors, receiver, liquidator, or trustee in bankruptcy for the making of unauthorized dividends, purchases of its shares, or distributions of assets, or false certificates, reports or public notices or other violations of official duty, according to the laws of the State of incorporation, whether committed or done in this State or elsewhere. Such liabilities may be enforced in the courts of this State." (Italics added.)

[8] Respondents place great weight upon Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 158 Cal. 275, 110 P. 942, 139 Am.St.Rep. 120, citing Pinney v. Nelson, 183 U.S. 144, 22 S.Ct. 52, 46 L.Ed. 125. In the Thomas case, a stockholder appealed from a judgment against him for his proportionate share of indebtedness evidenced by promissory notes payable in this state. The court said at page 281 of 158 Cal., at page 944 of 110 P., 139 Am.St.Rep. 120: "The law of this state declares in express terms that 'the liability of each stockholder of a corporation formed under the laws of any other state or territory of the United States, or of any foreign country, and doing business within this state, is the same as the liability of a stockholder of a corporation created under the constitution and laws of this state.'" Section 322 of the Civil Code at that time specifically mentioned foreign corporations. Section 366 makes no reference to foreign corporations. The liability of a director of a corporation for a violation of official duty may be enforced in this state, but according to the laws of the state of incorporation.

[9] In some respects respondents argue upon the theory that the present action was instituted by minority against majority stockholders. It may be assumed that the subject of plaintiffs' cause of action is of general interest to all owners of capital stock of the Guaranty Corporation, and that all shareholders who so elected could assist in the prosecution thereof. However, the suit is brought by plaintiff shareholders on behalf of themselves and all other stockholders of the Guaranty Corporation against the Odell Company, Robert S. Odell, as president thereof, his wife, the Guaranty Corporation, its officers, directors and subsidiaries and others. It is respondents' claim that the various corporations are interlocked in interest, and that Odell is the dominating figure and controller of the official acts of all officers and directors. The action, therefore, is not by "minority stockholders against majority stockholders," so that arguments and citations applicable to that situation may be disregarded. The interests of the stockholders of the Guaranty Corporation are in proportion to the number of shares held, but their rights and privileges are identical, though there may be an honest difference of opinion as to the best method to pursue in the protection of such rights and interests.

So far as the judgment is based upon section 366, Civil Code, the determination of the appeal could be reached at this point. However, respondents urge that a loan to an officer is equally unlawful under the laws of the State of Delaware.

[10, 11] In the interests of justice, with the purpose if possible of making findings of fact different from those of the trial court, but in accord with the evidence adduced, it has been determined to examine such evidence in order to discover whether it comes within the purview of the law of the State of Delaware. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 956a. To that extent it will be proper to take judicial notice of the laws of Delaware and the interpretation thereof. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1875. Section 36 of the Delaware corporation law provides: "No corporation created under this Chapter shall make any loan of money to any officer of such corporation." Rev.Code 1935, § 2068. In the present case, as stated, the Guaranty advanced various sums of money. A loan is "A contract by which one delivers a sum of money to another and the latter agrees to return at a future time a sum equivalent to that which he borrows." 38 C.J., p. 126. There is no evidence in this case that a loan was made by Guaranty to any officer of that corporation as an individual. Assuming, but not deciding, that the section is broad enough to include officers of a subsidiary corporation, there is no evidence that a loan was so made to such an officer.

[12] It is respondents' theory that the officers and directors of Pacific States became personally responsible as individuals for all monies so paid by Guaranty on behalf of Pacific States. It is also urged that Odell, as president, in signing the contract with the appraisal company on behalf of Pacific States, assumed an authority which he did not possess. It is not contended that had the seizure not been made, Odell would not have been authorized to sign such a contract. Respondents' theory is that, the seizure having been made, Odell assumed an agency for which there was no authorization in law or in fact, and that he thereby became responsible as principal to the appraisal company (Civ.Code, sec. 2343); and that the credit so given by that company was bestowed upon him personally. Respondents' position would be worthy of consideration if the appraisal company had been injured thereby, or if Odell had entered into the written contract in the name of his principal without believing in good faith that he was authorized to do so, or if the act was wrongful in its nature. There is no evidence that the signing of the contract by the president of Pacific States was to the detriment of the appraisal company; nor is there evidence that Odell did not believe he was authorized to make the contract, or that it was in excess of his authority. On the contrary, his action in this respect met with the approval of Pacific States. In the absence of evidence herein that Odell imposed upon the appraisal company—respondent does not call attention to such evidence, nor have we been able to find substantiation therefor in that adduced—it would be highly technical to hold in the face of the record that a reasonable inference could be drawn that Odell knew he was not authorized to make the contract.

[13] Was Odell's act wrongful in its nature? There was no evidence of fraud or misrepresentation. The burden of respondents' contention is that all of the acts by the interested companies were made to serve the private interests of Odell. They stated in the application to produce additional evidence "that the trial court * * * refused to permit plaintiffs to introduce any evidence respecting" the necessity of the take-over and that "the action of the defendants herein in resisting said take-over was for the purpose of serving the private interests and desires of Robert S. Odell." The good faith of the defendants in this case was a vital question to determine. In the event that this matter should be reheard, and the pleadings should so allege, such evidence would be admissible.

As the record stands, the important question appears: Was the agreement by Guaranty to pay the salaries of Pacific States' officers, and other expenditures, after the seizure, an unlawful act on the part of the Guaranty? The answer depends in a great measure upon the construction that may be placed upon section 13.12 of the Building and Loan Act. In reaching a conclusion on this question, and on all other questions raised on this appeal, the opinion herein is not to be construed as a determination of the issues involved in Pacific States v. Evans, supra.

[14-18] Under the provisions of section 13.12, whenever the property, business and assets of any building and loan association have been taken possession of by the commissioner, the aggrieved association may seek to enjoin further proceedings. No provision is made for such a direct contest by a stockholder, certificate holder, director or officer of the company, the statute confining the institution of such action to the association. A practical question is immediately suggested. The commissioner is in control of the association, and while the corporate entity of that body continues for the purpose of contesting the seizure (sec. 13.12, supra; Hill v. Bank of San Pedro, 41 Cal.App.2d 595, 107 P.2d 399), there is no immediate means financially of prosecuting the action against the commissioner. It must be assumed that when the legislature gave to the association the right to declare an offensive legal war on the acts of the commissioner, there was no intention to deprive the challenger of the right to prepare for and use all proper and fair means in good faith to maintain the contest to a successful conclusion. It would appear to be the duty of the association, if in fact aggrieved, to protect and maintain its integrity against the possibility of mistaken judgment on the part of the commissioner. "The successful achievement of the object of the statute requires broad rather than limited powers, and justifies a liberal rather than a strict construction." Wilson v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.2d 632, 637, 43 P.2d 286, 288. Such conclusion applies equally to a statutory right or privilege bestowed upon an association as upon a commissioner. It cannot be assumed that the commissioner would expend the funds of the association in defense of the seizure (Evans

v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 563, 96 P.2d 107), and at the same time advance funds to support an attack thereon. The right to enjoin further proceedings would be without avail if the association, acting in good faith, were precluded from seeking financial assistance for the prosecution of the action. An appeal to the trial court for the allowance of fees to attorneys and for expenses of conducting the litigation would make proper for the court's consideration whether the suit was brought in good faith, a finding on which would rest in the court's reasonable discretion. Anderson v. Great Republic Life Ins. Co., 41 Cal.App.2d 181, 106 P.2d 75. Ordinarily the trial court would not be able to determine this question until evidence had been presented on behalf of the association, whose solvency might depend upon the value of the assets, real estate and otherwise. This might require the employment of appraisers, a great deal of consultation between officers of the association and the attorneys representing it as to factual matters and figures, and services and expenses of various kinds. The association, without financial aid, is called upon to protect its position against the commissioner, who is empowered to employ special counsel, accountants and appraisers, and pay therefor out "of the funds of the particular association involved." Evans v. Superior Court, supra, at page 572, of 14 Cal.2d, at page 112 of 96 P.2d. In a word, while the association is given the right to continue its corporate existence for the above limited purpose, such existence as a practical matter seems to depend upon its ability to finance itself; otherwise the aggrieved party must forego its right to enjoin the commissioner.

[19, 20] There is no statutory provision prohibiting the association from obtaining financial aid from other sources. Seeking aid from a stockholder, personal or corporate, seems a reasonable and practical method of procedure, particularly if the stockholder owns the controlling interest in the association. If the stockholder, or any other party, and the association, without intent to defraud, in good faith and in the interests of other stockholders and certificate holders, make financial arrangements within statutory provisions for the conduct of a suit to enjoin the commissioner, we can see no legal objection thereto, and certainly cannot hold the contract with the appraisal company, or the payment of salaries to officers of Pacific States, who actually performed services in assisting that company in its action against the seizure, to be wrongful in nature or violative of any statute to which attention has been called on this appeal. To hold otherwise would in some instances result in the abolishment of a right granted by the legislature.

One further point remains for consideration. The trial court found that the Guaranty, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware and doing business exclusively in the State of California, is a holding company. Respondents contend that as such it had no right to advance $35,000 to the investors' committee; "that Pacific States, as a corporation, in truth has no case against the Building and Loan Commissioner. The real parties opposing the Building and Loan Commissioner are those who prior to the seizure had control of the assets of Pacific States. This means one man only—Robert S. Odell." There is nothing in the record from which this court may determine that the advancement was improper. The all important question of good faith on the part of defendants is not an issue on this appeal.

As stated, the court found that the $35,000 expenditure was "an unlawful use and diversion of the assets." Relative to the diversion of assets, it did not find that the funds were embezzled or that a loan or obligation was created on the part of the individual directors within the purview of section 366, supra. The original complaint alleged that $25,000 of this amount had "been expended by said defendants in connivance and conspiracy with and under the direction of Robert S. Odell." This theory was abandoned. During the trial "to conform to the proof," an amended complaint was filed which alleged that the $35,000 was paid by Guaranty "through the unlawful and unwarranted acts of said individual defendants * * * without consideration."

The investors' committee, though not always successful in its undertakings, did perform services. It sought to enjoin the commissioner from expending funds of Pacific States in defending the action to enjoin seizure by him, and an injunction was granted by the trial court so restraining him. An application by the commissioner to the superior court for relief from the restraining order was denied, but a rehearing granted. In a prohibition proceeding, the commissioner was upheld, three of the justices dissenting. Evans v. Superior Court, supra. Other services were also performed by the investors' committee consisting in taking an active part in legislative matters. There is no proof that any of the funds were unlawfully, unethically, improperly or unwisely expended.

[21] If a corporation acts in good faith, it may expend funds in the prosecution of litigation to which it is not a party but in which it has an interest, or in the assistance of other organizations from which it expects lawfully to benefit. In Woods Lumber Co. v. Moore, 183 Cal. 497, 502, 191 P. 905, 907, 11 A.L.R. 549, the court said: "With respect to the means which the corporation may adopt to further its objects and promote its business its managers 'are not limited in law to the use of such means as are usual or necessary to the objects contemplated by their organization, but, where not restricted by law, may choose such means as are convenient and adapted to the end, though they be neither the usual means, nor absolutely necessary' for the purpose intended." Singh v. United States American Malwa Sudharak Soc., 5 Cal.2d 405, 54 P.2d 1099; Rabbitt v. Union Indemnity Co., 140 Cal.App. 575, 35 P.2d 1066; 19 C.J.S., Corporations, § 1145, pp. 718–720; 13 Am.Jur., p. 824.

[22, 23] Independently of section 13.12 of the Building and Loan Act the rule is well-settled that a parent corporation may ordinarily expend money in defense of its subsidiary. But neither that rule nor any other rule mentioned in this opinion would warrant Guaranty in expending any sum of money at all if it knew or under the circumstances should have known that Pacific States did not have a defense to the seizure. As already pointed out, Pacific States could be reimbursed for expenditures made in the action brought to challenge the seizure only if it acted in good faith. Anderson v. Great Republic Life Ins. Co., supra; Barker v. Southern Bldg. & Loan Association, C.C., 181 F. 636; Esarey v. Pierson, 84 Ind.App. 109, 141 N.E. 87; Annotation, 89 A.L.R. 1527. The trial court found that "all of the officers and directors of defendant State Guaranty Corporation, and all of the officers and directors of Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation, and all of the officers and directors of State Guaranty Auxiliary Corporation, and all of the officers and directors of Pacific States Savings and Loan Company, a savings and loan association, were and all other officers and directors of said corporation have been since their respective organizations placed in their respective offices and directorships by Robert S. Odell and Robert S. Odell & Company and all of said persons and each of them that are now officers and directors remain in their said offices and in the said directorships at the nomination and pleasure of Robert S. Odell and Robert S. Odell & Company, and at all times in these findings mentioned have acted, now act and in the future will act in their respective positions, solely and only upon the command of Robert S. Odell and Robert S. Odell & Company." If it could be shown that Odell in bringing the contest proceedings in behalf of Pacific States acted in bad faith, it could be logically argued that he acted in bad faith in securing the agreement of Guaranty to advance money to finance the contest. In the final analysis, therefore, the liability of appellant would seem to turn on the good faith issue.

[24] On the retrial, if one be had, evidence should be taken on that issue and findings made. If it should be found that the directors of Guaranty acted in good faith, based on a reasonable belief that good cause to challenge the seizure existed, then they are not liable in this action for any sum expended for the defense of Pacific States. But if it should be found that the directors of Guaranty knew or should have known that the commissioner had valid grounds for the seizure and that the contest action was brought in bad faith, then the directors of Guaranty are liable for any sums expended for the defense of Pacific States.

Subsequent to the submission of the appeal herein, upon stipulation of the parties the appeal of Gerald R. White was ordered dismissed. As to all other appellants, the judgment is reversed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 179

VETERANS' WELFARE BOARD v. LIEBHART et al.

Civ. 12756.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

1. Husband and wife ⇐262(1)

Under statute, property acquired during marriage is presumed to be community property. Civ.Code, § 164.

2. Husband and wife ⇐264

Statutory presumption that property acquired during marriage is community property can be overcome only by clear and satisfactory proof that the property in question was separate property. Civ.Code, § 164.

3. Army and navy ⇐51

The general scheme of the Veterans' Welfare Act is to provide for the purchasing and improving of land and selling of the land in small parcels to veterans who will become actual settlors, the purchase price to represent the pro rata proportion of the actual cost of such land and improvements, and the purchase price to bear interest at five per cent. per annum and to be compounded if not paid. St.1921, p. 969.

4. Husband and wife ⇐250

Where war veteran entered into contract for purchase of land with Veterans' Welfare Board under authority of the Veterans' Welfare Act, and down payment was made with community funds of veteran and his wife as were the monthly payments made prior to separation of the parties, and subsequently the parties were divorced and wife was awarded the community property, fact that only small down payment was required, that long period of time was given for payment of balance, and that only five per cent. per annum interest was charged, did not make the purchase contract a "gift" from the state, so as to render rights thereunder the "separate property" of the husband, and the rights were "community property" and vested in the wife pursuant to the divorce decree. St.1921, p. 969; Civ.Code, § 164.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Community Property", "Gift", and "Separate Property".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Action by the Veterans' Welfare Board against Herman Liebhart and others to quiet title to property described in a certain contract of sale executed by the board, and for declaratory relief. From an adverse judgment, the board appeals.

Affirmed.

Warren H. Atherton, of Stockton, and Thomas J. Riordan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

O. Benton Worley, of Canoga Park, for respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

A California veteran of the first World War entered into a contract of purchase and sale of real property with the Veterans' Welfare Board, under the authority of the California Veterans' Welfare Act, St.1921, p. 969. The contract was dated July 26, 1923. The down payment was $119.30, and the balance of the purchase price was to be paid in 240 monthly installments of $14.97 each.

On the date of the contract the veteran was married and living with his wife. The down payment was made from community funds. Subsequent monthly payments were also made from community funds until the veteran and his wife separated in 1936. In 1937 there was an interlocutory decree of divorce, which awarded all community property to the wife, thereafter confirmed by a final decree in 1938. After the separation the wife made all of the monthly payments, and there is no question of default under the terms of the contract.

This action is brought by the Veterans' Welfare Board to quiet title to the property described in the contract of sale, and for declaratory relief.

Upon the facts stated the trial court found the defendant, the former wife of the veteran, to be the sole owner of all of the right, title and interest in the contract of purchase and sale, and quieted title in her, subject to the rights of the Veterans' Welfare Board as provided by the contract. The veteran husband did not appeal. The case comes to this court upon the appeal from the judgment of the superior court by the plaintiff, Veterans' Welfare Board.

On appeal the plaintiff contends, as it did before the superior court: (a) that such rights as the contract granted to the veteran were a gift to him from the State of California, because of the small down payment, the long period of time to pay the balance of the purchase price in monthly installments, and the low rate of interest (5 per cent per annum) on deferred balances of the purchase price; and (b) being a gift to the veteran, the rights under the contract were his separate property, which did not vest in the wife pursuant to the terms of the divorce decree awarding the community property to her.

[1, 2] It needs only to state this contention to demonstrate its impossibility under our California law. Property acquired during marriage is presumed to be community property. Civ.Code, § 164; Estate of Jolly, 196 Cal. 547, 238 P. 353. This presumption can only be overcome by clear and satisfactory proof that the property in question was separate property. Estate of Rolls, 193 Cal. 594, 226 P. 608. To hold that merely because a contract of purchase and sale has a small first payment, or small subsequent payments spread over a long period of time, the property so purchased is separate property, would be to defeat the intent and purpose of the community property laws of this state. An interest rate of 5 per cent per annum in a contract of purchase of real property is not so low as to make that purchase a gift, and thus take the property purchased out of the purview of our community property laws.

[3, 4] In Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 188 Cal. 607, 206 P. 631, the Supreme Court of California held that a loan made by the Veterans' Welfare Board was not a gift or a loan in violation of sections 31 and 32 of article IV of our Constitution, which sections forbid the gift or loan of the credit or of any money or thing of value of the state. From a careful study of the California Veterans' Welfare Act, the court declared, at page 614 of 188 Cal., at page 634 of 206 P.: "The general scheme of this statute, then, is to provide for the purchasing and improving of lands and the selling of the same in small parcels to veterans who will become actual settlers, the purchase price to represent the pro rata proportion of the actual cost of such land and improvements, the purchase price to bear interest at 5 per cent. per annum, and to be compounded if not paid." And at page 616 of 188 Cal., at page 635 of 206 P. the court further states: "So far as the purchase and sale of the land is concerned, it is not a gift. If it is not a gift, is it a loan of the credit of the state within the meaning of article 4, §§ 31 and 32? The answer is that, so far as the appropriation made is concerned, the state is not lending its credit, but, if the arrangement for the purchase and sale of land at all partakes of the nature of a loan, it is a loan of money and not of credit."

This decision is decisive of the case now before us.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and Doran, J., concurred.

STARK v. COKER et al.

Civ. 2734

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 17, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 16, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1058(1)
Corporations ⇐1

In action on trust deed note against corporate maker and individuals, where corporation was found to be individuals' alter ego, detailed statement of corporation's original issue of stock and subsequent transfers offered in evidence by corporation and individuals was erroneously excluded on objections of plaintiff, though prejudice resulting from ruling was to some extent reduced by receipt in evidence, without objection, of an incomplete statement of stock issued and transferred.

2. Evidence ⇐589

In action on trust deed note against corporate maker and individuals, plaintiff was not bound by one individual's testimony concerning structure of corporation and ownership of its stock, but, where that was the only evidence in the record on those questions, plaintiff had to rely on it to support his judgment against individuals on theory that corporation was their alter ego. Code Civ.Proc. § 2055.

3. Mortgages ⇐309(2)

Under trust deed empowering trustee to compromise indebtedness and execute reconveyance of security only upon payment of all sums secured and surrender to trustee for cancellation of trust deed and note secured, and upon receipt from beneficiary of a written request reciting fact of payment and surrender, trustee, who was also one of the beneficiaries, had no authority to reconvey security without payment of obligation and request from beneficiaries.

4. Mortgages ⇐315(1)

Where defendants defended action on trust deed note on ground of accord and satisfaction allegedly negotiated with trustee and consummated by reconveyance of security and various payments made to trustee, there was no basis for invoking an "estoppel" against plaintiff with respect to reconveyance, where he testified that he was totally ignorant of any negotiations conducted by trustee, that he received no part of the payments, and that he did not know of reconveyance until some time after it had been recorded.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

5. Joint tenancy ⇐12

The act of one joint tenant without express or implied authority from or consent of his cotenant cannot bind or prejudicially affect the rights of the cotenant.

6. Joint tenancy ⇐12

Where trust deed note was made payable to trustee and her husband as joint tenants, trustee had no power or authority growing out of relation of joint tenancy to compromise or reduce husband's portion of joint debt without authority from him, express or implied, and hence an accord and satisfaction allegedly negotiated with trustee could not bind husband.

7. Tenancy in common ⇐55(3)

The rule that all cotenants or any number less than all may bring an action to protect or enforce the rights in the cotenancy property is especially true where the plaintiff joins his cotenant as a party defendant. Code Civ.Proc. § 384.

8. Judgment ⇐720

Generally, under the rule of "res judicata" matters which have been judicially determined cannot be again drawn into controversy between the same parties.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

9. Judgment ⇐540, 713(1)

The judgment of a court having jurisdiction directly on the point in controversy is, as a plea, a "bar" and, as evidence, competent and conclusive as between the same parties and their privies in a subsequent action not only where the subject matter is in all respects the same, but where the point comes incidentally in question in relation to a different matter.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Bar".

10. Judgment ⇐713(2)

An adjudication is final and conclusive not only with respect to the matter actually determined, but with respect to every other matter which the parties might have litigated and have had decided as incident to or essentially connected with the subject matter of the litigation, and also with respect to every matter of claim and defense coming within the legitimate purview of the original action.

11. Judgment ⇐951(1)

With respect to matters which might have been litigated and decided in a former suit as within the scope of the issues, but which were not actually or expressly in issue and adjudicated, only a presumption is indulged that they were decided, and that presumption is disputable.

12. Judgment ⇐713(2)

The rule that a judgment operates as an "estoppel" to the maintenance of a subsequent action as between persons who were parties to former action not only as it may affect each issue actually raised, but also every other issue which properly might have been litigated and determined, does not apply to rights, claims, or demands growing out of the same subject matter but constituting separate or distinct causes of action and not put in issue in the former action.

13. Judgment ⇐566

The judgment in an action involving only the issue of cancellation of trustee's reconveyance of security was not a "bar" to an action on trust deed note, where it was clear from findings and judgment in earlier action that trial court intended to withhold from adjudication and reserve for further consideration in another action question of effect of reconveyance on plaintiff's interest in security.

14. Limitation of actions ⇦127(18)

Where action was originally brought to foreclose trust deed, but the security had been lost and had become worthless, amendment to complaint seeking judgment on trust deed note without foreclosure did not state a "new and distinct cause of action" which was barred by limitations because filed more than four years after due date of note, since a foreclosure action and an action on the note both seek to collect the debt secured.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "New and Distinct Cause of Action".

15. Mortgages ⇦306

Where original trust deed note was made payable to wife, the fact that renewal note was made payable to wife and her husband as joint tenants did not change the status of the note as a renewal of a prior indebtedness and an extension of the due date of the indebtedness.

16. Corporations ⇦1

The mere fact that one or two individuals or corporations own all of the stock of another corporation is not of itself sufficient to cause the courts to disregard the corporate entity and treat that corporation as the "alter ego" of the individuals or corporations owning its stock, but it must also be shown that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality of the corporation and the owners of its stock has ceased, and that the observance of the fiction of separate existence would under the circumstances sanction a fraud or promote injustice.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Alter Ego".

17. Corporations ⇦1

In action on trust deed renewal note executed by defendant corporation, evidence was insufficient to support judgment against individual defendants who were husband and wife on theory that corporation was their alter ego.

18. Corporations ⇦1

In action on trust deed renewal note executed by defendant corporation, plaintiff had burden of proving that corporation was the alter ego of individual defendants who were husband and wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Robert B. Burch, Judge.

Action by Emil Stark against John B. Coker and others to foreclose a deed of trust. After amendment of the complaint, the action proceeded as an action on the trust deed note. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Monroe & McInnis, of San Diego, for appellants.

Johnson & Johnson, E. L. Johnson, and C. Ashley Johnson, all of San Diego, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment against appellants for one-half of the principal sum of a promissory note, plus accrued interest and attorney's fees, which note was made payable to Hilda A. Stark and Emil Stark as joint tenants and executed by Southern California Home Building Company. The judgment against John B. Coker and Regina W. Coker is based on the theory that the corporation was their alter ego.

[1] The Southern California Home Building Company (hereinafter referred to as the corporation) was incorporated on October 2, 1923. Its permit to issue stock was received about October 25, 1923. A detailed statement of its original issue of stock and subsequent transfers, offered in evidence by appellants, was erroneously excluded by the trial judge on objections of plaintiff. However, the prejudice resulting from this ruling was to a certain extent reduced by the introduction in evidence of an incomplete statement of stock issued and transferred, which evidence was received without objection during the early days of the trial.

This evidence shows that the corporation originally issued 150 shares of its capital stock of an undisclosed par value. Ten shares of stock were issued to John B. Coker and ten shares to M. B. Thornton on October 30, 1923. Twenty shares were issued to J. B. Coker on April 26, 1924. Thirty-two shares were issued to J. B. Coker on April 26, 1924. The record contains the following as to other stock issues and transfers: "Two shares issued to J.

B. Coker on the 26th of April, 1924. One share issued to J. B. Coker on the 20th day of August, 1924. One share issued to Regina W. Coker, transferred from J. B. Coker to Regina W. Coker, on October 4, 1924. Seventy-three shares issued to J. B. Coker, transferred from R. D. Shepard to Hilda A. Henderson and transferred from Hilda A. Henderson to J. B. Coker on June 3, 1927."

The record shows that for a time Hilda A. Stark's name was Hilda A. Henderson; that she married plaintiff either in the latter part of 1924 or in 1925. It also appears that Mrs. Stark only owned about twenty-two shares of the corporate stock so part of the foregoing testimony is to that extent erroneous. However, it sufficiently appears from the record that Mr. and Mrs. Coker did not own a majority of the stock until June 3, 1927.

It is probable that R. D. Shepard was secretary of the corporation until December 24, 1926, when he resigned and Mrs. Coker was appointed to succeed him. The record on this question is not entirely clear. John B. Coker was at all times president of the corporation. He managed its affairs and kept its books. He first received a salary of $50 per week. This was increased to $75 per week in 1927 and continued through 1932. In 1934 he received about $1,100 salary, which is probably the last year he was paid. He received nothing else from the corporation. Mrs. Coker received a salary of $25 per week as secretary, probably through 1934.

The business of the corporation was that of building and selling houses, lending money, buying and selling notes, mortgages, deeds of trust and other securities. Prior to 1929, it built and sold over two hundred houses, financed the construction of others and did considerable business in securities. In common with many other corporations conducting a like business, the value of its assets commenced to shrink in 1929. Thereafter its business was confined to efforts by Coker to liquidate its affairs. Much of its assets consisted of second incumbrances on properties it had sold and, perhaps, the ownership of residences upon which there were incumbrances held by others. In 1934 it held the record title to various parcels of real property which probably were incumbered. The value of the equities of the corporation in those properties in that year is not disclosed. Later, just when does not appear, these properties were lost so that finally the corporation had no assets at all.

Mrs. Stark, then Mrs. Henderson, had her first financial dealings with the corporation in 1924. She loaned it $8,000, which was evidenced by its note dated July 10, 1924. This note was secured by the pledge of securities. This loan was negotiated on the part of the corporation by Edwin S. Kerr, who was then a stockholder in it. Insofar as the record shows, the only connection Coker had with this loan was to sign the note to Mrs. Henderson (Stark) as president of the corporation.

Mrs. Stark's mother loaned the corporation $4,000 and took its note dated April 30, 1925. She made another loan of $2,200 in October of 1925. The mother died and Mrs. Stark succeeded her as owner of the indebtedness.

Various payments were made on these indebtednesses and other loans were made by Mrs. Stark, the last of which was $350, on June 1, 1928. The net result of these transactions left the corporation indebted to Mrs. Stark in the sum of $12,000. From evidence in the record we believe we are safe in assuming that the notes evidencing this indebtedness were secured by a deed of trust. All of this money went into the treasury of the corporation and was used by it in its business. Mr. and Mrs. Coker received none of it. Insofar as the record shows, these transactions were made in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, without any suggestion of fraud or deceit on the part of anyone. The corporation was then doing a rather considerable business and there is nothing in the record to suggest its future insolvency when the last loan was made on June 1, 1928. Of course, had the parties then had knowledge of the small value to be given second encumbrances after 1929, no one could have regarded the corporation a good credit risk. This lack of foresight on the part of Mrs. Stark and the officers of the corporation was common, not only to them, but to many other citizens of this country.

It is admitted that no stockholders' or directors' meetings were held after (probably) 1930; that thereafter no board of directors was elected or functioned; that thereafter there were no minutes of meetings of stockholders or directors; that thereafter the affairs of the corporation and their liquidation were controlled by and in the hands of Coker.

Interest on the indebtedness was regularly paid to Mrs. Stark monthly until at least the latter part of 1933, though at progressively reduced rates, which Mrs. Stark testified she agreed to.

[2] The foregoing summary is taken largely from the testimony of Coker, both while under cross-examination by plaintiff under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and while he was a witness on his own behalf. There is no other evidence concerning the structure of the corporation and the ownership of its stock with the exception of the evidence of Mrs. Stark that at one time she was a stockholder. Her description of her dealings with the corporation is very meager. Of course, plaintiff is not bound by the evidence given by Coker but as this is the only evidence in the record on these important questions plaintiff must rely upon it to support his judgment against Mr. and Mrs. Coker upon the ground that the corporation was their alter ego.

Under date of January 29, 1934, the corporation executed its promissory note in the principal sum of $12,000, due January 1, 1936, payable to Emil Stark and Hilda A. Stark as joint tenants with full rights of survivorship. On the bottom of the note, under the signature, appears the following: "This is a renewal of a Trust Deed Note recorded in Book 225 at page 355." This is the first time Emil Stark's name appears in the transaction. He testified that he advanced Mrs. Stark, then Mrs. Henderson, $4,500 to make up the amount of her original loan to the corporation. He had no dealings with the corporation or Mr. or Mrs. Coker concerning the several loans and the deed of trust of January 29, 1934, and no claim is made that either Mr. or Mrs. Coker, or any one else, connected with the corporation other than Mrs. Stark, knew that he had any financial interest in any of the transactions prior to January 29, 1934. The note was secured by a trust deed of even date which was duly recorded, in which the Southern California Home Building Company was trustor, Hilda A. Stark was trustee, and Emil and Hilda A. Stark were beneficiaries. It is undisputed that this note and deed of trust were given to renew the indebtedness of the corporation to Mrs. Stark and that there was no other consideration for their execution.

The next document of particular interest is a reconveyance of the property described in the deed of trust of January 29, 1934. It bears the signature "Hilda A. Stark" and an acknowledgment before a notary public. It is dated March 14, 1936. It was recorded on March 23, 1936. This reconveyance was purportedly executed by Hilda A. Stark, trustee, under the deed of trust.

Probably it was during the last of August, 1937, that Hilda A. Stark, as trustee, Hilda A. and Emil Stark instituted suit against Southern California Home Building Company to cancel the reconveyance on the ground of lack of consideration and that Hilda A. Stark never "executed or acknowledged the same."

The findings in that case contain the following:

"IV. That it is true that plaintiff, Hilda A. Stark, as Trustee, did on March 14, 1936, execute, acknowledge and deliver to defendant said full reconveyance.

"V. That it is true that on the 23rd day of March, 1936, there was recorded in Book 491, at page 87, of Official Records of the County of San Diego, State of California, a full reconveyance of the property mentioned in said deed of trust, which said reconveyance was executed, acknowledged and delivered by plaintiff, Hilda A. Stark, as Trustee, on or about March 14, 1936.

"VI. That it is true that the plaintiff, Emil Stark, had no notice or knowledge of the execution, acknowledgment and delivery of said full reconveyance by the plaintiff, Hilda A. Stark, as Trustee."

The trial court drew the following conclusions of law from those findings:

"I. That said full reconveyance so executed and delivered was a valid and effectual reconveyance and binding upon the plaintiff, Hilda A. Stark.

"II. That the plaintiff, Hilda A. Stark, is entitled to take nothing by reason of her said complaint, and that the defendant, Southern California Home Building Company, a corporation, is entitled to a judgment against the said plaintiff for its costs herein incurred.

"III. That by reason of the facts set forth in finding number VI the judgment herein should be without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff, Emil Stark, to establish or determine his rights, if any, in and to the real estate covered by said trust deed, in another section."

Judgment was entered on November 30, 1938, that Hilda A. Stark take nothing by the action, but "that this judgment shall be without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff, Emil Stark, to establish his right, if any, in and to the real estate covered by the trust deed involved herein in another action. * * *"

The present action was filed on September 5, 1939. It sought foreclosure of the deed of trust, judgment against the corporation and Mr. and Mrs. Coker in the sum of $6,000, plus interest from January 1, 1937, and attorneys' fees, for sale of the property described in the deed of trust and for a deficiency judgment against the three named defendants.

The answer of appellants admitted the corporate existence of the corporation and its execution of the note and deed of trust of January 29, 1934, and placed in issue the other material allegations of the complaint. It also pleaded the judgment of November 30, 1938, as a bar to the action.

During the trial plaintiff filed an amendment to his complaint, in which he alleged that the security described in the deed of trust had been lost and was valueless. He also amended the prayer of his complaint by omitting the portion seeking foreclosure of the deed of trust. Thereafter the action proceeded in the trial court upon the theory that it was an action to obtain a money judgment on a promissory note though the allegations which supported the original prayer for foreclosure remained in the complaint as amended.

Appellants amended their answer by alleging an accord and satisfaction entered into between J. B. Coker and Hilda A. Stark whereby the debt was satisfied and the reconveyance of the security was accomplished. They filed a further answer to the amendment to the complaint wherein they pleaded the bar of the statute of limitations to the portion of the action seeking judgment on the note without foreclosure.

The trial court found in favor of plaintiff and rendered the judgment we have outlined. The judgment against Mr. and Mrs. Coker was rendered on the theory that the corporation was their alter ego and the conduit through which they conducted their business. There is no other ground on which this portion of the judgment can be sustained.

Appellants rely upon the defense of an accord and satisfaction which they maintain was negotiated with Mrs. Stark and was consummated by the reconveyance dated March 14, 1936, and various payments made to her both before and after that date.

Coker testified that in 1935 he negotiated the accord and satisfaction with Mrs. Stark; that by its terms he agreed to pay or be responsible for the payment of $3,000 in full satisfaction of the indebtedness evidenced by the trust deed note; that $1,537.56 was paid on account of the $3,000, leaving a balance which he owed of $1,464.44; (the sum total of these amounts is $3,002); that the reconveyance was given in carrying out this agreement; that he was to give a note for $3,000. but that he delayed its execution until their delivery of the corporation note and deed of trust; that the last payment was made on November 10, 1937; that payments were suspended because of the suit to cancel the reconveyance, but that he still recognized the indebtedness. He produced a number of checks drawn by the corporation payable to Mrs. Stark, which he testified represented payments made on the $3,000. On some of these checks the words "To apply on Principal," and other words to the same effect, appear over the signature of Mrs. Stark.

Mrs. Stark testified that there had been no agreement to compromise the indebtedness; that her name signed to the reconveyance was a forgery; that she had neither signed nor acknowledged that instrument. She further testified that the $1,537.56 was paid to her as interest on the $12,000 note; that the words "To apply on Principal," and other words of similar import appearing over her signature on the backs of some of the checks, were not on the checks when she endorsed and cashed them.

It should be observed that Mrs. Stark appeared in the deed of trust in two capacities. She was trustee and also one of the beneficiaries.

[3, 4] We find nothing in the deed of trust empowering the trustee to compromise the indebtedness nor to execute a reconveyance except "upon payment of all sums secured hereby and (the) surrender to Trustee, for cancellation, of this Deed of Trust and the note secured hereby," and "upon receipt from beneficiary of a written request reciting the fact of such payment and surrender." We therefore conclude that Mrs. Stark, as trustee, had no authority to reconvey the security without payment of the obligation and a request from the beneficiaries. Of course, if Coker's evidence be accepted as true, Mrs. Stark might be estopped from disputing the validity of the reconveyance, and her consent to it in her capacity as beneficiary might be presumed. However, this question is not presented as she did not seek or recover any judgment against appellants. There is no basis for invoking an estoppel against plaintiff as he testified he was in total ignorance of any negotiations conducted by Mrs. Stark, received no part of the payments, and did not know of the reconveyance until some time after it had been recorded.

The next question is the authority of one co-tenant to enter into an accord and satisfaction and compromise a debt without the knowledge and consent of the other.

The right of one joint tenant to dispose of a specific portion of the co-tenancy property was considered in Swartzbaugh v. Sampson, 11 Cal.App.2d 451, 54 P.2d 73, 75, where it is said:

"The case of Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 361, discusses the rights of a grantee of one cotenant of a specific parcel of property. It is there said: 'The case has been argued as though the question presented was to be determined by the rules of the common law, and in that view we have examined it. For its determination, considered by the common law, it is immaterial whether the grantees took the land embraced in their grant as joint tenants or as tenants in common. During the lives of the tenants, the rules regulating the transfer of their interest are substantially the same, whether they hold in joint tenancy or in common. Neither a joint tenant nor a tenant in common can do any act to the prejudice of his cotenants in their estate. This is the settled law, and hence a conveyance by one tenant of a parcel of a general tract, owned by several, is inoperative to impair any of the rights of his cotenants. The conveyance must be subject to the ultimate determination of their rights, and upon obvious grounds. One tenant cannot appropriate to himself any particular parcel of the general tract; as, upon a partition, which may be claimed by the cotenants at any time, the parcel may be entirely set apart in severalty to a cotenant. He cannot defeat this possible result whilst retaining his interest, nor can he defeat it by the transfer of his interest. He cannot, of course, invest his grantee with rights greater than he possesses. The grantee must take, therefore, subject to the contingency of the loss of the premises, if, upon the partition of the general tract, they should not be allotted to the grantor. Subject to this contingency, the conveyance is valid, and passes the interest of the grantor. And, this we consider the result of the several cases cited by the counsel of the appellants. They go to the extent that the conveyance can have no legal effect to the prejudice of the cotenant, not that it is absolutely void, that it is ineffectual against the assertion of his interest in a suit for partition of the general tract, but is good against all others. Until such partition, the grantee will be entitled to the use and possession as cotenant, in the parcel conveyed, with the other owners. (Bartlet v. Harlow, 12 Mass. 348, 7 Am.Dec. 76; Varnum v. Abbot et al., 12 Mass. 474, 7 Am.Dec. 87; Nichols v. Smith, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 316.) * * *'

[5] "It is a general rule that the act of one joint tenant without express or implied authority from or the consent of his cotenant cannot bind or prejudicially affect the rights of the latter. Simpson v. Bergmann, 125 Cal.App. 1, 13 P.2d 531; Oberwise v. Poulos, 124 Cal.App. 247, 12 P.2d 156; Sumner v. Vinson, 211 Ky. 571, 277 S.W. 849; Lawrence v. Fielder, 186 Ky. 324, 216 S.W. 1068."

[6] While the rule last quoted is subject to certain exceptions, it must be held to cover the question we have before us here. Therefore, it must be held that Mrs. Stark had no power or authority growing out of the relation of the joint tenancy with her husband to compromise or reduce his portion of the joint debt without authority from him either express or implied. It follows that the accord and satisfaction between Mrs. Stark and Mr. Coker could not bind plaintiff.

[7] It is not disputed that all co-tenants or any number less than all may bring an action to protect or enforce the rights of such person or persons in the co-tenancy property. Sec. 384, Code Civ.Proc. This is especially true where, as here, the plaintiff joined his co-tenant as party defendant.

Appellants urge that the judgment of November 30, 1938, is a bar to this action as plaintiff cannot split his demand into separate actions.

Of course, it is generally true, as said in Re Estate of Bell, 153 Cal. 331, 95 P. 372, 376, that:

[8] "The general rule as to res adjudicata is that: 'Matters which have been judicially determined cannot be again drawn into controversy between the same parties.

[9] "'The judgment of a court having jurisdiction directly upon the point in controversy is, as a plea, a bar; and, as evidence, competent and conclusive as between the same parties and their privies; not only where the subject-matter is in all respects the same, but where the point comes incidentally in question in relation to a different matter.' Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 514; Green v. Thornton, 130 Cal. 482, 62 P. 750.

[10] "'An adjudication is final and conclusive not only as to the matter actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties might have litigated and have had decided as incident to, or essentially connected with, the subject-matter of the litigation, and every matter coming within the legitimate purview of the original action, both in respect to matters of claim and defense.' Harris v. Harris, 36 Barb., N. Y., 88; Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266."

We need not consider the question of the bar of the judgment as it affects Mrs. Stark as she neither sought nor recovered any judgment in this action. Its effect on the claim of Emil Stark is the only question open for argument.

It is admitted by all counsel that a trial court may withdraw from consideration and withhold from adjudication issues presented in the trial of a case; that such matters may be reserved for further consideration in another proceeding. 15 Cal. Jur. 150. It is rather clear from the findings and judgment in the first action that the trial court intended to withhold from adjudication and reserve for further consideration in another action the question of the effect of the reconveyance on the interest of plaintiff in the security described in the deed of trust. The only question at issue and decided in that action was the fact of the reconveyance. The debt was not an issue. It may be true that the finding and judgment in that case might be conclusive on this plaintiff of the fact that the reconveyance was executed by the trustee, for a fact once adjudicated in an action is binding on the parties and their privies in the same or any other action where the same issue is presented. Shannon v. General Petroleum Corp., 47 Cal.App. 2d 651, 118 P.2d 881, and cases there cited. If this rule be given effect here, the only effect of the first judgment is to establish as a fact that the reconveyance was actually executed by the trustee.

It is admitted by all counsel that the release of the security does not necessarily indicate a satisfaction of the debt for which it was given. It will appear from authorities hereafter cited that as the note involved here was a renewal note the original obligation was not extinguished and that the creditors mistook their remedy when they sought to have the reconveyance cancelled, that proceeding being unnecessary.

[11] In United Bank & Trust Co. v. Hunt, 1 Cal.2d 340, 34 P.2d 1001, 1004, it was held that: "As to matters, however, which might have been litigated and decided in a former suit as within the scope of the issues, but which were not actually or expressly in issue and adjudicated, only a presumption is indulged in that they were decided. This presumption is, however, a disputable one * * *."

[12] In Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Monson, 11 Cal.2d 621, 81 P.2d 944, 949, the following rule was announced: "Although it is a general rule that a judgment operates as an estoppel to the maintenance of a subsequent action as between those persons who were parties to the former action, not only as it may affect each issue that actually was raised in such action, but also as to every other issue which properly might have been litigated and determined therein, nevertheless, in each of many jurisdictions, exceptions to that rule have been announced, which include a situation wherein it has appeared that the questioned issue in the subsequent action was neither germane to nor essentially connected with the actual issues that were raised in the former action, even though, with propriety such issues might have been presented therein. 34 C.J. 818, 823. Nor is the rule applicable to rights, claims or demands, although growing out of the same subject matter, but which constitute separate or distinct causes of action, and which were not put in issue in the former action."

[13] Under the rules thus announced and in view of the reservation in the findings and judgment in the earlier case which presented the sole issue of cancellation of the reconveyance, we must conclude that the judgment in that case is not a bar to this action.

[14] Appellants urge that since the amendment to the complaint seeking judgment on the note without foreclosure was filed more than four years after the due date of the note, that cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. In support of this argument it is urged that the original action was to foreclose the deed of trust and that the amendment stated a new and distinct cause of action for a money judgment without foreclosure. We cannot agree with this contention. An action to foreclose a deed of trust has as its sole purpose the collection of the debt secured thereby. The action on the note had the same purpose. As the security had been lost and had become of no value it was permissible to sue on the note. As the purpose of the original and amended causes of action was the same no new cause of action was stated.

It follows that the portion of the judgment against the Southern California Home Building Company must be affirmed.

We must next consider the question of the judgment against Mr. and Mrs. Coker. The correctness of that portion of the judgment depends upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that the corporation was their alter ego. We have already summarized the evidence on that question and will not repeat it.

In order to measure the proper legal effect of this evidence we must bear in mind that the note of January 29, 1934, was given in renewal of a pre-existing indebtedness which had its origin in the note of July 10, 1924, payable to at least one of the payees named in the renewal note.

[15] The effect of a renewal note and mortgage was considered in Craig v. Dinwiddie, 77 Cal.App. 681, 247 P. 516, 519, where the court said: "The giving of the second note in this case, as we have stated, did not change the indebtedness. It only postponed the time when action might be had to foreclose the mortgage given to secure its payment, and in this case, so long as the debt remained alive, if necessary to protect the rights of the mortgagee, equity would set aside the release procured in the manner and under the conditions disclosed by the record and award foreclosure." It should be observed that the first mortgage and note involved in the above case was not executed to Amanda E. Dinwiddie, but by assignments passed to Amanda E. Dinwiddie and Nellie Dinwiddie as joint tenants and was satisfied of record after the plaintiff Craig had acquired his interest in the mortgaged property. The second note was given and the mortgage securing it (the renewal ran to Nellie Dinwiddie) was recorded after the satisfaction of the first and after Craig took title to the property. It would follow that because the first note in the instant case was made payable to Hilda A. Stark and the renewal note to Hilda A. and Emil Stark as joint tenants, the fact of its being a renewal of a prior indebtedness would not be changed.

Copp v. Millen, 11 Cal.2d 122, 77 P.2d 1093, 1095, was factually similar to Craig v. Dinwiddie, supra, and involved original secured notes which were renewed by another secured note. In deciding the case the Supreme Court quoted the following rule from Tolman v. Smith, 85 Cal. 280, 24 P. 743, where it was said:

" 'It is well settled that, in the absence of an agreement to that effect, the payment of one note by another is only conditional, and not absolute, payment. It extends the time for payment until the maturity of the new note, or, as it is said, "suspends" the remedy upon the old note, but does not extinguish it.' And, 85 Cal. 280, at page 289, 24 P. 743, 746: 'And so where, as in the case before us, one mortgage is substituted for another, equity will keep the first alive when the interests of justice require it.'

" 'By a doctrine closely akin to that of equitable subrogation, and it seems to us one founded in equal equity and reason, the old mortgage, though released, must be substituted for the new and treated as a continuing lien securing the continuing debt.' American Savings Bank & Trust Co. v. Helgesen, 67 Wash. 572, 122 P. 26, 27, Ann.Cas. 1913A, 390."

Much the same legal situation is found in White v. Stevenson, 144 Cal. 104, 77 P. 828, 831, involving a mortgage given in 1890, and which had been satisfied upon giving a renewal note and mortgage in 1895. The Supreme Court there said: "Upon the facts before the court it should have rendered a decree for the foreclosure of the mortgage of 1890, as prayed by the plaintiff. It was not necessary for him to obtain a decree directing a cancellation of the discharge which he had entered of record in 1895 before commencing an action for its foreclosure (Chester v. Hill, 66 Cal. 480, 6 P. 132); nor was it necessary that a formal direction for canceling the discharge should be entered by the court before rendering the decree of foreclosure."

As the note of January 29, 1934, was a renewal of a prior note or notes and was thus an extension of the due dates of the earlier debts, we must devote our attention principally to the corporate structure, business and management of the corporation between July 10, 1924, and June 1, 1928, the period covered by the original financial transactions between Mrs. Stark and her mother and the corporation. This is because this indebtedness was not extinguished by the renewal note. It should be borne in mind that the loan by Mrs. Stark of $8,000 on July 10, 1924, and by her mother of $4,000 on April 20, 1925, equalled the total of the unpaid indebtedness on January 29, 1934. The question of the corporation being the alter ego of Mr. and Mrs. Coker, to a large extent, must be determined from the facts disclosing their relation to the corporation during the period of the creation of the original indebtedness which was on and prior to June 1, 1928, more than on January 29, 1934, when the renewal note was executed.

[16] The facts that must be established to justify the conclusion that a corporation was the alter ego of one or more of its stockholders are set forth in Hollywood Cleaning & Pressing Co. v. Hollywood Laundry Service, Inc., 217 Cal. 124, 17 P.2d 709, 711, as follows:

"Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, the rule is well settled in this state that the mere fact one or two individuals or corporations own all of the stock of another corporation is not of itself sufficient to cause the courts to disregard the corporate entity of the last corporation and to treat it as the alter ego of the individual or corporation that owns its stock. In addition it must be shown that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality of such corporation and the owner or owners of its stock has ceased; and it must further appear that the observance of the fiction of separate existence would, under the circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice. Bad faith in one form or another must be shown before the court may disregard the fiction of separate corporate existence.

"In the leading case of Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 11, 200 P. 641, 642, the rule is stated as follows:

" 'The finding of the trial court that the company acquired the notes because the then holder of them was pressing plaintiff in his capacity as indorser for payment does not negative the separate entity of the company. In the absence of any dishonest motive or intention to accomplish a wrong, and as we have said, none was proven, we fail to discover any objection whatever to plaintiff directing the company to purchase the notes. If it be assumed that he caused their purchase for the reason that it was not then convenient for him to meet his obligations as indorser, there would still be wanting the elements to which we have referred, and the presence of which we hold is essential to justify treating plaintiff and the company as identical—as a unit. In order to cast aside the legal fiction of distinct corporate existence as distinguished from those who own its capital stock, it is not enough that it is so organized and controlled and its affairs so managed as to make it "merely an instrumentality, conduit or adjunct" of its stockholders, but it must further appear that they are the "business conduits and alter ego of one another," and that to recognize their separate entities would aid the consummation of a wrong. Divested of the essentials which we have enumerated, the mere circumstance that all the capital stock of a corporation is owned or controlled by one or more persons does not, and should not, destroy its separate existence; were it otherwise, few private corporations could preserve their distinct identity, which would mean the complete destruction of the primary object of their organization.'

"In Wood Estate Co. v. Chanslor, 209 Cal. 241, 245, 286 P. 1001, 1002, it is stated: 'The law is well settled that, in order to cast aside the legal fiction of a distinct corporate existence, it must appear that the corporation is the business conduit and alter ego of its stockholders, and that to recognize it as a separate entity would aid in the consummation of a wrong. In other words, not only must it appear that one man or two men own the stock and control the policies, but it must also be shown that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality of such corporation and such person or persons has ceased; and it must further appear from the facts that the observance of the fiction of separate existence would, under the circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice.' See, also, D. N. & E. Walter & Co. v. Zuckerman, 214 Cal. 418, 6 P.2d 251, 79 A.L.R. 329; Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 202 P. 673; Llewellyn Iron Works v. Abbott Kinney Co., 172 Cal. 210, 155 P. 986; Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 227 P. 723; Ellet v. Los Altos Country Club Properties, 88 Cal.App. 740, 264 P. 270." See, also, Davis v. Perry, 120 Cal.App. 670, 8 P.2d 514; In re Estate of Greenwald, 19 Cal.App. 2d 291, 65 P.2d 70.

[17] When measured by the foregoing rules the evidence is entirely insufficient to support the finding that the corporation was the alter ego of Mr. and Mrs. Coker. The first loan was not negotiated by Mr. Coker. At that time he was a minority stockholder in the corporation and Mrs. Coker was not then a stockholder and never owned more than one share of stock. Mr. Coker did not become a majority stockholder until June 3, 1927, when more than $12,000 had been loaned to the corporation by Mrs. Stark and her mother. All of the money loaned went into the treasury of the corporation and was used by it in its business and not in the business of Mr. and Mrs. Coker. Of course, Mr. Coker was president of the corporation and managed its business but it was the business of the corporation and not the personal business of any of its stockholders.

There is no intimation of fraud, wrong or unfair dealing in any of these original transactions. The only error made at that time was a mistake of judgment common to many investors both corporate and individual in not realizing that second incumbrances could not retain their value in a serious financial depression.

Nor can we see any fraud or wrong in the renewal transaction of January 29, 1934. Mrs. Stark held the secured note of the corporation with the value of the securities greatly depreciated, if they had any substantial value. She was given the note of the corporation which was just what she had held before. This note was secured by a deed of trust on assets of the corporation of questionable and undisclosed value in exchange for the former security which also was of questionable and undisclosed value. The transaction appears to be one of refinancing a bad but secured debt by another equally bad but secured debt which finally proved uncollectible and the security worthless.

Of course, the corporation had suspended its building and financing operations and dealing in securities by 1931. Thereafter it held no stockholders nor directors meetings and its principal place of business was in the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Coker. Its affairs were entirely in the hands of Mr. Coker, but they still remained the affairs of the corporation. Apparently they were confined to salvaging operations and an endeavor to save something from the wreck. That these operations were unsuccessful, that there was no salvage, and that the wreck subsequently became total does not establish fraud or wrong dealings in the prior transactions or even in the giving of the renewal note and deed of trust.

Plaintiff stresses testimony pointing to the bad reputation of Mr. Coker for honesty and integrity. There is evidence to the contrary from other witnesses. He also points to the evidence of one witness that three or four years prior to the trial (June 10, 1940), Coker stated to this witness, in effect, that Mr. and Mrs. Stark were not good business people and that he intended to beat them out of their money. Coker denied making such statement.

If we should assume that Coker was proved to be an unreliable witness and a man without business honesty or integrity still we could not change our conclusion on the question of the corporation being the alter ego of Mr. and Mrs. Coker.

[18] As we have observed, the only evidence even remotely bearing on the question of the alter ego comes from Coker. Of course, plaintiff is not bound by that evidence, but if he chooses to reject it he is faced with an entire lack of any evidence bearing on that question. The burden of proof is on him so he must accept any evidence the record contains on that question in order to make it even debatable.

Because Mr. Coker told a witness in 1936 or 1937 that he was going to beat Mr. and Mrs. Stark out of their money can have little bearing on the question of the corporation being his alter ego on and prior to January 29, 1934. Without other evidence to prove that fact his lack of character and his bad intentions in 1936 cannot establish it.

Plaintiff points to the fact that both Mr. and Mrs. Coker continued to draw salaries from the company after it was insolvent and without Mrs. Coker rendering adequate consideration for the salary she received; that these salaries tended to exhaust the already depleted assets of the corporation and to deprive plaintiff of the value of his security. If Mr. or Mrs. Coker wrongfully depleted the assets of the corporation, its creditors had their remedy available in a proper action against them. That issue is not presented in this action.

Other questions are argued in the briefs, but from the view we take of the case it is unnecessary to give them detailed consideration as they cannot affect the conclusions we have reached.

The portion of the judgment against Southern California Home Building Company, a corporation, is affirmed.

The portion of the judgment against John B. Coker and Regina W. Coker is reversed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 129

FOX CHICAGO REALTY CORPORATION, Limited, v. ZUKOR'S DRESSES, Inc.

Civ. 13219.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐102

An order sustaining demurrer to amended complaint without leave to amend is not appealable.

2. Damages ⇐85

Generally a condition or covenant of a contract is invalid if it stipulates payment of a penalty or stipulates damages for breach thereof. Civ.Code, § 1670.

3. Damages ⇐85

A provision of a lease which obligates lessee to pay specified sum upon default in performance of any covenant of lease is void. Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

4. Damages ⇐150

The fact of the extreme difficulty in fixing the actual damage is an indispensable allegation to collection of liquidated damages. Civ.Code, § 1671.

5. Damages ⇐150

A lessor could not recover liquidated damages for removal of improvements where there were no facts in pleading from which it could be inferred that the amount of damage suffered by virtue of the removal could not be readily proved. Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

6. Damages ⇐78(2)

A penalty need not be designated as such before it may be so classified so as to preclude recovery when provided for in a contract, since a condition in a contract providing for payment of money not earned is just as much a "penalty" as though it had been stipulated to penalize the promisor should he default in performance of his promise. Civ.Code, § 1670.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Penalty"

7. Damages ⇐80(3)

Where ten-year lease providing for monthly rental of $4,100 was modified six times with respect to the amount of rental and provided that upon default in payment of any installment or in performance of any other obligation lessee should be required to pay the entire unpaid portion of $4,100 for each month for which lessee had paid a lesser amount, such provision which in effect required lessee to pay $159,000 if he failed to perform some collateral covenant was a "penalty" which was not enforceable. Civ.Code, § 1670.

8. Damages ⇐78(1)

A provision in a contract exacting the payment of moneys for violation of a collateral agreement is opposed to "public policy" and is not bereft of its vice because it may appear in the form of a condition.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

9. Damages ⇐80(3)

Where for six successive periods ten-year lease was modified by unambiguous writings whereby rentals were fixed at precise sums which were paid, lessor could not recover the sum of $159,000 on theory that it was merely a "debt" payable upon happening of a certain event under provision which required lessee to pay the entire unpaid portion of the original rental upon default in payment of any installment or performance of any other obligation. Civ.Code, § 1670.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Debt".

10. Damages ⇐80(1)

Any provision by which money or property is to be forfeited without regard to the actual damage suffered calls for a "penalty" and is therefore void. Civ.Code, § 1670.

11. Pleading ⇐310

Where final modification agreement was attached as an exhibit to second amended complaint in lessor's action to recover damages under a lease, and lessor declined to attach such modification agreement as an exhibit to the amendment to the second amended complaint, it was proper for trial court as well as for appellate court to construe the allegations of the pleadings by referring to the exhibit attached to the former pleading.

12. Landlord and tenant ⇐49(2)

A lessor suing for damages under lease could not contend that modification agreement was invalid because it was not supported by consideration where lessor did not plead want of consideration for modification.

13. Contracts ⇐78

Any arrangement mutually agreeable to both parties to a valid contract which has been wholly executed to their mutual satisfaction leaves no question of consideration for adjudication.

14. Landlord and tenant ⇐33

Where modifications of lease were in writing, a good and sufficient consideration was presumed to exist. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 39; Civ.Code, §§ 1614, 1615.

15. Pleading ⇐129(2)

Where complaint in lessor's action for damages under lease pleaded a consideration for modification of lease, in absence of a traversal of such declaration, the pleading was final as to question of consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Action by the Fox Chicago Realty Corporation, Limited, against Zukor's Dresses, Inc., to recover damages resulting from removal of certain portions of a store and injuries to other portions and for rent due. From an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend and from a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Appeal from order dismissed and judgment affirmed.

Birger Tinglof and Walter H. Hewicker, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Mitchell, Silberberg, Roth & Knupp and Leonard A. Kaufman, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

[1] Plaintiff appeals from an unfavorable judgment entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the second amended complaint without leave to amend. It also attempted to appeal from the order sustaining the demurrer but, since such an order is not appealable, that part of the appeal is dismissed.

In 1930 plaintiff executed a ten-year lease in favor of defendant upon certain premises at a monthly rental of $4,166. On May 5, 1932, an unconditional agreement was executed reducing the monthly rental to $4,100. We shall hereafter refer to the latter figure as the agreed rental under the lease. Thereafter the lease suffered six written modifications, by each of which the rent was fixed at a less sum than that at first specified. In each of the six writings by which the lease was successively modified the following language was used:

"4. In the event of default in the payment of any installment of rent, or in the performance of any other obligation to be performed by the Lessee under said original lease or any amendment (including this amendment) under said lease, and such default in payment or performance shall continue for a period of ten days after written notice to the Lessee (time being of the essence) * * * then the Lessee shall be obligated to pay, and the Lessor shall be entitled to collect, the entire unpaid portion of $4100.00 for each and every month for which the Lessee shall hereafter pay, or has heretofore paid, a lesser amount."

The last amendment of the lease occurred June 12, 1937, for the period ending June 14, 1942, and provided for a rental of $3,000 per month with an option granted to defendant to surrender the lease upon a four months' written notice and the payment of an additional $15,000. The lease was terminated pursuant to that provision as of June 14, 1940. The lease provided that the lessee might install certain fixtures which were to become the property of the lessor upon installation but that the lessee might remove such fixtures so installed provided they be replaced at the lessee's expense upon ten days' written notice.

In the first draft of the complaint demand was made for $15,000 damages for the removal of certain improvements as being a breach of the lease. In the first amended complaint demand was made for $19,166.66 for such damages. The second amended complaint contained two counts: count 1 for damages, in the amount of $18,000, resulting from the removal of certain portions of the store and from injuries to other portions; count 2, for the same damages demanded in the first count and in addition thereto a demand for the sum of $193,906.41, as rentals claimed to be due under the lease payable in the event of a breach of any of its covenants. The demurrer having been overruled as to the first count and sustained as to the second, plaintiff thereupon filed its "Amendment to the Second Amended Complaint" in which it set forth by adoption the allegations and demand for $15,000 for the removal of certain improvements and for divers other injuries to the property and in addition thereto demanded the further sum of $159,450 as the difference between the rentals provided by the lease and the amounts actually paid during the several successive periods designated by the several modifications of the lease.

According to the complaint the $4,100 monthly rental provided by the lease was reduced for the successive periods, defined by the six amendments, to the following sums: for the first period to $2,500; for the second period to $2,000; for the third period to $2,000; for the fourth period to $2,500; for the fifth period to $2,250; for the sixth period to $3,000 "commencing September 15, 1937, and ending midnight September 14, 1942, upon condition and only upon condition that defendant should perform each and every term and provision of the above mentioned lease on its part to be performed throughout the entire period of said lease; that * * * in the event of default in the payment of any installment of rent or in the performance of any other obligation to be performed by the Lessee under said Lease or any amendment thereto, including said agreement, and such default in payment or performance should continue for a period of ten (10) days after written notice to the Lessee, then and in that event the Lessee should be obligated to pay * * * the entire unpaid portion of $4100, the minimum guaranteed rental, as provided for by the terms of said lease for the entire term thereof. * * * That defendant defaulted in the performance of the obligations of the lease * * * in that defendant without the consent of plaintiff * * * removed from the exterior of the premises portions of the store front and removed from the interior of the store room certain portions of the store building * * * that plaintiff served upon defendant written notice advising defendant of its default in the performance of obligations to be performed by defendant * * * in that defendant was removing from the exterior of the demised premises portions of the store front in violation of the terms and conditions of said lease * * *; that defendant did not within ten days after receiving written notice from plaintiff or at all, cure said default or replace any of the portions of the interior * * * within ten days after the service upon defendant of the above mentioned notice of default or at all; that by reason thereof, plaintiff is entitled to receive and collect from defendant the difference between the rentals actually received by plaintiff from defendant from the beginning of defendant's occupancy of the demised premises under said lease to the termination thereof and the amount provided to be paid by defendant to plaintiff as rental by the terms of said lease for said period, or the sum of $159,450."

It is not denied that each of the written modifications of the lease contained the identical provision for the payment of the "entire unpaid portion of $4,100 for each and every month" in the event of default of any obligation; or that the terms of the lease as amended were fulfilled in every respect until the removal of certain fixtures just prior to defendant's removal from the premises. We are to determine whether such provision for the collection of the unpaid portion of monthly rentals is enforcible.

[2, 3] It is the general rule that a condition or covenant of a contract is invalid if it stipulated payment of a penalty or stipulated damages for the breach thereof. Civ.Code, sec. 1670. Likewise is void that provision of a lease which obligates the lessee to pay a specified sum upon the default of the lessee in the performance of any of its covenants. Jack v. Sinsheimer, 125 Cal. 563, 566, 58 P. 130; Green v.

Frahm, 176 Cal. 259, 262, 168 P. 114. The only circumstance under which the provision for the payment of liquidated damages may be enforced is "when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage." Civ.Code, sec. 1671. Because the covenant for the payment of the differential was void a valid cause of action cannot be predicated thereon.

[4, 5] Moreover, the fact of the extreme difficulty in fixing the actual damage is an indispensable allegation to the collection of liquidated damages. Since this is so, the failure of plaintiff to plead facts that would have brought its case within the scope of section 1671 is fatal to the pleading. Long Beach City School Dist. v. Dodge, 135 Cal. 401, 405, 67 P. 499. There are no facts in the amended pleading from which we could infer that the amount of damage suffered by plaintiff by virtue of the removal of the improvements could not readily be proved. On the contrary, the installation of such fixtures as those described in the pleading are of such frequent occurrence that competent experts can calculate the cost thereof with practical accuracy. Such was in fact conceded by plaintiff when it alleged the facts constituting the damages to the property and thereupon demanded the sum of $15,000 as set forth in the first count.

[6-8] There is nothing in item 4 of the sixth modification of the lease quoted above that might remove it from the category of a penalty. It is not necessary that a penalty be designated as such in specific terms before it may be so classified. A condition in a contract providing for the payment of money not earned is just as much a penalty as though it had been stipulated to penalize the promissor should he default in the performance of his promise. Ebbert v. Mercantile Trust Co., 213 Cal. 496, 498, 2 P.2d 776. If the lease had contained a provision that the breach of any condition thereof should obligate him to pay to the lessor the sum of $159,000, there would be no question of its being properly classified as a penalty. But cloaked in the innocent verbiage of a condition requiring the lessee to pay $159,000 in the event he should fail to perform some covenant which is collateral to the main covenant, it is equally a penalty. Williston on Contracts, sec. 793. A provision in a contract exacting the payment of moneys for the violation of a collateral agreement is opposed to public policy and is not bereft of its vice because it may appear in the form of a condition. Re-statement of Contracts, sec. 302.

[9, 10] Plaintiff argues that the $159,000 is merely a debt payable upon the happening of a certain event. But this cannot be so. There was no debt. For six successive periods the lease was modified by writings of unambiguous terms whereby the rentals were fixed at precise sums and those amounts were in all instances paid. The very language and nature of the modifying contract and the circumstances under which it was executed impress upon item 4 thereof the character of a provision for a penalty. Williston on Contracts, sec. 782. Where the language of a condition thus appears upon a fair construction to be a penalty, the obligation is thereby invalidated. Any provision by which money or property is to be forfeited without regard to the actual damage suffered calls for a penalty and is therefore void. Ebbert v. Mercantile Trust Co., supra.

Plaintiff relies upon Shady v. Mercantile Arcade Realty Co., 206 Cal. 363, 274 P. 340, in support of its contention that the covenant to pay the differential between the rents collected and the rents promised by the lease is not a penalty. The only similarity we find between the two cases is that both involve leases and the parties effected a rent reduction. In the Shady lease the question of a penalty was not involved. No forfeiture was asked. After Shady had procured a reduction of rent from $900 to $700 monthly for eight months and at $1,000 for the succeeding 16 months, he held the premises during a part of the period of reduced rentals, then withdrew and repudiated the lease in toto and sued to cancel the lease. Arcade's demand was for the lease rental payable before the re-spread. No forfeiture was asked. Shady had not performed his modification agreement.

[11] In pleading what it conceives to be the ultimate fact embodied in the fourth item of the final modification agreement, plaintiff made it appear that the obligation sought to be enforced arose out of a conditional promise on the part of plaintiff to relinquish an existing right, to-wit the $4,100 monthly rental, on condition that defendant perform every obligation imposed by the lease and the amendments. It is not necessary for us to determine whether such pleading is sufficient for the reason that the final modification agreement is attached as an exhibit to the second amended complaint from which we have taken in exact words the fourth paragraph. In declining to attach it as an exhibit to the pleading now before us (Amendment to Second Amended Complaint) plaintiff has not obviated the effect of the exact language of the writing. Under such circumstances it was proper for the trial court, as it is for this court, to construe the allegations of the pleading before us by referring to the exhibit attached to the former pleading. Williamson v. Joyce, 137 Cal. 151, 69 P. 980; Johnson v. Nolan, 105 Cal.App. 293, 288 P. 78; Wennerholm v. Standford University School of Medicine,[1] — Cal.App.2d —, 113 P.2d 736; Ventura, etc., Ry. Co. v. Hartman, 116 Cal. 260, 48 P. 65; Alphonzo E. Bell Corp. v. Bell View Oil Syndicate, 46 Cal.App.2d 684, 116 P.2d 786.

[12, 13] The contention that the modification agreement is invalid because it was not supported by a consideration cannot be maintained. Plaintiff did not plead want of consideration for the modification which fact should be conclusive upon that issue. But if there had been no consideration for the amendments to the lease, then the modification in each instance would have been a nullity and we would then be confronted with plaintiff's acceptance of reduced rentals and a waiver of the excess. Any arrangement mutually agreeable to both parties to a valid contract which has been wholly executed to their mutual satisfaction leaves no question of consideration for adjudication.

[14, 15] But since the modifications were in writing, a good and sufficient consideration is presumed to exist. Code Civ. Proc., sec. 1963 subd. 39; Civ.Code, secs. 1614, 1615; Flint v. Giguiere, 50 Cal.App. 314, 318, 195 P. 85. The complaint having thus pleaded a consideration, we are in no position to assume the contrary; but in the absence of a traversal of such declaration the pleading is final as to that question. Long Beach City School District v. Dodge, supra. But if we could consider the present action upon no basis other than a demand for the unpaid rentals, the presence of the declarations with reference to the modifications would, themselves, serve as a complete defense to the demand. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Sierra, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 690, 698, 112 P. 274, Ann.Cas.1912A, 729.

Judgment affirmed.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

1 Hearing in Supreme Court granted.

19 Cal.2d 707

RICHARDSON v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

L. A. 18083.

Supreme Court of California.

March 3, 1942.

1. Attorney and client ⇐53(2)

Evidence that attorney prepared and presented to court for approval false accounts in connection with guardianship and estate matters, solicited employment from heirs of deceased person without disclosing attorney's existing and former connection with the estate of decedent, filed a false petition and affidavit to determine heirship in the estate in which he had become beneficially interested, and represented adverse interests in litigation arising out of such guardianship and estate matters, warranted attorney's disbarment.

2. Attorney and client ⇐46

That surety company on administrator's bond, through the company's attorney upon disclosure of the full facts interested itself in disciplinary proceeding against attorney who sued the surety was not fatal to the proceeding where the two proceedings were distinguishable in that attorney's own testimony and admissions with inferences deducible therefrom were sufficient to warrant his discipline, and no witness appearing in disciplinary proceeding was a defendant in pending civil litigation, and persons who appeared in the proceeding were persons who would benefit by attorney's successful prosecution of civil litigation.

In Bank.

Proceeding by F. L. Richardson to review a recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California that the petitioner should be disbarred from the practice of law.

Petitioner disbarred.

J. A. Donnelley, of San Diego, for petitioner.

W. Eugene Craven, of Merced, and A. W. Brouillet, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a proceeding to review a recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that petitioner be disbarred from the practice of the law.

Petitioner was admitted to practice in this state in 1913 after having practiced since 1901 in Kansas. On December 23, 1940, a notice, containing four counts, was issued by the respondent State Bar directing petitioner to show cause why he should not be disciplined for certain acts allegedly involving moral turpitude, dishonesty and violation of his oath and duties as an attorney. A local administrative committee conducted several hearings, made findings adverse to petitioner and recommended discipline, leaving the extent thereof for the determination of the Board of Governors. The board thereafter adopted the committee's findings and has recommended that petitioner be disbarred.

The petitioner, as charged, was found to have prepared and presented to a court for approval false and fraudulent accounts in connection with a guardianship and estate matter; to have solicited employment from the heirs of the deceased person without disclosing to them his existing and former connection with the estate of the decedent; to have filed a false petition and affidavit to determine heirship in the estate in which he had become beneficially interested; and to have represented adverse interests in litigation arising out of said guardianship and estate matters.

The evidence discloses that from 1919 to 1922 petitioner acted as attorney of record for one Chandler who was guardian of the estate of Anna Baxter, an incompetent. In the latter year the incompetent died and from then until 1935 petitioner continued to act as the attorney for Chandler who, in the meantime, had been appointed administrator of the estate of the deceased incompetent. In 1935 the administrator died and petitioner had himself appointed administrator of the deceased incompetent's estate and had one Smith appointed administrator of Chandler's estate. Petitioner's conduct as attorney throughout this entire period resulted in the charges here under review.

In the course of the guardianship proceeding petitioner, as attorney, had prepared and filed on behalf of Chandler, the guardian, three accounts, an inventory and a supplemental inventory. Each account was heard in court and approved. In the interim between the second and final accounts certain additional assets consisting of real property appraised at $60,000 and certificates of deposit amounting to $23,122.25 were received by the guardian.

These were scheduled by the guardian in the supplemental inventory. No mention of these certificates of deposit was made in the final account, however, except that about $8,000 received therefrom were accounted for without designating the source. The certificates of deposit thus omitted from the final account of the guardian amounted to approximately $15,000. Petitioner testified in this proceeding that when he prepared and filed the final account in the guardianship proceeding, the incompetent having died in the interim, he knew that these assets were not included but by way of explanation urged that the final account was only intended to cover cash in the estate and not other assets. Aside from the unusualness of such a final account, it must be noted that the order settling the account, also prepared by petitioner, declared that the account contained "a true and correct statement of all funds and property in [the guardian's] hands belonging to said estate. * * *" At about this same time (June, 1922), the petitioner also prepared and had Chandler sign, as administrator of the deceased incompetent's estate, a receipt to himself (Chandler) as former guardian acknowledging receipt of $31,295.25 "in money, property and securities belonging to said estate, the same being all of the property of said estate as shown by the Final Account and Report of said Guardian herein."

In this disciplinary proceeding petitioner testified that the $31,295.25 so acknowledged in the receipt represented "all cash" in Chandler's hands first as guardian, and then as administrator. Yet, when petitioner later in the same month (June, 1922) as attorney for Chandler, prepared and filed an inventory in the deceased incompetent's estate, there was scheduled only $14,672 as cash on hand—some $16,623.25 less than the amount actually on hand. When questioned about this cash discrepancy petitioner admitted that he knew when he prepared the inventory in the estate for Chandler as administrator that there was a cash shortage of between $15,000 and $17,000 but by way of explanation testified that "I could only inventory what he would give me. It didn't make any difference because he had it, the other inventory showed he had it." Petitioner also admitted that he had never called the probate court's attention to the fact that the inventory there filed did not list all the cash he believed should be in the estate. As attempted justification for his silence, he further testified, "I would have been accused of betraying the confidence of my client if I had" disclosed the shortage. Thus, in an admitted effort to conceal the defalcations of Chandler, petitioner saw no vice in deliberately misleading the probate court to the detriment of the heirs.

In 1925, petitioner prepared and filed on behalf of Chandler a final account and petition for distribution of the estate which likewise was deficient in the amount above stated. As to the final account so prepared and filed by him, petitioner testified in this proceeding that "of course I knew it wasn't correct. * * * I knew there was a discrepancy there of about seventeen thousand dollars." He also admitted that he did not call the discrepancy to anyone's attention. Knowing of its falsity, petitioner may not justify the preparation of such an account upon the ground "That is all Chandler would give me. That is all the kind of an account he would make. I didn't have any position in the matter." Such an explanation is indicative of a lack of understanding of his duties and obligations as an attorney and officer of the court. Petitioner thereafter sought and procured a reduction of the administrator's bond from $30,000 to $2,000 upon the representation that all the estate funds had been disbursed except the sum of $1,278.03—knowing at the time that some $17,000 had not been accounted for by Chandler.

Ten years then elapsed with very little activity occurring in the estate. In 1935, however, Chandler, the administrator, died and petitioner had himself appointed administrator in 1937. In July, 1937, after his appointment, petitioner wrote two letters to a Mrs. Marshall, one of the persons entitled to inherit a portion of the Baxter estate of which petitioner was then administrator, in which he informed her that there was an estate in which she might have an interest and that he possibly might get her some money therefrom. He enclosed in the second letter a form of fifty percent contingent fee contract. In these letters petitioner did not disclose the estate involved nor that he had been appointed administrator thereof. By his own admission petitioner at the time knew that Mrs. Marshall had an interest in the Baxter estate. This interest arose by reason of Mrs. Marshall being a legatee of one Thomas Hale, deceased, a brother and heir at law of the decedent Baxter. It was this solicitation of Mrs. Marshall, testified to by her on deposition and substantially admitted by petitioner here, that constitutes the basis of the second charge against petitioner. While petitioner denies that he "solicited" employment by Mrs. Marshall the facts speak for themselves.

At the time petitioner had so solicited employment from Mrs. Marshall, he already had obtained a fifty percent contingent fee contract with one J. W. Hale, another heir of the Baxter estate, who also was a brother of said decedent. As attorney for J. W. Hale petitioner on September 7, 1937, filed in the Baxter estate a petition to determine heirship. In the petition and supporting affidavit prepared by petitioner it was alleged that Thomas Hale, one of the heirs of Anna Baxter, and through whom Mrs. Marshall claimed as legatee, had died intestate and that his only surviving heir was J. W. Hale, petitioner's client and that said client was therefore entitled to all of the Baxter estate. At the time petitioner so prepared these documents he knew that Thomas Hale had died testate and that one Henning had been appointed administrator of his estate with the will annexed, Mrs. Marshall, as indicated above, being one of his legatees. As a result of this petition being prepared and filed by petitioner, Joseph Hale was decreed to be the sole heir of the decedent Baxter and entitled to her entire estate. At a later date this order or decree was set aside after Attorney Henning had discovered the true state of affairs. It is the preparation and filing of this false petition and supporting affidavit to determine heirship that underlies the third charge here made against petitioner. In the light of his entire conduct in the handling of the Baxter guardianship and estate proceedings and of his earlier preparation and filing of false inventories and accounts therein we cannot accept petitioner's explanation that the petition and affidavit in the heirship proceeding inadvertently employed the word "intestate" rather than "testate." The whole structure points to the knowing and deliberate false use of the word intestate in order to benefit petitioner's client with whom he had a contingent fee contract, to the wrongful exclusion of other heirs.

The fourth charge against petitioner involves a further development of the facts discussed in connection with the first count. As above stated, Chandler the defaulting administrator of the Baxter estate had died in 1935 and petitioner thereafter had himself appointed administrator of that estate and had Smith appointed administrator of Chandler's estate. While serving as administrator of the Baxter estate petitioner also admittedly represented and acted as attorney for Smith as administrator of the Chandler estate. While serving in these dual and clearly adverse capacities petitioner in 1940 prepared a claim for $17,237.08 (representing the shortage in Chandler's account as administrator of the Baxter estate), which claim was presented to and allowed by Smith as administrator of the Chandler estate. Smith was entirely unfamiliar with the estate and did as directed by petitioner. The claim was later allowed against the estate by the probate court and petitioner then brought an action, as administrator of the Baxter estate, against the surety an Chandler's bond to recover the amount of the claim. The whole purpose of petitioner was to collect the shortage from the surety company that had written the administrator's bond for Chandler. While admittedly aware of the Chandler defalcation since 1922 petitioner neither as attorney nor as administrator made any disclosure of or attempt to collect such shortage until 1940 and then only after he had obtained a fifty percent contingent fee contract with one of the heirs of the Baxter estate.

[1, 2] The evidence against petitioner warrants his disbarment. His effort to explain away damaging portions thereof will not stand the test of scrutiny. To accept such explanation would require a disregard of realities. The fact that the bonding company, through its attorney, upon disclosure of the full facts may have interested itself in this disciplinary proceeding is not fatal and the pendency of the action against that company does not bring this proceeding within the holding in Neblett v. State Bar, 17 Cal.2d 77, 109 P.2d 340, as urged by petitioner. The two proceedings are distinguishable. Here, petitioner's own testimony and admissions, with the inferences deducible therefrom, are alone sufficient to warrant his discipline. No witness here appearing is a defendant in the pending civil litigation and the witnesses who did appear in this proceeding are persons who would benefit by petitioner's successful prosecution of the civil litigation. The record discloses a continuous course of misrepresentation and misconduct on the part of petitioner extending over a period in excess of fifteen years. His repeated and deliberate misrepresentation of facts to the court, his failure to disclose facts to the heirs of the Baxter estate, his misuse of information contrary to their interests and his representation of conflicting and adverse interests adequately warrant the recommended punishment.

It is therefore ordered that petitioner be disbarred from the practice of the law effective thirty days from the filing of this opinion.

19 Cal.2d 807

BERNHARD v. BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N.

L. A. 18057.

Supreme Court of California.

March 6, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 3, 1942.

1. Courts ⇐200½

A probate court had jurisdiction to determine, as an incident to final account of executor, title to bank account claimed by executor in his own right adversely to the estate.

2. Judgment ⇐540, 725(1)

The doctrine of "res judicata" precludes parties or their privies from relitigating a cause of action that has been finally determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, and under such doctrine any issue necessarily decided in prior litigation is conclusively determined as to the parties or their privies if it is involved in a subsequent lawsuit on a different cause of action.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

3. Judgment ⇐540

The rule of "res judicata" is based upon sound public policy of limiting litigation by preventing a party who has had one fair trial on an issue from again drawing it into controversy.

4. Constitutional law ⇐309(1)

The doctrine of "res judicata" must conform to mandate of due process of law that no person be deprived of personal or property rights by a judgment without notice and an opportunity to be heard.

5. Judgment ⇐678(2)

A "privy", within general rule that the plea of "res judicata" is available only when there is privity and mutuality of estoppel, is one who, after rendition of a judgment, has acquired an interest in the subject matter affected by the judgment through one of the parties, as by inheritance, succession, or purchase.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Privy".

6. Judgment ⇐625

An "estoppel" is "mutual", within general rule that the plea of "res judicata" is available only when there is privity and mutuality of estoppel, if the one taking advantage of the earlier adjudication would have been bound by it, had it gone against it.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mutual Estoppel".

7. Judgment ⇐625, 627

Generally, the plea of "res judicata" is available only when there is privity and mutuality of estoppel, but an exception to such rule exists where liability of a defendant asserting plea of res judicata is dependent upon liability of one who was exonerated in an earlier suit brought by same plaintiff upon same facts.

8. Judgment ⇐634

In determining validity of a plea of "res judicata", three questions are pertinent, namely, was the issue decided in the prior adjudication identical with the one presented in the present action, was there a final judgment on the merits, was the party against whom the plea is asserted a party or in privity with a party to the prior adjudication?

9. Executors and administrators ⇐513(9)

A judgment settling an executor's account, objected to by heirs at law, which determined that decedent had made a gift of bank deposit to executor and discharged the executor, was "res judicata" on issue concerning the gift, in subsequent proceeding brought by one of the heirs at law, as administratrix with the will annexed, against bank's successor to recover amount of the deposit on ground that deposit was wrongfully paid to executor, notwithstanding heirs' formal change of capacity, and that there was no "privity" or "mutuality of estoppel" between executor and bank's successor. Probate Code, § 931.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mutuality of Estoppel" and "Privity".

10. Judgment ⇐670

Where a party, though appearing in two suits in different capacities, is in fact litigating the same right, the judgment in one "estops" him in the other.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Myron Westover, Judge.

Action by Helen Bernhard, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Clara Sather, deceased, against the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association, to recover a bank deposit. From a judgment for defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion, see, Cal.App., 114 P.2d 661.

Joseph Brenner, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Louis Ferrari, of San Francisco, and Edmund Nelson and G. L. Berrey, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

In June, 1933, Mrs. Clara Sather, an elderly woman, made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Charles O. Cook in San Dimas, California. Because of her failing health, she authorized Mr. Cook and Dr. Joseph Zeiler to make drafts jointly against her commercial account in the Security First National Bank of Los Angeles. On August 24, 1933, Mr. Cook opened a commercial account at the First National Bank of San Dimas in the name of "Clara Sather by Charles O. Cook." No authorization for this account was ever given to the bank by Mrs. Sather. Thereafter, a number of checks drawn by Cook and Zeiler on Mrs. Sather's commercial account in Los Angeles were deposited in the San Dimas account and checks were drawn upon that account signed "Clara Sather by Charles O. Cook" to meet various expenses of Mrs. Sather.

On October 26, 1933, a teller from the Los Angeles Bank called on Mrs. Sather at her request to assist in transferring her money from the Los Angeles Bank to the San Dimas Bank. In the presence of this teller, the cashier of the San Dimas Bank, Mr. Cook, and her physician, Mrs. Sather signed by mark an authorization directing the Security First National Bank of Los Angeles to transfer the balance of her savings account in the amount of $4,155.68 to the First National Bank of San Dimas. She also signed an order for this amount on the Security First National Bank of San Dimas "for credit to the account of Mrs. Clara Sather." The order was credited by the San Dimas Bank to the account of "Clara Sather by Charles O. Cook." Cook withdrew the entire balance from that account and opened a new account in the same bank in the name of himself and his wife. He subsequently withdrew the funds from this last mentioned account and deposited them in a Los Angeles Bank in the names of himself and his wife.

Mrs. Sather died in November, 1933. Cook qualified as executor of the estate and proceeded with its administration. After a lapse of several years he filed an account at the instance of the probate court accompanied by his resignation. The account made no mention of the money transferred by Mrs. Sather to the San Dimas Bank; and Helen Bernhard, Beaulah Bernhard, Hester Burton, and Iva LeDoux, beneficiaries under Mrs. Sather's will, filed objections to the account for this reason. After a hearing on the objections the court settled the account, and as part of its order declared that the decedent during her lifetime had made a gift to Charles O. Cook of the amount of the deposit in question.

[1] After Cook's discharge, Helen Bernhard was appointed administratrix with the will annexed. She instituted this action against defendant, the Bank of America, successor to the San Dimas Bank, seeking to recover the deposit on the ground that the bank was indebted to the estate for this amount because Mrs. Sather never authorized its withdrawal. In addition to a general denial, defendant pleaded two affirmative defenses: (1) That the money on deposit was paid out to Charles O. Cook with the consent of Mrs. Sather and (2) that this fact is res judicata by virtue of the finding of the probate court in the proceeding to settle Cook's account that Mrs. Sather made a gift of the money in question to Charles O. Cook and "owned no sums of money whatsoever" at the time of her death. Plaintiff demurred to both these defenses, and objected to the introduction in evidence of the record of the earlier proceeding to support the plea of res judicata. She also contended that the probate court had no jurisdiction to pass upon Cook's ownership of the money because the executor resigned before the filing of the objections. This last contention was answered before judgment was entered, by the decision of this court in Waterland v. Superior Court, 15 Cal.2d 34, 98 P.2d 211, holding that the probate court has jurisdiction in such a situation. The trial court overruled the demurrers and objection to the evidence, and gave judgment for defendant on the ground that Cook's ownership of the money was conclusively established by the finding of the probate court. Plaintiff has appealed, denying that the doctrine of res judicata is applicable to the instant case or that there was a valid gift of the money to Cook by Mrs. Sather.

Plaintiff contends that the doctrine of res judicata does not apply because the defendant who is asserting the plea was not a party to the previous action nor in privity with a party to that action and because there is no mutuality of estoppel.

[2-4] The doctrine of res judicata precludes parties or their privies from relitigating a cause of action that has been finally determined by a court of competent jurisdiction. Any issue necessarily decided in such litigation is conclusively determined as to the parties or their privies if it is involved in a subsequent lawsuit on a different cause of action. See cases cited in 2 Freeman, Judgments, 5th Ed., sec. 627; 2 Black, Judgments, 2d Ed., sec. 504; 34 C.J. 742 et seq.; 15 Cal.Jur. 97. The rule is based upon the sound public policy of limiting litigation by preventing a party who has had one fair trial on an issue from again drawing it into controversy. See cases cited in 38 Yale L.J. 299; 2 Freeman, Judgments, 5th Ed., sec. 626; 15 Cal.Jur. 98. The doctrine also serves to protect persons from being twice vexed for the same cause. Ibid. It must, however, conform to the mandate of due process of law that no person be deprived of personal or property rights by a judgment without notice and an opportunity to be heard. Coca Cola Co. v. Pepsi-Cola Co., 6 W.W.Harr. 124, 36 Del. 124, 172 A. 260. See cases cited in 24 Am. and Eng.Encyc., 2d ed., 731; 15 Cinn.L.Rev. 349, 351; 82 Pa.L.Rev. 871, 872.

[5,6] Many courts have stated the facile formula that the plea of res judicata is available only when there is privity and mutuality of estoppel. See cases cited in 2 Black, Judgments, 2d Ed., secs. 534, 548, 549; 1 Freeman, Judgments, 5th Ed., secs. 407, 428; 35 Yale L.J. 607, 608; 34 C.J. 973, 988. Under the requirement of privity, only parties to the former judgment or their privies may take advantage of or be bound by it. Ibid. A party in this connection is one who is "directly interested in the subject matter, and had a right to make defense, or to control the proceeding, and to appeal from the judgment." 1 Greenleaf, Evidence, 15th Ed., sec. 523. See cases cited in 2 Black, Judgments, 2d Ed., sec. 534; 15 R.C.L. 1009; 9 Va.L.Reg. (N.S.) 241, 242; 15 Cal.Jur. 190; 34 C.J. 992. A privy is one who, after rendition of the judgment, has acquired an interest in the subject matter affected by the judgment through or under one of the parties, as by inheritance, succession, or purchase. See cases cited in 2 Black, Judgments, 2d Ed., sec. 549; 35 Yale L.J. 607, 608; 34 C.J. 973, 1010, 1012; 15 R.C.L. 1016. The estoppel is mutual if the one taking advantage of the earlier adjudication would have been bound by it, had it gone against him. See cases cited in 2 Black, Judgments, 2d Ed., sec. 534, 548; 1 Freeman, Judgments, 5th Ed., sec. 428; 35 Yale L.J. 607, 608; 34 C.J. 988; 15 R.C.L. 956.

[7] The criteria for determining who may assert a plea of res judicata differ fundamentally from the criteria for determining against whom a plea of res judicata may be asserted. The requirements of due process of law forbid the assertion of a plea of res judicata against a party unless he was bound by the earlier litigation in which the matter was decided. Coca Cola Co. v. Pepsi-Cola Co., supra. See cases cited in 24 Am. & Eng.Encyc., 2d Ed., 731; 15 Cinn.L.Rev. 349, 351; 82 Pa.L.Rev. 871, 872. He is bound by that litigation only if he has been a party thereto or in privity with a party thereto. Ibid. There is no compelling reason, however, for requiring that the party asserting the plea of res judicata must have been a party, or in privity with a party, to the earlier litigation.

No satisfactory rationalization has been advanced for the requirement of mutuality. Just why a party who was not bound by a previous action should be precluded from asserting it as res judicata against a party who was bound by it is difficult to comprehend. See 7 Bentham's Works, Bowring's Ed., 171. Many courts have abandoned the requirement of mutuality and confined the requirement of privity to the party against whom the plea of res judicata is asserted. Coca Cola Co. v. Pepsi-Cola Co., supra; Liberty Mutual Insur. Co. v. George Colon & Co., 260 N.Y. 305, 183 N. E. 506; Atkinson v. White, 60 Me. 396; Eagle, etc., Insur. Co. v. Heller, 149 Va. 82, 140 S.E. 314, 57 A.L.R. 490; Jenkins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 89 S.C. 408, 71 S.E. 1010; United States v. Wexler, D. C., 8 F.2d 880. See Good Health Dairy Products Corp. v. Emery, 275 N.Y. 14, 9 N.E.2d 758, 112 A.L.R. 401. The commentators are almost unanimously in accord. 35 Yale L.J. 607; 9 Va.L.Reg.(N.S.) 241; 29 Ill.L.Rev. 93; 18 N.Y.U.L.Q.R. 565, 570; 12 Corn.L.Q. 92. The courts of most jurisdictions have in effect accomplished the same result by recognizing a broad exception to the requirements of mutuality and privity, namely, that they are not necessary where the liability of the defendant asserting the plea of res judicata is dependent upon or derived from the liability of one who was exonerated in an earlier suit brought by the same plaintiff upon the same facts. See cases cited in 35 Yale L.J. 607, 610; 9 Va.L.Reg.(N.S.) 241, 245-247; 29 Ill.L.Rev. 93, 94; 18 N.Y. U.L.Q.R. 565, 566, 567; 34 C.J. 988, 989. Typical examples of such derivative liability are master and servant, principal and agent, and indemnitor and indemnitee. Thus, if a plaintiff sues a servant for injuries caused by the servant's alleged negligence within the scope of his employment, a judgment against the plaintiff of the grounds that the servant was not negligent can be pleaded by the master as res judicata if he is subsequently sued by the same plaintiff for the same injuries. Conversely, if the plaintiff first sues the master, a judgment against the plaintiff on the grounds that the servant was not negligent can be pleaded by the servant as res judicata if he is subsequently sued by the plaintiff. In each of these situations the party asserting the plea of res judicata was not a party to the previous action nor in privity with such a party under the accepted definition of a privy set forth above. Likewise, the estoppel is not mutual since the party asserting the plea, not having been a party or in privity with a party to the former action, would not have been bound by it had it been decided the other way. The cases justify this exception on the ground that it would be unjust to permit one who has had his day in court to reopen identical issues by merely switching adversaries.

[8] In determining the validity of a plea of res judicata three questions are pertinent: Was the issue decided in the prior adjudication identical with the one presented in the action in question? Was there a final judgment on the merits? Was the party against whom the plea is asserted a party or in privity with a party to the prior adjudication? In re Estate of Smead, 219 Cal. 572, 28 P.2d 348; Silva v. Hawkins, 152 Cal. 138, 92 P. 72, and People v. Rodgers, 118 Cal. 393, 46 P. 740, 50 P. 668, to the extent that they are inconsistent with this opinion, are overruled.

[9, 10] In the present case, therefore, the defendant is not precluded by lack of privity or of mutuality of estoppel from asserting the plea of res judicata against the plaintiff. Since the issue as to the ownership of the money is identical with the issue raised in the probate proceeding, and since the order of the probate court settling the executor's account was a final adjudication of this issue on the merits (Cal.Prob.Code, sec. 931 [formerly Cal.Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1637]; see cases cited in 12 Cal.Jur. 62, 63; 15 Cal.Jur. 117, 120), it remains only to determine whether the plaintiff in the present action was a party or in privity with a party to the earlier proceeding. The plaintiff has brought the present action in the capacity of administratrix of the estate. In this capacity she represents the very same persons and interests that were represented in the earlier hearing on the executor's account. In that proceeding plaintiff and the other legatees who objected to the executor's account represented the estate of the decedent. They were seeking not a personal recovery but, like the plaintiff in the present action, as administratrix, a recovery for the benefit of the legatees and creditors of the estate, all of whom were bound by the order settling the account. Cal.Prob.Code, sec. 931. See cases cited in 12 Cal.Jur. 62, 63. The plea of res judicata is therefore available against plaintiff as a party to the former proceeding, despite her formal change of capacity. "Where a party though appearing in two suits in different capacities is in fact litigating the same right, the judgment in one estops him in the other." 15 Cal.Jur. 189; Williams v. Southern Pacific Co., 54 Cal.App. 571, 202 P. 356; Stevens v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512; In re Estate of Bell, 153 Cal. 331, 95 P. 372. See Chicago, R. I. & P. R. R. Co. v. Schendel, 270 U.S. 611, 46 S.Ct. 420, 70 L.Ed. 757, 53 A.L.R. 1265; Sunshine A. Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U.S. 381, 401 et seq., 60 S. Ct. 907, 84 L.Ed. 1263; Lee Co. v. Federal Trade Comm., 8 Cir., 113 F.2d 583; and cases cited in 16 N.Y.U.L.Q.R. 158, 159; 38 Yale L.J. 299, 310; 54 Harv.L.Rev. 890.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 748

WEINER v. ROOF et al.

L. A. 17299.

Supreme Court of California.

March 5, 1942.

1. Principal and agent ⇐136(4)
Trusts ⇐356(2)

One who has paid money through fraud or mistake to an innocent agent or trustee may recover the amount from the agent or trustee, unless the agent or trustee has paid it to the principal or beneficiary, has spent it on behalf of the principal or beneficiary, or has paid it to a third person on behalf of the principal or beneficiary.

2. Principal and agent ⇐136(4)
Trusts ⇐356(2)

The fact that an innocent agent or trustee who has been paid money through fraud or mistake credits the principal or beneficiary with the amount received does not release the agent or trustee from his obligation to make restitution, so long as he continues to hold the money on behalf of the principal or beneficiary, but when the agent or trustee parts with the money in accordance with the agency or trust, he is released from liability.

3. Trusts ⇐356(2)

The mere crediting of certain sums by innocent trustee to general trust account and trust improvement account did not release trustee from obligation to withdraw those sums from the accounts and repay them to the one who paid those sums, because of false representations, but having actually expended the money on behalf of the trust, the beneficial owners of which constituted the trustee's principal, trustee was no longer required to make restitution.

4. Principal and agent ⇐136(4)
Trusts ⇐356(2)

If an innocent agent or trustee receives money through mistake or fraud and pays it to a third person on behalf of his principal or beneficiary in payment of a debt owed the third person by the principal or beneficiary, the agent or trustee cannot be required to make restitution of the money, and the third person, if he has no notice of the claims of the original owner of the money, is a "bona fide purchaser for value" and may keep the amount as against the original owner, whose only remedy is against the principal or beneficiary on grounds of fraud, mistake, or unjust enrichment. Civ.Code, §§ 1796, 3106.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Bona Fide Purchaser for Value".

5. Trusts ⇐356(2)

Extinguishment by third person of past indebtedness of beneficiary of trust to third person is considered a change of position sufficient to preclude a recovery from the third person by one who has paid the money to trustee for beneficiary through mistake or fraud, even though it would be possible for the third person to give up the money and retain the original claim against the beneficiary.

6. Principal and agent ⇐136(4)
Trusts ⇐356(2)

If agent or trustee himself is creditor of his principal or beneficiary, and with the consent of the principal or beneficiary applies money received from third person toward payment of the debt, he is a "bona fide purchaser for value" and may retain the money as against the original owner who has parted with it through mistake or because of fraud of principal or beneficiary.

7. Trusts ⇐356(2)

Where trustee credited to itself as authorized by trust some of the money received from third person in payment of indebtedness owed trustee by beneficiary of trust, trustee was a "bona fide purchaser for value" and was entitled to retain the amount as against the third person, notwithstanding that the money was paid over because of false representations of one other than the trustee.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thurmond Clarke, Judge.

Action by Theodore Weiner against J. B. Roof, the Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank and others to rescind a land purchase contract and to recover money paid. From a judgment in favor of the Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Prior opinion, 115 P.2d 23.

Isador Gralla, Don Marlin, and Henry O. Wackerbarth, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chandler, Wright & Ward, Chandler & Wright, John F. Gilbert, and Oliver S. Northcote, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Joseph P. Connolly owned an 80-acre tract of unimproved land in Los Angeles, which he contracted to sell in 1927 to J. B. Roof, Inc., for $5,500 an acre plus one half the profits to be realized from the subdivision of the property and sale of the lots. To carry out the sale Connolly and J. B. Roof, Inc., set up a subdivision trust with the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles as trustee. Under the terms of the trust, J. B. Roof, Inc., was to subdivide the tract, construct street improvements at its own expense, and sell the lots. The trustee was to execute the contracts of sale, make collections from the purchasers of the lots, pay to Connolly from these funds the amount owed him by J. B. Roof, Inc., for the land, and distribute the remainder to J. B. Roof, Inc. In 1929 the Farmers and Merchants National Bank assigned all its rights as trustee under the trust, including all previous contracts of purchase, to the Citizens National Trust and Savings Bank, and a new trust agreement was entered into between Connolly, J. B. Roof, Inc., and the Citizens Bank. Under the terms of this agreement the Citizens Bank, as trustee, held legal title to the property and made collections from the purchasers of the lots. From funds thus collected the trustee could reimburse itself for advances to the trust. As the funds were received, a portion was allocated to certain accounts for the payment of trust expenses, including fees and commissions of the trustee. Another portion was allocated to an account for payment of improvements. Connolly then received payment on the amount owed him by J. B. Roof, Inc., as purchase price of the land, including half the profits, and the remainder was paid to J. B. Roof, Inc. The trust recited that Connolly was indebted to the Citizens Bank in the sum of $225,000 and authorized the bank to apply Connolly's share of the collections as they were received toward payment of this debt. The payments thus received by the bank were treated as payments to Connolly of his share of the proceeds.

In 1927, the plaintiff, Theodore Weiner, was induced by J. B. Roof, Inc., to contract to purchase a lot for $3,500, and he began making payments to the trustee. Certain representations made by J. B. Roof, Inc., proved false. These representations were not included in the written contract, which contained a clause limiting the responsibility of the seller to representations therein set forth. In 1932 plaintiff gave notice of rescission and brought suit against J. B. Roof, J. B. Roof, Inc., and the Citizens Bank to rescind the contract of purchase because of fraud and to recover the money he had paid on the purchase price of the lot. He recovered a judgment against J. B. Roof and J. B. Roof, Inc., for $3,807.01 and against the bank for $1,890, the latter amount representing payments plaintiff made to the bank after it became trustee. The bank alone appealed from the judgment. On that appeal this court held that under the principle of Speck v. Wylie, 1 Cal.2d 625, 36 P.2d 618, 95 A.L.R. 760, plaintiff could recover payments made to the bank, but only to the extent that the bank was unjustly enriched thereby. The court stated that "appellant, as trustee of the money paid to it by respondent, should be afforded the opportunity of showing, as it asserts it can, that it has paid over to the beneficial owner the money for which judgment has been taken against it. Such a showing, if made, will disclose that the appellant, an innocent party to the fraud, has not been unjustly enriched and will preclude the entry of a monetary judgment against it under the rule mentioned." The judgment was reversed as to the bank, with the following instructions: "That portion of the judgment awarding plaintiff $1,890 as against the appellant Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank, as trustee, is reversed, with directions to the court below to permit said appellant, if it be so inclined, to offer evidence as to the disposition of the money paid to it by the respondent." Weiner v. Roof, 10 Cal.2d 450, 74 P.2d 736, 738.

The evidence at the second trial was therefore confined to the disposition made by the bank of the money paid to it by plaintiff. The bank, by its accounts and the testimony of one of its officers, showed that in accordance with the terms of the trust it had disbursed the $1,890 received from plaintiff as follows: $1,157.46 was credited to itself toward the payment of Connolly's indebtedness; $346.75 was credited to the general trust account, from which the general expenses of the trust were paid, and $385.79 was credited to the improvement account, from which the cost of street improvements to the tract were paid. The bank showed that at the time of plaintiff's rescission the trust had paid out not only the funds in the various trust accounts but over $7,000 more advanced to it by the bank. On the basis of this evidence, the trial court found that the trustee had paid to the beneficial owners all the money it received from plaintiff, and rendered judgment for the bank.

[1] Plaintiff contends that the bank is liable for the money received by it because the money was never actually paid over to the beneficiaries. The bank, however, in making the collections from the purchasers of the lots in its capacity as trustee acted as agent on behalf of its principals, J. B. Roof, Inc., and Connolly. The same rule governs the liability of the bank in such a situation whether it is designated a trustee or agent. See Rest.Restitution, secs. 143(a), (b), 190(a); Rest. Agency, sec. 13; 1 Cal.Jur. 689, 690; 25 Cal.Jur. 121, 122; Weiner v. Roof, supra. It is well settled that one who has paid money through fraud or mistake to an innocent agent may recover the amount from the agent unless the latter has paid it to the principal, spent it on behalf of the principal, or paid to a third party on behalf of the principal. Rest.Restitution, sec. 143 (b); Rest.Agency, sec. 339(f); Crocker-Woolworth Nat. Bank v. Nevada Bank, 139 Cal. 564, 73 P. 456, 63 L.R.A. 245, 96 Am. St.Rep. 169; Becsey v. California Title Ins. & Trust Co., 192 Cal. 632, 221 P. 356; Craig v. Boone, 146 Cal. 718, 81 P. 22; Weiner v. Roof, supra. See 2 C.J. 821–823; 3 C.J.S., Agency, § 217.

[2, 3] The fact that the agent credits the principal with the amount received does not release the agent from his obligation to make restitution so long as he continues to hold the money on behalf of the principal, Rest.Restitution, sec. 143(b); Rest.Agency, sec. 339(f); see National Bank of Calif. v. Miner, 167 Cal. 532, 140 P. 27; 2 C.J. 823; 3 C.J.S., Agency, § 217; but when the agent parts with the money in accordance with the agency, he is released from liability. In the present case the mere crediting of $346.75 and $385.79 to the general account and the improvement account respectively could not release the bank from the obligation to withdraw these sums from the accounts and repay them to plaintiff, but having actually expended the money on behalf of the trust, the beneficial owners of which constitute its principal, it is no longer required to make restitution.

[4, 5] Most of the money received by the bank from plaintiff, however, was applied on Connolly's indebtedness to it. It therefore still has that amount, not as trustee, but in its private capacity. If an innocent agent receives money through mistake or fraud and pays it to a third party on behalf of his principal in payment of a debt owed the third party by the principal, the agent cannot be required to make restitution of the money. If the third party has no notice of the claims of the original owner, he is a bona fide purchaser for value and may keep the amount as against the original owner, whose only remedy is against the principal on the grounds of fraud, mistake, or unjust enrichment. Rest.Restitution, secs. 13, 172, 173(e); Rest.Trusts, sec. 304(2), (a); Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335, 342; Davis v. Russell, 52 Cal. 611, 28 Am.Rep. 647; Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 P. 680; Virginia Timber & Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 5 Cal.App. 256, 90 P. 48; Chapman v. Hughes, 134 Cal. 641, 658, 58 P. 298, 60 P. 974, 66 P. 982. See Cal.Civ.

Code, secs. 1796, 3106. Extinguishment of the past indebtedness by the third party is considered a change of position sufficient to preclude a recovery from him even though it would be possible for him to give up the money and retain his original claim against the debtor. See 21 Cal.L.Rev. 311 et seq.; 45 Harv.L.Rev. 1333 et seq.; 33 Yale L.Rev. 628 et seq.; 2 Williston, Sales, 2d Ed., sec. 620.

[6, 7] If the agent himself is the creditor of his principal, and with the latter's consent applies the money received toward the payment of the debt, he is likewise a bona fide purchaser for value and may retain the money as against the original owner. Rest.Restitution, sec. 143(b); Rest.Agency, sec. 339(f); Bradley Lumber Co. v. Bradley County Bank, 8 Cir., 206 F. 41, 124 C.C.A. 175; White v. Rutherford, Tex.Civ.App., 148 S.W. 598; Winslow v. Anderson, 78 N.H. 478, 102 A. 310, L.R.A.1918C, 173; La Farge v. Kneeland, 7 Cow., N.Y., 456; Mowatt v. McLelan, 1 Wend., N.Y., 173; Langley v. Warner, 3 N.Y. 327; Cullen v. Donahue, 45 R.I. 237, 121 A. 392; Holland v. Russell, 1861, 1 B. & S. 424, affirmed 4 B. & S. 14; Taylor v. Metropolitan Ry., [1906] 2 K.B. 55; Bessler Movable Stairway Co. v. Bank of Leakesville, 140 Miss. 537, 106 So. 445; Hullet v. Cadick Milling Co., 90 Ind.App. 271, 168 N.E. 610. See 21 Cal. L.Rev. 311, 324; 45 Harv.L.Rev. 1333, 1346; 2 C.J. 821-823; 3 C.J.S., Agency, § 217. The fact that the agent is the same person as the creditor and may keep the money himself in payment of the debt does not prejudice his right so long as the payment is authorized by the principal. The legal effect is the same as if the money were delivered by the agent to the principal and then redelivered by the principal to the agent in payment of the debt. Such formalism, however, is unnecessary. In the words of the Restatement of Restitution, section 143, comment b: "Where an agent receives money on account of the principal, the agent may, by agreement with the principal, apply such money upon an indebtedness of the principal to him. In this case the agent becomes a bona fide purchaser of the money and is entitled to keep it although paid to him by mistake. * * * The fact that upon making repayment to the payor, the fiduciary would himself be able to maintain an action against the beneficiary does not prevent the defense of change of position. This is true even though the beneficiary is available and has sufficient assets to respond to a judgment for that amount; the remedy of the payor is against the beneficiary either directly or by subrogation." Thus in the present case the bank credited to itself, as authorized by the trust, some of the money received from plaintiff in payment of the indebtedness owed it by its principal. In its capacity as trustee it has paid out the money. In its private capacity it is a bona fide purchaser for value, entitled to retain the amount as against the plaintiff.

There are decisions that require an innocent agent to make restitution of money received by fraud or mistake when he has applied the money toward the payment of a debt owed him by his principal. Herlihy v. Independence State Bank, 261 N.Y. 309, 185 N.E. 393; Alberta Pac. Grain Co. v. Dominion Bank, 55 Dom.L.R. 735; Nat'l Bank of Calif. v. Miner, supra. These cases reason that the agent has not changed his position but has merely given the principal a credit, and that he may remove the credit upon giving up the money and retain his claim against the principal. The same argument would apply to any bona fide purchaser who has received money or property in payment of a past indebtedness from a debtor who procured it by fraud or mistake. It is established in California, however, that a past indebtedness is sufficient value to justify the bona fide purchaser in retaining the money as against the original owner, and that the bona fide purchaser will not be left to his original claim against the debtor. Frey v. Clifford, supra; Davis v. Russell, supra; Foorman v. Wallace, supra; Virginia Timber & Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., supra; Chapman v. Hughes, supra. The decisions cited above requiring restitution are derived from the rule that an agent is required to restore money paid to him through mistake or fraud when he has credited his principal with the amount but still retains it in his possession. They fail to distinguish between an agent who holds the money on behalf of his principal after crediting it to the principal's account and an agent who has received the money, with the consent of the principal, in payment of a debt owed to him by the principal. In the latter situation the agent is in the position of a bona fide purchaser for value; in the former he is not.

In the present case the bank applied the money received from the plaintiff to the debt owed it by Connolly in accord with the terms of the trust and with Connolly's consent. It had no knowledge of plaintiff's claim at the time it credited itself with the amount. In its capacity as agent it has therefore paid out plaintiff's money on behalf of its principal, and in its private capacity it is a bona fide purchaser for value, entitled to retain the money.

This action is confined to the disposition made by the bank of the funds received by it from plaintiff. It is therefore irrelevant that the bank as trustee has subsequently received money for the trust from other purchasers of lots. Plaintiff has a judgment against J. B. Roof, Inc., one of the beneficiaries under the trust, and may subject the interest of J. B. Roof, Inc., in the trust to levy and sale under execution.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 774

SECURITY-FIRST NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES v. EARP et al.

L.A. 17902.

Supreme Court of California.

March 5, 1942.

1. Contracts ⇐94(1)
Reformation of Instruments ⇐21, 25

A person who has been induced to enter into a contract by fraudulent misrepresentations as to its contents may rescind or reform the contract, and his negligence in failing to read the contract does not bar his right to relief. Civ.Code, § 1689(1).

2. Negligence ⇐100

Contributory negligence is no defense to an intentional wrong.

3. Mortgages ⇐86(3)

In action to foreclose a trust deed, which defendants sought to have declared void, on ground that defendants' signature was obtained by fraudulent misrepresentations as to indebtedness secured, evidence supported finding that terms of trust deed were fraudulently represented to defendants and that defendants were justified in relying on the representation, so as to authorize rescission.

4. Mortgages ⇐78

Where those who signed trust deed, which was represented to them as merely a renewal of old mortgage but which in fact contained an additional provision securing all present and future obligations, were already familiar with the terms of old mortgage, they were justified in assuming that there was no necessity for reading the trust deed.

5. Mortgages ⇐497(1)

In action to foreclose a trust deed with defense of fraudulent representations as to indebtedness secured, trial court in refusing to hold trust deed as security for additional indebtedness in effect rescinded the trust deed to that extent.

6. Mortgages ⇐455

In action to foreclose a trust deed with defense of fraudulent misrepresentations as to indebtedness secured, defendants sufficiently pleaded their right to rescission when they alleged the misrepresentation and requested that the trust deed be declared void.

7. Mortgages ⇐491

In action to foreclose a trust deed with defense of fraudulent misrepresentations as to indebtedness secured, defendants were under no duty to make restitution, where they received nothing from plaintiff under the rescinded provision that they could restore.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Parker Wood, Judge.

Action by the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles against Anna L. Earp and others to foreclose a trust deed. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Thorpe & Bridges and Roane Thorpe, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Vance Booker and P. M. Girard, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Defendants, Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Washburn, were indebted to plaintiff, the Security First National Bank of Los Angeles, in the amount of $3,000. The debt was secured by a mortgage on certain real property owned by defendants. In 1933 defendants, together with certain other persons, executed a joint and several promissory note for $32,750, payable to plaintiff with interest at seven per cent. This note was secured by a deed of trust on other real property. In 1939 this trust deed was foreclosed and the proceeds of the sale were applied to the debt, leaving an unpaid balance of $7,850.70.

In 1935 the $3000 mortgage, outstanding for about 10 years, fell due. In response to a communication from plaintiff, Washburn went to the bank to arrange for a renewal. According to Washburn's testimony he had the following conversation with an employee of the bank: "He wanted to know if I could make any payment at that time on the principal. I told him no, I didn't see how I could, I said, 'Couldn't you extend it, this mortgage for another year?' and he said, 'Well, no, I don't know as we can. Some payment should be made on the principal.' I said, 'Well, I am not able to do that right at this time, but I know another bank, and also a building and loan company, that might, that I would like to see, to see if they would extend or would take this property for $3000 straight loan, or lend $3000 straight loan on it.' And this man I was talking to then said, 'Well, let me see a little bit further.' And he went away from this desk and away from this counter, and I don't know where he went, but he came back in a few minutes —asked me to wait a few minutes—and said that if I and Mrs. Washburn would come in tomorrow, that they would extend this mortgage for another year, which we did, and what I signed the following day." Question: "You came in the next day?" Answer: "Yes. And what I signed the following day with Mrs. Washburn I assumed it was the extension of the mortgage for a year, which in so many words I had been told it was."

Defendants thus signed a renewal note for $3,000 at 7% interest secured by what they believed to be the same mortgage extended for another year. Actually, however, the new encumbrance was a trust deed and contained a provision, not present in the previous mortgage, that it was given to secure the payment of all obligations, present and future, which were then owing or might thereafter become owing from defendants to plaintiff. This clause, couched in legal terminology, was in a printed form in comparatively small print. Defendants, relying upon the representation of plaintiff's employee that they were signing a renewal of the old mortgage, did not read the new encumbrance and were therefore unaware that it was a trust deed containing the foregoing provision.

Defendant defaulted in the payment of the $3,000 promissory note, and plaintiff thereupon brought the present action, asking that the trust deed be foreclosed and the proceeds of the sale applied not only on the $3,000 obligation but also on the $7,850.70 still owed by defendants to plaintiff under the $32,750 note. The trustee under the deed of trust and Anna L. Earp, to whom the Washburns had subsequently conveyed the property, were joined as defendants. Defendants in answer alleged that plaintiff, through one of its agents, induced them to sign the deed of trust by representing it to them as an extension of the mortgage, and that in reliance upon this representation they signed the instrument, unaware that it was a deed of trust or that it purported to secure any indebtedness other than the $3,000 loan. They therefore asked that the deed of trust be declared void.

The trial court found that defendants did not intend to execute a trust deed or to give the property as security for any indebtedness other than the $3,000, and that they signed the instrument without reading it in reliance upon the representation of plaintiff's employee. Judgment was entered foreclosing the deed of trust given to secure the $3,000 note. Plaintiff was awarded a personal judgment against Washburn for $7,850.70 with interest, but the court refused to decree that this indebtedness was secured by the deed of trust. Plaintiff has appealed on the ground that defendants' failure to read the instrument precludes them from setting up any misrepresentation of the contents as a defense.

[1, 2] It is established in California and a majority of other jurisdictions that a person who has been induced to enter into a contract by fraudulent misrepresentations as to its contents may rescind or reform the contract. California Trust Co. v. Cohn, 214 Cal. 619, 7 P.2d 297; Fleury v. Ramacciotti, 8 Cal.2d 660, 67 P.2d 339; Wenzel v. Shulz, 78 Cal. 221, 20 P. 404; Johnson v. Sun Realty Co., 138 Cal.App. 296, 32 P.2d 393; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 P. 630. See cases cited in 1 Page, Contracts, 2d Ed. § 229, 230, 233; 9 Wigmore, Evidence 3d.Ed. § 2416. See Glickman v. New York Life Insurance Co., 16 Cal.2d 626, 107 P.2d 252, 131 A.L.R. 1292; Seeger v. Odell, 18 Cal.2d 409, 115 P.2d 977, 136 A.L.R. 1291; Cal.Civil Code, § 1689 (1). His negligence in failing to read the contract does not bar his right to relief (California Trust Co. v. Cohn, supra; Fleury v. Ramacciotti, supra; Wenzel v. Shulz, supra; Johnson v. Sun Realty Co., supra; Moore v. Copp, supra. See cases cited 1 Page, Contracts, 2d.Ed., §§ 229, 230, 233; 9 Wigmore, Evidence, 3d.Ed., § 2416) if he was justified in relying upon the representations. See Seeger v. Odell, supra; Restatement of Torts, § 537, and cases cited in 12 Cal.Jur. 750 et seq. Contributory negligence is no defense to an intentional wrong. See Seeger v. Odell, supra; Prosser, Torts, 748, 402, and cases cited in 12 Cal.Jur. 758, 759. In the cases of Kimmell v. Skelly 130 Cal. 555, 62 P. 1067, and Gridley v. Tilson, 202 Cal. 748, 262 P. 322, relied upon by plaintiff, there were no fraudulent representations as to the contents of the contracts in question. In each case the defendant's misconception of the contract was attributable solely to his failure to read it.

[3, 4] In the present case there is sufficient evidence to support the finding of the trial court that the terms of the contract were fraudulently represented to defendants and that they were justified in relying upon the representation. Defendants were not negotiating with plaintiff for the first time; they had in fact dealt with plaintiff for a period of ten years. Since they were already familiar with the terms of the old mortgage, they were justified in assuming that there was no necessity for reading the instrument that was represented to them as a renewal of that mortgage.

[5-7] In refusing to hold the trust deed as security for the indebtedness of $7,850.70 the trial court in effect rescinded the trust deed to that extent. Defendants pleaded their right to rescission sufficiently when they alleged the misrepresentation and requested that the trust deed be declared void. Since defendants received nothing from plaintiff under the rescinded provision that they can restore, they are under no duty to make restitution. See cases cited in 6 Cal.Jur. 387; 4 Cal.Jur.Supp. 135. Plaintiff has already received compensation for the extension of the indebtedness in the form of interest payments that continued until 1939, and plaintiff has a judgment in its favor for the unpaid principal, interest, and expenses, with a decree of foreclosure on the property for this amount.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ. concurred.

19 Cal.2d 778

CAMPBELL v. BIRCH et al.

L. A. 17907.

Supreme Court of California.

March 5, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 3, 1942.

1. Trusts ⇐262

In action by trustee for damages allegedly suffered by trust estates as result of alleged fraudulent conspiracy by defendants whereby the trustee was induced to settle an indebtedness of one of the defendants for less than the amount due and to reduce rental payable under a lease held by such defendant on certain trust property, evidence sustained trial court's finding that the compromise and modification agreements were entered into as result of certain false and fraudulent representations concerning financial condition of debtor, that the representations were made pursuant to conspiracy, that the trustee relied thereon to damage of trust estates and justified judgment for the trustee.

2. Appeal and error ⇐994(3), 1012(1)

The trial court is the exclusive judge of the weight of the evidence and credibility of witnesses.

3. Appeal and error ⇐996, 1012(1)

It is the province of trial court to give to evidence that weight to which, in its judgment, it is entitled and to draw all reasonable inferences therefrom.

4. Evidence ⇐588

If in judgment of trial court the evidence is entitled to no weight, it may disregard such evidence altogether.

5. Conspiracy ⇐19

A conspiracy to defraud may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

6. Conspiracy ⇐13

Where trustee was induced to settle an indebtedness owed to trust estates for less than amount due thereon and to reduce rental payable under lease held by debtor on trust property by fraudulent representations, concerning debtor's financial condition, made pursuant to a conspiracy, and former creditor knowingly permitted use of her name in the attempt to defraud by creating false impression that substantially all of debtor's assets were pledged to the former creditor as security for debts, which had been extinguished, the former creditor was liable as a joint participant for resulting damage to the trust estates.

7. Conspiracy ⇐18

Where plaintiff, as result of fraudulent conspiracy, was induced to settle an indebtedness for less than amount due thereon and to reduce rental payable under lease, plaintiff, electing to stand on the compromise contract and sue for damages, was not required to prove that the claims which were relinquished as a result of the fraud were in fact collectible, in view of the fact that the claims compromised were not disputed either as to amount or as to their existence.

8. Fraud ⇐31

A defrauded plaintiff may properly elect to sue for damages rather than to rescind.

9. Trusts ⇐265

In trustee's action for damages suffered by trust estates as result of fraudulent conspiracy whereby trustee was induced to settle an indebtedness owed to the trust estates for less than the amount due thereon and to reduce rental payable under a lease upon trust property, judgment which was exactly in the amount the trustee would have been entitled to if no compromise, induced by the fraud, had been negotiated was proper.

10. Fraud ⇐59(1)

Where a claim forming the basis of a compromise, induced by fraud, is fixed and certain and where the defrauded plaintiff under any theory is entitled to keep the amount paid on the compromise, the measure of damages, so far as general damages are concerned, is prima facie the difference between the amount paid on the compromise and the face amount of the claim.

11. Appeal and error ⇐221

In action for damages suffered as result of alleged fraudulent conspiracy inducing compromise settlement, contention that certain alleged rights obtained by the defrauded party in the compromise should have been taken into consideration in determining damages could not be raised for first time on appeal.

12. Trusts ⇐377

In trustee's action for damages suffered by trust estates as result of fraudulent conspiracy whereby trustee was induced to settle judgments for delinquent rent for less than amount due thereon and to reduce rental payable under lease providing that lessee shall pay all reasonable costs, expenses and attorney's fees incurred by lessor in any litigation between the parties "arising out of or in connection with lease", investigation expense and attorney's fees were properly allowed against the lessee.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arising out of or in Connection with Lease".

CARTER, SHENK, and CURTIS, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Caryl M. Sheldon, Judge.

Action by Roy Campbell, trustee, etc., against A. Otis Birch and others for damages sustained as result of alleged fraudulent conspiracy. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion 109 P.2d 1008.

Rehearing denied; SHENK, CURTIS, and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

George Acret and Clifford A. Rohe, both of Los Angeles, for appellants Birch.

Clyde F. Murphy, of North Hollywood, for appellant Minter.

Syril S. Tipton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PETERS, Justice pro tem.

This action was brought by plaintiff for damages alleged to have been suffered by the trust estates represented by plaintiff as the result of an alleged fraudulent conspiracy by defendants whereby plaintiff was induced to settle an indebtedness of defendant A. Otis Birch owed to the trust estates for less than the amount due thereon, and to reduce the rental payable under a lease held by defendant A. Otis Birch on certain real property owned by the trust estates. The trial court found in detail that the compromise and modification agreements were entered into as a result of certain false and fraudulent representations made to Campbell concerning Birch's financial condition; that such representations were made pursuant to a conspiracy by defendants to induce plaintiff to accept the compromise and modification agreements; and that plaintiff relied thereon to his damage. Based on these findings, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, from which judgment defendants prosecute this appeal.

[1] The main contention of appellants is that the basic findings of the trial court are not supported by the evidence. After an examination of the record we are convinced that the evidence, together with such inferences as may reasonably be drawn therefrom, amply support the findings and judgment.

On June 6, 1928, plaintiff's predecessors leased to A. D. Van Vracken certain real property in Los Angeles for a period of 99 years. The court found, and the finding is supported, that Van Vracken was acting for Birch, and that on the day the lease was executed it was assigned to Birch. The lease called for the payment of graduated rentals, which, during the years 1934, 1935 and 1936, amounted to $1,000 per month. Birch paid all rentals due under the lease until October of 1934, when all payments ceased. By August of 1935 there was owing to plaintiff an admitted sum of $9,412.59. Plaintiff had secured several judgments against Birch for such delinquent rent totaling $6,395.70. During 1935 plaintiff had several actions pending against Birch. It was under these circumstances that in August of 1935 Birch, and a man by the name of Benson, whose connection with these transactions will be discussed later, induced plaintiff to compromise the total indebtedness of $9,412.59 for $6,000, and to agree to a modification of the lease lowering the monthly rental over a five-year period on a graduated scale, starting with $500 a month. The reduced rental was paid until May of 1936, when the lessee again became delinquent. Respondent contends that he then discovered that he had been defrauded in that he had been induced to enter into the compromise and the lease modification by false representations concerning Birch's financial status. In May of 1937 he brought the present action in fraud and deceit to recover from all three defendants $8,412.59 damages, $3,412.59 alleged to have been sustained by reason of the compromise, and $5,000 through acceptance of reduced rentals. As against A. Otis Birch alone he seeks to recover certain expenses and attorney's fees as provided in the lease. The trial court granted judgment against all three defendants for the larger sum, and against A. Otis Birch alone for $1,253.85 for attorney's and investigation expenses.

The defendants and appellants are A. Otis Birch, his wife Estelle, and his cousin Lula M. Minter. The complaint alleges that defendants falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff, and he was thereby led to believe that at the time the compromise and lease modification agreements were entered into Birch was in an unsafe and dangerous condition financially; that it was represented to plaintiff that Birch was indebted to defendant Minter in the sum of $25,000 represented by a note secured by a second deed of trust on certain real property owned by Birch; that it was also represented to plaintiff that Birch was also indebted to defendant Minter in the sum of $130,000 represented by a note secured by a pledge of the entire capital stock of the Birch Holding Company, which, in turn, held all the stock of the Birch Securities Company and of the Birch Ranch and Oil Company, which last two mentioned companies owned practically all of the properties in which the Birches were interested, and that if plaintiff insisted on the payment of the rental provided for in the lease Minter would sell the pledged stock and render Birch insolvent.

The complaint also alleged that defendant Minter conspired with defendants Birch to accomplish the fraud. Plaintiff further alleged that the representations were false; that the $25,000 note and trust deed and the $130,000 indebtedness were fictitious and non-existent; that plaintiff, in belief and reliance on their genuineness, was induced to execute and perform the settlement agreement, to his damage.

The findings of the trial court followed substantially the allegations of the complaint. It is an admitted fact that the evidence supports the findings that Birch and Benson represented that Birch owed Minter a total sum of $155,000; that unless a modification were secured she would sell out the pledge and trust deed, thus stripping the Birches of substantially all of their assets; that the Birches would be forced into bankruptcy. It is a reasonable inference, and no contention is made to the contrary, that such representations were made for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to act upon them. There also can be no doubt that the evidence supports the findings that plaintiff executed the compromise and modification agreements in reliance on the truthfulness of such representations and would not have executed them otherwise. There can also be no doubt, and this is not disputed, that if the finding that the representation as to the existing indebtedness of Birch to Minter was false is supported, that plaintiff has a good cause of action for such fraud at least as against Birch. On the other hand, plaintiff admitted at the trial, and admits on this appeal, that if that finding is unsupported and the indebtedness to Minter actually existed, he has no cause of action against any of the defendants. So far as the sufficiency of the evidence is concerned, therefore, the only serious question presented for consideration is whether or not the finding that Birch was indebted to Minter is supported by the evidence.

The record shows that Birch commenced borrowing from his cousin, defendant Minter, and her relatives, many years before this controversy arose. The relationship between Birch and Minter was one of great affection and confidence. Birch had been reared by Miss Minter's parents and lived in their home until the time of his marriage. Although they were first cousins, they looked upon each other as brother and sister. He handled nearly all of her financial dealings. Prior to the year 1900 Birch had borrowed several thousand dollars from Miss Minter's mother, and he later borrowed relatively small sums from Miss Minter and her sister, now deceased, until in 1927 he owed them about $17,000. The purpose of these loans, and their continued renewals, was not so much to accommodate Birch as it was to help the Minters find a safe place for the investment of their funds at an attractive rate of interest. After 1927 Miss Minter became possessed of large sums of money by inheritance from her parents and sister. Thereafter, the transactions between the two increased in number and amount.

Many of the transactions involved the transfer from Birch to Minter of Yolo County reclamation district bonds on a ranch owned by the Birches known as the Conaway Ranch. These bonds were part of a $2,000,000 issue, less than one-quarter of which had been sold to the public, the balance being owned by Birch. The bonds had a par value of $1,000, and bore 6% interest. Default on the bonds occurred in 1934. In 1928, and each year following up to 1934, Miss Minter purchased from Birch large numbers of these bonds aggregating $80,000, for which she paid Birch by checks on her account. Birch testified that these bonds were sold by him to Miss Minter subject to his oral promise to repurchase the bonds at par. From time to time he did repurchase some of the bonds when she needed cash. The trial judge, who had the power to pass on the credibility of the witnesses, was not bound by this testimony. He could, and apparently did, disbelieve Birch's story, and concluded from all the testimony that Miss Minter made an outright purchase of these bonds.

By 1932 Birch undoubtedly owed to Miss Minter another sum of $50,000, represented by a note secured by a mortgage.

It should be here mentioned that up to 1930 Birch was a man of considerable wealth and was engaged in many profitable enterprises. From 1926 through 1929 his net worth was over $3,000,000, and his net income over $100,000 a year. After 1930 Birch became financially involved and his assets began to shrink in value, although at no time did his status approach that of insolvency. It is clear that after 1930 the sums borrowed by him from Miss Minter were desired by him to assist him in his financial difficulties.

Giving the evidence the strongest possible interpretation in favor of appellants, and disregarding the possible and reasonable conclusion that the $80,000 did not in fact represent a debt owed by Birch to Minter, it can be assumed, for the purposes of this opinion, that in 1932 he owed Minter $130,000, $80,000 of which was secured by the reclamation bonds, and $50,000 by a mortgage. Commencing in that year occurred a series of transactions upon which respondent relies as supporting the trial court's conclusions that this debt was paid in full, and that thereafter it was fictitiously kept alive for the purpose of defrauding, among others, the plaintiff.

In 1932 and 1933 Birch transferred to Miss Minter stock of five different companies. He transferred to her 90% of the stock of the Birch-Smith Storage Company. Birch and Minter testified that this stock was valueless, but Smith, an officer of the company and a witness for defendants, testified that its value at the time of transfer was $75,000, less an $8,543.32 loss. In view of this evidence it must be assumed, in support of the judgment, that 90% of this stock transferred by Birch to Minter was then worth about $60,000. In 1935 Birch testified in a supplementary proceeding in which plaintiff was attempting to collect his judgments that Miss Minter "purchased" this stock from him. While testifying in the instant case he stated that what he meant was that "she was entitled to that stock and possibly much more, because of many loans that she had made times when I was badly in need of them. She had loaned me money just before I gave her the stock. She actually paid nothing for it." Admittedly, the only loans made by Miss Minter at this time were part of the $130,000 above-mentioned. What does the testimony above-quoted mean? Is it an admission that the stock was turned over in partial payment of the debts then existing? That is a reasonable interpretation of the testimony.

Also during 1932 and 1933 he transferred to Miss Minter over 600 shares of Lyon Storage Company stock, 400 shares of Pacific Crest Cemetery stock, an unfixed number of shares of Citizen's National Bank stock and 40 shares of Western State Life Insurance Company stock. Birch testified that the value of these shares at the time of the transfer was between $60,000 and $100,000, and that such stock was absolutely clear when transferred. In explanation of these transactions, although he had failed to mention these transfers on former hearings, Birch testified that this stock was transferred in return for a promise of Miss Minter to will her home place to him. He further testified that Miss Minter did make a will devising the home place to him. Plaintiff's witnesses fixed the value of the home place in 1933 at $16,000.

Thus, during this period at a time when he claims to have owed Miss Minter $130,000, he transferred to her assets which, taking their highest values as fixed by the evidence, were worth $160,000 or more. It should also be mentioned that in 1933 Birch prepared a detailed financial statement in which he did not list the $80,000 claimed to be owing to Miss Minter as a liability.

If the trial judge had believed the testimony of Birch and Minter he could have found that these transfers were either gifts from Birch to Minter, or were in return for the promise to will the home place to him. But the court was not bound to so find. The trial court could, and did, disbelieve the testimony of these two witnesses. It is a reasonable inference that if the indebtedness existed it was canceled by these transfers. The trial judge saw the witnesses. He knew of the many contradictions in Birch's testimony. He was in a much better position than this court to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses. He found that no indebtedness in fact existed. He was not bound to believe the explanation proffered by Birch. He knew that these parties had been dealing together for many years with no evidence of large gifts passing between them. He knew that after the 1932-1933 transactions the parties again entered into many transactions. He knew that Birch was heavily involved in 1932 and 1933. He knew of the close relationship existing between the parties. Under such circumstances, the trial court was entitled to infer that Birch in fact was attempting to protect Miss Minter, and, to do so, transferred to her these assets in payment of the existing obligations. This inference is more than a mere suspicion—it is predicated upon the evidence and is based on reasonable probabilities.

After the transactions of 1932-1933, above described, Birch and Miss Minter went through the motions of purporting to keep the indebtedness alive. In October of 1934, the same month he first failed to pay rent on the Campbell lease, Mr. and Mrs. Birch formed three Birch corporations, in one of which they vested their ownership of the reclamation bonds and other securities, and to another they transferred most of their other assets valued at many hundreds of thousands of dollars. The third corporation was a holding company, possessed of the stock of the other two, its stock of 100,000 shares being owned 51% by Mrs. Birch and 49% by Mr. Birch. Birch then purported to have had an accounting with Miss Minter in which he recognized the existence of a $130,000 indebtedness to her. He then had Miss Minter transfer back to one of his companies the reclamation bonds valued at $80,000 and to release the $50,000 mortgage. He and his wife then gave Miss Minter their promissory note for $130,000 secured by a pledge of the 100,000 shares of holding company stock. This stock was worth many times the amount of the note.

In November of 1934 the Birches gave Miss Minter a second deed of trust on certain real property referred to as the Broadway property, as security for a loan of $15,000 and future advancements. On May 1, 1935, Miss Minter advanced another $10,000 under this agreement. It is to be noted that this $25,000, when added to the $130,000 above mentioned, makes a total of $155,000 allegedly then owed to Miss Minter. That is almost the exact value of the stock transferred to Miss Minter by Birch in 1932 and 1933. The trial court found that the $25,000 indebtedness, as well as the $130,000 indebtedness, was fictitious. The basis for these findings has already been discussed. Although the $25,000 undoubtedly passed from Miss Minter to Birch, the trial court could, and did, infer it was merely balancing the transfers of 1932 and 1933. It was this purported indebtedness that was used by Birch as a basis for the representations made to Campbell concerning Birch's uncertain financial status. It was these representations upon which Campbell relied in entering into the compromise and lease modification agreements of August, 1935.

There is one other matter to which reference should be made. During the first part of 1935 Birch and a man by the name of Benson had offices in the same suite. Benson was assisting Birch in attempting to refinance some of his obligations, including the obligations on the lease and judgments owed to Campbell. The plaintiff testified that he first talked directly with Mr. Birch in March or April of 1935 concerning the proposed settlement. In that first conversation Birch, according to Campbell, made most of the representations forming the basis of this action. On at least one occasion Campbell talked with Mrs. Birch, and she told him that they were anxious to settle the dispute. The balance of the negotiations were carried on by Benson. Birch contends that there is no evidence that Benson was his agent, and so testified on this trial. In prior proceedings he had freely admitted that Benson had negotiated the settlement for him. No useful purpose would be served by discussing the evidence on this point in detail. Suffice it to say that it is a reasonable inference from the evidence as a whole that Benson acted in this transaction as the agent of Birch. Benson represented that Miss Minter was angry at Birch and would foreclose him out of the entire Birch Holding Company stock if the Campbell dispute was not settled, and would force Birch into insolvency. Birch likewise represented to Campbell that he was faced with insolvency. These representations were palpably false. The record demonstrates that at all times Miss Minter and Birch were on the friendliest terms, and that she did whatever he told her to in reference to these various transactions. Although Birch was heavily involved, the record demonstrates that at no time did his status even approximate that of insolvency.

The deal between Benson and Birch was consummated on July 16, 1935. By that agreement the Birches transferred to Benson most, but not all, of their valuable assets, including the 100,000 shares of holding company stock. Benson agreed to discharge the liabilities against the properties transferred, and further agreed that when the holding company stock reached a net market value of at least $1,000,000 he would pay the Birches $500,000 cash. Coincidentally, Miss Minter canceled the various notes of the Birches purporting to represent the various debts owed to her by them, and accepted in lieu thereof the note of Benson for $162,574.66, payable ten years after date, to be secured by the holding company stock.

It was under these circumstances that in the middle of August, 1935, the compromise and lease modification agreements were entered into, with Benson handling the details for the Birches. At the request of Benson and with the approval of the Birches, the compromise was not handled in the normal way by entering a satisfaction of the existing judgments, but such judgments were assigned to Benson. The record shows that Benson then used the Campbell judgments to foreclose on the various equities retained by Birch in the few properties not already transferred to him in the July transactions. While the Benson-Birch agreement was still in effect Campbell brought an action against them to set it aside as in fraud of creditors. The record shows that this action was settled by Birch paying Campbell the sum of $12,000, the amount of his claims on the date of the trial. For reasons that are not entirely clear, the Benson-Birch agreement was terminated in November, 1937, and all the properties turned over to Benson under the agreement were returned to Birch, and, in addition, the properties secured by Benson by executions under the assigned Campbell judgments still retained by Benson, were returned to Birch. The Benson note to Miss Minter was canceled and the Birches executed a $172,000 note in her favor secured by a pledge of a trustee's certificate representing the holding company stock.

From this evidence the trial court could, and apparently did, conclude:

1. That the representations that Birch was facing bankruptcy and would be forced into bankruptcy if the Campbell dispute was not settled, and that Miss Minter was intending to foreclose against Birch were false. It is quite clear that by reason of the confidential relationship existing between Birch and Miss Minter, and their affection for each other, she would never have threatened him with foreclosure, nor would she have proceeded against him. The only reasonable inference from the evidence is that she knowingly permitted her name to be used by Birch to promote his enterprises and to protect his investments.

2. That the reclamation bond transactions were outright sales and not loans, and that $80,000 of the indebtedness did not exist. It must be remembered that Birch failed to list this alleged liability in his financial statement of 1933.

3. That even if this indebtedness did exist, it is a reasonable inference that it, as well as the $50,000 indebtedness, was canceled by the transfers made to Miss Minter by Birch in 1932 and 1933.

4. That such indebtedness was fictitiously kept alive for the purpose of defrauding, among others, the plaintiff.

5. That Miss Minter and Mrs. Birch knew what Mr. Birch was doing, and knowingly permitted their names to be used in the attempt to defraud Campbell by creating the false impression that substantially all the assets of the Birches were pledged to Miss Minter as security for debts which in fact did not exist.

[2-5] Under these circumstances, the findings that the three appellants conspired to defraud, and did defraud Campbell, to his damage are amply supported. It is true that there is no evidence that Miss Minter made any false representations, that there is no direct evidence that she knew what Birch was doing, and that she and Birch testified the alleged debts actually existed. But, of course, the trial court was not required to believe their testimony. The trial court is the exclusive judge of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses. It is its province to give to the evidence that weight to which, in its judgment, it is entitled, and to draw all reasonable inferences therefrom, and if, in its judgment, the evidence is entitled to no weight it may disregard such evidence altogether. 24 Cal.Jur. 886, § 135. The cases have frequently taken notice of the fact that it is next to impossible to secure direct evidence of a conspiracy, unless one of the participants has confessed, and that the proof must usually be inferential and circumstantial. Thus, in Johnstone v. Morris, 210 Cal. 580, 590, 292 P. 970, 975, it is stated: "In cases of conspiracy to defraud it is not to be expected that direct evidence of the conspiracy can be secured, because such evidence could usually only be secured in the event one of the conspirators confessed. The jury may infer the conspiracy from all the circumstances, and, if the inference is a reasonable one, it will not be disturbed on appeal. These principles have repeatedly been recognized by this court. In Revert v. Hesse, 184 Cal. 295, at page 301, 193 P. 943, 946, this court quoting from a Georgia case (Woodruff v. Hughes, 2 Ga.App. 361, 58 S.E. 551) said:

"'"The law recognizes the intrinsic difficulty of proving a conspiracy. The allegations with reference to conspiracy are treated as matters of inducement leading up to a more particular description of the acts from which conspiracy may be inferred. * * * The conspiracy may sometimes be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relation of the parties, the interest of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances." * * *'

"On the same page (301 of 184 Cal., 193 P. 943, 946) the court continued as follows: 'In the present action, while plaintiff was unable to prove any formal agreement between defendants Arthur Hesse and Sidney Beach, nevertheless, there was before the court the entire transaction resulting in the consummation of a flagrant fraud upon the plaintiff, in which transaction defendant Sidney Beach participated as an intermediary. * * * These circumstances, coupled with the further fact that defendants Sidney Beach and Arthur Hesse were not strangers, but were on more or less intimate terms, occupying the same office, were sufficient to warrant the inference drawn by the trial court that defendant Sidney Beach was a party to a conspiracy which had for its object the fraudulent conversion complained of by plaintiff.'

"In Beeman v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 280, at page 282, 196 P. 774, 775, the rule is stated as follows:

" 'The point in connection with the finding as to a conspiracy is that the representations were made by the defendant Richardson alone, and that there is no direct evidence that the other defendants agreed that they should be made, or knew at the time that they were being made. But direct evidence of that character could hardly be had in the very nature of things, unless one of the defendants should confess, and the fact must be determined by the inference naturally and properly to be drawn from those matters which can be and are directly proven.' "

[6] If the inference that Birch paid all his obligations to Miss Minter is supported, and we think it is, then obviously Miss Minter knew that fact. With such knowledge, to have entered into the transactions above described makes her liable as a joint participant. The above reasoning likewise applies to Mrs. Birch. On this part of the case we conclude our discussion with the holding that under the evidence the inference of joint fraud was not unreasonable, and for that reason will not be disturbed on appeal.

[7] Appellants next contend that there is no evidence of damage, or, in the alternative, that the trial court applied the wrong measure of damages. These contentions are based on the theory that respondent did not elect to rescind by first returning what he had received, but instead elected to stand on the contract and sue for the damage suffered. If respondent had rescinded, the measure of damages, so far as general damages are concerned, would have been the full amount of the debt owed by Birch to Campbell, and the full amount due on the lease. But, it is urged, when a defrauded plaintiff elects to stand on the contract and sue for damages, the measure of damages is different. It is urged that in such event proof must be made that the claims which were relinquished as a result of the fraud, were in fact collectible, and that, in this case, no such evidence was introduced, and no such finding made.

These contentions are unsound. They are given color only because of language used in certain cases where the factual and legal situation was entirely different from that involved in the instant case.

[8] Running through appellants' argument on this point is the implication, that there is something questionable about a defrauded plaintiff electing to sue for damages, rather than rescinding. There can be no doubt of the propriety of such procedure. In Bozarth v. Birch, 52 Cal.App. 55, 198 P. 222, in a case where the alleged fraud was strikingly similar to the one involved in the instant case, this same appellant urged that the sole remedy under such circumstances was to rescind, and cited Bancroft v. Bancroft, 110 Cal. 374, 42 P. 896, one of the cases relied upon in the present case. The court held that where a contract is secured by undue influence, the proper remedy of the injured party is to rescind, but where the defendant secures an advantageous contract by fraudulent representations, the injured party may elect to affirm the contract and sue for the fraud. The same rule was announced in Westerfeld v. New York Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 58 P. 92, 61 P. 667, the main case relied on by appellants. See, also, 12 Cal.Jur. 781, section 49, where the many authorities establishing the rule are collected and commented upon.

In support of their contention that before damages may be recovered in such an action there must be proof and a finding that the compromised or modified claim was in fact collectible, appellants place their main reliance on the Westerfeld case, supra. In that case the insurance company had issued a $10,000 life policy to Westerfeld containing a provision that at the expiration of five years the insured might surrender the policy and receive the then cash value. The complaint filed by the executors of Westerfeld's estate alleged that after four annual premiums had been paid an arrangement was entered into whereby a new policy was issued in place of the old one, and that it was agreed that the cash value of the old policy would be computed and applied to the fifth premium on the first policy, the surplus to be applied to future premiums on the second policy. Westerfeld died with both policies in his possession and, at the time of death, had received no notice of the cash surrender value of the first policy, which was sufficient to pay the fifth premium on the first policy and the first premium on the second. The executors demanded payment of the second policy. The theory was that the defendant was alleged to have made fraudulent statements to the executors to the effect that the second policy was never in force and that the first policy had become void by failure of Westerfeld to pay the fifth premium, and that, based on these fraudulent representations, the executors had entered into a compromise under which both policies were surrendered upon payment of $2,666.66.

The defendant admitted making the representations but contended that they were true. They urged that it was a fact that the second policy never became effective and that the first one had lapsed. No rescission was had. The trial court instructed the jury that the measure of damages was the difference between the compromise payment and the face of the policy. In reversing the decision the court held that in such event, where the existence of the compromised claim is in dispute, if an action for fraud as distinguished from rescission may be maintained, which was doubted, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff in proving damages, to show that the compromised claim was in fact collectible.

It is obvious that the rule of the Westerfeld case only applies where the compromised claim is disputed, either as to its existence or as to its amount. Not only does the case expressly so hold, but in Taylor v. Hopper, 207 Cal. 102, 276 P. 990, the case was so interpreted. In that case it was stated (207 Cal. page 105, 276 P. page 991):

"The case of Westerfeld v. New York Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 58 P. 92, 61 P. 667, relied upon by appellant, is not helpful to her cause, for that case holds that, for the plaintiff to maintain such an action as we are here considering, the compromise sought to be avoided must have been of an undisputed claim. In the decision of the court commissioner, adopted by the court, it was said: 'Cases of that nature (where one who seeks to rescind a compromise agreement on the ground of fraud is not required to restore the money he has received) arise when a party has been led by fraudulent contrivance to accept less money than was due him on an undisputed claim, as in Gilson, etc., Co. v. Gilson, 47 Cal. 597.' The compromise made in the case before us was of a disputed claim, unliquidated in amount, and there is no practicable measure of damages for the action sought to be maintained. The demurrer, therefore, was properly sustained without leave to amend."

[9, 10] In the case at bar the claims compromised were not disputed either as to amount, or as to their existence. Over $6,000 of the compromised amount had been reduced to judgment. The balance was of sums admittedly due under the lease. So far as the modification of the lease is concerned, it was conceded that the obligation was fixed and certain. The amount compromised was definite and undisputed. Obviously, this case is of the type that falls directly within the exception to the rule announced in the Westerfeld case, supra, and quoted in the Taylor case. In effect, the cause of action is one where the damage suffered by the defrauded party is fixed and certain—just as fixed and certain as if the defrauded party had technically rescinded. Obviously, if no compromise had been made, plaintiff would have been entitled to a judgment or judgments for the unpaid rent. The judgment in the present case is exactly in the amount the plaintiff would have been entitled to if no compromise, induced by defendants' fraud, had been negotiated. What other measure of damages would compensate the defrauded party under such circumstances? The only way the defrauded party can be made whole is to return to him the amount to which he admittedly would be entitled had the fraudulent compromise not been secured. To urge that the defrauded party must show that the undisputed liability was in fact collectible in the sense that the defendants were financially responsible is to bring in a false issue. Courts in rendering judgments are not interested in whether the plaintiff can collect the same—they are concerned with the amount of the damage suffered. The collectibility of the compromised judgments and claims, and the collectibility of the present judgment, are matters which are entirely beyond the issues in this case. When the plaintiff proved the claims were fixed, definite and admitted as to their existence and amount he proved they were "collectible" as that term is used in such cases. Where the claim forming the basis of the compromise is fixed and certain, and where the plaintiff under any theory is entitled to keep the amount paid on the compromise, the measure of damages, so far as general damages are concerned, is prima facie the difference between the amount paid on the compromise and the face amount of the fixed and certain claim.

[11] Appellants also urge that certain alleged rights obtained in the compromise by respondent were not taken into consideration in determining the damages. Thus it is urge that Mrs. Birch guaranteed the reduced rental due under the lease as modified for five years, and it is urged that the trial court should have considered the value of this guarantee in fixing the damages. Appellants also urge that under the modified lease an option to purchase was canceled, and that the value of such cancellation should have been fixed. The obvious answer to these points is that the respondent pleaded and proved his damage in the form required by law. If appellants believed the matters above-discussed had any value, that was a matter of defense which should have been pleaded and proved by them. No issue was made in the trial court on these points and it is too late to raise them for the first time on appeal.

[12] Appellant A. Otis Birch complains of that portion of the judgment which allows respondent as against this appellant $375 for investigation expense and $878.85 by way of attorney's fees. These amounts were allowed against this defendant under a provision of the original lease, which remained unchanged by the modification, and which reads as follows:

"It is hereby agreed between the parties hereto that Lessee shall pay all reasonable costs, expenses and attorney's fees incurred by or against Lessors in any litigation between the parties hereto or persons claiming under them, arising out of or in connection with this lease or the construction or enforcement thereof, in case the Lessors or parties claiming under them shall prove successful in such litigation. * * *"

The judgment against all three defendants is in the total amount of $8,413.59. According to the findings, $5,000 of this amount is for the difference between the reduced rentals and the amount called for in the lease. The balance was for the difference due under the lease and the amount of the compromise. All claims forming the basis of the judgment "arose out of and in connection with the lease" as provided in the lease agreement. It was therefore proper for this allowance to be made.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from should be, and hereby is, affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

I am unable to agree with either the conclusion reached in the majority opinion or the reasoning upon which it is based. As the conclusion reached therein is based upon inferences drawn from certain facts, I will first state the facts as disclosed by the record.

It appears that for some time prior to August 1, 1935, defendant A. Otis Birch had been a tenant of certain real property under a 99-year lease dated June 6, 1928, which had been assigned to him immediately following its execution. The rental payable under said lease was $1,000 per month. Said defendant had failed to pay such rental for the period from October, 1934, to April, 1935, and plaintiff had recovered judgments against him therefor in the sum of $6,395.70. Defendant had also failed to pay the rental due under said lease for the months of May, June and July, 1935, and plaintiff had demanded of said defendant the sum of $3,016.89 in payment thereof.

On August 20, 1935, after considerable negotiating between the parties, plaintiff entered into an agreement with defendants A. Otis Birch and M. Estelle C. Birch, his wife, dated August 1, 1935, whereby the indebtedness of said defendant. A. Otis Birch amounting to $9,412.59 was settled for the sum of $6,000, and it was further provided that the rental under said lease be reduced for the ensuing five years on a graduated scale. Commencing August 1, 1935, the rental was reduced from $1,000 to $500 per month. This agreement was performed by defendant and he thereafter paid plaintiff the reduced rental agreed upon for the period commencing August 1, 1935, to May 1, 1936.

Plaintiff thereupon commenced this action alleging that defendants A. Otis Birch and M. Estelle C. Birch, who are husband and wife, induced plaintiff to execute the settlement agreement by means of false and fraudulent representations as to the financial condition of said defendant A. Otis Birch. Lula M. Minter was joined as a defendant on the ground that she participated in the conspiracy to defraud complained of by plaintiff.

The complaint alleges that defendants falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff and he was thereby led to believe that at the time said agreement was executed and for some time prior thereto defendant A. Otis Birch was in an unsafe and dangerous condition financially; that he was indebted to defendant Minter in the sum of $25,000 represented by a note secured by a trust deed on certain real property owned by defendant A. Otis Birch; that he was also indebted to defendant Minter in the sum of $130,000 secured by a pledge of 100,000 shares of stock, being the entire capital stock of the Birch Holding Company, which in turn held all of the stock of the Birch Securities Company and Birch Ranch and Oil Company, which two last-mentioned companies owned practically all of the properties in which the Birches were interested, and that if plaintiff insisted on the payment of the rental provided for in said lease, Minter would sell said stock under the pledge and render Birch insolvent. The complaint further alleged that defendant Minter conspired with defendants Birches to accomplish such fraud. Plaintiff also claimed as against defendant A. Otis Birch the sum of $531.90 as expenses incurred in preparing proof for the action, and also attorney's fees by reason of a clause in the lease providing for the same in any action in connection with the lease. Plaintiff further alleged that the representations were false; that the note, trust deed and indebtedness to defendant Minter were fictitious and nonexistent; that plaintiff in belief and reliance on their genuineness was induced to execute and perform the settlement agreement, and that he was damaged thereby in the sum of $3,413.19 by reason of the settlement of the judgment and the sum of $5,000 by reason of the receipt of less rent for the period of ten months under the lease as modified.

During the course of the trial plaintiff's counsel conceded that if the indebtedness from Birch to Minter actually existed, plaintiff could not prevail in this action.

The findings of the trial court followed substantially the allegations of the complaint, and judgment was entered for plaintiff against all of the defendants for $8,413.59, and against defendant A. Otis Birch individually for $375 expenses preparing for trial and $878.85 attorney's fees.

Defendants' main contention in support of their appeal from the judgment rendered against them is the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the trial court upon which the judgment is based.

The evidence produced by plaintiff as to the misrepresentations alleged to have been made by defendants was as follows: Plaintiff testified that in 1933 defendant, A. Otis Birch, furnished him with a financial statement showing various assets and liabilities; that during the period from March to July, 1935, at a time when said defendant was in default under the lease and had not paid the judgments for rent, two supplementary proceedings were conducted by plaintiff in aid of the enforcement of the judgments against said defendant; that during such proceedings and also in conversations between defendant, A. Otis Birch, and plaintiff, the former stated, that "his financial condition was such that he did not have funds available to pay the rent and that he would have to have a modification; that he simply could not go on. That he owed lots of money and he told me the different amounts that he owed"; that he owed defendant Minter $130,000 on a note and that she held the stock (100,000 shares) of the Birch Holding Company "and that he owed her $25,000 on a second mortgage on the Broadway property;" that "he was living by borrowing from his relatives; he was practically broke. The only available funds he had were those borrowed from his relatives;" that unless "he did get relief he would have to go into insolvency, or bankruptcy, or something." That he had "nothing that was tangible, that you could collect anything on, and everything seemed to be mortgaged to the limit." Plaintiff stated that a certain Stanley C. Benson, whom he claimed was Birch's agent (the consummation of the negotiations culminating in the execution of the settlement agreement on August 20, 1935, were carried on between Benson and plaintiff) had stated to him during the same period that he (Benson) personally knew that the Minter obligations existed, and that he could get Minter to "not close out" Birch if the lease could be modified. Plaintiff further testified that defendant, M. Estelle Birch, stated to him that "they (the Birches) were in bad financial condition," and that she gave him the "impression" that they "were practically broke, insolvent"—she did not say it in those words, but would give you that "impression." With respect to factors upon which plaintiff relied in executing the settlement agreement he testified:

*"I believed * * * that Mr. Birch on August 1st really owed Miss Minter $130,000.00 on the property, which was what I considered the fact * * * and I believed that all I could do would be to attach the stock in order to collect any money, and that Miss Minter would come in with a $130,000.00 mortgage and take it away from me, because I could not pay off that large of a loan, as well as relying upon the fact that Mr. Birch had said unless he did get relief he would have to go into insolvency, or bankruptcy, or something."*

In regard to the basis for this action, plaintiff testified:

"Q. And one of the reasons you filed it (the action) was because you felt she (Minter) did not have enough money to loan Mr. Birch approximately a hundred twenty-five or a hundred fifty thousand dollars? A. $155,000.

"Q. You also said, I believe, that when the representation was made to you that Mr. Birch had given his note, secured by stock, to Miss Minter for $130,000.00 and the additional $25.000.00 was loaned, when the representation was made to you you believed it? A. Yes.

"Q. And you relied upon it in making this adjustment? A. Yes.

"Q. And then subsequently you made up your mind that that was untrue? A. That is right.

"Q. Now, if you had ascertained that the $130,000.00 and the $25,000.00 had actually been loaned, then you would not have brought this suit would you? A. Why, no."

It follows therefore that the representations upon which plaintiff must rely to support the judgment are those concerning the indebtedness to Minter and the pledge of stock and trust deed securing it. The evidence establishes that such representations were made and that plaintiff relied thereon and was thereby induced to execute the settlement agreement. It may be inferred from the circumstances that they were made by Birch for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to act upon them.

It is, however, necessary in order for plaintiff to make out a case, to prove that those representations were false. Defendants assert that plaintiff not only failed to prove the falsity of the representations complained of but that the evidence establishing the truth thereof stands uncontradicted. In order to have a clear understanding of the facts relating to the transactions between the Birches and Miss Minter it is necessary to review the history of these transactions. According to the evidence, A. Otis Birch commenced borrowing money from his cousin, defendant Minter, and her relatives many years before this controversy arose. Various transactions were had between them in which sums were borrowed and partly repaid, including the sale by Birch to Minter of bonds in a reclamation district which Birch agreed to repurchase from her at face value. There were periodic settlements between them of their accounts. During that time and up to 1930, Birch had assets amounting to several million dollars in value. In an adjustment between them in about October, 1934, various obligations were aggregated and adjusted, the upshot being that Birch gave Minter his note for $130,000 and pledged to her as security 100,000 shares of stock of the Birch Holding Company, the same being the entire issue of that company. Plaintiff did not controvert the evidence of such balance as being a genuine indebtedness. I will not attempt to discuss the many transactions leading up to that adjustment; however, from an examination of the evidence I am compelled to conclude that not only did plaintiff fail to sustain the burden of proving that the indebtedness did not exist in 1934 when the adjustment was made, but defendants' evidence sufficiently establishes that it did exist. At about that time Birch caused to be organized three corporations, the Birch Ranch and Oil Company, Birch Securities Company, and Birch Holding Company. He transferred the bulk of his property and holdings to the first two corporations the stock of which was taken by the last-mentioned corporation. The stock of the Birch Holding Company was issued to Mr. and Mrs. Birch, 49% and 51% respectively. A note was given by defendants Birch to Miss Minter on November 8, 1934, for $15,000, secured by a second trust deed on certain property known as the Broadway property which was not included in the transfer to Birch Holding Company. The trust deed provided that it was also to stand as security for future advances. (This note and trust deed are the ones claimed to be fictitious and executed for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff.) There was a first trust deed held by a bank against the property for some $25,000. Defendant A. Otis Birch testified that he received $15,000 upon the execution of the note and trust deed and that an additional $10,000 was advanced by Minter to Birch under the trust deed on or about May 1, 1935. Defendant Birch also testified that in 1932 he transferred to Minter stock in Lyon Storage Company and several other corporations, of the value of from $60,000 to $100,000 in return for her promise to devise to him by will certain real property owned by her; that in accordance with her promise she devised the property to him; and that in 1933 he transferred to her 90% of the stock in the Birch-Smith Storage Company. He also stated that he gave or sold the stock to her. The evidence is conflicting as to the value of the stock, Minter and Birch stating that it was practically without value, and Smith, an officer of the company, testifying that its value in 1933 was $75,000 less an $8,543.32 loss. On July 16, 1935, Benson and defendants Birch entered into an agreement wherein it was recited that said defendants had many financial difficulties, and had transferred most of their assets to the three Birch corporations heretofore mentioned, and the corporations assumed some of Birch's liabilities; that Birches were endeavoring to refinance their and the corporations' obligations; that Benson had purchased some of Birches' property at execution sale. It was then agreed that Benson would obtain for Birches a release of all liability to Minter for the $130,000 and $25,000 indebtedness, and assume and agree to pay the same to Minter; that the stock in the Birch Holding Company was to be transferred to Benson, subject to indebtedness owed to Minter and $76,000 to Mrs. Conaway and to future loans from Minter, not exceeding $200,000 and from Conaway not exceeding $150,000; that the directors and officers of the three Birch Companies were to resign and be replaced by persons of Benson's choice; that Benson was to pay all the debts of the Birch Corporations and some specified personal debts of the Birches; that all refinancing necessary to pay such debts must be so done that the Birches would have no personal liability; that the Birches were to receive sufficient for living expenses; that the market value of the stock of the Birch Holding Company is $1,000,000, and that if and when the corporations' liabilities are refinanced, Benson was to pay Birches $500,000; Birch was to manage the corporations' property subject to the direction of the boards of directors. Pursuant to that agreement Minter released Birches from the $130,000 and $25,000 obligations and accepted in lieu thereof Benson's note, to be secured by a pledge of the stock of Birch Holding Company, and with an agreement that such security could be used for $200,000 additional future loans from Minter to Birches; a voting trust agreement was made between Benson and Birches with reference to the Birch Holding Company stock, under which Birches held the stock as trustee with voting authority and with Benson as beneficiary, and providing that the stock was to be deposited with the trustee, the Birches to issue a trustee's receipt to Benson. The receipt was issued but not endorsed to Minter, and it is not clear whether she received it or not. She testified that as the result of the Benson-Birch agreement of July 16, 1935, she received the stock of the Birch Holding Company issued in Benson's name as security for Benson's note. The Benson-Birch arrangement was discarded in 1937. Benson gave Minter his note for approximately $162,000, the same representing the $130,000 and $25,000 obligations and interest thereon. When the Benson-Birch arrangement was discarded the Birches gave their note for about $172,000 to Minter.

It is plaintiff's position that several inferences may arise from the various transactions engaged in by the Birches and the foregoing events which support the judgment. Among others he refers to the Benson-Birch agreement in which it was recited: "You know we had many financial difficulties; that we formed three corporations last October (the Birch Companies)—for reasons with which you are familiar; that we transferred certain assets to these corporations subject to the assumption by them of certain liabilities; that we retained considerable real estate, and we have been making strenuous efforts to refinance all of our obligations. You yesterday purchased at an execution sale three parcels of real estate formerly owned by us." This is followed by provisions to the effect that in the refinancing plan the personal liability of the Birches is not to be incurred. Plaintiff asserts that from that agreement the inference follows that the three Birch Corporations were formed and the stock of the Birch Holding Company pledged to Minter to avoid liability and defraud creditors. In my opinion that inference does not follow. The personal liability referred to was that which might occur while Benson was endeavoring to refinance Birch's liabilities and adjust his financial difficulties. It was personal liability in the future not the past which was referred to in the agreement. One of the main lawful reasons for incorporating a business is to avoid the risk of personal liability. Therefore it cannot be said that the formation of the corporations supports plaintiff's case. That was entirely legitimate. In any event it must not be lost sight of that the action here is for damages for alleged fraudulent representations, to wit: that the Birchs were indebted to Minter. No issue is presented by the pleadings regarding the use of the corporate entities for fraudulent purposes.

Plaintiff reasons that because there was no endorsement as security for the Benson note to Minter of the trustees' certificate (representing stock in the Birch Holding Company) which arose out of the Benson-Birch agreement of July 16, 1935, and no evidence of its transfer to Minter except her evidence that the stock was delivered to her after July 16, 1935, issued in Benson's name, the court was justified in inferring that there was no pledge of the stock of that company to her in October, 1934, for an indebtedness in the sum of $130,000. No such inference reasonably follows. The matters are not necessarily related to each other. The Benson-Birch agreement of July 16, 1935, provided for the payment of the Birch indebtedness to Minter by Benson, and that the stock was to remain as security therefor. It is clear from what has heretofore been said that from the transactions between Benson and the Birches, Minter was still protected in her security for her obligation originally owed by the Birches to her. There was no change in the essential situation insofar as plaintiff was concerned by reason of the Benson-Birch transaction; there was no such change in Birch's financial position between the time Birch stated to plaintiff that he was indebted to Minter and the time the plaintiff-Birch settlement agreement was executed about August 20, 1935, which would be beneficial to plaintiff. It is true that in that transaction (Benson-Birch) Minter released the Birches on their obligations but the property of the Birches still remained liable therefor under the Benson-Birch agreement.

Plaintiff urges and the majority opinion agrees that from the foregoing transactions it may be inferred that defendants were engaged in a scheme whereby they could reduce their liabilities, reduce their obligations under the lease in which plaintiff was the lessor, and put their property out of the reach of their creditors. From the entire record I cannot agree that such an inference reasonably follows. Rather, the plain purpose seems to have been an honest endeavor on the part of the Birches to alleviate a serious financial involvement to the ultimate benefit of both themselves and their creditors. But even if such an inference may be drawn, it is not sufficient to support the judgment because this is not an action to set aside conveyances as having been made with the intent to defraud creditors. As we have seen, it is an action for damages for fraudulent representation; the gist of such representations are that the Birches were indebted to Minter in the total sum of $155,000 and that the same was secured by liens on real property and corporation stock. It does not follow from a general scheme to reduce their liabilities that the indebtedness to Minter was fictitious or false.

With respect to the falsity of the representations concerning the indebtedness to Minter there is evidence heretofore-mentioned with reference to two transactions: First, that in 1933, Birch transferred to her 90% of the stock in the Birch-Smith Storage Company, and indicated that the value of the assets of that company were about $66,456.68. In regard to that transfer Birch testified:

"Q. How did she (Minter) acquire that stock? A. She bought—loaned me some other money and I gave her the stock.

"Q. When did you give her the stock? A. That is to say, she purchased the stock of us.

"Q. When did you receive the money? A. Oh, about the time that the company was organized." Second, in 1932, Birch transferred to Minter stock in the Lyon Storage Company, Pacific Crest Cemetery, and Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank; that stock had a value of from $60,000 to $100,000. According to Birch's testimony it was made in return for Minter's promise to devise her home place to him by will; she did so devise it. Plaintiff urges, and the majority opinion is based upon the proposition that these transactions constituted a payment by Birch to Minter of his indebtedness; that from the transfer of that stock an inference arises that such transfer was in payment of the debt and that therefore the debt did not exist. I do not believe that position is tenable. As seen, the evidence is uncontradicted that a portion of the stock was transferred in return for Minter's promise to devise property to Birch. Whether that transaction was particularly advantageous to Minter is of no significance. Birch could have made a gift of the stock and plaintiff would have been in no position to complain. As I have stated before, plaintiff is not seeking to have the transfer set aside as in fraud of creditors. There is no law that prevents a debtor from giving one creditor a preference over others; indeed, the rule is to the contrary. Civil Code, § 3432; 12 Cal.Jur. 1009, et seq.

In regard to the transfer of the securities being made in consideration of Minter's promise to devise her property to Birch, we have the uncontradicted evidence that said transfer was not made in payment of the debt; that it was a sale to Minter for which she paid the purchase price. In order to escape the effect of that evidence, the majority decision relies upon two propositions: first, that the trial court could have disbelieved defendants' evidence on the subject; and second, that an inference of payment arose from the transfer of the securities. With the first I agree, but where does that leave us? It must be remembered that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to establish that the indebtedness which Birch claimed to owe Minter was fictitious. But the majority opinion, in order to support its conclusion, declares that there is an inference of payment of such indebtedness by the transfer of the securities above-mentioned, and that the judgment is thereby supported. That premise must fail because there is no such inference. On the contrary the presumption commonly invoked between creditor and debtor, is that when the debtor retains possession of the instrument representing the obligation, it is concluded that the debt has not been paid. Light v. Stevens, 159 Cal. 288, 113 P. 659; Levey v. Henderson, 177 Cal. 21, 169 P. 673. And where payments are made by the debtor to the creditor, but the latter retains possession of the instrument representing the obligation, it is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the payment was made on some obligation other than the one involved in the action. Light v. Stevens, supra. In the case at bar, the notes representing the indebtedness were in Minter's possession, and furthermore, they called for their payment in money. There is no evidence or possible ground for an inference that Minter agreed to accept securities rather than cash in payment of her claim. If it be asserted that there was an inference of her consent to accept payment in a medium different than that called for in her notes, then the result reached by the majority would require the building of an inference upon an inference; that is, first an inference of payment, and then the further and additional inference that a different medium than cash was acceptable to Minter in payment of Birch's obligation to her.

It is also pertinent to observe that even if it be assumed that the debt was paid by the stock transfers prior to 1934, we have the notes themselves which were executed after those transfers. Such instruments are presumed to be supported by adequate consideration. Civil Code, § 3105. There is no evidence rebutting that presumption. The transfers of the stock having occurred prior to their execution could not upon any theory be deemed a basis for an inference of payment. Furthermore, the execution of the notes after the transfer gives rise to the inference that the stock transfers were not payment. There is no room for a contrary inference.

In this connection it should be noted that the majority opinion fails to consider plaintiff's own testimony that his position would have been no different even if the stock had been given by Birch to Minter. He testified:

"Q. I am going to ask you, Dr. Campbell, whether or not if you knew the fact to be that Miss Minter had taken the Birch Storage stock as a gift from Mr. Birch it would have also induced you to make the contract of August 1, 1935? A. That fact alone?

"Q. Yes. A. No.

"Q. Would that have assisted in inducing you to make the contract of August 1, 1935, if you knew that instead of Mr. Birch putting it up as a security for a loan with Miss Minter that in effect Mr. Birch had given her the stock? A. Yes, I think it would have been about the same, it would have been lowering his assets." Thus, even if Birch gave the stock to Minter, plaintiff would have felt he had been defrauded when in fact he would not have been.

In addition to the foregoing, it must not be forgotten that in an action for damages for fraud the burden of proof of all of the elements thereof, including the falsity of the representations, rests upon the one asserting the fraud. McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co., 42 Cal.App. 133, 183 P. 373; Moore v. Giffen, 110 Cal.App. 659, 294 P. 730; 12 Cal.Jur. 816, 818. Plaintiff failed to meet that burden with evidence of any probative force. On the contrary the evidence shows the truth of the existence of the indebtedness to Minter. This is especially true in the light of the firmly established rule that fraud is never presumed, except under certain circumstances where fiduciary relations exist, rather the presumption is in favor of fair dealing. Code of Civil Procedure, § 1963 (19); 12 Cal.Jur. 816, 818.

The undisputed evidence in the record discloses that during the three or four years immediately preceding August 1, 1935, defendant A. Otis Birch became seriously involved financially and his obligations increased to such an extent that he was having great difficulty in meeting them; in fact, plaintiff had recovered two judgments against said defendant for rent which had accrued under the lease in question and plaintiff had been unable to enforce satisfaction of these judgments. Plaintiff does not seriously question the fact that Miss Minter was financially able to make the loans to defendant A. Otis Birch which formed the basis of the representations which plaintiff now asserts were untrue. There was no direct evidence offered to contradict the testimony of defendant A. Otis Birch and Miss Minter that the indebtedness claimed did actually exist, and there is no evidence from which an inference can be drawn that such indebtedness was fictitious or that the representations made by defendant A. Otis Birch to plaintiff in relation thereto were false.

Of course, if the evidence is insufficient to establish the fraud on the part of Mr. Birch, then Minter and Mrs. Birch necessarily are not liable. But assuming it is sufficient, there is a total lack of evidence to charge Minter and Mrs. Birch with Mr. Birch's fraudulent representations. It is conceded in the majority opinion that neither Mrs. Birch nor Minter made any representations to plaintiff, fraudulent or otherwise. In regard to Mrs. Birch, there is no evidence that she had any knowledge that the indebtedness to Minter was fictitious or that any representations were made by her husband in connection therewith. The sole evidence in the record touching upon her connection with the transaction is that she knew nothing about Birch's business transactions; and that she was anxious to have the transaction settled. Surely, that is not sufficient to support a judgment against her.

The basis stated in the majority opinion for holding Minter liable as a conspirator is that she must have known that the indebtedness between her and Birch was fictitious. She made no representations, had no knowledge of any being made, or of the settlement transaction between Birch and plaintiff. There is no showing of any plan, or scheme, or agreement between Birch, Minter and Mrs. Birch to engage in a conspiracy to defraud plaintiff. It is essential to establish a conspiracy that a common plan and design for concerted action be proved. There is no evidence of such an agreement.

For the foregoing reasons, I believe that the judgment should be reversed.

SHENK and CURTIS, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 304

ROWE v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 13449.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 3, 1942.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐1939

A judgment of the Industrial Accident Commission may not be disturbed if the judgment is supported by substantial evidence.

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐1939

An award of the Industrial Accident Commission rating employee's disability at 47½ per cent. was conclusive where there was evidence of a substantial character to support the findings of the commission, notwithstanding that certain "ratable disabilities factors" were not referred to in detail in the finding, since such fact did not disclose that such factors were not considered by the commission.

Proceeding by Everett F. Rowe, petitioner, to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, respondent, awarding compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act for personal injuries.

Award affirmed.

Ernest P. Morgan, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

DORAN, Justice.

Petitioner seeks a review and annullment of the findings and award of the Industrial Accident Commission. In that connection petitioner contends that "the sole question presented by this proceeding is whether or not there is uncontradicted evidence in the record showing permanent disability factors which have not been considered by the commission in rating petitioner for permanent disability." It is argued in support of this contention that the Industrial Accident Commission acted without and in excess of its powers in its rating of the petitioner for permanent disability. As pointed out by petitioner: "Objection to the award is made primarily because the commission rated petitioner for certain disabilities enumerated in the findings * * * and failed and refused to make any findings upon other and serious ratable disabilities which are shown to exist by uncontradicted evidence." Quoting further, the petition contains the following: "Conceding, therefore, that the findings of permanent disability as above described, do support the award, it is contended that there is undisputed evidence of many other ratable disabilities factors which were not considered by the rating department of the commission, if the only disability factors considered are those enumerated in the report and subsequently embodied in the findings. This certainly must be the case in view of the directions given in the report to the effect that if the permanent disability is described in the language of the report the recommended rating would be 47½%. Further objection is made to the award for the reason the findings of permanent disability as described in the findings and award, are indefinite, ambiguous and uncertain as to those factors which are shown therein, as for example: 'Marked limited motion of thumb and fingers of major hand'; 'Marked loss of grasping power.' Such vague expressions of disability have no support in the medical reports filed as evidence in the case. All of the reports, without exception, show a permanent total disability of the right hand." It is further argued in support of the foregoing that the commission "has failed lamentably in its duty to petitioner in rating an obviously 100% total permanent disability at only 47½%"; and that "the award is unjust and unreasonable and should be annulled, in that the commission abused its discretion and in rating petitioner did not take a fair view of the circumstances of the case."

[1] It is evident from the foregoing that petitioner's contentions may be summed up as a disagreement with the judgment of the Industrial Accident Commission. In that connection, however, it is elementary that the judgment of the commission may not be disturbed if supported by substantial evidence. Manifestly, the judgment of the court cannot be substituted for the judgment of the commission.

[2] The record reveals that the findings are sufficient. From the fact that certain "ratable disabilities factors" are not referred to in detail in the findings, it does not necessarily follow that such factors were not considered by the commission. The record further reveals that there is evidence of a substantial character to support the findings. In the circumstances, there can be no question as to the jurisdiction of the commission in the premises and accordingly the award is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 303

BALLAGH v. WILLIAMS et al.

Civ. 13268.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 3, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 28, 1942.

1. Attachment ⇐296

Where third party claim to attached corporate stock was presented to the sheriff on February 2, 1940, but petition of third party claimant was not filed until February 14, 1940, court was without jurisdiction to determine the third party claim since the petition was not filed within 10 days after delivery of the claim to the officer as required by statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 689.

2. Attachment ⇐302

The statute regarding third party claim does not authorize trial of a third party claim where writ of attachment or execution has been levied upon corporate stock. Code Civ.Proc. § 689.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Action to recover a money judgment by J. C. Ballagh against W. J. Williams, wherein attachment was levied on certain corporate stock and Baldwin Robertson filed a third party claim to the stock. From judgment dismissing the petition of the third party claimant, the third party claimant appeals.

Affirmed; appeal from order dismissed.

Baldwin Robertson, in pro. per., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Musick & Burrell, Gwyn S. Redwine, and Clayton Straub, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

In this action to recover a money judgment the plaintiff levied an attachment on the interest of the defendant in and to certain corporate stock. After the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and before levy of execution, a third party claim to the stock was filed. Upon the hearing of the third party claim, plaintiff's objection to any evidence was sustained on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to determine the merits. From the minute order and judgment of dismissal of the petition of the third party claimant, this appeal is prosecuted.

[1] The claim was presented to the sheriff in accordance with the provisions of section 689, Code of Civil Procedure, on February 2, 1940. The petition was filed February 14, 1940, more than ten days after the delivery of the claim to the officer. The code section provides that the petition must be filed within ten days. Therefore, the court was without jurisdiction to hear the matter.

[2] This appeal must be determined against appellant for another and additional reason. There is no authorization under section 689, Code of Civil Procedure, for the trial of a third party claim where a writ of attachment or execution has been levied upon corporate stock. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Riggs, 39 Cal.App.2d 679, 104 P.2d 125.

The judgment is affirmed; the appeal from the minute order is dismissed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 115

TAYLOR et al. v. ODELL.

Civ. 13218.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 25, 1942.

1. Mines and minerals ⇐73

The right of a lessee under an oil and gas lease depends wholly upon the terms of the lease agreement.

2. Mines and minerals ⇐73

Where granting clause of oil and gas lease provided that lessor leased to lessee certain portions of the lands under lease by the lessor and there was no reservation of the surface rights in the lessor, lessee's rights were not limited to mere production and lessee had power to make contract regarding use of surface by another.

3. Mines and minerals ⇐105(2)

Where corporate owner of oil and gas lease was owned by two persons, one of whom managed the corporation, a contract made by manager concerning part of surface of land covered by oil and gas lease which contract was ratified by co-owner was valid.

4. Mines and minerals ⇐74

Where neither oil and gas lease nor assignment of it reserved any surface rights and assignee had taken possession of land involved, which was owned by several persons, one of such persons was without power to grant original lessee any surface rights.

5. Evidence ⇐441(4)

Any prior oral agreement could not vary the terms of a written oil and gas lease. Code Civ.Proc. § 1856.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇐76(1)

A restriction against assignment is a "personal covenant" made for the benefit of the landlord and does not "run with the land".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Covenant Running with the Land" and "Personal Covenant".

7. Landlord and tenant ⇐76(3)

In the event of an assignment of rights under a lease contrary to a covenant forbidding such assignment, such assignment is valid, but the landlord alone has the option to forfeit the lease for the breach of covenant; and if the landlord ignores the breach the lease is valid as to all other parties.

8. Mines and minerals ⇐74

Where assignor of oil and gas lease containing inhibition against subletting any portion of premises without assignor's written consent knowingly permitted sublessee to occupy part of land, it "waived" requirement of written consent.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

9. Mines and minerals ⇐60, 79(1)
Tenancy in common ⇐3

An owner of 20 per cent. of the production of an oil company was a "tenant in common" with such company and was "estopped" to challenge the title of another oil company which as lessee in possession of property sublet a portion of it to such owner's cotenant.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop" and "Tenant in Common".

10. Mines and minerals ⇐74

Where lessee of oil and gas lease sublet a portion of surface of land involved for a royalty interest in net sales of sublessee and later assigned the lease alone, the assignor did not part from its title to the royalty.

11. Frauds, statute of ⇐63(2)

That assignment of royalty interest in net sales of oil company was not made in writing was immaterial in action for accounting.

12. Mines and minerals ⇐79(7)

Where all parties concerned were satisfied and were plaintiffs and judgment creditors, the fact that owner of royalty interest in net sales of sublessee oil company had given interest to his wife was no defense to action for accounting of the royalties.

13. Limitation of actions ⇐39(9)
Mines and minerals ⇐74

Where lessee in possession under oil and gas lease sublet by parol agreement portion of surface for royalty interest in net sales of oil company during productive life of well, sublessor became "owner" of such percentage upon occupancy by sublessee, which was "ratified" by passing of each day sublessee remained in peaceable possession and such royalty was an "incorporeal interest in real property" and person holding the royalties for sublessor was a "trustee", and action to collect royalties was an "action to recover rents and royalties earned by realty" which was not governed by limitation relating to "contract not in writing" but by limitation relating to "action not hereinbefore provided for". Code Civ.Proc. §§ 339, 343.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Action Not Hereinbefore Provided for", "Action to Recover Rents and Royalties Earned by Realty", "Contract Not in Writing", "Incorporeal Interest in Real Property", "Owner", "Ratify", and "Trustee".

14. Limitation of actions ⇐103(1)

An action against a trustee holding money for beneficiary arose on trustee's repudiation of his trust, and action brought less than four years thereafter was timely. Code Civ. Proc. § 343.

15. Frauds, statute of ⇐144

When a tenant comes into possession of land under a lease, he is "estopped" to aver its invalidity under the statute of frauds.

Code Civ.Proc. § 1962, subd. 3; Civ.Code, § 1624.

16. Estoppel ⇐83(1)

When a party has by his own declaration, act, or omission intentionally led another to believe a particular thing is true and to act upon such belief, he cannot in any litigation arising out of such declaration, act, or omission be permitted to falsify it. Code Civ.Proc. § 1962, subd. 3; Civ.Code, § 1624.

17. Frauds, statute of ⇐144

Where one interested with oil company in another property procured sublease to company which went into possession and parties acted upon lease for several months and later royalties due to sublessor were collected by such person, in action by sublessor to collect such royalties, such person was "estopped" to set up statute of frauds on ground that promise to pay royalties was not in writing. Code Civ.Proc. § 1962, subd. 3; Civ.Code, § 1624.

18. Frauds, statute of ⇐155

Where answer pleaded statute of frauds, a replication thereto was not required. Civ. Code, § 1624.

19. Trial ⇐395(5)

Where ultimate facts found by court were such as to create an "estoppel" to assert the statute of frauds, they constituted a sufficient finding on the issue whether agreement was barred by the statute. Civ. Code, § 1624.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

20. Appeal and error ⇐1071(3)

That evidence was insufficient to support finding that oil well produced continuously after November 4, 1933, was immaterial where accounting made by trustee and accepted by plaintiff beneficiary and entered into the judgment showed that production ceased in November, 1938.

21. Mines and minerals ⇐74

An agreement by one interested in oil lease to convey royalty interest in company's net sales for sublease of surface to certain land to company which was given possession after agreement by sublessor's manager was supported by a "consideration".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Consideration".

22. Appeal and error ⇐1071(3)

That finding that defendant received proceeds of royalty subsequent to April 20, 1935, was unsupported by the evidence was immaterial where, under accounting stipulated to, defendant accounted for the moneys earned by the royalty after such date.

23. Judgment ⇐256(5)

That findings that one plaintiff was entitled to income from royalty were inconsistent with judgment for all three plaintiffs was immaterial.

24. Licenses ⇐18½

The corporate securities act was enacted to protect the investor and not the seller, who could not take advantage of his own failure to secure permit before selling royalty. Civ.Code, § 3517; St.1917, p. 673.

25. Appeal and error ⇐1050(1)

Where oil company originally owning interest in net sales of another oil company was party to litigation to collect royalty which before defendant's repudiation of agreement had been paid to one owner of company and his wife and both owners of company had consented to gift of royalty to such wife, and husband and wife were parties to the action, admission of parol evidence to prove assignment of royalty from oil company to one co-owner was harmless.

McCOMB, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Desmond, Judge.

Action by Wallace Taylor and others against A. J. Odell involving an agreement by defendant to assign a royalty in an oil well. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Louis N. Whealton, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Joseph A. Ball, of Long Beach, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

This action arose out of an agreement by defendant to assign to plaintiffs a royalty in an oil well for a consideration which was rendered. Defendant appeals.

On July 30, 1933, defendant procured a lease from one Seeger upon a small lot in the Huntington Beach oil field. He assigned the lease to the Two-and-One Oil Company, reserving unto himself the 20 per cent interest in the net production. In August, 1933, Two-and-One commenced drilling and on the 4th of November placed its well on production. Adjacent to and east of the Seeger lease lies the Colter lease at first acquired by defendant on the 10th day of April, 1933. Twenty-two days later defendant assigned the Colter lease to the Odell Petroleum Corporation and in the following July it was assigned to the American Petroleum Company, which "was owned by plaintiff Wallace Taylor and one F. E. Fairfield" and was managed by Taylor.

Prior to the 4th day of November, 1933, defendant agreed with Wallace Taylor and his corporation as follows: That the American Petroleum Company and Wallace Taylor will allow the Two-and-One Oil Company to use a portion of the surface of the Colter property for the purpose of erecting thereon a pipe rack and slush pit to be jointly used in drilling the Two-and-One well and the well on the Colter lease until such time as the Two-and-One well shall be drilled to completion. As a consideration for the use of such premises, Odell agreed to convey to plaintiffs one-half of one per cent of the net sales of petroleum products from the Two-and-One well and to cause such revenues to be paid to plaintiffs.

After the Two-and-One well had been placed on production, plaintiffs consented that Two-and-One might construct on the Colter lease a pumping unit to be used to pump the Two-and-One well. Pursuant to the agreement made with Taylor, defendant caused the income from the promised royalty to be paid to plaintiffs less the deduction of its pro rata share of the maintenance and operation expense. These payments continued from the first sales on November 4, 1933, to and including April 20, 1935. After the latter date defendant refused to pay any part of the revenues earned by the royalty. Neither would he account to the plaintiffs therefor notwithstanding such revenues were at all times received by defendant until the well became a dry hole in August, 1938.

Upon finding the foregoing facts, the court ordered, by interlocutory decree that defendant make an accounting of the full amount due plaintiffs. Upon the accounting rendered under stipulation of the parties the court entered its final judgment. The question determined by the trial court was whether defendant was obligated to pay to plaintiffs the net revenues earned by the ½ of one per cent royalty in the Two-and-One well after April 22, 1935. We have to decide only whether in entering judgment for plaintiffs the trial court committed prejudicial error.

[1-3] (1) Appellant argues that under the lease held by plaintiffs the lessee acquired no general estate in the land or any proprietary rights over it except to produce oil; that, therefore, the lease to the Two-and-One Oil Company of the surface of the Colter lot was ultra vires. Also, he insists that plaintiff corporation and not Wallace Taylor was the holder of the lease. But the granting clause of the lease held by the American Petroleum Company reads as follows: "that the lessor * * * leases to the * * * lessee" certain portions of the lands under lease by the lessor. Nowhere in the lease is there any reservation of the surface rights in the lessor. The right of a lessee under a lease depends wholly upon the terms of the lease agreement. 20 Cal.Jur., sec. 7, p. 363; Kline v. Guaranty Oil Co., 167 Cal. 476, 140 P. 1; Smith v. United Crude Oil Co., 179 Cal. 570, 178 P. 141; Lineberger v. Delaney Petroleum Corp., 8 Cal.App.2d 153, 47 P.2d 326. Many oil leases are granted in which the activities of the lessee are restricted to that of exploring for and producing oil. But such is not the case in a lease granted by Colter and his associates. As to Taylor's agency for the American in granting the privilege of occupying his company's lot we need only to mention that Taylor's action was approved by Fairfield, his co-owner.

[4, 5] Appellant also contends that he had permission from Colter to use the surface of the latter's lot. This contention must fail for two reasons: (1) Colter was only one of the several owners of the property held under lease by the American Petroleum Company. If such permission had been of any value, it would have required the signatures of the McAdoos, the Wootens, Mr. Sadler and Mrs. Colter. If Colter had been the sole owner, any agreement made by him with his lessee prior to to the execution of the written lease could not vary the terms of the lease. Code Civ.Proc. § 1856. (2) The testimony of Colter was that in his conversation with defendant with reference to the reservation of any surface rights, he said to defendant: "I care nothing about that; go down and get me a well, you can use it all." The attitude of Colter at the time of the execution of the lease to defendant explains the absence of any reservations to surface rights in the Colter lease. Neither did defendant in his assignment of the lease to the Odell Petroleum Corporation reserve any surface rights. Likewise the assignment by the last named corporation to the American Petroleum Company contained no reservation. The only entity possessed of power to grant the surface rights to the Colter property was the American Petroleum Company which at that time was the lessee in possession. The lessor was out of possession with no rights reserved.

[6, 7] Appellant argues that the assignment of the Colter lease by the Odell Petroleum Corporation to the American Petroleum Company inhibited the sub-letting of any portion of the premises without the written consent of the assignor. But a restriction against assignment is a personal covenant made for the benefit of the lessor and does not run with the land. Laird v. McPhee, 90 Cal.App. 136, 265 P. 501. In the event of an assignment of rights under a lease contrary to a covenant forbidding such assignment or sub-letting, such assignment is valid but the lessor alone has the option to forfeit the lease for the breach of covenant. Chapman v. Great Western Gypsum Co., 216 Cal. 420, 14 P.2d 758, 85 A.L.R. 917; Buchanan v. Banta, 204 Cal. 73, 266 P. 547; Ruppe v. Utter, 76 Cal.App. 19, 243 P. 715. If the lessor ignores the breach the lease is valid and subsisting as to all other parties. Ibid.

[8] Even though the inhibition against assignment or subletting contained in the assignment from the Odell Petroleum Corporation to the American Petroleum Company were binding upon the latter company, it was waived by the assignor. Since the Odell Petroleum Corporation with full knowledge of all the facts, permitted the occupancy of the Colter property by the Two-and-One Company in operating its pipe rack and slush pit on the Colter lease, it waived the requirement of a written consent to the tenancy of the Two-and-One Company. Delijian v. Rosenburg, 134 Cal. App. 264, 25 P.2d 228.

[9] But defendant is estopped to challenge the title of the American Petroleum Company. The latter company as lessee in possession was the only power capable of preventing the occupancy of the Colter premises by the Two-and-One Company. The latter company made use of the premises as long as it had need of them. Having held quiet and peaceable possession for the term, the tenant is without authority to question the title under which he has occupied the premises. Odell, as the owner of 20 per cent of the production of the Two-and-One Company, was a tenant in common with the company and in the production of oil with the corporation. La Laguna Ranch Co. v. Dodge, 18 Cal.2d 132, 114 P.2d 351, 135 A.L.R. 546. It was for his immediate advantage to obtain the use of the surface rights on the Colter lease for the maintenance of the slush pit and pipe rack. Having made the agreement for the tenancy of his corporation the latter entered into and remained in undisturbed possession as tenant of the American Petroleum Company. The Two-and-One Company having continued its possession under the protection of its lessor, there is no theory upon which it can escape its contractual obligation to the American Petroleum Company. Under such circumstances the status of the lessor's interest is of no concern to the lessee. Ghiradelli v. Greene, 56 Cal. 629. The only occasion whereby the lessee might escape from its obligation to pay the rental promised at the beginning of the tenancy is for the lessor to repudiate his obligation as such lessor. The tenant is estopped from challenging the title of the lessor.

[10] (2) The contention that plaintiffs are not the real parties in interest is based upon the facts: (1) that plaintiff corporation assigned the Colter lease to the Petrol Corporation February, 1936, 2½ years before the well went dry; (2) that by no writing did plaintiffs reserve any rental; (3) that the claim which forms the basis of plaintiffs' complaint was for the use and occupation of the Colter lot; (4) that the agreement was for the benefit of the Colter lease as well as for the Two-and-One well and that it was a covenant running with the land. Because of the recited facts, defendant insists that the assignment of the lease without reserving any part of the rentals was a transfer of those rentals. But it is not suggested that the American Petroleum Company sold the royalty in the Two-and-One well to the Petrol Corporation. That royalty was a separate item of property owned by plaintiff corporation and was not dependent upon its continued operation of the Colter lease. It could alienate the royalty or the lease at its pleasure. If it sold the lease and kept the royalty such sale did not becloud the title to the royalty. The Petrol Corporation has not asserted title to the royalty and justly so for it was not mentioned in connection with the sale of the Colter lease.

[11, 12] It is argued that there was no competent writing in evidence to prove the assignment to Taylor of the royalty which, it is claimed, would be necessary in view of the fact that the royalty was an interest in real property. This is immaterial. The gift of the income from the royalty to Mrs. Taylor was an intra-family matter. It presents no difficulty here because all parties concerned are satisfied and are plaintiffs and judgment creditors.

[13, 14] (3) The action is not barred by section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Although the agreement was in parol and was made prior to November 4, 1933, and was repudiated in April, 1935, three years and two months before this action was filed, these facts are collateral to the main event, towit, the assignment of a percentage of the production of the oil well. Plaintiff corporation became owner of that percentage immediately upon defendant's occupancy of the Colter lot. Such ownership was ratified by the passing of each day with the Two-and-One in peaceable possession. The percentage of production was to be payable during the productive life of the well,—an indefinite period. For that reason, it was an action to recover rents and royalties earned by realty (Dabney v. Edwards, 5 Cal.2d 1, 53 P.2d 962, 103 A.L.R. 822; Callahan v. Martin, 3 Cal.2d 110, 43 P.2d 788, 101 A.L.R. 871) and could not therefore be governed by section 339. The money payable under such an assignment of royalties is not the fruitage of the contract to assign. Defendant did not promise the money. Neither did he promise to pay for the use of the Colter lot. He agreed to assign the royalty interest in the well's production. He merely delivered the instrument by means of which plaintiffs became entitled to draw upon the bounty of the Two-and-One well. Such royalty was an incorporeal interest in real property "subject to the same requirements and protected by the same safeguards." La Laguna Ranch Co. v. Dodge, supra [18 Cal.2d 132, 114 P.2d 355, 135 A.L.R. 546]. The moneys paid plaintiffs from the sales of the well's production was received as an incident to ownership, the same as rent from any real property. The assignment of the royalty interest in the well of the Two-and-One Oil Company vested in plaintiffs an interest in the oil produced by that company. When the money for production was received by Two-and-One, it was held in trust for plaintiffs if the company had knowledge of defendant's assignment. La Laguna Ranch Co., v. Dodge, supra; Dougherty v. California Kettleman Oil Royalties, 9 Cal.2d 58, 69 P. 2d 155; Schiffman v. Richfield Oil Co., 8 Cal.2d 211, 223, 64 P.2d 1081. But it is admitted that the entirety of the revenues earned by the 20 per cent interest reserved to defendant upon his assignment of the Seeger lease to the Two-and-One Company was paid to him until the well became exhausted. Upon his receipt of the moneys he held ½ of one per cent of the total net sales for the use and benefit of plaintiffs for the reason that they owned ½ of 1 per cent interest in the realty which produced the oil sold.

As long as he held those moneys he was trustee for plaintiffs and was under obligation to account to plaintiffs for the moneys in his custody. Plaintiffs' action for an accounting and to enforce payment thereof is governed by section 343, Code of Civil Procedure; Hannah v. Canty, 175 Cal. 763, 768, 167 P. 373. The period of limitation began on the date of defendant's repudiation of his trust, April, 1935, less than four years prior to the filing of the action.

[15-18] (4) Defendant contends that the action is barred by the statute of frauds (sec. 1624 of the Civil Code) because the agreement to convey the fractional interest in the well was verbal. He argues that it was an "agreement to convey an interest in real property"; that defendant did nothing to take it out of the statute of frauds; that defendant's sole interest was his percentage in the production of the well; that Walt Hughes was sole owner of the Two-and-One Company, the assignee of defendant; that while Two-and-One constructed the pipe rack and pit on the Colter premises, appellant did nothing; that plaintiff expended no money and suffered no detriment. But defendant is blind to the significance of his own engagement. Plaintiffs performed all that was to be done for defendant in return for the royalty to be assigned to them by defendant. Upon his promise of the royalty they granted the use of their property to defendant's assignee and tenant which erected its pipe rack and slush pit thereon. Both of these were continuously used by Two-and-One as long as the well produced. Defendant acknowledged and verified the agreement with plaintiffs and admitted the fulfillment by plaintiffs of their obligation. Also, commencing with the first month of the well's production, defendant transmitted to plaintiffs monthly ½ of 1 per cent of the total net proceeds of the sales of the production and forwarded with each remittance a statement of the monthly earnings of the well. Such compliance of defendant with his agreement were acknowledgments by him that he held the ½ of 1 per cent of the net sales of the well's production in trust for plaintiffs. Such transmission of plaintiffs' share was not "part payment" of the price for the use by its tenant of the Colter lot. Defendant paid absolutely nothing after he exchanged his percentage of interest in the well for the use of the premises. His function thereafter was merely that of trustee and messenger to convey to plaintiffs their own moneys which were revenues from their own royalty interest. Under such circumstances, to allow defendant to escape his obligation by invoking the statute of frauds would be to defeat the just claim of a litigant by the perpetration of a fraud upon him. When a tenant comes into possession of land under a lease, he is estopped to aver its invalidity under the statute of frauds. Otherwise the courts would promote injustice by approving a fraud inhering in the consequence of thus setting up the statute. Dutton v. Interstate Investment Corp., 19 Cal.2d 65, 119 P.2d 138; Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88, 134 Am.St.Rep. 154; Heffernan v. Davis, 24 Cal.App. 295, 140 P. 716. Whenever a party has, by his own declaration, act or omission, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief, he cannot, in any litigation arising out of such declaration, act or omission be permitted to falsify it. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1962, subd. 3. Defendant made his agreement with plaintiffs for the benefit of his own tenant, Two-and-One Oil Company. That tenant took possession of plaintiffs' premises and enjoyed peaceable possession as long as it had a need for the premises. By protecting the tenant in its occupancy of the Colter lot plaintiffs completed performance of their part of the contract. For more than seventeen months defendant faithfully fulfilled his obligation under the agreement. Such conduct removed the contract from the bar of the statute of frauds. Under such circumstances performance by plaintiffs of their part of the agreement was clearly induced by defendant's promise to assign the royalty and to pay its revenues. This fact taken with defendant's own subsequent behavior in fulfilling his part of the obligation bars the statute as a defense. Dougherty v. California Kettleman Royalties, Inc., supra. There is no merit in its contention that plaintiffs failed to plead an estoppel. The answer pleads the statute of frauds and a replication thereto was not required under our practice.

[19] (5) Since the ultimate facts found by the court are such as to create an estoppel to assert the statute of frauds, they constitute a sufficient finding on the issue as to whether the agreement was barred by the statute. After finding that the agreement was made, the court found that plaintiffs fully met all their obligations under the contract; that the Two-and-One Oil Company used plaintiff's land, erected a pipe rack and slush pit; that these were actually used until the well was completed (as provided by the agreement); and that defendant actually paid the earnings of the royalty in accordance with the terms of the agreement for more than 17 months.

[20, 21] (6) It is contended that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding that the well produced continuously after November 4, 1933. That is immaterial for the reason that the accounting made by defendant and accepted by plaintiffs and entered into the judgment shows that production ceased in October, 1938. It is suggested that the agreement for the assignment of the royalty is not supported by a consideration. This is cured by the other findings, supported by the evidence, that the consideration for the royalty was the occupancy of the Colter lot held under lease by plaintiff corporation which consented to the occupancy by the Two-and-One Company. While Taylor negotiated with defendant the plaintiff corporation provided the consideration. As half owner and manager of the American, Wallace Taylor's agreements on behalf of his company were binding, particularly so after it had accepted the benefits of his transaction. This disposes of the criticism of the finding that defendant promised to pay plaintiffs the royalty although Taylor made the agreement.

[22, 23] It is suggested that the finding that defendant received the proceeds of the royalty subsequent to April 20, 1935, is unsupported by the evidence. But under the accounting stipulated to, defendant accounted for the moneys earned by the royalty after April 20, 1935. The attack upon the findings that Taylor was entitled to the income from the royalty by reason of the assignment from plaintiff corporation as inconsistent with the judgment for all three plaintiffs is without merit for the reason that the judgment runs in favor of all three plaintiffs.

All other criticisms of the findings have been answered by the discussions of other assignments.

[24] (7) Defendant argues that the agreement to assign the royalty to plaintiffs was void because no permit had been issued by the Division of Corporations for its transfer by defendant. The Corporate Securities Act, St.1917, p. 673, was enacted to protect the investor, not the seller. While a sale or agreement to issue may be void, if violative of the act, at the behest of the purchaser, not in pari delicto, it was not the purpose of the legislature to confer an advantage upon the seller of a security. If it was wrong for defendant to sell the royalty, he cannot take advantage of his own wrongful act to avoid his obligation after deciding that he preferred to repudiate it. Civ.Code § 3517; Western Oil & Ref. Co. v. Venago Oil Co., 218 Cal. 733, 24 P.2d 971, 88 A.L.R. 1271.

[25] Contention is made that it was error to admit parol testimony to prove the assignment of the royalty by plaintiff corporation to Wallace Taylor. Whatever of merit may inhere in such assignment is dispelled by the facts: (1) that the Taylors had received the income from the royalty prior to defendant's repudiation of his agreement, and (2) that the American Petroleum Corporation, owned by Taylor and Fairfield, is also one of the plaintiffs and both of its owners consented to the gift of the income from the royalty to Mrs. Taylor. If there had been no proof of an assignment of the royalty to Mrs. Taylor, the evidence abundantly establishes that the management and owners of American Petroleum Corporation made her a gift of its revenues.

All other assignments are disposed of by the foregoing discussion.

Judgment is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

McCOMB, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs after trial before the court without a jury in an action to recover sums alleged to be due for breach of a contract to pay certain percentages of royalties received by defendant, the latter appeals.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiffs (respondents), so far as material here the essential facts are:

Defendant obtained two separate oil leases, one on property owned by a Mr. Colter and others, hereinafter referred to as the Colter lease, and the other upon property owned by Mr. Seeger and others, hereinafter referred to as the Seeger lease. The two properties are adjacent. Defendant assigned the Colter lease to Odell Petroleum Corporation, which in turn assigned it to the American Petroleum Company, reserving unto himself a 30% royalty interest. He assigned the Seeger lease to the Two-and-One Oil Company, reserving unto himself a 20% royalty. The Seeger property was too small to permit the erection of an oil derrick and the necessary appurtenances, and defendant obtained permission from the American Petroleum Company for the assignees of the Seeger lease to use a portion of the surface of the property covered by the Colter lease. Defendant agreed to pay Mr. Wallace Taylor, one of the plaintiffs, one-half of one per cent of the production from the Seeger lease for such permission. The American Petroleum Company and the Two-and-One Oil Company erected on the Colter property certain oil well operating facilities, which were used by both companies. Defendant paid Mr. Taylor one-half of one per cent of the production from the Seeger lease from November, 1933, until April, 1935. He then refused to make further payments. Thereafter plaintiffs sued to recover such percentage. Among other defenses defendant by his answer pleaded the Statute of Frauds, and evidence was introduced tending to prove that the alleged agreement for the payment of royalty was an oral one and for the transfer of an interest in real property. The trial court failed to make a finding upon the issue raised by this defense.

This is the sole question necessary for us to determine:

Where there is substantial evidence, if believed by the trial judge, to sustain defendant's plea that the Statute of Frauds bars a recovery by plaintiffs, is it prejudicial error for the trial court to fail to make a finding on this issue?

This question must be answered in the affirmative. The law is settled in California that it is reversible error for the trial court to fail to make a finding upon a material issue properly raised by the pleadings if, as in the instant case, there is any evidence which would support a finding in favor of such defense. Due v. Swartz, 22 Cal.App.2d 217, 218, 70 P.2d 716; Lyden v. Spohn-Patrick Co., 155 Cal. 177, 182, 100 P. 236; Knoch v. Haizlip, 163 Cal. 146, 153, 124 P. 998.

There is no merit in plaintiffs' assertion that defendant is estopped from invoking the defense of the Statute of Frauds, for the reason that estoppel as to any defense which would otherwise be available to the defendant (appellant) under the facts stated in a complaint may not be relied upon by the plaintiff (respondent) unless the estoppel is pleaded. Cohen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 32 Cal.App.2d 337, 347, 89 P.2d 732. Therefore, since in the instant case estoppel was not pleaded in plaintiffs' complaint as amended, the plaintiffs may not rely thereon to defeat defendant's defense of the Statute of Frauds.

For the foregoing reasons in my opinion the judgment should be reversed.

50 Cal.App.2d 201

THORMAN v. DOME PRODUCING & DEVELOPING CO., Limited (COOPER, Intervener).

Civ. 12909.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

1. Corporations ⇐202

In action by president of corporation which was controlled by president and his father, against corporation to recover on corporation's note payable to president, and executed by president and president's father as secretary of the corporation, stockholder alleging in complaint in intervention that corporation was not indebted to president on the note, and that corporation had other good defenses to action on note, but that corporation's board of directors was controlled by president and secretary, and that board would not, in good faith, defend the action, but would commit the corporation to a judgment, was entitled to intervene and make a defense on behalf of the corporation.

2. Appeal and error ⇐913

Where plaintiff and defendant filed both general and special demurrers to application for leave to intervene, and demurrers were overruled, but several days later, court made an order denying application for leave to intervene, District Court of Appeal on intervener's appeal was required to assume that although complaint in intervention had not actually been filed, it was treated as having been filed for the purposes of the demurrers.

3. Parties ⇐44

In judging the sufficiency of a complaint in intervention, rigid tests should not be applied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Louis C. Drapeau, Judge.

Action on a note by M. J. Thorman against the Dome Producing & Developing Company, Limited, wherein Guy E. Cooper, a stockholder of defendant, sought to intervene to defend the action. From an order refusing to permit Guy E. Cooper to intervene, he appeals

Order reversed.

Dudley Robinson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Loughman & Loughman, of Ventura, for plaintiff-respondent.

Charles F. Gerard, of Ventura, for defendant-respondent.

SHINN, Justice.

This appeal from an order refusing a stockholder the right to intervene to defend an action against a corporation, has been submitted under a stipulation waiving oral argument and the filing of a brief by respondent. A sufficient statement of the sole question involved is found in appellant's brief, reading as follows: "Should a stockholder be permitted to intervene as party defendant in an action against a corporation upon a promissory note payable to plaintiff, executed by plaintiff as president, and her father as secretary, of the corporation which they control, where the complaint in intervention denies that the corporation is indebted to plaintiff upon said note, and alleges that said corporation has other good and legal defenses thereto, but that its board of directors is controlled by plaintiff and her father, that it will not, in good faith, defend said action, but will commit the corporation to a judgment therein, and that it is necessary for said stockholder to intervene and make a defense on behalf of said corporation, which he desires to do?" The answer is in the affirmative.

The action against the corporation is upon a promissory note executed by the corporation in favor of plaintiff. The proposed complaint in intervention alleged that intervenor was a stockholder of the defendant corporation; that the note in question had been signed for the corporation by plaintiff as president and by her father as secretary, who, with a brother of plaintiff, constituted the entire board of directors and the owners of all of the authorized capital stock of the corporation; that shortly after the note was given, intervenor made a purchase of stock of the corporation, was elected and continued to be a director and president, the other directors being plaintiff's father and brother. It was alleged that the note was given without consideration and in pursuance of a scheme to sell privately owned stock to the corporation, for resale and for the purpose of financing the corporation, in evasion and violation of the Corporate Securities Act, St.1917, p. 673, and in violation of law, in that the scheme contemplated the illegal purchase by the corporation of portions of its own stock; that the transaction in which the note was given was never submitted to or ratified by the stockholders of the corporation and that the corporation was not indebted to plaintiff upon any account; that intervenor purchased his stock without knowledge of the existence of the note and without knowledge of the facts which led to its execution. It was further alleged that the corporation had valid defenses to the action; that plaintiff held the note for the use and benefit of her father, who dominated and controlled the action of a majority of the board, namely, himself and his son; that intervenor had demanded of the directors that they defend the action upon the note but they refused to and would not make any bona fide defense thereto and intended to and would suffer judgment to be given against the corporation; that the property of the corporation was under attachment in the suit on the note and that it had no funds on hand or available for the payment of any judgment that might be rendered; and that intervenor, if allowed to do so, would present bona fide defenses to the action.

[1, 2] An order to show cause was issued why leave should not be granted to file a complaint in intervention. Service of the order to show cause was made and proof of service, together with a copy of the proposed complaint in intervention, was filed. When the application for leave to intervene came on for hearing plaintiff and defendant filed both general and special demurrers thereto. These demurrers were overruled, but several days later, before the trial of the case, the court made an order denying the application for leave to intervene. We must assume that although the complaint in intervention had not actually been filed, it was treated as having been filed for the purposes of the demurrers. The case was one in which a stockholder should have been allowed to intervene for the purpose of defending the action. Shively v. Eureka, etc., Mining Co., 1900, 129 Cal. 293, 61 P. 939; Eggers v. National Radio Co., 1929, 208 Cal. 308, 281 P. 58.

[3] We should not apply rigid tests to the complaint in intervention in judging of its sufficiency. The essentials of a case for intervention were alleged and the court so ruled. Had the ruling been otherwise, appellant no doubt would have been given an opportunity to amend in order to meet the objections. We must therefore treat the pleading as sufficient as a complaint in intervention.

The order is reversed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 356

GOODMAN v. MEYERS.

Civ. 12859.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 6, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 30, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 4, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐994(3)

Any inconsistency between testimony of a witness at the time of trial and prior statements in a deposition presents a "question of fact" for the determination of the trial court, with which an appellate court will not ordinarily interfere.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other defintions of "Question of Fact".

2. Account, action on ⇐7

In action to recover balance allegedly due for the transfer by plaintiff to defendant of contracts for the conditional sale of automobiles, conflicting evidence sustained findings that defendant became indebted to plaintiff upon an open and current account and on account of goods and choses in action sold and delivered to defendant at his request.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

Where transferee agreed to pay cash for assignments of contracts for the conditional sale of automobiles, if contract price did not exceed the value of the automobiles sold, but such assignments were actually made for a portion of the contract price in cash and delivery of duebills for the balance, which transferor testified were payable immediately, whether the parties by their conduct modified their agreement with respect to unconditional cash payments was a "question of fact" for the determination of the trial court in an action by transferor to recover amount unpaid, evidenced by such duebills, as upon an open and current account and on account of goods and choses in action sold and delivered to transferee at his request.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

4. Appeal and error ⇐994(3)

The credibility of witnesses is a question for the trial court to determine, and only where testimony is so improbable as to be impossible of belief will an appellate court interfere.

5. Sales ⇐475

In action to recover upon duebills, which were executed and delivered by assignee in connection with assignment of contracts for the conditional sale of automobiles, and which reflected the portion of agreed price for such assignments not paid in cash, evidence was sufficient to establish which of the duebills sued on were payable immediately and which represented the excess of contract price over the value of the automobile sold under such contract, which became payable only when contract price was paid in full.

6. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

In action to recover upon duebills, which were issued in connection with the assignment of contracts for the conditional sale of automobiles and which reflected the unpaid portion of the agreed upon price for such assignments, whether, in case of a series of repossessions and resales of the same automobile, each succeeding duebill issued by assignee of contracts, canceled the preceding duebill, so as to preclude recovery thereon, was a question for the determination of the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Caryl M. Sheldon, Judge.

Action by Sam Goodman against L. J. Meyers to recover money allegedly due plaintiff on account of the purchase by defendant of contracts for the conditional sale of automobiles, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking the recovery of money allegedly owing him. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Mark L. Herron and Samuel H. Robinson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Orloff & Katz, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

In this action plaintiff sought to recover a judgment for money due from defendant as the purchaser of various contracts for the conditional sales of automobiles. The court found in plaintiff's favor on three causes of action, an open book account, assumpsit for goods sold and delivered and for an accounting. Defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking the recovery of money alleged to be owing from plaintiff to defendant. The trial court found that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the amount of $31,149.55 and that plaintiff was indebted to defendant in the sum of $15,603.72. Judgment was accordingly entered in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $15,545.83, from which judgment defendant has appealed.

Conceding that, in general, the findings of fact are supported by the "uncorroborated" testimony of plaintiff, defendant directs our attention to certain contradictions and inconsistencies in the testimony and seeks to have this court declare that plaintiff's testimony is so inherently improbable that it is insufficient to sustain the findings.

From plaintiff's testimony it appears that for many years prior to the commencement of this action plaintiff had been engaged in the used car business and defendant had been in the automobile financing business. Since 1930 defendant has purchased from plaintiff, at a discount, many conditional sales contracts on automobiles sold by plaintiff. At the commencement of their business relationship it was agreed that defendant would purchase contracts from plaintiff at a discount and would pay the purchase price in cash; however, in those instances where the contract price exceeded the value of the car, defendant agreed to pay cash to plaintiff in an amount equal to the value of the car and to issue plaintiff a due bill for the excess which was to become payable only when the conditional vendee had been paid the contract price in full. It was further agreed that when the contract price exceeded the value of the car plaintiff would transfer title to the contract by an assignment in writing in the nature of a written guarantee. In all other cases, title to the contracts was to be transferred merely by delivery. Most of the conditional sales contracts purchased by defendant were transferred merely by delivery but a few were transferred by written assignment. Despite the agreement to pay cash for the contracts it was defendant's custom upon delivery of a contract to pay the major portion of the purchase price in cash and within two or three days thereafter to deliver to plaintiff a memorandum of the transaction (referred to by the parties and hereinafter as a due bill) which usually indicated that an additional sum was due plaintiff. The due bills contained entries showing the balance of the contract price, the amount of cash which defendant had paid plaintiff and the amount of his discount. Where the cash amount paid plaintiff plus defendant's discount was less than the balance of the contract price, the difference was reflected on the due bill as an amount owing to plaintiff. Some of the due bills were issued in connection with the resale by plaintiff of automobiles which had been repossessed by defendant, or by plaintiff on defendant's behalf. Plaintiff's bookkeeper kept a record of all due bills received. Numerous demands were made on defendant for payment of the due bills and each time defendant did not deny that the bills were then due and payable, but stated that he would have to look at his records to see how much was due plaintiff. Upon defendant's failure to pay, plaintiff commenced the present action to recover the total amount of all unpaid due bills. At the trial a number of the due bills were introduced in evidence as plaintiff's "Exhibit 1." "Exhibit 2" was a list, compiled from plaintiff's business records, of the amounts of all due bills, totaling $31,411.75, including the total of the due bills in "Exhibit 1." "Exhibit 3" consisted of contracts which had been transferred by written assignment. Plaintiff failed to prove that any of the due bills issued in connection with the contracts in "Exhibit 3" were payable and was therefore not permitted to recover upon them.

[1-4] The trial court's findings to the effect that defendant became indebted to plaintiff upon an open and current account and on account of goods and choses in action sold and delivered to defendant at his request are attacked as being unsupported by the evidence. It is argued that there is no substantial evidence to prove that the due bills upon which recovery was allowed were unconditionally due and payable. Defendant concedes that plaintiff's testimony supports such findings but contends that the testimony is uncorroborated and inconsistent with other testimony of plaintiff in his deposition. Any inconsistency between testimony of a witness at the time of trial and his prior statements in a deposition presents a question of fact for determination of the trial court with which an appellate court will not ordinarily interfere. Miller v. Schimming, 129 Cal.App. 171, 18 P.2d 357; Smarda v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 265, 36 P.2d 701. Although the testimony was conflicting, there is substantial evidence to sustain the questioned findings. Both parties gave testimony to the effect that defendant agreed to pay cash for the contracts which were transferred by delivery only. Plaintiff testified that the due bills which defendant gave him for contracts which were transferred by delivery and not by written assignment were to be paid at once. There was no necessity for corroboration of plaintiff's testimony. Whether the parties by their conduct modified their original agreement with respect to unconditional cash payments was a question of fact for the determination of the trial court under all of the circumstances. The credibility of any witness is a question for the trial court to determine and it is only where his testimony is so improbable as to be impossible of belief that an appellate court will interfere with findings of fact based upon such testimony. We cannot say that plaintiff's testimony was inherently improbable.

[5] It is contended that the evidence is insufficient to prove which of the due bills sued on were issued in connection with contracts transferred by delivery only (and therefore immediately payable) and those which were issued in connection with the transfer of contracts by written assignment, but the record contains sufficient evidence to establish this distinction. Both parties testified that with very few exceptions all contracts were transferred by delivery only. A number of contracts which contained written assignments from plaintiff to defendant were introduced in evidence as plaintiff's "Exhibit 3." These contracts were identified by plaintiff as the contracts which he had transferred by assignment in writing.

[6] Defendant also contends that many of the due bills were shown by the evidence to have been cancelled by the issuance of later due bills in connection with the resale of an automobile which had been repossessed. The entire argument is based upon defendant's testimony to the effect that in a series of repossessions and resales of the same car, each succeeding due bill issued to plaintiff cancelled the preceding one. This testimony falls far short of proving an agreement to cancel any due bills and, at most, merely created a conflict in the evidence for the determination of the trial court. Plaintiff testified that the due bills listed in plaintiff's "Exhibit 2," which included due bills which defendant claims were cancelled, were immediately due and payable. None of the due bills issued in connection with the resale of an automobile following repossession in any way indicated that they were intended to cancel any preceding due bill, all of which were permitted to remain in plaintiff's possession. Defendant directs our attention to four series of repossession and resale transactions and endeavors to demonstrate that if all of the due bills issued in each series of sales were paid defendant would be required to pay out more money than he received from the conditional vendees. On the contrary, the evidence shows that with few exceptions, each conditional vendee in a series of resale transactions paid a large proportion of the balance due upon his contract before defaulting. In many instances defendant actually received much more than a given car was worth and much more than the balance due upon the original contract of sale as a result of successive sales following repossessions. With reference to two of the series of resales, defendant gave testimony inconsistent with his present contention, stating that he considered both the original and subsequent due bills to be owing to plaintiff. In three of the four transactions of which defendant complains the last due bill issued to plaintiff shows that nothing was due, although the preceding due bills had been for amounts as high as $85. Since the evidence shows that plaintiff spent considerable time and money in reconditioning cars which had been delivered to him for resale, it would be unreasonable to assume that he would accept a due bill showing no balance due in cancellation of a due bill for a substantial amount. This court is powerless to interfere with the trial court's findings upon such conflicting evidence.

Upon the assumption that his contentions above considered would be upheld, defendant has devoted a large portion of his briefs to mathematical computations in an attempt to show that the judgment must be reduced. However, since we have been unable to sustain defendant's contentions, it is only necessary to state that there is substantial evidence to support the judgment in the amount found by the trial court to be due plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., concurred.

McCOMB, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the foregoing case.

50 Cal.App.2d 289

PEOPLE v. STEIN.

Cr. 3509.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 2, 1942.

1. Robbery ⇐26

In robbery prosecution, alleged discrepancies in witnesses' description of the two bandits and the clothing they wore was for consideration of triers of fact, whose duty it was to pass upon the strength or weakness of the identifications.

2. Criminal law ⇐444

In robbery prosecution, permitting witness to testify that photograph shown to her was photograph of the second man taking part in robbery was not error, notwithstanding that second man had not been apprehended up to time of trial.

3. Criminal law ⇐719(1)

In robbery prosecution, prosecutor's argument that victim first identified bandit from photographs shown to victim by officers investigating case, rather than at trial, did not constitute "misconduct" on ground that record was silent as to any identification of bandit by any pictures, where there was testimony from which it could properly be argued that bandit had been identified by a photograph prior to the trial.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Morris Stein was convicted of robbery, burglary and assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Nathan O. Freedman, of Hollywood, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

At a jury trial defendant was found guilty of robbery, burglary and assault with a deadly weapon. He has appealed from the judgments and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant makes three assignments of error: That the evidence is insufficient to support the convictions; that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence a photograph of a man not on trial; and that the prosecutor was guilty of misconduct in addressing the jury.

[1] At about midnight on the night of March 13, 1940, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Berrens returned to an apartment on Shoreham Drive in Los Angeles. They unlocked and opened the door of the apartment, switched on the light and were confronted by two bandits armed with revolvers. Mrs. Berrens was robbed of jewelry of the approximate value of $6,500. At the trial both Mr. and Mrs. Berrens identified defendant as one of the two bandits who had robbed them. This testimony is sufficient to sustain the verdicts. Defendant's criticism of the identifications, directed mainly to alleged discrepancies in the description of the two bandits and the clothing they wore, was for the consideration of the triers of fact, whose duty it was to pass upon the strength or weakness of the identifications. We find nothing in the attack on the identifications which would justify a reversal by a reviewing court.

[2] During the course of her testimony Mrs. Berrens described the appearance of both bandits. On being shown a photograph of one Alfred Weisenberger she stated that the photograph was that of the other man taking part in the robbery. This second bandit had not been apprehended up to the time of the trial. The court did not err in permitting the witness to testify concerning the photograph. Undoubtedly a description of the appearance of the second bandit was proper, and if he had been present in the courtroom her testimony pointing him out as the second bandit would have been proper. The use of the photograph was a proper method for describing the second bandit. People v. Smith, 215 Cal. 749, 761, 12 P.2d 945.

[3] During his argument to the jury the prosecutor stated: "After the crime has been reported, the officers assigned to the particular case make an investigation, and photographs are shown to the victim and the victim says, yes, that is the man. That is the time the identification was made of the defendant, and not now, as Mr. Freedman would have you believe." Defendant now asserts that "the record is silent as to any identification of appellant by any pictures whatsoever," and argues that the prosecutor was guilty of misconduct in making the statement to the jury. The reporter's transcript discloses that when the witness Fred Berrens was describing the appearance of the bandits who had robbed the apartment he gave this testimony:

"Q. Have you seen any pictures of Mr. Stein? A. Yes.

"Q. How many? A. I believe two. Full face and profile.

"Q. Have you ever seen him in person other than today since then? A. No." From this testimony it could properly be argued that defendant had been identified by a photograph prior to the trial. The prosecutor had the right to present to the jury his views of the proper deductions or inferences to be drawn from the evidence.

The other assignments of misconduct on the part of the prosecutor during his argument to the jury are not of sufficient importance to justify an extended discussion. The prosecutor did not in any instance exceed the bounds of legitimate argument.

The judgments and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 264

BECK v. AZCARATE et al.

Civ. 13184.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 28, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 27, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⇐173(5)

Under statute providing that every motor truck having an unladen weight of 4000 pounds or more, and every truck tractor irrespective of weight when operated upon any highway outside the corporate limits of any city shall be equipped with at least two flares or two red lanterns, the term "motor truck" does not include the term truck tractor, and truck tractor and semitrailer having an unladen weight of 4000 pounds or more need not carry flares when operated inside corporate limits of a city. Vehicle Code, § 590, as amended by St.1937, p. 620, and § 618, St.1935, p. 201.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Motor Truck".

2. Automobiles ⇐173(5)

Statute providing "every motor truck having an unladen weight four thousand pounds or more, and every truck tractor irrespective of weight when operated upon any highway outside the corporate limits of any city" shall be equipped with at least two flares or two red lanterns is to be construed as though a comma appeared between the words "weight" and "when" so as to express the intention of the Legislature that both types of designated vehicles should be required to carry flares only when operated outside a city. Vehicle Code, § 590, as amended by St.1937, p. 620, and § 618, St. 1935, p. 201; Vehicle Code, § 33, St.1935, p. 95, and § 32.5, St.1937, p. 412.

3. Statutes ⇐181(1), 200

Punctuation should be considered in interpreting a statute, but it is not a controlling factor and is subject to the basic proposition that the legislative intent as expressed in the language of the statute governs.

4. Statutes ⇐181(2), 184, 200, 217

In determining the legislative intent it is proper to consider the history, object and reasonableness of the statute, and if such factors reveal an intent that is not in harmony with the punctuation, the latter must give way to the former.

5. Automobiles ⇐173(5)

Where 1935 statute providing that every truck or commercial vehicle operated on any highway outside corporate limits of any city shall be equipped with and at all times carry at least two flares applied to every truck and commercial vehicle irrespective of weight, but only when operated outside corporate limits of city, 1937 amendment replacing the words "every truck" by the words "every motor truck having unladen weight of four thousand pounds or more" and the words "commercial vehicle" by the words "every truck tractor irrespective of weight," the object of the 1937 amendment was to exclude light trucks and small commercial vehicles from the requirement when operated outside a city. Vehicle Code, § 590, as amended by St.1937, p. 620, and § 618, St. 1935, p. 201.

6. Statutes ⇐181(2)

The language of a statute must be given a reasonable interpretation. Civ.Code, § 3542.

7. Automobiles ⇐12

Where first sentence of statute required certain vehicles to be equipped with flares when operated on a highway outside corporate limits of city, and second sentence specified that the flares were to be used when the vehicles were disabled upon highway during certain time, the word "highway" as used in the second sentence means a highway upon which the designated vehicles are required to be equipped with flares when operated, that is, highway outside corporate limits of a city. Vehicle Code, §§ 81, 590, as amended by St.1937, pp. 617, 620.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Highway".

8. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)
Automobiles ⇐246(13)

Where tire of truck tractor and semitrailer blew out and driver parked at night on highway within corporate limits of a city and was struck by automobile while changing tire, in truck driver's action for personal injuries, instruction that truck driver was guilty of negligence if he failed to place warning flares in front or in rear of his truck tractor and semitrailer when it was disabled and parked at night on highway within corporate limits of city, was erroneous and required reversal of judgment for defendant. Vehicle Code, § 590, as amended by St.1937, p. 620, and § 618, St.1935, p. 201.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Ernest D. Wagner, Judge.

Personal injury action by George E. Beck against Tony R. Azcarate and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Goble, Twitchell & Stephan, of Santa Maria, for appellant.

Smith & Smith, of Santa Maria, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

This action is to recover damages for personal injuries to plaintiff as the result of being struck by an automobile operated by defendant Cyphert and owned by defendant Azcarate. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment upon a verdict in favor of both defendants.

Plaintiff contends that the court erred in two respects: First, in giving an instruction that plaintiff was guilty of negligence if he failed to place warning flares in front of or to the rear of his truck tractor and semitrailer when it was disabled and parked at night upon the highway within the corporate limits of a city; and second, in refusing to instruct the jury upon the doctrine of the last clear chance. The first contention must be sustained.

About 11 o'clock p. m., on May 25, 1940, plaintiff was driving a truck tractor and semitrailer, 53 feet in length, in a southerly direction on U. S. Highway 101, and as he was entering the corporate limits of the city of Santa Maria one of the tires blew out. He ascertained that the blown tire was one of the dual set of tires on the right rear of the tractor. He then drove forward about 200 yards to a place where there was more light, and parked on the highway about 4 feet from the right-hand curb in order to allow sufficient space in which to remove the blown tire. There were two street lights near the place where he parked and a large neon sign and several small lights at an auto court across the highway. He then proceeded to remove a tire from a dolly wheel on the left side of the truck tractor to replace the blown tire, and while he was so engaged he was struck by an automobile which was driven by defendant Cyphert in a southerly direction. Defendant Azcarate was riding in the automobile.

It was uncontradicted that at the time of the accident plaintiff's truck tractor and semitrailer was disabled and parked upon the highway within the corporate limits of the city of Santa Maria and that warning flares or other signals had not been placed in the front of or in the rear of the truck tractor although there had been a reasonable time to place them. It was agreed that the unladen weight of the truck tractor, without the semitrailer attached, was over 4000 pounds.

The court gave the following instruction: "You are instructed that section 590 of the California Vehicle Code, a part of the law of the State of California in force at the time of the happening of the accident here in question, provided in part as follows: 'Every motor truck (emphasis added) having an unladen weight of 4,000 lbs. or more * * * shall be equipped with and at all times carry at least two flares or two red lanterns, or two warning lights or reflectors, which reflectors shall be of a type approved by the Department. When any vehicle above mentioned or any trailer or semi-trailer is disabled on the highway at any time from a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise, a warning signal of the character indicated above shall be immediately placed at a distance of approximately 100 ft. in advance of, and 100 ft. to the rear of such disabled vehicle. The warning signals herein mentioned shall be displayed continuously during the times mentioned * * * while such vehicle remains disabled upon the highway.'

"Therefore, in this case, if you find that plaintiff's parked vehicle at the time of the accident was a truck tractor and semitrailer (emphasis added) and had an unladen weight of over 4,000 lbs. and that said vehicle was disabled and that plaintiff was making repairs on said vehicle and that plaintiff, after parking said vehicle and prior to commencing said repairs, did not place on the highway 100 ft. in front of or 100 ft. to the rear of said parked vehicle any flare, lantern, warning light or reflector, then, in that case, you must find that the plaintiff was himself guilty of negligence in his failure so to do and if you find that his negligence proximately contributed in any degree or manner to the happening of the accident, then your verdict must be for the defendants."

It will be noted that the instruction refers, in the first paragraph, to "Every motor truck (emphasis added) having an unladen weight of 4000 pounds" and then states that such motor trucks are required to carry flares and when disabled on the highway at night shall place flares at the front or rear of the vehicle. It will be noted further that the instruction then states, in the second paragraph, that "Therefore, in this case, if you find that plaintiff's parked vehicle at the time of the accident was a truck tractor and semitrailer (emphasis added) and had an unladen weight of 4000 pounds * * * and that plaintiff * * * did not place * * * any flares * * * you must find that plaintiff was himself guilty of negligence * * *."

Appellant contends that the giving of this instruction was error for the reason that section 590 of the Vehicle Code does not require that warning flares be placed when a truck tractor is disabled at night within the corporate limits of a city.

Section 590 of the Vehicle Code, St.1937, p. 620, upon which the instruction was based is as follows: "Every motor truck having an unladen weight of four thousand pounds or more, and every truck tractor irrespective of weight when operated upon any highway outside the corporate limits of any city or town [emphasis added] shall be equipped with and at all times carry at least two flares or two red lanterns, or two warning lights or reflectors, which reflectors shall be of a type approved by the department. When any vehicle above mentioned or any trailer or semitrailer is disabled on the highway at any time mentioned in section 618, a warning signal of the character indicated above shall be immediately placed at a distance of approximately one hundred feet in advance of, and one hundred feet to the rear of such disabled vehicle. The warning signals herein mentioned shall be displayed continuously during the times mentioned in section 618 while such vehicle remains disabled upon the highway."

The time mentioned in section 618, St. 1935, p. 201, above referred to is "* * * from a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise * * *."

It is clear from a literal reading of section 590 that truck tractors are required to carry flares only when operated outside the corporate limits of a city. In other words that a truck tractor operated within the corporate limits of a city is not required to carry flares. The case now before the court involves a truck tractor within the corporate limits of a city.

[1] A comparison, however, of the instruction and the section indicates that the trial judge did not follow the literal reading of section 590 as it applies to truck tractors, but apparently construed the section in the manner now urged by the respondent, namely, that the term "motor truck" is a broad term which includes the term "truck tractor," and that section 590 requires that a motor truck having an unladen weight of 4000 pounds or more must carry flares whether operated outside or inside the corporate limits of a city, and that a truck tractor and semitrailer having an unladen weight of 4000 pounds or more must carry flares whether operated outside or inside the corporate limits of a city. This construction cannot be upheld.

According to the Vehicle Code, sections 33, St.1935, p. 95, and 32.5, St.1937, p. 412, these vehicles are defined as follows: "A 'motor truck' is a motor vehicle designed, used or maintained primarily for the transportation of property," and, "A 'truck tractor' is a motor vehicle designed and used primarily for drawing other vehicles and not so constructed as to carry a load other than a part of the weight of the vehicle and load so drawn." Inasmuch as both such vehicles are self-propelled and are used for property transportation, it may be considered in referring to such vehicles generally that a truck tractor and semitrailer attached constitute a vehicle which is for general intents and purposes and in appearance a motor truck. Section 590, however, refers to motor trucks and truck tractors separately and makes specific and different provisions as to each with respect to weight as a basis for determining when each should carry flares. Therefore, for the purposes of the section, that is, when flares should be carried by such vehicles, it cannot be held that the term motor truck includes the term truck tractor.

If, however, that were a proper construction to place upon those terms as used in that section, it would not mean that such a truck tractor and semitrailer must carry flares when operated within a city.

Respondents' contention that a truck tractor and semitrailer having an unladen weight of 4000 pounds or more must carry flares within a city, is based upon the construction, above stated, that a motor truck of such weight is required to carry flares when operated within a city, and that a truck tractor is a motor truck, and therefore, a truck tractor and semitrailer of such weight must carry flares within a city.

[2] Apparently, the construction that a motor truck of such weight must carry flares whether operated outside or inside the corporate limits of a city, is based upon the fact that there is no comma in the first sentence of the section 590 between the words "weight" and "when." Since the comma is not there, it is contended that the phrase "when operated upon any highway outside the corporate limits of any city" does not apply to motor trucks of such weight. If a comma were at that place the sentence would read: "Every motor truck having an unladen weight of 4000 pounds or more, and every truck tractor irrespective of weight, when operated upon any highway outside the corporate limits of any city * * * shall be equipped with * * * flares * * *." If the section were thus punctuated it would clearly express the undoubted intention of the legislature that both types of the designated vehicles should be required to carry flares only when operated outside a city. It is only the absence of a comma at that place which presents a question as to whether a motor truck is required to carry flares when operated within a city. It is conceded by respondent that there would not be such a requirement if there were a comma between the words "weight" and "when" in the first sentence.

[3, 4] While it is true that punctuation should be considered in interpreting a statute, it is not a controlling factor and is subject to the basic proposition that the legislative intent as expressed in the language of the statute governs. In re Sekuguchi, 1932, 123 Cal.App. 537, 11 P.2d 655. In determining the legislative intent it is proper to consider the history, object and reasonableness of the statute, and if these factors reveal an intent that is not in harmony with the punctuation, then the latter must give way to the former.

[5] The hisory of section 590 is that it first appeared in the Vehicle Code in 1935 and at that time it read as follows: "Every truck or commercial vehicle, operated on any highway outside the corporate limits of any city or town, shall be equipped with and at all times carry at least two flares * * *." It is clear that the section as originally enacted applied to every truck and commercial vehicle irrespective of weight, and only when operated outside the corporate limits of a city. It will be noted that in the 1937 amendment to section 590 (which is the section under consideration) that the words "every truck" in the 1935 section were replaced by the words "every motor truck having an unladen weight of four thousand pounds or more," and the words "commercial vehicle" were replaced by the words "every truck tractor irrespective of weight," and that the words "operated upon any highway outside the corporate limits of any city or town" were not changed but remain in the 1937 amendment. It will be noted further that there was a "comma" in the 1935 section immediately following the designation of the vehicles involved and preceding the words "operated on any highway outside the corporate limits of any city or town * * *."

The evident object to be accomplished by the 1937 amendment was to exclude light trucks and small commercial vehicles from the requirement that they carry flares when operated outside a city, and to require large heavy trucks and truck tractors to carry flares when operated outside a city. In order to accomplish this a weight limit was set as to trucks, and no limit was set as to truck tractors, and the identical words relative to operating outside the corporate limits of a city were retained in the amendment. The legislature undoubtedly intended that the requirement that flares be carried should apply not only to truck tractors only when operated outside a city, but should apply also to motor trucks having an unladen weight of 4000 pounds or more only when operated outside a city. Both parties concede that the 1935 section required flares only when the vehicles there designated were operated outside a city. There is nothing in the 1937 amendment to indicate that it was intended to change that feature of the 1935 section, except the omission of the comma.

[6] The language of a statute must be given a reasonable interpretation. Sec. 3542, Civ.Code; In re Estate of Todd, 1941, 17 Cal.2d 270, 109 P.2d 913. As previously shown, it is clear from the plain language of section 590, now under consideration, that truck tractors are required to carry flares only when operated outside a city. There appears to be no particular reason or any reason for a distinction between a motor truck and a truck tractor in so far as a requirement to carry flares in or out of a city is concerned. The reasonable interpretation to place upon the statute is that motor trucks likewise are required to carry flares only when operated outside a city. Therefore, if the truck tractor and semitrailer operated by plaintiff be regarded as a truck tractor within the meaning of section 590, plaintiff was required by the plain language of the statute to carry flares only when outside a city, and if such vehicle be regarded as a motor truck according to the interpretation of the trial court (which is not upheld), the plaintiff was required to carry flares only when outside a city.

The first sentence of section 590 requires certain vehicles to be equipped with flares. The second sentence specifies when the flares, with which the designated vehicles are required to be equipped, must be used. The second sentence states: "When any vehicle above mentioned or any trailer or semitrailer is disabled on the highway [emphasis added] at any time mentioned in section 618, a warning signal of the character indicated above shall be immediately placed * * *."

[7] Respondent refers to the definition of the word "highway" in section 81 of the Vehicle Code, St.1937, § 617, as follows: "'Street' or 'highway' is a way or place of whatever nature, publicly maintained and open to the use of the public for purposes of vehicular travel." He contends that since the term "highway" is not defined as a street outside the corporate limits of a city that it must be presumed that the word "highway" in the second sentence of the section 590 means a street or highway either in or out of a city. Since it is clear according to the literal reading of the first sentence that the legislature required that truck tractors be equipped with flares only when operating upon a "highway" outside the corporate limits of a city, it is unreasonable to conclude that the legislature intended, by the use of the word "highway" in the second sentence, that a truck tractor which was not required to be equipped with flares when operating within a city should use flares when the truck tractor is disabled on a "highway" in a city. The only reasonable interpretation that can be given to the word "highway" as it is used in the second sentence is that it is the highway upon which the designated vehicles are required to be equipped with flares when operated, that is, the "highway" outside the corporate limits of a city. It would be unreasonable to expect that flares be used upon a highway where it is not required that flares be carried.

A consideration of the history, object and reasonableness of the section 590 reveals a legislative intent that is not in harmony with the punctuation of the first sentence and therefore the omission of the comma between the words "weight" and "when" in that sentence should be disregarded and the section construed as if the comma were there.

The second contention of appellant is that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury upon the doctrine of the last clear chance. By reason of the disposition that is made of this appeal upon the first contention of appellant there is to be another trial of the action, and inasmuch as the applicability of the doctrine of the last clear chance will depend upon the evidence as presented upon the re-trial, it is unnecessary to determine the second contention upon this record.

[8] For the reason that the court erred in instructing the jury that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence if he failed to place warning flares in front of or in the rear of his truck tractor and semitrailer when it was disabled and parked at night on the highway within the corporate limits of a city, the judgment is reversed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and SHINN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 235

FINLEY et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN MATEO COUNTY et al.

Civ. 12071.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 27, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐608(1)

The statute in requiring as prerequisite to perfection of an appeal a transcript of the "acts or statements of the court" has reference to such acts or statements which amount to rulings upon questions submitted to the court and does not contemplate remarks made by court or counsel in nature of a running colloquy preceding rulings by the court. Code Civ.Proc. § 953a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Acts or Statements of the Court".

2. Appeal and error ⇐608(1)

Since court reporter is an officer of the court and under its control, neither party should be denied the right of appeal because reporter has not entered in transcript matter which the law does not require. Code Civ.Proc. § 953a.

3. Appeal and error ⇐612(1)

The superior court was not authorized to refuse to certify the reporter's transcript for an appeal on the ground that it did not comply with the statute, in that certain side remarks of defendant's attorney which prompted some of the rulings should have been included in the transcript in order to explain the court's language in making such rulings where the transcript did, in compliance with the statute, contain all the acts or statements of the court, objections or exceptions of counsel, and all matters to which they related. Code Civ.Proc. § 953a; Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal Rules, rule II, § 7.

Proceeding in mandamus by James B. Finley, a minor, etc., and others, to compel the Superior Court of San Mateo County and the judge thereof to certify the reporter's transcript on appeal.

Writ issued.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Hoge, Pelton & Gunther and A. Dal Thomson, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

J. A. Branson, Francis N. Foley, and Hugh F. Mullin, Jr., all of San Mateo, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

In an action tried to a jury the plaintiff had a verdict and judgment from which the defendant gave notice of appeal under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Concurrently with the filing of said notice the defendant gave due notice to the clerk to prepare a transcript, and arranged with the court reporter for his compensation for transcribing his notes and preparing a reporter's transcript. In due time the clerk certified and filed a clerk's transcript, and the reporter certified and filed the reporter's transcript. After due notice these were both presented to the respondent court for certification. After several hearings the respondent refused to certify the reporter's transcript upon the ground that it did not fully comply with the conditions of the code section.

In presenting the petition for a writ of mandate the petitioner has pleaded and proved that he has done everything which the law demands to perfect his appeal from the judgment. All the steps taken by him were in strict accordance with the procedure prescribed. The court reporter testified at the hearing before respondent court in reference to the transcript presented for approval: "Everything is in there that I took down." No evidence was taken disproving the correctness of the transcript or the certification of the reporter. But respondent expressed the opinion that something else was said by counsel or by the court which did not appear in the transcript. It seems to be the position of respondent that a passage between court and counsel occurred during the closing argument of the attorney for the plaintiff, and that interruptions were made by the attorney for the defendant. There is no suggestion that the reporter's transcript does not contain all the "acts or statements of the court, also all objections or exceptions of counsel, and all matters to which the same relate." The position of respondent is that certain side remarks of the attorney for the defendant which prompted some of the rulings should have been included in the transcript in order to explain some of the language used by the court in making these rulings. Specifically it appears that, while counsel for the plaintiff was making his closing argument to the jury, objections or exceptions were made by counsel for the defendant. These objections, with the court's rulings thereon, were entered in the transcript, but the reporter did not make note of remarks made by either the court or counsel in the nature of a running colloquy preceding the rulings.

[1] The code section under which the appeal is taken does not require the court reporter to transcribe the oral argument of counsel or the remarks or argument upon an objection or exception, or all the explanations or "remarks" of the court in reference thereto. In requiring a transcript of the "acts or statements of the court" the section has reference to such acts or statements which amount to rulings upon questions submitted to the court. This has been the accepted practice and has been made certain in criminal cases by rule II, section 7 of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal which provides that the notes of the reporter shall be transcribed "* * * excluding therefrom all statements and opinions of the court not constituting rulings, and all arguments of counsel, unless such statements, opinions or arguments were objected to or assigned as error or misconduct at the time they were made."

[2, 3] The plain answer to the position here assumed by the respondent is that, if in any case either the trial court, or counsel, desires the reporter to make note of anything of this character it would be a simple matter to request him to do so, but since the reporter is an officer of the court, and under its control, neither party should be denied their right of appeal because the reporter has not entered in the transcript matter which the law does not require.

Let a writ issue as prayed.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 352

PLUMMER v. EHLERS.

Civ. 2951.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 5, 1942.

1. Waters and water courses ⇐231

Where offer of sale of land acquired for taxes by an irrigation district was conditionally made and required an acceptance approved by district's trustees before a binding contract of sale and purchase could be created, and plaintiff's application to purchase land was rejected by trustees, no "contract" was created and plaintiff acquired neither a legal nor equitable interest in land.

See Words and Phrases, Permannet Edition, for all other definitions of "Contract".

2. Waters and water courses ⇐231

Where offer by an irrigation district to sell land to which district had acquired tax title because of delinquent district assessments was made to the former owner or his assigns, and rehabilitation plan under which land was offered for sale defined "former owner" as meaning owner of land when it was deeded to district, and plaintiff obtained a quitclaim deed from predecessor of one who owned land when it was conveyed to district, plaintiff was not an "assignee of the former owner" within meaning of plan and could not purchase land. St.1933, p. 1961.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Assignee of the Former Owner".

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Harry C. Westover, Judge Assigned.

Action by W. M. Plummer against E. O. Ehlers to quiet title to land and for ejectment. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

R. J. Welch, Jr., and H. M. Dougherty, both of Riverside, for appellant.

Sarau & Thompson and Roy W. Colegate, all of Riverside, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action to quiet his title to land in the Palo Verde Irrigation District in Riverside County, California, and for ejectment. Defendant had judgment and this appeal followed.

No question is seriously argued under the cause of action for ejectment so we will confine ourselves to the questions presented in the action to quiet title against E. O. Ehlers. As the action was dismissed as to all other defendants, we will refer to E. O. Ehlers as the defendant. The pleading is in the usual form and alleges "that the plaintiff now is and for five (5) years last past, together with his immediate predecessors in interest, has been the owner in fee and entitled to the possession of that certain lot and parcel of land. * * *"

Alfred Solano was the owner of the property in 1921. After five years' default in the payment of taxes, it was deeded to the state on August 16, 1927. On May 27, 1926, Solano conveyed the property to Charles L. Marble. On June 15, 1927, Charles L. Marble executed a quitclaim deed to the property to Solano. Solano, by quitclaim deed dated July 18, 1929, and recorded July 23, 1929, conveyed the property to Edward Galle. In 1931, the property was conveyed by deed to the Palo Verde Irrigation District after non-payment of assessments. By deed dated December 3, 1934, recorded on December 6, 1934, Solano quitclaimed the property to W. M. Plummer, the plaintiff in this action. On July 24, 1936, the State of California conveyed the property, which had been deeded to it because of delinquent taxes as distinguished from delinquent district assessments, to the Palo Verde Irrigation District.

On December 17, 1934, Solano commenced an action to quiet his title against Edward Galle and Myrta Blandford, also known as Myrta Blanford. The decree quieting his title was rendered and entered on May 13, 1935. This information is gained from an inspection of the original records in that action which were admitted in evidence by reference but were not copied into the record.

This completes the chain of title as shown by the record. The following facts are gathered from various documents offered in evidence but which were excluded on objections made by defendant.

The irrigation district assessments on more than ninety-eight per cent of the property in the district had become delinquent and a large proportion of the property had been deeded to the district. Taxes were also delinquent and much of the property had been deeded to the state. Default had been made on some of the bonds of the district and there had been a total default on all of the bonds since 1931. On August 18, 1932, the district entered into a certain contract of lease and option with Florence Clark, representing the owners of more than eighty-five per cent in amount of bonds outstanding, looking to some reorganization of the district. (Apparently Florence Clark subleased some considerable portions of the property.) On March 1, 1934, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation granted the district a loan of $1,039,423 with which to refund its bonded indebtedness.

In order to service this loan it became necessary to get the property in the district back into private ownership and on the assessment rolls. This the trustees of the district proposed to do under the provisions of an act approved June 5, 1933. Stats.1933, page 1961.

In 1934 the trustees caused a plan for the rehabilitation of the district to be prepared. This plan provided for the sale at a fraction of the delinquent assessments and taxes of the various parcels "to the former owner or his assigns, when acquired by the District, the State and District tax title to all land which has been deeded to State and District for taxes now delinquent. The term 'former owner' means the owner at the time the land was deeded to the District and prima facie to the person to whom the land was assessed for district purposes at that time. The district may, on evidence of title submitted by an applicant to whom the land was not so assessed, determine that such applicant is the former owner or his assignee." Definite provisions were made for the protection of the right to purchase by the sub-lessees of Florence Clark, the lease and option to her being cancelled and the district agreeing to assume her obligations under her contracts. It was particularly provided that "as between a sublessee of Florence Clark who shall be found to have complied with the terms of his sublease and the former owner or his assigns, the District Board shall conclusively determine which shall be entitled to purchase, lease or option, as their respective interests may appear, after hearing as hereinbefore provided." This plan also contained the following: "If conflicting applications are made for the same land, the District Board shall, upon such notice and hearing, as it shall prescribe, determine which applicant is entitled to deed, contract, lease or option, and such determination, except in case of actual fraud, shall be conclusive on all applicants."

The rehabilitation plan was approved by the board of trustees of the district and was submitted to the Board of Supervisors of Riverside County. It was approved with certain amendments. We are not advised as to the details of these amendments. The amended plan was then approved by the board of trustees of the district, the Board of Supervisors of Imperial County and apparently by the necessary state officers.

On October 9, 1934, the board of trustees of the district ordered published in the Palo Verde Weekly Times, "an offer to sell the tax title to certain lands within said District," including a copy of the rehabilitation plan. This notice was first published on November 1, 1934, and provided that applications to purchase must be made within sixty days from that date.

On December 19, 1934, plaintiff made a formal application to acquire the property here involved "under the provisions of the Rehabilitation Plan." On January 17, 1935, plaintiff made a deposit of the amount necessary to complete his application and received a receipt which contained the following: "This receipt is given subject to final acceptance of repurchase application by Board of Trustees."

On February 15, 1935, plaintiff was informed that his application had been rejected and his deposit was returned to him. Under date of March 11, 1935, plaintiff wrote the district asking for a rehearing on his application. He gave as his grounds that he had been informed that Solano had instituted suit to establish his title to the property and stating that "A determination of the Solano suit favorable to him would establish him as the former owner of the property within the purview of the repurchase plan, and me, therefore, as his assignee."

We are informed by counsel that a rehearing was had and that plaintiff's application was again rejected.

It is plaintiff's theory that the district made an offer of sale of the property to a class of which he was a member; that he unconditionally accepted the offer; that this acceptance created a binding contract of sale and purchase, giving him an equitable interest in the property which he could establish in this action.

In support of this argument he cites numerous decisions which support the rule for which he contends. We have no quarrel with the rule or the decisions supporting it. The facts before us do not bring the case within the rule and the reasoning of the decisions.

[1] The offer of sale was not unconditionally made to a class including the plaintiff. It was conditionally made and required an acceptance which must be approved by the trustees before a binding contract of sale and purchase could be created. As there was no approval, but a rejection, there was no contract created and plaintiff acquired neither a legal nor an equitable interest in the property. Toms v. Hellman, 115 Cal.App. 74, 1 P.2d 31; Dexter v. Ankiewicz, 26 Cal.App.2d 326, 79 P.2d 400.

[2] Plaintiff was not one of the class to which the offer was made. The offer was made to the former owner or his assigns. Under the definition of "former owner," contained in the Rehabilitation Plan from which we have quoted, Galle and not Solano was the "former owner" in 1931, when the district acquired the tax title because of delinquent district assessments. Therefore, plaintiff was not the assignee of the "former owner," as defined in the Rehabilitation Plan, and had no right to purchase the property under the terms of the plan.

Because of the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to consider the other questions argued by counsel.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

DEEVY et al. v. TASSI et al.

Civ. 11792.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 3, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 1, 1942.

1. Chattel mortgages ⇐162

Where mortgage on cattle provided that if mortgagors defaulted in payments on mortgage note, mortgagee could, with or without process of law, take possession of cattle, the mortgagee was justified in taking possession of cattle without process of law upon default by mortgagors only if possession could be secured peaceably.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1002

The jury's implied findings on conflicting evidence could not be disturbed.

3. Assault and battery ⇐24(1)

In action for injuries received in an assault, plaintiffs could prove as an item of damage the aggravation of one plaintiff's heart condition as result of assault without alleging the condition and aggravation thereof as special damage.

4. Appeal and error ⇐901

The District Court of Appeal is not bound to endeavor to locate conflicts, if any, in instructions.

5. Assault and battery ⇐35

Evidence authorized verdicts for plaintiffs in action for injuries sustained in assault occurring while defendant mortgagee was attempting to repossess mortgaged cattle from plaintiffs.

6. Master and servant ⇐331

Defendant, being liable for acts of his manager which were within scope of manager's employment, was liable for compensatory damages for injuries sustained by plaintiffs in assault occurring while manager was attempting to repossess mortgaged cattle from plaintiffs for defendant as mortgagee, but defendant was not liable for exemplary damages claimed by plaintiffs as result of manager's acts where there was no showing that defendant specifically advised acts of manager, or that defendant ratified such acts.

7. Assault and battery ⇐40

$500 to each plaintiff as exemplary damages in connection with an assault occurring while defendants, as mortgagee, were attempting to repossess mortgaged cattle from plaintiffs was not excessive.

8. Assault and battery ⇐40

$2,500 as compensatory damages to each plaintiff in action for injuries sustained in an assault was excessive and would be reduced to $500 for one plaintiff and to $300 for each remaining plaintiff. Civ.Code, § 3359.

9. Appeal and error ⇐1004(1)

The amount of award of exemplary damages in action for injuries sustained in unlawful assault was not before District Court of Appeal on defendants' appeal, since such award stood or fell on statutory grounds. Civ.Code, § 3294.

10. Assault and battery ⇐37

The compensatory damages to which each plaintiff was entitled for injuries sustained in an unlawful assault rested on injuries suffered by each plaintiff.

11. Appeal and error ⇐1066

In action for injuries sustained in an assault, an instruction purporting to apply statutory rule respecting award of damages for injuries certain to result in future was prejudicial and should not have been given where there was no medical testimony respecting whether plaintiffs would suffer future injury as result of assault, but giving of instruction was not reversible error under uncontradicted evidence showing that each plaintiff had suffered some injuries for which he was entitled to recover. Civ.Code, § 3283.

12. Appeal and error ⇐1060(1)

In personal injury action, argument to jury by plaintiffs' counsel wherein epithets were used and defendants were referred to as "gunmen" and "racketeers," while not free from criticism, was not such prejudicial "misconduct" as to require reversal of judgment for plaintiffs.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

13. Assault and battery ⇐13

Defendants could not claim self-defense in action for injuries sustained in an assault, where defendants had invited the trouble which resulted in assault.

14. Assault and battery ⇐9

One charged with assault may not rely on the fact that he first took advice of counsel.

15. Assault and battery ⊂34

That defendants before assault had consulted an attorney regarding their rights was admissible in evidence to aid jury in estimating exemplary damages in action for injuries sustained in assault.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Benjamin C. Jones, Judge Assigned.

Action by Dan Deevy and others against J. A. Tassi and others to recover damages for injuries suffered in an assault. From a judgment for plaintiffs defendants appeal.

Judgment modified and affirmed.

George T. Davis, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Vincent W. Hallinan and James A. Himmel, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover damages for injuries suffered in an alleged unlawful assault. The defendants answered and the action was tried before the court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of each plaintiff in the sum of $2500 as compensatory and $500 as exemplary damages. The defendants made a motion for a new trial. The motion was based on all of the statutory grounds. The motion was denied. The defendants appealed and have brought up typewritten transcripts.

As will hereinafter appear, it will be necessary to discuss the rights of individuals. But it is appropriate at this time to state the following facts. Dan Deevy, Jr., and Julia, his sister, are the owners of a dairy ranch located near Olema in Marin County. Some of the cows are owned by Dan Deevy, Jr. The defendant J. A. Tassi under the fictitious name of San Jose Cow Market is engaged in the business of buying and selling livestock. His principal place of business is at San Jose. On December 29, 1937, Dan Deevy, Sr., and Nellie Deevy, his wife, bought from San Jose Cow Market a herd of cows and in payment the two purchasers, and John Gomez and Loeda M. Gomez as endorsers, executed to the vendor a promissory note. The note was secured by a chattel mortgage. That mortgage contained a clause as follows: "It is also hereby agreed that if the mortgagor should fail to make any of the payments as in said promissory note provided, either of principal or of interest, or if there should be any default in the same or in the performance of any of the agreements or obligations herein contained, or in the payment of any liability or liabilities secured by this mortgage, or in event of an unreasonable depreciation in value of the mortgaged property or the mortgaged property from any other cause reasonably shall be deemed, by the mortgagee or his assigns, inadequate security for the indebtedness hereby secured, then and in either of the aforesaid events all of said note, both principal and interest, and all other amounts payable hereunder or secured hereby shall at the option of the mortgagee or his assigns become immediately due and payable, and the mortgagee or his assigns thereupon or at any time during such default shall have the right to take possession of any and/or all of the mortgaged property wherever the same may be, and for that purpose may enter into and upon any premises whatever or wherever the mortgaged property or any part thereof may be or may be supposed to be, either with or without process of law and using all necessary force so to do, and if found shall have the right to take possession of and/or remove the same." On March 30, 1940, E. A. Tassi, the manager of the mortgagee, claiming the mortgagors were in default, consulted his attorney Jerome A. Duffy as to his rights in the premises. The latter advised him that he could retake the livestock under the provisions of the mortgage provided he could do so without committing a breach of the peace. On the date last mentioned E. A. Tassi, accompanied by Jack Bones, a deputy sheriff, went to the Deevy ranch, and the former asked for a return of the mortgaged livestock. The mortgagors refused to make a delivery. E. A. Tassi thereupon left the premises and went to Olema. He hired R. J. Kynock and two horses. He also hired Sam Howe. They returned to the Deevy ranch and started to herd and drive said livestock from the premises. They were immediately resisted. An affray ensued. Tassi and Howe attempted to herd and drive the cows away. Dan Deevy, Sr., Nellie Deevy, Julia Deevy, Dan Deevy, Jr., and one hired man opposed them. For injuries suffered in said affray the plaintiffs in this action sought to recover. Other facts will hereinafter be recited as it becomes necessary to present the particular point under discussion.

[1, 2] The defendants were justified in taking possession of the above-mentioned cattle without process of law only where such possession could be secured peaceably. Silverstin v. Kohler & Chase, 181 Cal. 51, 183 P. 451, 9 A.L.R. 1177. In Kirby v. Foster, 17 R.I. 437, 22 A. 1111, at page 1112, 14 L.R.A. 317, the Supreme Court of Rhode Island said: "In the most favorable view of the case for the defendants, the plaintiff, having obtained the money by no crime, misrepresentation, or violence, nor against the will of its owner, retained it wrongfully. In such cases the rule is clearly stated in Bliss v. Johnson, 73 N.Y. 529: 'The general rule is that a right of property merely, not joined with the possession, will not justify the owner in committing an assault and battery upon the person in possession, for the purpose of regaining possession, although the possession is wrongfully withheld.' See, also, Harris v. Marco, 16 S.C. 575; Barnes v. Martin, 15 Wis. 240 [82 Am. Dec. 670]; Andre v. Johnson, 6 Blackf. [Ind.] 375. * * * But, it is said, the plaintiff was about to carry away the money against the will of the owner. Undoubtedly this was so; but this is true in every case of wrongful conversion of property. If it be not taken against the will of the owner, it cannot be retaken by force, but only by the usual civil remedy." However, they contend that E. A. Tassi attempted only a peaceful repossession, that defendants' actions were lawful and reasonable, and that plaintiffs were responsible for the resulting controversy. Each of those contentions was submitted to the jury and it returned a verdict against the defendants. On the issues so submitted the evidence was distinctly conflicting and the implied findings of the jury may not be disturbed on appeal.

[3] In their complaint the plaintiffs did not allege that Dan Deevy, Sr., was afflicted with chronic miocarditis and that the affray aggravated said affliction. However, in making the opening statement, the plaintiffs' attorney stated to the jury that the plaintiffs would prove as an item of damage the aggravation of the heart condition of Dan Deevy, Sr. The defendants objected and now contend that such statements by plaintiffs' attorney constituted misconduct. Over the objection and exception of the defendants the plaintiffs introduced evidence on the subject last mentioned. The defendants earnestly contend that the ruling admitting such evidence was also prejudicial and erroneous. We think they are mistaken. Their contentions rest on the assumption that the condition of the heart and aggravation of that condition were matters of special damage which should have been alleged. The error in their position is the assumption that the plaintiffs should have alleged said matters as special damage. They were not bound to do so. Campbell v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 137 Cal. 565, 70 P. 624.

[4] The defendants contend that the instructions of the trial court were conflicting, contradictory, and confusing. They quote several folios of instructions. They then make the claim that the instructions are irreconcilable. They do not show in what respect. It is no part of the duty of this court to endeavor to locate conflicts, if any. For that reason the point may not be sustained.

[5] The defendants also contend that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the judgments and verdicts. It will suffice to state that the evidence contained conflicts; but, that there was evidence from which the jury was entitled to bring in verdicts in favor of the plaintiffs, is beyond controversy.

[6] The defendants also contend that the verdict against J. A. Tassi is contrary to law. As an objection to an award for compensatory damages the contention may not be sustained. As E. A. Tassi was the manager of J. A. Tassi the latter was liable for the acts of the former which were within the scope of the former's employment. In so far as the contention is addressed to exemplary damages it must be sustained. Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane, 161 Cal. 689, 705, 120 P. 771, Ann.Cas.1913C, 1093. There is nothing in the record showing that J. A. Tassi specifically advised the acts of E. A. Tassi, that he knew anything whatever of his acts until after the incident had happened, or that he ratified such acts. Therefore he was not liable for exemplary damages. Loeb v. Kimmerle, 215 Cal. 143, 9 P. 2d 199.

[7] It is also claimed that the damages awarded are excessive. As to the defendant J. A. Tassi we have just shown that he was not liable for any part of the exemplary damages. As to the defendant E. A. Tassi, it may not be said that the sum of $500 awarded by the jury as exemplary damages in favor of each plaintiff was excessive. From what has been said hereinabove we think it is apparent that there were facts which, if the jury believed them, would give reasonable support to the verdict returned. However, as to compensatory damages the case presents a very different problem. The affray above mentioned occurred on Saturday, March 30, 1940. The next day, acting on the advice of counsel, all three plaintiffs consulted their family physician, Dr. C. C. Everman. Each one of the plaintiffs was examined regarding each and every injury he complained of. On the trial the doctor was produced as a witness on behalf of the plaintiffs. As summarized by the plaintiffs in their brief Dr. Everman testified: "All of the three people were complaining of injuries, and after refreshing his recollection from his office record, he testified that as to Julia Deevy she showed soreness and tenderness in the left cheekbone region with limitation of voluntary up and down motion of the jaw; in other words, she could not open it as easily as she would like to, because as she states, at the time the bone at the joint of the jaw with the skull on that side—the sidewise motion of the jaw was perfectly all right but it hurt her to do it. She could move it completely, but it hurt her in this place (indicating.) Her teeth came together accurately, tending to show there was no break in the jawbone itself; there was no sign of fracture or dislocation of the jaw. My impression at the time was traumatic sprain. In other words sprain due to forcible injury of the left—of the junction of the left part of the jaw with the skull; the joint there. The muscles of her right forearm and arm from her shoulder to her hand were sore and aching. Her right middle finger—she had a skinning on the back of the knuckle, of the first knuckle above the hand, with moderate swelling of the whole finger. The back surface of her left hand was slightly swollen and tender. Sore to the touch at the base of the index and middle finger. The witness testified as to Dan Deevy, Sr., he complained of soreness over the cheekbone, and tenderness on pressure over his cheekbone, and he was nervous and upset and his heart was a little more rapid than usual, probably due to excitement. The witness further testified as to examination of Mrs. Deevy. She complained of soreness in the muscles of her upper arms, up near the shoulders on both sides; in the muscles in the left side of her neck, and of soreness and tenderness to pressure over the mastoid prominence, the bony part behind her left ear, and down the side and back of both thighs, from the hips down to the knees. She had an abrasion, a skinning just below her left knee. She also had a skinning with soreness also behind the left knee. She also had a very slight skinned place in the front surface of the right knee. With regard to bruising, I will state from my experience a bruise will appear two or three days after a traumatic injury to the place which is bruised. In the first place a bruise is a fact of pathology. It is not an external evidence. A bruise may occur but there might not be any visible signs of it until several days later. But the visible signs occurring several days later could not have occurred."

[8-10] The jury awarded to each, as compensatory damages, $2,500. In that behalf the verdict was so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest at first blush passion or prejudice in fixing the amount. The passion and prejudice of the jury were, as shown by the record, appealed to on many occasions and in many ways. The chattel mortgage, not unlawful on its face, was, by plaintiffs' counsel, attacked as being unconscionable. That fact was stressed by the plaintiffs at all times. Because the defendants sought to enforce the terms of said mortgage they were by plaintiffs' counsel called "desperadoes," "gun-men," "racketeers," etc. In short, the jury was, in effect, asked to, and apparently did, penalize defendants for writing and enforcing harsh contracts. Whereas the issue on trial was the amount of damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiffs. The compensatory damages must therefore be reduced. The award of exemplary damages is not before us. That stands or falls on statutory grounds. Civ. Code, sec. 3294. The compensatory damages to which each plaintiff was entitled must rest on the injuries suffered by each. Assuming that the injuries suffered by Julia Deevy were not because of a fall but because of the acts of the defendants, the case stands thus. If she had sued alone, had introduced the same evidence, and a jury had returned a verdict for $500, we submit neither party would be entitled, as a matter of law, to challenge the amount. Such sum, under all of the facts, would have been reasonable and in all cases damages, if allowed at all, must be reasonable. Civ.Code, sec. 3359. Including every element of detriment shown by the evidence, such verdict would obviously have been reasonable. By a parity of reasoning $300 in favor of Nellie Deevy and $300 in favor of Dan Deevy would also be reasonable. It follows that all in excess of said sum awarded as compensatory damages was excessive and should not be allowed. Seelye v. Harvey, 46 Cal.App. 448, 450, 189 P. 311; Loeb v. Kimmerle, 215 Cal. 143, 164, 165, 9 P.2d 199; Bellman v. San Francisco H. S. Dist., 11 Cal.2d 576, 586, 81 P.2d 894.

[11] The defendants complain because the trial court gave an instruction purporting to apply to the instant case the rule defined in section 3283 of the Civil Code. As to whether any one of the plaintiffs would suffer any detriment resulting after the commencement of the action was distinctly a medical problem. Cordiner v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 5 Cal.App. 400, 404, 91 P. 436; Bauman v. City and County of San Francisco, 42 Cal.App. 2d 144, 163, 164, 108 P.2d 989. There was not a particle of evidence given by a medical practitioner on that subject with reference to any injury suffered by any one of the plaintiffs. As applicable to the instant case the instruction was clearly prejudicial. The defendants contend it was improperly worded. We think it was. However, assuming that it was properly worded, in the absence of any evidence as to future detriment, it should not have been given. Bellman v. San Francisco H. S. Dist., 11 Cal.2d 576, 588, 81 P.2d 894. But, under the facts contained in this record, we think the giving of said instruction was not reversible error. The erroneous part of the instruction was addressed solely to future detriment. That factor can be treated without reversing the judgment. The uncontradicted evidence is to the effect that each plaintiff suffered some injuries for which he was entitled to recover. The amounts herein approved were not computed by taking into consideration future detriment and there is no reason that a new trial should be ordered.

[12] Defendants earnestly contend that the plaintiffs' attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. Except as hereinabove specified such misconduct consisted of epithets used by him in his argument. They were not free from criticism. We have hereinabove given the attack such consideration as we think it should have when we discussed the claim that the verdicts were excessive and were the result of passion and prejudice.

[13] At about half past one in the afternoon, on March 30, 1940 E. A. Tassi appeared at the Deevy ranch and demanded that he be allowed to take the herd of cows described in the above-mentioned mortgage. The demand was at once refused. Tassi left the premises and later returned with more help and proceeded to take possession. Almost at once the affray commenced. As to who struck first the evidence is conflicting. The defendants complain because they were not, in their argument, allowed to claim self-defense. We see no error in the ruling. The defendants had invited the trouble. 4 Am. Jur. 149 "Assault and Battery," sec. 45.

[14, 15] The defendants stress the fact that E. A. Tassi was acting on advice of counsel. They claim that fact was a complete defense against any award for exemplary damages. They do not cite any authority to that effect. It is clearly the law that one charged with assault may not rely on the fact that he first took the advice of counsel. 6 C.J.S., Assault and Battery, § 88, p. 941. That the defendants consulted an attorney regarding their rights was a pertinent fact to introduce in evidence to guide the jury in estimating exemplary damages. 5 C.J. 685 "Assault and Battery," sec. 128; Walker v. Chanslor, 153 Cal. 118, 124, 94 P. 606, 17 L.R.A.,N.S., 455, 126 Am.St.Rep. 61. But the evidence was admitted and no contention is made to the contrary.

The judgment herein is modified by reducing the award of the jury for compensatory damages from $2,500 in favor of each plaintiff to $300 in favor of plaintiff Dan Deevy, to $300 in favor of plaintiff Nellie Deevy, and to $500 in favor of plaintiff Julia Deevy, and by striking out the award of the jury for exemplary damages in the sum of $500 in favor of each plaintiff against the defendant J. A. Tassi. As so modified said judgment is affirmed as to each of the two defendants, and each party will pay his own costs on appeal.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 238

LYON v. MASTER HOLDING CORPORATION et al.

Civ. 13431.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 27, 1942.

1. Venue ⇐70

Trial court's denial of a motion for change of place of trial on the ground of convenience of witnesses is not an abuse of discretion, where affidavit of adverse party shows that his witnesses will be inconvenienced by the change.

2. Venue ⇐52(1)

A mere preponderance in number of witnesses expected to be produced by one party will not necessarily determine the order to be made on motion for change of place of trial for convenience of witnesses.

3. Appeal and error ⇐965

Trial court's determination of motion for change of place of trial for convenience of witnesses will not be interfered with by appellate court except for abuse of discretion.

4. Venue ⇐70

Trial court's denial of defendant's motion for change of place of trial for "convenience of witnesses" was not an abuse of discretion, where plaintiff's affidavit and opposition showed that procurement of certain documentary evidence before court to which defendant sought to have case changed, would be impossible by reason of jurisdiction theretofore gained over the evidence by federal authorities, and that a change would inconvenience plaintiff's witnesses.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Convenience of Witnesses".

5. Pleading ⇐11, 48

It is neither necessary nor proper to allege evidentiary details in complaint, but rather rules of pleading require only a clear statement of ultimate facts requisite to the cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain, Judge.

Suit by Phoebe Eleanor Lyon against Master Holding Corporation, Turlock Guarantee Building-Loan Association, and others. From an order denying its motion to change the place of trial, the defendant Turlock Guarantee Building-Loan Association appeals.

Affirmed.

Wm. N. Graybiel, of Turlock, for appellant.

F. W. Sawyer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant Turlock Guarantee Building-Loan Association appeals from an order denying its motion to change the place of trial from Los Angeles to Stanislaus County.

On February 17, 1937, plaintiff filed her action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County against the predecessors in interest of defendant for damages in the sum of $8,000, suffered by reason of fraudulent representations made to plaintiff in the sale of shares of the capital stock of the Master Holding Corporation, one of such predecessors in interest. The answer of El Portal Building Loan Association, one of such predecessors, was filed January 28, 1938, and amendments thereto were filed December 7, 1939.

On the 18th day of September, 1941, defendant Turlock Guarantee Building-Loan Association served and filed this motion for a change of place of trial from Los Angeles County to Stanislaus County on the ground of convenience of witnesses. In the notice of motion it is set forth that defendant has its principal place of business in Stanislaus County and that all of its witnesses reside therein, as do also the plaintiff and her witnesses, and that it will be in the interest of justice for both parties to have the case tried in the last-named county. In support of the motion defendant filed its affidavit of merits setting forth that the El Portal Building Loan Association had its place of business in Stanislaus County and that it had merged all of its interests with the Turlock Guarantee Building-Loan Association April 17, 1939; and that such corporation forfeited its franchise to do business on the 16th day of March, 1933, by reason of its failure to pay its franchise tax; that it has not existed as a corporation since March 16, 1933; that the default of the Master Holding Corporation was entered February 16, 1938; that the action was dismissed as to all other defendants; that on the 22d day of June, 1938, the deposition of plaintiff was taken in Stanislaus County at which time plaintiff named her son and daughter and son-in-law as her three witnesses, all of whom reside in Stanislaus County. The affidavit further averred that the sale of the stock of the Master Holding Corporation took place in Stanislaus County; that at that time it was allied with El Portal Building Loan Association and they had an interlocking board of directors; that for the purpose of defeating such allegation defendant expects to use seven witnesses who are residents of Stanislaus County and that these witnesses will testify that there was no interlocking board of directors; that Atceson, the alleged agent of El Portal Building Loan Association, was never employed by it and that the Master Holding Corporation never owned any stock in the El Portal.

In opposition to the foregoing affidavit, plaintiff filed the affidavit of her lawyer in which it is said "one of the material issues to be tried and decided by the court in the trial of this action is the fact of the secret escrow of the exchange of corporation stock, as alleged in the complaint on file herein, without proof of which plaintiff cannot recover, which exchange was in violation of the conditions of the permit issued by the Commissioner of Corporations for the issuance and sale of the stock of the Master Holding Corporation for cash and not for exchange." Affiant then states the names of four witnesses, all of whom reside in Los Angeles County who cannot conveniently attend the trial in the county of Stanislaus. Moreover it is averred that the books, records and corporate files of the Master Holding Corporation are necessary evidence in support of plaintiff's cause; that all of said records are in the custody of the County Clerk of Los Angeles County who is under subpoena to produce them before the United States authority investigating the affairs of said Master Holding Corporation and its alleged allied concerns, "which books, records and files cannot be conveniently produced to the courts of Stanislaus County as the United States authorities refuse to consent to the withdrawal of the same for that purpose."

The case was set for trial December 27, 1939, and was dropped from the calendar because of the motion of defendant to amend its answer. By its affidavit presented on behalf of the motion for a change of place of trial, defendant named as witnesses E. R. Hawke, G. M. Brut and T. B. Scott, stating that they were all directors of El Portal and would give certain testimony in support of the defense. In her reply affidavit, plaintiff offered to stipulate that each of the witnesses proposed by the defendant was a director of El Portal during the times mentioned in the complaint and that all such witnesses would testify as set forth in defendant's affidavit of merits and that such affidavit might be considered in all respects the same as though their testimony were given under oath at the trial. Upon the affidavits presented, the court denied the motion.

[1, 2] It is no abuse of the trial court's discretion to deny a motion for change of place of trial made on the ground of convenience of witnesses if the affidavit of the adverse party shows that his witnesses will be inconvenienced if the change be ordered and a mere preponderance in the number of witnesses named by the moving party will not determine the order to be made. Scott v. Stuart, 190 Cal. 526, 213 P. 947.

[3] The question as to whether a change of the place of trial on the ground of convenience of witnesses should be ordered is a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and unless it appears that such discretion has been abused, the appellate court will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion. McNeill & Co. v. Doe, 163 Cal. 338, 341, 125 P. 345; Brown v. San Francisco Savings Union, 122 Cal. 648, 55 P. 598.

[4, 5] From the facts recited it was definitely established to the satisfaction of the trial court that the procurement of such documentary evidence before the court of Stanislaus County would be impossible by reason of the jurisdiction heretofore gained over it by the federal authorities. Moreover the convenience of the witnesses to be called by the plaintiff was in itself sufficient to warrant the order denying the motion. The contention of defendant is that because there is no allegation in the complaint concerning a secret escrow, for that reason the affidavit should be disregarded. It is also claimed that the testimony of the witnesses with reference to such secret escrow is material to no issue raised by the complaint. It is neither necessary nor proper to allege evidentiary details. The rules of pleading require only a clear statement of the ultimate facts requisite to the cause of action. We may safely assume that the proof of the alleged secret escrow is a necessary part in the chain of plaintiff's proof of the alleged fraud.

The order is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 232

SPENCER v. DI GHILINI.

Civ. 11999.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

1. Sales ⟸52(5)

Evidence established existence of an oral contract for sale of an antique silver covered Spanish throne on which to base action for rescission of the contract.

2. Sales ⟸52(7)

Evidence sustained judgment for rescission of oral contract for sale of antique silver covered Spanish throne, on ground that the sale was induced by misrepresentations made concerning buyer's title and possession of certain antiques allegedly forming part of consideration for the sale.

3. Evidence ⟸434(4)

Where evidence sustained finding that seller executed bill of sale to antique silver covered Spanish throne because of false representations of buyer, seller was not precluded from maintaining suit to rescind the sale on ground that he was bound by the written bill of sale as full receipt of all consideration agreed to by the parties, and that the writing was presumed to contain all the terms of the prior oral negotiations. Code Civ.Proc. § 1856; Civ.Code, § 1625.

4. Evidence ⟸434(11)

In actions for rescission of sale on ground of fraud the statutory provisions that when terms of agreement are reduced to writing, the writing is considered as containing all of the terms, and that execution of contract supersedes all prior negotiations or stipulations do not control. Code Civ. Proc. § 1856; Civ.Code, § 1625.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank M. Smith, Judge.

Action by Frank S. Spencer against U. L. di Ghilini to rescind an oral contract for sale of an antique silver covered Spanish throne. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Morton E. Feiler, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Henry M. Lee and Harold A. Fendler, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued to rescind an oral contract for the sale of an antique silver covered Spanish throne. He had a judgment from which defendant appeals.

The evidence covering the terms of the oral contract is in strong conflict. In brief the plaintiff's contention is that on June 22, 1940, he sold and delivered the throne to defendant in consideration of the latter's promise to pay therefor the sum of $200 in cash, several paintings, including an original "Corot," and other specific personal property shown to plaintiff's agent in the attic of Mrs. Thomas, for whom the defendant was acting as business manager. It is the defendant's contention that the entire consideration for the sale of the throne was the sum of $200 and the delivery of fourteen paintings.

On June 22, 1940, plaintiff delivered the throne to defendant and took delivery of some paintings, and received the cash payment. On July 2, the plaintiff signed an unconditional bill of sale of the throne, and, on July 17, gave notice of rescission of the contract. The plaintiff testified that he signed the bill of sale upon the fraudulent representation that defendant needed and would use it only for publicity purposes and that the remaining articles would soon be delivered.

The plaintiff commenced an action in the Municipal Court for the return of the throne, and tendered the cash and the paintings which he had received. The defendant demurred and moved to transfer the cause to the Superior Court upon the ground that the throne was worth $30,000. The demurrer was sustained, and this action was refiled in the Superior Court based upon the theory of fraudulent representations and failure of consideration. In support of his claim of failure of consideration, the plaintiff pleaded that the parties agreed that no definite intrinsic value would be put upon the throne, but that defendant would deliver in payment therefor, in addition to the sum of $200, a group or collection of paintings and certain other antiques of unknown value consisting of twelve swords, two Paisley shawls, two Cashmere shawls, one Chinese bronze, two box springs and mattresses, two paintings, one settee, one chair, and two auto robes; that the defendant thereupon falsely, and with the fraudulent intention of inducing plaintiff to make the agreement, represented to plaintiff that he had title and possession of the last enumerated personal property; that plaintiff relied fully upon these representations and was thereby induced to deliver the antique throne. The defendant denied these allegations and pleaded the written bill of sale dated July 2 and other facts indicating that when the defendant had the throne appraised and learned that it might have belonged to Queen Isabella of Spain he was led to twit the plaintiff on his poor judgment of values, and the plaintiff thereupon became alarmed and started these proceedings to free himself from a poor bargain. Defendant then points to certain inconsistencies between the allegations of the complaint herein and those found in the complaint filed in the Municipal Court, and lists four grounds for a reversal of the judgment, which we will take in the order stated.

[1] The alleged failure to prove the oral contract. The argument is based upon the often criticized practice of taking unconnected portions of the testimony of the witnesses as indicating an inconsistency in the full story. The negotiations for the sale were made in part by the respondent, in part by Osiel, his agent, and they were conducted in part with the appellant and in part with Mrs. Thomas for whom he was acting as business manager. The evidence as a whole disclosed that the consideration for the sale of the throne, in addition to the cash payment, was the transfer of certain paintings and other personal belongings of Mrs. Thomas, which were pointed out and identified as stored in the attic of her house. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding covering the terms and conditions of the oral contract, as alleged in the complaint. On the other hand the testimony of the appellant was impeached on so many material matters that the trial court was fully justified in dismissing it entirely and in making the finding that the allegations of the answer were untrue.

[2] Secondly, it is argued that there was no proof of any misrepresentations made to respondent inducing the sale. Under the former heading appellant recites evidence of the representations relating to the goods stored in the attic and objects that the evidence did not clearly identify the several articles. There is no denial however that such representations were made, that they were an inducement to the sale, or that they were made without the intention of delivering the goods as a part of the sale.

Next it is argued that the judgment must be reversed because it rests upon undisclosed statements made to respondent by his own agent. This contention rests upon the failure to take into consideration the evidence that the negotiations were conducted in part by the principals and in part by their agents. This evidence discloses that all the material parts of the numerous oral negotiations were communicated to the parties in interest, and that the agreement was made as found by the trial court.

[3, 4] Finally it is argued that respondent should be bound by the written bill of sale as a full receipt of all consideration agreed to by the parties; that this writing must be presumed to contain all the terms of the prior oral negotiations. The trial court found that the respondent executed the bill of sale upon the false representations of appellant, and the evidence fully supports this finding. The rule of law applicable is found in Mooney v. Cyriacks, 185 Cal. 70, 81, 195 P. 922, 927, where it was said: "It follows that in actions for rescission on the ground of fraud the statutory provisions that when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing it is to be considered as containing all of the terms (section 1856, Code Civ.Proc.), and that the execution of a contract supersedes all prior negotiations or stipulations (section 1625, Civ.Code), do not control."

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 299

CALOU v. JONES.

Civ. 11832.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 3, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 30, 1942.

1. Trusts ⇐10

Where husband during wife's lifetime agreed to carry out terms of wife's will, but wife left no funds to pay legacies and husband received nothing under will, there was nothing in husband's hands to which a "trust" could attach in favor of a particular legatee.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trust".

2. Trusts ⇐17(2)

A trust in personalty can be created by the oral declarations of the settlor.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

Where husband after wife's death withdrew $5,500 from account standing in his own and deceased wife's names as joint tenants, whether husband's oral declarations that the money belonged to wife's children and that he was holding it for them until he could pay it were sufficient to establish a trust for children's benefit was for the trial judge.

4. Evidence ⇐16

It is common knowledge that every day people use such expressions as "the money is yours" and "I will hold it for you" without any intention of creating a trust but only as an emphatic way of saying "you will be paid".

Appeals from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; William F. James, Judge.

Action by Effie La Veque Calou against John J. Jones as executor, etc., to establish a trust. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Harry A. Houser and Owen D. Richardson, both of San Jose, of appellant.

John J. Jones in pro. per. for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendant in an action based upon an alleged trust. Plaintiff is the daughter of Nellie Patton, deceased, and step-daughter of George E. Patton, deceased. Nellie Patton died on February 10, 1940, leaving a will by which she bequeathed to appellant the sum of $2,500. She, however, died without estate other than a piece of real property which was specifically devised for life to a son and daughter-in-law with remainder to a grandson.

After Nellie Patton's death her husband George E. Patton withdrew from an account which stood in his own and his deceased wife's names as joint tenants the sum of $5,500. At the time he expressed the intention to pay his wife's funeral and other expenses and to pay her children the amounts left to them by their mother's will. He said: "It is your money, your mother and I had this agreement and I want you to have it." They went to the office of his attorney and Mr. Patton again expressed the intention of paying the children. The attorney said: "You do not have to pay them this money for six months according to law." They then left the office and Patton said: "Now, I don't want you children to worry about this, this is your money. I am holding it for you until I can pay it."

Mr. Patton died about ten days later, without paying the money and after drawing a will by which he left nothing to appellant.

The court made the following findings:

"That during the lifetime of said Nellie Patton, said George E. Patton did agree to carry out the terms of the last will of said Nellie Patton, but that said Nellie Patton left no funds to pay the legacies provided in said last will."

"That it is true that said George E. Patton withdrew * * * Fifty-Five Hundred Dollars ($5,500.00), subsequent to the death of said Nellie Patton, but that it is not true that he agreed with plaintiffs herein that he was holding said sum, or any part thereof, in trust for plaintiffs, to be paid to them at a later date."

"That it is not true that said George E. Patton, deceased, held said money at the time of his death in trust for the said plaintiffs. * * *"

Appellant cites and relies on Curdy v. Berton, 79 Cal. 420, 21 P. 858, 12 Am.St. Rep. 157, 5 L.R.A. 189; Miller v. Forster, 131 Cal.App. 509, 21 P.2d 678; Estate of Everts, 163 Cal. 449, 125 P. 1058; Garner

v. Purcell, 173 Cal. 495, 160 P. 682; O'Donnell v. Murphy, 17 Cal.App. 625, 120 P. 1076; Crinkley v. Rogers, 100 Neb. 647, 160 N.W. 974 and the note in 66 A.L.R. 156.

The citations are not in point. They may all be summarized by the following quotation from 66 A.L.R. 157:

"Where a person, knowing that a testator, in giving him a devise or bequest, intends it to be applied for the benefit of another, either expressly promises, or by his action at the time implies, that he will carry the testator's intention into effect, and the property is left to him in the faith on the part of the testator that such promise will be kept, the promisor will be held as a trustee ex maleficio."

[1] In this case George E. Patton received nothing from his wife's estate to which a trust could attach. The promise to his wife was not to pay her children from property received by him under her will, and he received nothing under her will. It was quite the converse, to pay bequests made by her will which she left no money or property to satisfy.

[2, 3] Since these are the only authorities cited by appellant we might close our opinion here. However, in view of the established rule that a trust in personal property can be created by the oral declarations of the trustor, we deem it well to consider whether the decedent's statements after his wife's death were such as to compel a finding by the trial court that a trust was thereby created. It was evidently the view of the trial judge that decedent's statements amounted only to promises to pay in the future, and were not intended by him to create a present beneficial interest in appellant. It was for the trial judge to construe the effect of Patton's language as testified to, bearing in mind the ease with which oral declarations may be unwittingly changed in repetition and the rule announced in Noble v. Learned, 153 Cal. 245, 251, 94 P. 1047, 1050, that "in every such case, it is for the trial court to determine, as a question of fact, whether the words and acts of the alleged trustor indicated with reasonable certainty an intention to create a trust." Cf. Lefrooth v. Prentice, 202 Cal. 215, 227, 259 P. 947; In re Kellogg, 41 Cal.App.2d 833, 841, 107 P.2d 964; Estate of Alberts, 38 Cal.App.2d 42, 46 et seq., 100 P.2d 538.

[4] It is common knowledge that people use every day such expressions as "the money is yours" and "I will hold it for you" without any intention of creating a trust, but only as an emphatic way of saying "you will be paid." While the evidence undoubtedly would have supported the finding of the creation of an oral trust we cannot hold that the trial court committed error in finding otherwise.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 311

CLARK et al. v. HUDDLESTON et al.

Civ. 2664.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 3, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 1, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 30, 1942.

1. Negligence ⇐136(23, 26)

In action against department store for injuries to customer who when leaning over into freight elevator to indicate to saleslady who was in elevator the plant customer desired to purchase, when customer was struck by upper section of elevator door which was being lowered by assistant manager in the elevator in order to raise the lower section of the door to the floor level of the elevator, so that there should be no opening left between floor of elevator and floor of the store, assistant manager's negligence and customer's contributory negligence were for jury.

2. Damages ⇐131(4)

$25,000 to 34-year-old housewife for head injury which caused her to become "foggy" and dizzy for several days, who could not remember as well as before accident, but who assisted her husband in his business, was excessive under evidence which was insufficient to show that her condition at time of trial some eight months after accident would be permanent or to what, if any, extent such condition or part thereof might be reasonably certain to continue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; T. R. Thomson, Judge.

Action by Anna Clark and another against Robert W. Huddleston and others, to recover for injuries sustained by named plaintiff in defendants' department store. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Reversed and remanded for new trial with directions.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

W. M. Conley, Philip Conley, Matthew Conley, and Conley, Conley & Conley, all of Fresno, and Randell Larson, Wright & Wright & Larson, and Redman, Alexander & Bacon, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Rae B. Carter and John D. Chinello, both of Fresno, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff wife. A jury returned a verdict for $25,000 in her favor and $1,628.65 in favor of her husband. The defendants have appealed from the judgment which followed.

There is little dispute with respect to the facts surrounding the incident out of which the action arose. The appellant corporation operated a department store in Fresno, of which the individual defendant was the assistant manager. Mrs. Clark had come to this store to shop, accompanied by her friend Mrs. Logoluso and the latter's four-year-old daughter. At the rear of this store there was a freight elevator which had doors opening into the storeroom and, on the opposite side, doors which opened upon the alley. When the floor of the elevator was at the level of the alley entrance it was some ten inches above the floor level in the store. The elevator doors on the store side were operated by hand and consisted of an upper and a lower section which were so counter-balanced that when the upper section moved upward the lower section moved downward, and vice versa. At the bottom of the upper section was an iron "lip" which fitted over the top of the lower section when the two sections were brought together in closing the doors.

About noon on May 2, 1940, a truckload of potted plants was unloaded at the alley entrance and placed upon the floor of this freight elevator and the appellant Huddleston was in the elevator assisting in this operation. The floor of the elevator was at the alley level and the inner doors of the elevator were also open, the top of the lower section being on a level with the floor of the elevator and covering the space between the floor of the elevator and the floor of the store.

About that time Mrs. Clark observed these potted plants which she said appeared to be in an "opening" about a foot above the floor level, although she said she did not know this was an elevator. She asked a saleslady if these plants were for sale and was told that they were. The two stepped over to the front of the elevator and looked at the plants. Mrs. Clark selected a plant and pointed it out to the saleslady, who stepped into the elevator to get it. While she was doing this Mrs. Clark leaned forward and spoke about another plant. As she straightened up the top of the upper section of the door, which was then being lowered a few inches, came in contact with her head.

The reason for the lowering of the upper half of this door at this time appears as follows: While the selection and sale of the plant was in progress Mrs. Logoluso's small daughter had stepped upon the top of the lower section of the door, which had been at the level of the floor of the elevator, and this action caused the lower section of the door to go down until its top was at the floor level of the store. Mr. Huddleston, who was in the elevator, observing this and desiring to raise the lower section of the door to the floor level of the elevator in order that there be no opening left between the floor of the elevator and the floor of the store, took hold of the upper section of the door and pulled it down some ten or twelve inches, which also had the effect of raising the lower section a similar distance. There is a conflict in the evidence as to whether he gave a warning that he was about to move the doors of the elevator. Several witnesses testified that he did so and others testified that they heard no warning at all. He testified that he did not know that a sale was in progress and did not see the parties engaged therein, and that while he was lowering the upper section he could not see out of the elevator. As he lowered the upper section, he heard it come in contact with Mrs. Clark's head.

Mrs. Clark made no outcry, although she made some remark about bumping her head. The saleslady, who had not seen the door come in contact with her head, asked her if it hurt and she replied: "No." Shortly thereafter Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Logoluso and her daughter left this store and visited three other stores. Then Mrs.

Clark got her automobile and they came back to the Woolworth store and got the plant. Mrs. Clark then drove to her home where she made some coffee for herself and Mrs. Logoluso. They talked awhile, after which Mrs. Clark got some checks which she wanted to deposit and they drove to a bank. Mrs. Clark then took Mrs. Logoluso and her daughter home and then returned to her own home. Sometime that evening Mrs. Clark called Mrs. Logoluso on the phone and asked her what had happened, saying that she could remember nothing of what had occurred that day. The next day she consulted her physician. On May 23, 1940, Mrs. Clark went to the court house and passed an examination for citizenship. About that time she complained about blurred or double vision and at the suggestion of her physician consulted an eye specialist. On June 3, 1940, she went to San Francisco to consult a brain specialist and remained there for observation for fifteen days. Her condition improved somewhat thereafter and this action was tried in January, 1941.

The appellants first contend that there was no evidence disclosing negligence on their part and that it must be held, as a matter of law, that Mrs. Clark was guilty of contributory negligence. It is argued in this connection that appellant Huddleston was required, through no fault of his own, to move the doors of the elevator because the little girl had depressed the lower section leaving a portion of the elevator shaft exposed; that he gave a warning before he moved the doors; that Mrs. Clark should have and must have seen that the doors were in motion; that Mrs. Clark, while in a position of safety, suddenly leaned over to point to a plant and thus brought her head into the plane in which the door was moving; that Huddleston could not possibly know that she was going to change her position while he was moving the doors; that Mrs. Clark failed to observe a "danger" sign which was above the elevator doors and also failed to observe the moving of the doors, which were in plain sight; and that it follows that any injury received must be attributed solely to Mrs. Clark's negligence.

[1] While there is some conflict, and without completely reviewing the evidence in this connection, it must be held that, at best, nothing more appears than a question of fact which was for the jury. While standing immediately in front of and facing the elevator and engaged in selecting a plant from among those upon the floor of the elevator, and with the saleslady inside the elevator for the purpose of getting the plant selected, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that it was not a reasonable act for Mrs. Clark to lean over while commenting upon the different plants. The situation was, or should have been, obvious to Huddleston and he should not have lowered this door between the customer and the saleslady engaged in making the sale without taking reasonable precautions that it could be done in safety. Whether he took such reasonable precautions under the peculiar circumstances here existing was, to say the least, a question of fact and not one that can here be disposed of as a matter of law.

Some contention is further made that one of the instructions in effect told the jury that the appellants were insurers of the safety of the premises while Mrs. Clark was only called upon to use ordinary care. Not only is the instruction in question not susceptible of that interpretation but when considered with the other instructions given it appears that the jury was fully and correctly instructed in this regard. The contention here made is without merit.

The most serious question raised is as to whether the evidence supports an award of $25,000 for the injuries sustained by Mrs. Clark, and whether it appears that such a verdict must have been arrived at through the influence of passion or prejudice.

It is at once apparent that the amount of the verdict is excessive unless it covers future damage which Mrs. Clark would suffer after the date of the trial, which was some eight months after the alleged injury. While such future detriment may be considered and allowed for it must be such as is reasonably "certain to result in the future", Civil Code, § 3283, and it must be such damage as arises from the injury complained of. While there was evidence in the form of testimony by expert witnesses that the condition of Mrs. Clark, of which she complains, was the result of hysteria unconnected with this accident, and while other portions of the evidence support this theory and strongly indicate that the injury itself was trivial in nature, it is also true that a part of the evidence supports the inference that Mrs. Clark received very substantial injuries as a result of the accident, and one expert witness expressed the opinion that she received an injury which would be permanent. Because of this and other testimony given by another expert witness it is necessary to rather fully review the evidence in this regard, especially in view of the rather unusual situation which here appears.

Mrs. Clark was 34 years of age. She testified that her health was "absolutely perfect" before the accident; that she had no trouble with her eyes, did her own housework, drove automobiles, and assisted her husband in his business; that she had worked as a dressmaker before marriage and made her own clothes; that immediately after the accident she became "foggy" and that when she "came to" that evening she remembered nothing of what happened; that she vomited for five days and suffered severe pains in her neck and head and was tired and dizzy; that she remained continually in bed until June 2, 1940, except on May 23, 1940, when she went to the court house and passed an examination for citizenship; that her physician, Dr. Calloway, prescribed ice packs and recommended that she remain in bed; that about May 23, 1940, she began to see "double"; that she then consulted Dr. Goldstein, an eye specialist; that on his recommendation she went, on June 3, 1940, to San Francisco to consult Dr. Brown, a specialist in brain and nerve surgery, where she remained some fifteen days; that she felt much better when she returned to Fresno; that her eyes were then much better and things were not blurred or double any more; that when she got home she stayed in bed on and off for three months; that since that time she has operated her husband's Fresno business but cannot do it as well as before, and cannot remember so well; that now if she looks at anything any length of time it gets blurred or double; that she cannot work at sewing although she has not tried that sort of work much; that she can only read five or ten minutes without its getting blurred; that she has a pain in her head, her neck is stiff and she cannot move so quickly; and that she cannot remember as many telephone numbers as she used to.

Her family physician, Dr. Calloway, testified that she came to his office on May 3, 1940; that she complained of soreness in her neck and had a bump on her head about the size of a half dollar, which was blue in color and with a swelling; that the color and swelling left in about ten days; that he saw her every day for several days and then saw her three or four times a week because she would call him and say her head was not any better; that later she complained of having double vision and he suggested that she see an eye man; and that when she first came to his office he did not think much of the injury she complained of and considered it a minor injury. He also testified that he had treated her for nearly a year before this accident; that she had a goiter; that it was an internal one which could not be seen without examination; and that he knew nothing about goiters.

Dr. Goldstein, the eye specialist, testified that he first saw Mrs. Clark on May 30, 1940; that he had just returned from the east and found that his associate had been called on the case about May 24; that his associate told him he had a "very unusual situation out there"; that he agreed with his associate when he examined her on May 30; that Mrs. Clark told him of what had occurred on May 2, 1940, that she did not become conscious of her surroundings until that evening, and that she since had had quite a headache and her mind was not clear; that he examined her and found that her eyes turned in toward her nose and were what is called "crossed"; that the rest of her cranial nerves were all right, her hearing was all right, the sensation of her face was all right, her swallowing was all right, her tongue was all right, and her sense of smell was all right; that he had never seen anything "quite the equal of this" and so he arranged for her to go to a Dr. Brown in San Francisco, which she did; that after she returned from San Francisco her eyes were theoretically straight although there was an imbalance or incoordination of the eyes in that when the eyes were moved one would lag and not move as fast as the other; and that this condition still existed at the time of the trial. He further testified that he had given her no special treatment but advised her to remain in bed; that there was a marked improvement after she returned from San Francisco; that her eyes were theoretically straight now; that some of her symptoms are more logically explained on the basis of hysteria and some on the basis of organic damage; that the eye nerves seemed all right; and that about the only way you could explain her blurred vision was on the basis of hysteria.

Dr. Brown testified that he examined her and had her under observation for some fifteen days following June 3, 1940; that she had a decrease in feeling over the right side of her face and over the entire right side of her body; that x-rays showed no fracture but indicated a shrinkage or atrophy on the surface of the brain; and that this was also indicated by a procedure which he carried out known as encephalogram. He stated that Mrs. Clark gave him her history following the accident on May 2, 1940, and complained of double vision and dizziness when she moved quickly, and that she told him she had had no serious illness and that she had been well up to the time of the accident. Based upon this history and the examination he made he expressed the opinion that there was an atrophy or degeneration of a part of the brain. He stated that this might have come from causes other than an injury, but expressed the opinion that in this case it came from this injury since she had been well before the accident. He further testified that he saw her again in October, 1940, when she came up for a check-up and also saw her the morning of the trial. Although he testified that if there was an atrophy of the brain it would be permanent and no improvement was possible, he testified that he saw a marked improvement when he saw her in October and that when he saw her the morning of the trial she was definitely better than she had been when he first saw her; that she was then not quite as accurate with her right hand as she was with her left; that she could move her arm in all directions; that there was no evidence of actual paralysis; and that she told him she could do her house work but tired easily. He then testified that he thought some improvement could still be expected but that it would be eighteen months or two years from that time before a maximum improvement could be expected; that he was hopeful that her condition would still improve; and that her condition could have come from other causes than the blow she received on this occasion.

[2] The only evidence that any condition from which Mrs. Clark was suffering at the time of the trial would be permanent or with respect to what may be called future damages rests upon the testimony of Dr. Brown. While he testified that there was an atrophy of the brain and that such atrophy is incurable, he impeached his own testimony by testifying that Mrs. Clark had made a marked improvement and that further improvement might be expected in the future. The testimony of other witnesses, including Mrs. Clark herself, also shows a very marked improvement in her condition. Moreover, Dr. Brown's opinions were based in part upon Mrs. Clark's history as she gave it to him, including the statement that she was perfectly well before the accident. So far as the record shows, Dr. Brown was not informed that Mrs. Clark was suffering from a goiter and apparently he did not discover that fact or take it into consideration. It is well known that certain types of goiters produce some, if not many, of the symptoms which appeared in Mrs. Clark's condition, and that matter might have an important bearing upon the extent of such of her injuries as arose from this accident. The fact that this was not disclosed to Dr. Brown may have had a considerable effect upon his testimony. Whether or not this is true, it does appear that Mrs. Clark had greatly improved and that further improvement was to be expected, and there is an entire absence of any evidence from which it may be told how much or to what extent detriment may be reasonably "certain to result in the future." The amount of the judgment could only be sustained on the basis that very serious and permanent injuries had been sustained, which in this case means that there was a permanent injury to the brain and nervous system. Since the evidence is not sufficient to show that her condition at the time of the trial will be permanent or to what, if any, extent this condition or part of it may be reasonably certain to continue, the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the amount found in the verdict. It may be further observed that a number of circumstances appear in the record which might well support an inference that the amount of the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, and which indicate that an injustice may well have occurred. Under the rather unusual circumstances here appearing, we think the ends of justice require that a new trial be had on the issue as to the amount of the damages, if any, which have been suffered by Mrs. Clark or her husband as a result of the accident in question.

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded for a new trial solely upon the issue of the amount of damages, with directions to the trial court to render judgment in favor of the respondents for the amount of damages so found upon a determination of that issue.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

PEOPLE v. YOUNG.

Cr. 470.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 3, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 1, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⇐344

When the legislature in 1941 amended section of vehicle code dealing with negligent homicide, by striking out the words "in a negligent manner or in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony" and inserted the words "with reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to the safety of others", it did not intend that a motorist should not be guilty of negligent homicide unless he was guilty of "wilful misconduct" as the phrase wilful misconduct is used in the section of the vehicle code dealing with civil liability of a motorist for injuries to a guest. Vehicle Code, § 403, St. 1935 p. 154, and § 500, as amended by St. 1941, p. 1414.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Wilful Misconduct".

2. Automobiles ⇐355(13)

Evidence sustained conviction of motorist for negligent homicide of street car passenger who had just alighted from street car. Vehicle Code, § 500, St.1941, p. 1414.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Gordon Thompson, Judge.

Maude Mae Young was convicted of negligent homicide, and she appeals.

Affirmed.

Newton F. Rozzelle, Jr., of San Diego, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice, pro tem.

By an information filed by the District Attorney of San Diego County appellant was charged with negligent homicide under the provisions of Vehicle Code, section 500, St.1935, p. 173, as amended by the statutes of 1941, St.1941, p. 1414. Appellant pleaded not guilty, and after trial before the court without a jury was found guilty. Appellant's application for probation was denied and appellant's motion for a new trial was denied. Judgment was thereupon pronounced sentencing appellant to imprisonment in the California Institution for Women at Tehachapi. This appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying motion for a new trial.

Briefly stated, the facts, as shown by the record, are as follows: Just prior to 5 o'clock on the afternoon of September 26, 1941, an outbound street car was proceeding on 30th Street, in the vicinity of Palm, in the city of San Diego. The car made the customary stop at Palm to allow one of the passengers, a young boy, to get off. The boy exhibited his school pass to the conductor, whereupon the conductor opened the door and the boy stepped out on the street. The boy started to take a second step when he was struck by appellant's automobile. There is no safety zone for passengers at that street car stop.

The conductor testified that when the automobile struck the boy, his body apparently lunged and was bounced and rolled in front of the automobile until the automobile came to a stop, approximately 100 feet north of the street car. The boy lived for a brief time but died within five minutes after the officers arrived. It was stipulated that the boy was 13 years old and that the autopsy report showed that he died from a skull fracture and multiple injuries.

The accident occurred in the daylight upon a dry, clear street in clear weather. The testimony showed that the boy left his seat in the street car when it was approximately in the middle of the block. The street car came to a gradual stop. Several witnesses testified that the street car had come to a complete stop before the boy got off. All witnesses, except the appellant testified in court that the boy stepped onto the pavement and started to take his second step when struck. Several witnesses observed the speed of appellant's car at the time of the impact and testified that it was approximately 35 miles per hour. The boy passenger was carrying a bundle of groceries on his left arm and showed his pass to the conductor with his right hand. The groceries were scattered on the pavement when the officers arrived, and the two officers observed that there was one single skid mark 47 feet long and scrape marks continuing intermittently up underneath the automobile in the position where it stopped.

When the automobile came to a stop the body of the boy was in front of the car with one leg twisted and caught in the undercarriage of the automobile. The officer testified further that he examined the rear stop lights on the street car and both of the amber lights were lighted. The doctor corroborated the fact that the lights on the rear of the street car were working at the time of the accident.

A number of witnesses testified as to conversations with the appellant at the scene of the accident. The appellant asked the conductor if he did not think she was half way past the door of the street car before the boy stepped out. The conductor replied that she was not. Another witness testified that after he examined the boy he started back to the street car when the appellant stopped him and stated, "I was past the door before it was open." The witness made no reply. The appellant stated to one of the officers that she had been driving alongside of the street car when the street car stopped suddenly and that the boy jumped out before the street car stopped, and that appellant's automobile was past the door at the time and she was then traveling about fifteen miles an hour.

The appellant took the stand in her own defense and stated that she came up alongside the street car at a speed of approximately 25 miles an hour; that the street car did not slow up and she had no idea it was going to stop; that when the front of her automobile passed the front of the street car and her left fender was even with the door the boy came out of the street car door on top of the fender; and that she then stopped the automobile as quickly as she could.

The conductor observed the impact when the automobile struck the boy. Another passenger on the street car testified that she observed the boy start down the steps and her eyes were taken away from him when she looked directly across the car and saw the defendant's automobile passing, that the defendant's automobile was not up near the steps at the time she first saw it, and that the automobile was then traveling about 25 miles an hour. Another witness observed the automobile at the time of the impact and saw the front of the left fender of the automobile strike the boy. Another witness looked out of the street car window and observed the automobile before it struck the boy, and as it passed the window of the street car this witness estimated its speed to be 35 miles an hour. Another witness, who was riding on the right-hand side of the street car in the ninth seat back, saw the appellant's automobile flash past the window of the street car after the street car had stopped. Another witness, who observed that the street car came to a gradual stop, first saw the appellant's automobile in back of the whole street car while the street car was coming to a stop. This witness estimated the speed of appellant's automobile at that time as 35 miles an hour. This witness testified that the street car had come to a complete stop before the doors were opened, and that the boy had one foot on the pavement and was raising the other foot when the appellant's automobile struck him.

Section 500 of the Vehicle Code, as it read prior to the 1941 amendment, used the words "in a negligent manner or in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony." The amended statute drops the quoted language and substitutes the words "with reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to, the safety of others." It is further to be noted that the 1941 amendment adds a sentence to section 500, reading as follows:

"Hereafter, the provisions of the Penal Code, defining involuntary manslaughter, shall not apply to homicide caused by the driving of any vehicle."

Appellant's first contention is that in amending section 500 in 1941, the legislature intended to set up the same standard of criminal liability as is prescribed in section 403 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 154, for civil liability for injuries to a guest of a vehicle operator except where the element of intoxication is involved.

The two sections employ entirely different language. Section 403 provides, in substance, that a guest shall have no cause of action for civil liability for personal injury unless the guest can establish that the injury proximately resulted from the intoxication or wilful misconduct of the driver of the automobile. Section 500, as amended in 1941, on the other hand, says nothing of intoxication or wilful misconduct, but provides only that when death is the proximate result of injuries caused by driving a vehicle with "reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to, the safety of others," the operator shall be guilty of negligent homicide.

We are, in effect, asked by appellant to hold that when the legislature in 1941 amended section 500 by striking out the words "in a negligent manner or in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony" and inserted the words "with reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to, the safety of others," it intended that an automobile driver should not be guilty of negligent homicide unless he be guilty of "wilful misconduct."

[1] The language "wilful misconduct," was first written into our Vehicle Code in 1929. It has been defined by our courts on numerous occasions, and we are justified in assuming that if the legislature had intended to amend section 500 so as to make the requirements for a conviction of negligent homicide the same as for the recovery of damages by a guest it would have used the term "wilful misconduct," and not the words "reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to, the safety of others."

Appellant next argues that the evidence is insufficient to prove that defendant was guilty of reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to the safety of others.

The evidence in this case establishes that the street car running at approximately 20 miles an hour, came to a gradual stop at an intersection and that the street car stopped to permit a school boy passenger, aged 13, to alight; that the street car had come to a complete stop when the boy showed the conductor his pass and then opened the door; that the boy stepped out onto the pavement and started to take a second step when struck and killed by appellant's automobile. The accident occurred in the afternoon on a dry street in clear weather. One witness, sitting in the street car, saw appellant's automobile flash by the street car window after the car had stopped, and another witness observed appellant's automobile coming up in back of the street car while the street car was slowing for the stop. The amber signal lights on the street car were working at the time of the accident. Appellant's automobile was traveling at approximately 25 miles per hour at the time of the impact. No part of the evidence shows any attempt by appellant to stop until after the impact. Appellant admitted knowing the requirement to stop and not pass a street car when it was about to stop, but insists that she had passed the street car when it stopped. The trial court found the evidence sufficient to show reckless disregard of or wilful indifference to the safety of others.

[2] As we view the record, the evidence is amply sufficient to support the court's judgment of conviction. If the appellant was not observing the street car with sufficient attention to see that it was coming to a stop; if she took no notice of the amber stop lights on the rear of the street car as she approached to pass it; if, when she was about to pass it, she failed to observe that the door was opening or that a passenger was alighting, it may fairly be said that all of these acts combined on the part of appellant constituted such "reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to, the safety of others" as to imply a high degree of probability that such harm would result as did, in fact, result in the instant case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 363

COLDEN v. COSTELLO et al.

Civ. 13302.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 6, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 3, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 4, 1942.

1. Action ⇐6

In action for declaratory relief, where parties stipulated that actual controversy existed between them as to whether plaintiff's contemplated actions in courts of California and Texas for declaratory judgments, determining community or separate character of properties in estates of plaintiff's deceased husband, would violate provision of his will disinheriting any devisee or legatee unsuccessfully contesting or opposing plan of will, and defendant did not deny that controversy arose out of dispute as to proper construction of will, superior court had jurisdiction of action, since disputes as to proper construction of wills may be resolved in declaratory relief action. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

2. Action ⇐6

A declaratory judgment, allowing testator's widow to prosecute actions on equity rather than probate side of court for declaratory judgments, determining community or separate character of property in testator's estate, before making election whether to take property devised to her by will or her distributive share of community property, was erroneous.

3. Wills ⇐790

The superior court in probate exercises jurisdiction over interest of decedent's surviving wife in community property in course of administration on his estate and hence has jurisdiction to determine what share of property in estate is community and what is separate property as between widow and other beneficiaries under decedent's will, so that widow is not required to bring independent equity actions for declaratory judgments determining such question before making election whether to take property devised to her by will or her distributive share of community property.

4. Courts ⇐472(4)

The proceeding provided by Probate Code for administration on decedents' estates is in rem, and probate court's jurisdiction over property of estate and all persons claiming interest therein under decedent is complete and exclusive as to all matters involved in complete and effective administration.

5. Husband and wife ⇐276(3)

A decedent's surviving wife's title to her interest in community estate rests on distribution decree, which determines and identifies estate coming to her by virtue of her right and is indispensable as muniment of her title.

6. Action ⇐6

Declaratory relief is not provided as a substitute for other established and adequate legal procedure.

7. Action ⇐6

The statute authorizing construction of wills in declaratory relief actions did not transfer matters of probate cognizance from probate to equity side of superior court, but supplemented equitable powers of such court in probate with broader remedy of declaratory relief. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

8. Courts ⇐475(2)

Where declaration of rights and duties under will is only matter before court in equity action and equitable powers in probate are available and adequate, judges sitting in equity should leave settlement of controversy to probate side of court.

9. Wills ⇐790

A testator's widow, required to elect whether to take property devised to her by will or her share of community property, may first appear in proceeding under Probate Code for determination of heirship by setting up her right to distribution of part of estate, in which case decree may encompass adjudication of her community property rights, which would be conclusive on all interested parties and controlling on distribution of estate, or probate court, on petition for distribution, may adjudicate claims asserted by widow and determine what distributive share she would receive according to what election she made and such decree would be binding on all parties. Probate Code, §§ 1020 et seq., 1080–1082.

10. Courts ⇐200¼

As question of community or separate character of property of deceased husband's estate is within jurisdiction of superior court in probate to determine, such court may exercise such of its equity powers as it needs to invoke in aid of proper discharge of its manifest duties.

11. Wills ⇐790

A testator's widow is not entitled to withhold her election whether to take property devised to her by will or her distributive share of community property until rendition of final judgment establishing extent of community and separate property of testator's estate, as she will receive full information, to which she is entitled before making election, as to status of property, in course of proceedings available to her in probate administration.

12. Courts ⇐476

The California District Court of Appeal will assume that courts of another state exercise such complete and adequate jurisdiction in matter of administration of decedents' estates as is commonly possessed by courts of the several states, in absence of contrary showing.

Appeal from a Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Myron Westover, Judge.

Action by Clara N. Colden against John M. Costello, Abbey Bell Colden Alexander, individually and as executrix of the estate of Charles J. Colden, deceased, and others, for a declaratory judgment determining whether proposed actions by plaintiff for declaratory judgments determining community or separate character of decedent's properties would constitute contest of or opposition to decedent's will within provision thereof disinheriting unsuccessful contestant or opponent. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants executrix and others appeal.

Modified, and affirmed as modified.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

Stewart, Shaw & Murphey, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Goodspeed, McGuire, Harris & Pfaff, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Justice.

Respondent is the widow of Charles J. Colden, deceased, and entitled under his will to one-fifth of his estate remaining after the payment of certain specific bequests. In the will the share left to respondent was declared to be inclusive of her interest in the community property. The estate is situated partly in California and partly in Texas. Respondent claims that all of the California estate and a large part of that in Texas is community property. The other beneficiaries deny that respondent's community interest exceeds her share under the will. The case is one in which respondent is required to make an election to take under the will or her share of the community property. She has not done this and the estate cannot be closed until she does. The will contains in paragraph nine thereof a comprehensive "disinheriting" provision in case of unsuccessful contest or opposition to the plan of the will by any devisee or legatee.

In this situation respondent filed her complaint for declaratory relief against the executors of the will and the beneficiaries thereunder, alleging the foregoing and certain additional facts. She alleged that she was without information or knowledge as to the extent of the community property on which to base an intelligent election to take or not to take under the will; that she could not obtain such knowledge without the aid of a court of equity; that if compelled to make an election without judicial determination of the character of the property "plaintiff will be then subjected to the danger of irreparable loss and damage to her rights and interests in and to decedent's said estates * * * that plaintiff's rights and interest will be prejudiced and placed in jeopardy should she be forced to elect, without first having secured and ascertained by judicial determination and adjudication, the community or separate character of the various items of property in said decedent's California and Texas estates." It was then alleged that she desired to file in the courts of appropriate jurisdiction in the states of California and Texas, respectively, application for declaratory relief in the form of exhibits attached to the complaint. These were proposed complaints for declaratory relief, one to be filed in California and the other in Texas. By such proposed actions for declaratory relief plaintiff intended to obtain, outside of the probate proceedings, a determination as to the community or separate character of decedent's estate. It was further alleged that plaintiff had not filed said declaratory relief actions because of her fear that the same might constitute a violation of the contest clause of the will; that she had been advised by her counsel that the same would not violate said provision, but that the defendants claim and allege that it would be violated by the filing or prosecution of such proposed actions and "that, therefore, an actual controversy exists between plaintiff and defendants as to the proper construction and interpretation of the Last Will and Testament of decedent, Charles J. Colden, Deceased, and in particular as to the true construction, interpretation and effect of Paragraph Nine thereof, as to which plaintiff seeks and is entitled to receive declaratory relief." Defendants, without demurring, filed their answers denying material allegations of the complaint. Upon the trial it was stipulated by all parties that all of the allegations of the complaint were true and that all of the denials of the answers were untrue. The judgment was therefore based upon the truth of the facts alleged in the complaint.

The decree from which the appeal is prosecuted specifically awards to respondent the following rights: (1) to have full information as to what part of the estate is community property; (2) to pursue to final judgment in the appropriate courts of the states of California and Texas or elsewhere complaints for declaratory relief for a determination of the extent of the community property; (3) to prosecute such suits without incurring any penalty, as for a violation of the ninth paragraph of the will; (4) the right to withhold her election until there has been a judicial determination and adjudication establishing the community or separate nature of the property in California and Texas.

The underlying cause of this litigation is the disagreement of the parties as to the extent of the community property, which respondent proposes to have settled in separate actions in equity for declaratory relief. Appellants deny that she has this right and assert that all proceedings for the determination of her community interest in the estate should be taken in the probate proceeding. They contend that the court in probate has exclusive jurisdiction to determine questions relating to community property. Respondent contends that the probate court has no such jurisdiction but that the power to make that determination is exclusively in a court of equity trying separate and independent actions, one in California and one in Texas.

The judgment appealed from is attacked upon the grounds that the court was without jurisdiction to render it, and that it is erroneous.

Appellants' assault, which they say is upon the jurisdiction of the court, appears to deny not jurisdiction to entertain and determine the present action but its power to render the particular judgment which it did render. Questions as to respondent's right to maintain the present action and those relating to her right to bring the proposed declaratory relief actions must not be confused. The present action is conceded to be one for the construction of a will. The proposed actions are for the determination of community property rights. In determining whether the present case is a proper one for declaratory relief, it is immaterial that the judgment actually rendered may be or is erroneous, as is also the fact that the contemplated declaratory relief actions might constitute an unauthorized encroachment upon the jurisdiction of the probate court.

[1] So far as the question of the authority of the court to entertain the present action is concerned, we think that matter is settled by the facts as found by the court pursuant to the stipulation. By the ninth paragraph of the will it was provided that any beneficiary thereunder who should unsuccessfully prosecute a contest or oppose the plan of the will should receive only one dollar instead of the share which would otherwise go to him. Appellants stipulated that an actual controversy existed between the parties which called for an interpretation of this provision by the court in the nature of a declaration that respondent's contemplated declaratory relief actions either would or would not constitute a violation of the provisions of paragraph nine.

Appellants do not deny that the controversy to be adjudicated is one which arose out of a dispute as to the proper construction of the will, nor do they assert that the controversy involves either more or less than that. They submitted the question to the trial court as a proper one for it to decide. We therefore have the simple question whether a dispute as to the proper construction of a will may be resolved in a declaratory relief action. The answer is found in section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Wills are among the instruments which may be construed, where their terms are in dispute, in an action for declaratory relief. The section was so applied in McCaughna v. Bilhorn, 1935, 10 Cal.App.2d 674, 52 P.2d 1025, a case in which a judgment construing a will in a declaratory relief action was sustained on appeal.

In the present case the trial court properly held that it possessed authority to construe the will. However, in so stating, we have in mind that the case was presented to the court upon the theory that the particular matter in dispute, namely, respondent's claim that she had a right to bring other actions for declaratory relief, raised a question regarding the construction of a will within the meaning of section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure. No contention to the contrary is made here. Because of the manner in which the question was presented to the trial court and is presented here we must assume that one who claims under a will may appeal to the court in an action for declaratory relief to obtain a decree declaring what he may or may not do in asserting rights greater than those he enjoys under the will without violating a provision of the will against contests such as we have in the present case.

[2] The real controversy is whether proceedings for the determination of a widow's interest in community property should be taken in or independently of the probate administration. Simply stated, the question is this: Did the court properly extend the right to respondent to prosecute separate declaratory relief actions to final judgment before making her election, or should she have been limited to such steps as are available within the probate administration for the purpose of acquiring all available information with relation to the nature of the estate before making her election? We think the judgment is erroneous in allowing respondent to prosecute her claims upon the equity side rather than the probate side of the court.

We should say first that it is not contended on the appeal that the prosecution of the separate declaratory relief actions would violate the will, although that contention was made in the court below. It is contended on the one hand that the jurisdiction of the probate court is exclusive and, if not exclusive, that it is the proper jurisdiction for trial of the community property issue, and upon the other hand that that court has no jurisdiction in the matter.

[3] Respondent's contention is that she must bring independent actions in equity because the court in probate has no jurisdiction to determine as between her and the other claimants what share of the property is community and what is separate. She assumes that in asserting her community property rights she claims adversely to the estate and to the other beneficiaries under the will, and she says that this being so, the court in probate cannot adjudicate her rights. Theller v. Such, 1881, 57 Cal. 447; Bath v. Valdez, 1886, 70 Cal. 350, 11 P. 724; Barnard v. Wilson, 1887, 74 Cal. 512, 16 P. 307; In re Estate of Niccolls, 1912, 164 Cal. 368, 129 P. 278.

The contention is without merit. In re Estate of Burdick, 1896, 112 Cal. 387, 44 P. 734. The court in probate has always exercised jurisdiction over the interest of the surviving wife in the community property in the course of administration upon the estate of a deceased husband. No one of the powers of the court in probate is more firmly settled or more universally conceded and acted upon than this one.

[4-8] Since respondent's claims may be adjudicated in the probate court, the remaining questions are whether they can be adjudicated elsewhere and, if they can be, whether respondent should be allowed to have them tried in separate suits in equity.

The answer to the second query is so obvious and, in our opinion, so satisfactory as to render it unnecessary for us to answer the first one. Among the allegations of the complaint which we have quoted is one to the effect that respondent's rights and interests will be prejudiced if she has to make an election "without first having secured and ascertained by judicial determination and adjudication the community or separate character of the various items of property in said decedent's California and Texas estates." The truth of this allegation was admitted at the trial. It may very well have formed the basis for that provision of the decree awarding respondent the right to have such "judicial determination and adjudication." We cannot believe that appellants consciously and intentionally stipulated away their case. The right of respondent to have such "judicial determination and adjudication" was the very one that was in controversy. In spite of the breadth of this allegation we deem it more reasonable to believe that appellants conceded respondent's right to have a determination in the probate court as to the character of the property, but denied her right to have such determination in the form of a judgment, either final or otherwise, in any court, before making her election. In order to reach a just and proper determination of the controversy we should proceed upon this assumption.

The Probate Code provides one comprehensive, exclusive method for administration upon the estates of decedents. The proceeding is in rem and the jurisdiction of the court is complete over the property of the estate and over all persons claiming interests therein under the decedent, as to all matters involved in a complete and effective administration. The law does not provide an alternative procedure for determining questions of heirship in connection with rights of succession or the probate of wills, nor one in which the court has jurisdiction over all heirs and other claimants, both known and unknown. In those respects probate law is unique and exclusive. The title of a surviving wife to her interest in the community estate rests upon a decree of distribution. Her right as survivor of the community is one thing; the decree of distribution which determines and identifies the estate which comes to her by virtue of her right is quite another, and is indispensable as a muniment of her title. It would be an inexcusable interference with established probate procedure, and one which would result in delay and confusion, to permit issues strictly within probate jurisdiction to be tried through the medium of independent suits in equity. Declaratory relief is not provided as a substitute for other established and adequate legal procedure. True, there is the power to construe a will in a declaratory relief action, but we have no thought that in making this provision it was the intention of the legislature to transfer from the probate side of the court to its equity side matters of probate cognizance, but rather that it was the intent to supplement the equitable powers of the court in probate with the broader remedy of declaratory relief. The wisdom of this course was illustrated in the cause of McCaughna v. Bilhorn, supra, 10 Cal.App.2d 674, 52 P.2d 1025, where a court in an equity action had assumed jurisdiction of an entire controversy which could have been tried and determined in part but not in its entirety by the probate court. After pointing out the reasons why the appeal to the court sitting in equity was proper, it was stated in the opinion that (10 Cal.App.2d pages 683, 684, 52 P.2d page 1030), "Where the declaration of the rights and duties under a will is the only matter before the court, the judges sitting in equity might with great propriety leave the settlement of the controversy to the probate side of the court." We go further and hold that they should do so in every case where the equitable powers in probate are available and adequate, as they are in the case before us.

There is no doubt in our minds as to respondent's right to apply to the probate court for a judicial inquiry preliminary to a determination of the community property issue. She may do so without fear that any application which she may present in aid of the court's inquiry or any effort that she may make by the production of proof to establish that any part or all of the estate is community property will visit upon her the penalties of the ninth paragraph of the will. This is because the present decree, in terms which are not here questioned on that point, gives her even greater rights; likewise because appellants concede that respondent has a right to a full investigation of the question in the probate court and insist that she make her application within the proceedings in probate if at all.

[9, 10] Respondent may appear in any proceeding under sections 1080–1082 of the Probate Code for a determination of heirship by setting up her right to distribution of a part of the estate. The decree could encompass an adjudication of her community property rights, which would be conclusive upon all interested parties, and would be controlling upon distribution of the estate. Also, upon petition for distribution under section 1020 et seq. Probate Code the court could adjudicate any claims asserted by respondent and determine what share she would receive according to such decision as she may make under her right of election. The decree would be binding upon all parties. In re Estate of Burdick, supra, 112 Cal. 387, 44 P. 734. As the question of the community or separate character of the property of the estate is one within the court's jurisdiction in probate, that court may and will exercise such of its powers in equity as it may need to invoke in aid of the proper discharge of its manifest duties. In re Burton, 1892, 93 Cal. 459, 29 P. 36; Johnson v. Superior Court, 1929, 102 Cal.App. 178, 283 P. 331.

[11] The next objection which respondent has to going into the probate court is that she would prefer to have a final judgment establishing the extent of the community and separate property of the estate before she makes her election. She cannot obtain this in the probate court because she will be required to make her election before distribution and will therefore have to elect before the court makes an order either upon a hearing to determine heirship or for distribution. In holding that all further proceedings be had in the course of the administration of the estate, we are necessarily deciding that respondent is not entitled to withhold her election until she has received a final judgment, or in fact any judgment of the court upon the community property issue. She has the right to receive full information as to the status of the property of the estate before she decides whether to take under the will. In re Estate of McCarthy, 1932, 127 Cal.App. 80, 85, 15 P.2d 223; In re Estate of Dunphy, 1905, 147 Cal. 95, 104, 81 P. 315. This she will receive, for in the course of the proceedings which are available to her in the probate administration she will be as fully informed as the court will be as to the character of the property. We do not see how she can be entitled to more than this. She has a choice to make. The other beneficiaries do not question her right to make it, and whichever way she decides they must abide by it. They are not interfering with her decision and are willing that she shall pursue such inquiries as she may see fit to make within the probate administration. They are entitled to have their shares of the estate distributed to them without unnecessary delay. It is the policy of the law, and an indispensable one, that administration of estates in probate should be conducted with the utmost expedition. Executors and administrators must perform their duties promptly and means for compelling them to do so are readily available. Surely the right of other claimants to have their shares distributed to them promptly is superior to the privilege which respondent claims and which is accorded her by the judgment appealed from. She is not entitled to insurance in the form of a final or any judgment against error in making her choice. The judgment in this respect goes so far in her favor as to seriously invade the rights of other beneficiaries, for it cannot be questioned that respondent plans a course which would greatly delay the closing of the estate. Every right which she has will be fully protected within the probate administration in a manner which will fully respect the rights of all other claimants. Her further steps must be taken there.

[12] What we have said has particular reference to the laws of California. It is equally applicable to the Texas estate. It appears that the estate there consists, in part at least, of real property. We naturally assume that the courts of Texas exercise such complete and adequate jurisdiction in the matter of the administration of estates of decedents as is commonly possessed by the courts of the several states. Our attention has been called to nothing to the contrary. The findings and judgment in the present case furnish no reason for delay in the closing of the California administration while respondent prosecutes an equitable action in Texas apart from the probate administration for the determination of her rights as surviving wife to all or a portion of the property located in that state.

If we are correct in our views, then it was error for the court below to grant respondent the right to bring separate declaratory relief actions for the purpose of determining the nature of the property of the estate. Our conclusions call for a modification of the judgment to provide that respondent is not required to make her election whether she will take under the will or her share of the community property until the conclusion of an appropriate proceeding in the administration of the estate of Charles J. Colden, deceased, conducted for the purpose of eliciting all available proof offered by any of the interested parties as to the nature of the property of the estate, whether it be in whole or in part community or separate property, and that applications to the court in such connection, and the offering of proof to show that all, any or no part of the estate is community property, will not violate or render operative paragraph nine of the will of said decedent. As so modified, the judgment will be affirmed.

Neither party shall recover costs on the appeal.

There has heretofore been submitted for decision a motion by appellants for leave to introduce upon the appeal evidence of proceedings had with reference to the matters in controversy since the entry of the judgment appealed from. The conclusions we have reached in disposing of the appeal render it unnecessary for us to consider the matters to which the proposed evidence would relate, and the application is therefore denied.

SCHAUER, P. J., concurred.

PARKER WOOD, J., deeming himself disqualified, does not participate in this decision.

50 Cal.App.2d 374

FERRAN et al. v. CITY OF PALO ALTO et al.

Civ. 6636.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 6, 1942.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐111(3)

Before a municipal ordinance will be declared invalid on ground that it is unreasonable, oppressive, unequal, and unlawfully discriminating, it must be very clearly obnoxious to such objections.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐122(2)

Every intendment is to be indulged in favor of the validity of a municipal ordinance, and all doubts are to be resolved in a way to uphold the lawmaking power, and a contrary conclusion will never be reached on light consideration.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐63(1)

A municipality has the right to regulate its local affairs, within the law, and it is the duty of the courts to uphold such regulations, unless it manifestly appear that the ordinance or by-law transcends the power of the municipality and contravenes rights secured to the citizen by the constitution or laws made in pursuance thereof.

4. Municipal corporations ⇐111(1, 2)

A municipal ordinance must be consistent with the general powers and purposes of the municipality, and must harmonize with the general laws of the state, the municipal charter, and the principles of the common law.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐120

A municipal ordinance can have no extraterritorial force unless by express permission of the sovereign power. Const. art. 11, § 11.

6. Constitutional law ⇐230(3)
Licenses ⇐7(1, 6)

City ordinance, providing that laundries within or without cities should pay a license fee to be calculated on a basis of the number of employees at laundry plant, is invalid because of attempted extraterritorial application, because of unlawful and unreasonable discrimination against and denial of "equal protection of the law" to laundries doing their laundering and having their plants outside of city, but deriving some of their business from within city, and because it unlawfully discriminates against those engaged in the city in business of taking orders for laundering to be done by laundries maintaining their washing plants and doing their business outside city. Const. art. 11, §§ 11, 12.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Equal Protection of the Law".

7. Appeal and error ⇐179(4)

Where plaintiffs, seeking to restrain city from enforcing city ordinance requiring payment of license fees in connection with conduct of a laundry business, on ground that ordinance was void, showed that plaintiffs had fully complied with all provisions of city ordinance except with respect to payment of license tax, plaintiffs could not raise the point on appeal that the police and sanitary regulations involved in the ordinance offended constitutional principles of equal protection of the law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; William F. James, Judge.

Action by Mme. Ferran and others against the City of Palo Alto and others for an injunction to restrain the defendants from enforcing an ordinance of the City of Palo Alto requiring the payment of license fees in connection with the conduct of a laundry business. From a judgment in favor of defendants, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment reversed with instructions to enter judgment for plaintiffs.

Henderson & Henderson, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Arnold Rumwell, City Atty., of Palo Alto, for respondents.

COMSTOCK, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs prosecute this appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action for an injunction seeking to restrain the defendants from enforcing an ordinance of the city of Palo Alto requiring the payment of license fees in connection with the conduct of a laundry business.

It was stipulated that all of the allegations in the First Amended Complaint are true, except the allegation that the ordinance in question is illegal and void.

The plaintiffs are copartners engaged in the laundry business. The plant where their washing and ironing is done is located in the city and county of San Francisco. They have customers in various localities in the San Francisco Bay area, including San Francisco, San Mateo and Santa Clara Counties and the city of Palo Alto. Motor vehicles are operated by plaintiffs throughout these localities for the purpose of picking up articles to be laundered, transporting them to the plant in San Francisco, where they are washed and ironed, and then returning them to the customers. Plaintiffs have thirty-five employees at their establishment where the laundering is done. They do a gross annual business of about $900 in Palo Alto and about $60,000 in other localities, including San Francisco.

Appellants contend that the ordinance is beyond the power of the city to enact or enforce and is unequal, unfair, unreasonable, discriminatory, unconstitutional and void.

The provisions under attack are section 215, subsection "c," of Codified Ordinance No. 3 of defendant city, as amended, section 678 of said ordinance, as amended, and section 684 thereof, as amended. The first-mentioned provides that any person, firm or corporation, engaged in the laundry business in the city of Palo Alto, or taking orders for laundering, or washing of any article of clothing, linens, napery, blankets, bed clothing, or fabrics of any kind whatsoever, to be laundered or washed, for hire, whether said work is to be done within or without the limits of the city of Palo Alto shall pay a license fee to be calculated upon a basis of the number of employees at the plant or place of laundering. Where the number of such employees is four or less, the license fee is $15 per quarter, where more than four and less than fifteen, $30 per quarter, and where fifteen or more, $45 per quarter. The second requires any such persons engaging in such business in said city to first obtain a permit from the Board of Public Safety of said city and that no license or permit therefor shall be issued by said board until the plant or place of laundering and the employees engaged therein shall have been inspected by the Health Officer of said city, or his duly authorized representative, under the rules and regulations of the Board of Public Safety, and the sanitary character of the plant and the absence of contagious or infectious disease among its agents or employees shall be certified to by him; provided, that if such laundry establishment is situated outside of the city of Palo Alto, the Health Officer, in lieu of such inspection "may accept a certificate" from the Board of Health, Health Officer or other health authority of the city or town where such establishment is located, certifying to such health conditions. Where the plant is situated in Palo Alto, such inspections are required to be made without charge. Said section 684 provides that whenever any laundry seeking to do business within the city of Palo Alto is located without the city limits of said city "and is unable from any cause to produce a satisfactory certificate from the health authority" in the town or city where it is located, certifying to the health conditions at such establishment, it may, before a permit is granted, be required to submit to an inspection by the Health Officer of the City of Palo Alto, for the making of which he shall charge mileage at the rate of 15¢ per mile for each mile actually traveled by him from his office in the city of Palo Alto to the place where inspection is made, and return therefrom, and in addition is required to charge a fee for such inspection at the rate of $2.50 per hour for each hour actually spent in making such inspection, from the time of his departure from his office in the city of Palo Alto until the time of his return thereto; provided, that where two or more laundries are inspected on the same trip, the time occupied in traveling to and from such establishments "may be pro-rated and charged proportionately to such establishments."

There is no serious disagreement between the parties as to the principles underlying the doctrine of equal protection and uniform application of the law. These principles have been exhaustively dealt with in numerous decisions of our supreme and appellate courts and it will serve no useful purpose to reiterate here general principles so well established and understood. The difficulty arises in attempting to apply those principles to any case possessing unusual circumstances.

[1-3] A well-established rule of construction which must always be borne in mind when approaching the solution of a problem such as that before us has frequently been quoted from Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 412, 416, 44 P. 725, 32 L.R.A. 527, wherein the court said: "It is urged * * * that the particular provision in question is unreasonable and oppressive, and that it is unequal and unlawfully discriminating. * * * A municipal ordinance must be very clearly obnoxious to such objections as those made, or some one of them, before it will be declared invalid by the courts. Every intendment is to be indulged in favor of its validity, and all doubts resolved in a way to uphold the lawmaking power, and a contrary conclusion will never be reached upon light consideration. It is the province and right of the municipality to regulate its local affairs, —within the law, of course,—and it is the duty of the courts to uphold such regulations, except it manifestly appear that the ordinance or by-law transcends the power of the municipality, and contravenes rights secured to the citizen by the constitution, or laws made in pursuance thereof."

In respect to the provisions of the ordinance basing the license fee to be charged upon the number of employees at the laundry plant, appellants, while conceding the general proposition that license charges for revenue purposes on business or occupations transacted within a municipality may properly be based upon the volume of business done therein and that various means have been lawfully employed for measuring the volume, including gross receipts, number of vehicles employed and number of employees, insist that under the circumstances here to base the license fee on the number of employees at their plant outside the city operates extra-territorially and exceeds the power of the city, unlawfully discriminates against them and in favor of laundries doing their washing within the city, and violates the principle that an ordinance may not be devised solely for the purpose of erecting a protective tariff for the benefit of businesses located within the city. No case has been cited by either the appellants or the respondents which is strictly analogous on its facts.

Article XI, section 11 of the Constitution of California provides: "Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." Article XI, section 12 thereof provides: "The Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes."

Palo Alto operates under a freeholder's charter, of which article II, section 6 gives the city power, "To exercise police powers and make all necessary police and sanitary regulations, to adopt ordinances and prescribe penalties for the violation thereof." Article II, section 7 thereof provides for the authority, "To levy and collect taxes and assessments, impose license fees for revenue or regulation, and provide all means for raising the revenue necessary for the City."

[4, 5] "A municipal ordinance must consist with the general powers and purposes of the corporation; must harmonize with the general laws of the state, the municipal charter, and the principles of the common law. Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. [606], 609 [28 Am.Rep. 642]; Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. [212], 225. One of the limitations upon such ordinances is that they can have no extra-territorial force unless by express permission of the sovereign power. In the nature of things, this must be so unless intolerable confusion and evil is to result; and the constitution of the state, recognizing the necessity for such a restriction, has provided (article 11, § 11) that 'any county, city, etc., may make and enforce within its limits all such local, * * * and other regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.'" South Pasadena v. Los Angeles Terminal Ry. Co., 109 Cal. 315, 41 P. 1093, 1094. "Municipal ordinances are necessarily local in their application. Usually they operate only in the territory of the municipality by which they are enacted and can have no force beyond it." McQuillan, Mun.Corps.Rev., vol. 2, p. 723, par. 693.

In the case of In re Smith, 33 Cal.App. 161, 164 P. 618, 619, an ordinance of the city of Tropico, among other things, contained a provision in effect making it unlawful, without first obtaining a license so to do, for any person to operate or carry on the business of operating any auto bus or motor vehicle over the streets of said city in carrying passengers for hire from one point to another, both of which points are outside the boundaries thereof. Holding that the ordinance was invalid, the court said: "While under its police power such city may adopt and compel the observance of all reasonable measures intended for the regulation of traffic over the streets by all persons operating motor vehicles thereon, its sole power to levy a tax of this character is found in subdivision 10, section 862, of the charter for cities of the sixth class (Deering's Gen.Laws, Ed. 1915, p. 1123), which provides that the board of trustees of said city shall have power 'to license, for the purpose of revenue and regulation, all and every kind of business authorized by law and transacted and carried on in such city or town, and all shows, exhibitions and lawful games carried on therein; to fix the rates of license tax upon the same, and to provide for the collection of the same by suit or otherwise.' Under this provision the power of the city to impose a license upon a business is clearly limited to that only which is 'transacted and carried on in such city.' That by virtue of this section the city of Tropico may require persons, companies, or corporations who therein conduct the business of transporting passengers for hire to be licensed, admits of no question. It is the occupation, however, not an act which is merely incidental thereto, which is subject to the tax."

The case of Kansas City v. Seaman, 99 Kan. 143, 160 P. 1139, 1140, L.R.A.1917B, 341, involved an attempt to impose a license tax on a laundry business which sent an employee from Kansas City, Mo., where its laundry was located, to Kansas City, Kansas, to pick up by means of a horse and wagon the linen of its patrons there, take it to the laundry, and when it was ready for delivery, return it to its patrons and collect the charges. The ordinance of Kansas City, Kansas, for the violation of which the defendant had been convicted, provided that no person, either as principal, officer, agent, servant, or employee, should carry on or operate within the city any calling, trade or occupation therein specified, without first obtaining a license therefor. The ordinance fixed the occupation tax for laundries as follows: "Laundry Wagon. Any person or corporation conducting, pursuing or carrying on a laundry business by collecting or delivering laundry by means of a wagon or other vehicle, for each wagon or vehicle, $10." The court said:

"We construe the ordinance as imposing an occupation tax upon the laundry business; the amount of the tax against the business being determined by the number of wagons employed therein.

"There are two reasons why we think the judgment convicting the appellant must be reversed: First, he was not carrying on the business of a laundry within the city, and therefore was not within the terms or contemplation of the ordinance. The laundry was conducted in Kansas City, Mo. * * * He had no place of business in Kansas City, Kan., but was simply using the streets for the lawful purpose of transporting from that city to the state of Missouri articles to be laundered and to return them to the owners when the service was completed."

The case then goes on to discuss a question of interstate commerce. Concluding the opinion, the court held: "While engaged in collecting articles to be laundered or in returning them to the owners in Kansas after the labor and service had been performed in Missouri, the appellant, as the servant and agent of his employer, was not carrying on the laundry business in Kansas; and for that reason alone was not within the provisions of the ordinance which purports to levy an occupation tax upon persons carrying on such business within the state."

In People v. Sackett, 6 Cal.App.2d Supp. 763, 43 P.2d 1115, 1117, the Appellate Department of the Superior Court, County of Los Angeles, had under consideration an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles attempting to regulate transportation companies "which operate between points, stations or depots, one or more of which are within and one or more of which are without said city; and which do not, on the same continuous run, receive and discharge passengers or freight within said city." It was held that the ordinance was void as being an attempted regulation of matters not local or municipal and as unreasonably discriminatory and obnoxious to the provisions of article I, section 21, of the California Constitution.

[6] Appellants point out that inasmuch as the number of their employees at their laundry or washing plant is directly related to the total volume of their business derived from all localities in which it originates or is collected, which volume is approximately $60,000 a year, whereas only about $900 a year thereof comes from within Palo Alto, the effect is to raise revenue for the city of Palo Alto on business not local or transacted within the municipality bearing an overwhelming ratio to that reached by the same license tax and done within the city. In other words, in appellant's case, of their business sought to be reached by and burdened with this license tax, more than sixty times as much is done outside the city as is done inside. The argument is that this attempts to reach out and tax non-local pursuits for revenue by the ingenious method of tying the license measure to an incidental part or branch of the business carried on in an almost inconsequential proportion within the city. It is further urged that the tax is just as definitely oppressive and discriminatory against the appellants and others in their situation as a measure which exempts the inside concern but levies a license tax on the one having its established or principal place of business or laundry plant outside, but coming into the city to do some business, or as one which levies a disproportionately smaller flat license charge upon the local one than upon the one operating a delivery service within from a laundry situated outside, both of which methods are condemned by the authorities. Bueneman v. City of Santa Barbara, 8 Cal.2d 405, 65 P.2d 884, 109 A.L.R. 895; In re Hines, 33 Cal.App. 45, 164 P. 339; Ex parte Frank, supra.

Respondents argue that while the method of calculating the tax is novel and to their knowledge has never been under judicial review, it is nevertheless valid; that it does not tax business done outside the city limits; that the ordinance merely provides a license fee for the privilege of engaging in business in the city of Palo Alto; that the amount of the fee is not based upon the earnings of the licensee, but upon the size of the plant, and that the city is not concerned with the volume of business done by any laundry. These arguments do not, in our opinion, satisfactorily dispose of those advanced by appellants. Every occupational or business tax may be said to be but a levy of a license fee for the privilege of engaging in business. The distinction attempted is one of terms only. When we speak of the size of the plant and adopt as the measure the number of employees therein, we are not speaking of mere physical dimensions of buildings, or the like, but of the size of the group employed, which is very definitely related to the volume of business done, in that productive labor produces quantity or volume of output and affects the amount of business done in terms of dollar and cent value. It has been held that the number of employees in a laundry plant is a way of gauging the amount of business done therein within the meaning of an ordinance requiring licenses to be "discriminating and proportionate to the amount of business." In Ex parte Sisto Li Protti, 68 Cal. 635, 10 P. 113, it was said: "Whether the number of persons employed in the various laundries of the city is the basis by which can best be gauged the amount of business done therein or not, it is one way of doing so, and, for aught we know, the safest way. The city council cannot count the various articles of wearing apparel laundried by the various laundries. But it is fair to presume that no more persons are employed in such establishments than are necessary to the performance of the work, and, as a consequence, that the amount of business done by such establishments is in proportion to the number of persons employed therein." (Emphasis added.) It will be noted that this case dealt only with a license tax imposed upon the laundries of the city in respect to the amount of business done therein and that it is not authority for the proposition that the number of employees at the place where the washing is done is a valid basis for computing the fees to be paid by laundries having their plants outside the city and doing but a small portion of their business within the city by picking up and delivering therein articles washed elsewhere. This question was not involved nor discussed in the case. Since the number of employees is in a general way proportionate to the amount of business done, and since in this case the total amount of business done is about $60,000 per annum, of which only about $900 per annum comes from within Palo Alto, it follows that the license tax is non-local and operates upon business outside of Palo Alto in proportion to the difference in amounts. It is an invalid attempt by the city to make its ordinance extraterritorial in scope and application. If the method were upheld, it would be possible to subvert the entire principle of local application of municipal revenue measures. We also hold that the case is governed by the principles laid down in Bueneman v. City of Santa Barbara, supra, and related cases, and that section 215, subsection "c" of the ordinance is void as an unlawful and unreasonable discrimination against and denial of the equal protection of the law to laundries doing their laundering and having their plants outside of Palo Alto, but deriving some of their business from within said city. It also unlawfully discriminates against those engaged in Palo Alto in the business of taking orders for laundering or washing to be done by laundries maintaining their washing plants and doing their business outside the city. The business of such solicitors may be an independent calling having no logical connection whatsoever with the number of employees at the plant where the washing is done.

It is our opinion that the views expressed herein do not conflict with the case of California F. S. Co. v. Santa Monica, 206 Cal. 714, 275 P. 948. In that case persons conducting the business of operating motor-propelled vehicles for the transportation of baggage, express, freight, goods, merchandise or machinery were required to pay semi-annually a license tax computed upon the annual tonnage of freight, wares and merchandise so transported. Whether the attempt was to collect the license tax based upon the total tonnage handled in pursuance of business done both within and without the city was not specifically commented upon. The principal point was whether the company was engaged in business in the city of Santa Monica within the meaning of the ordinance, since its principal place of business was in Los Angeles and only a portion of its transportation functions was carried on in Santa Monica. The court held that it was engaged in business within the city of Santa Monica and frequently throughout its decision referred to and stressed its business in said city. One of the authorities quoted from as strengthening respondent's case was The Emporium v. City of San Mateo, 177 Cal. 622, 171 P. 434, 435, the language selected being as follows: "When a business institution, though located as to its central place of conduction or of the sale of its goods or products in one city or town, conducts through delivery wagons or other vehicles a regular system of delivery to customers within another municipality, the latter under proper authority may impose a license tax upon the wagons or other appliances of the distributing business which is thus actually done within it and upon and along its streets." (Emphasis added.) A careful reading of the case discloses that the business which was being taxed was that done within and along the streets of Santa Monica and in the absence of any language indicating that the tonnage handled elsewhere should be included in the computation for the purpose of the city license tax, it will not be presumed or inferred that it was the intention of the court to hold that it could be based upon anything more than the amount of tonnage handled in business actually done within the city.

[7] As to the police and sanitary regulations involved in sections 678 and 684 of the ordinance, as amended, appellants argue that they offend the constitutional principles of equal protection of the law for the precise reasons set forth in the case of In re Blois, 179 Cal. 291, 176 P. 449, declaring void the provisions of a former ordinance of the city of Palo Alto, relating to the same subject. While this question has been extensively briefed on both sides, the point is made by respondents that it is improperly raised on this appeal, as the facts pleaded in the First Amended Complaint show that appellants have fully complied with all of the provisions of the respondent city's ordinances except the payment of the license tax of $180 per year based upon the number of employees at the plant where their washing is done and no complaint whatever is made of any attempt to wrongfully enforce any other provisions of the same. We agree with respondents' position in this regard. Said amended complaint, whose allegations under the stipulation constitute the factual basis of the case before us, tenders no issue with respect to any wrong or threatened wrong of which appellants can complain or upon which an injunction might be based in regard to the inspection features of the ordinance or the fees to be charged for such inspection.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to the trial court to enter its judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and enjoining the defendants from enforcing or threatening to enforce against plaintiffs the provisions of the ordinance requiring the payment of a license fee based upon the number of employees at their laundry plant situated outside the city of Palo Alto.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 320

PRICE v. MASON–McDUFFIE CO.

Civ. 11662.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 4, 1942.

1. Limitation of actions ⇐197(2)

Evidence supported finding that contractor perpetrated a fraud upon owner in construction of house, but that owner had knowledge of structural defects in house and foundation at all times subsequent to the year 1929, and hence action was barred by limitations where it was not filed until June 11, 1937. Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 1; § 338, subds. 1, 4; § 339, subd. 1; § 343.

2. Limitation of actions ⇐100(12)

The means of knowledge of fraud being equivalent to knowledge, if it appears that plaintiff had notice or information of circumstances which would put him on inquiry which, if followed, would lead to knowledge, or that facts were presumptively within his knowledge, he will be deemed to have had actual knowledge of those facts, as regards whether an action for fraud is barred by limitations. Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 1; § 338, subds. 1, 4; § 339, subd. 1; § 343.

3. Pleading ⇐236(1)

There is no set rule governing the filing of an amended answer and each case depends upon its own facts, and the trial court is vested with broad discretion in determining whether amendment may be filed.

4. Pleading ⇐229

Great liberality should be shown by a trial court at all stages in permitting such amendments to pleadings as will facilitate production of all facts bearing upon questions involved in the action, where this can be done without working great delay and without jeopardizing rights of adverse party, and where the cause of action or issues involved therein will not be radically changed.

5. Pleading ⇐229

Amendments which may remove a possible ambiguity in a pleading or cure a defect of form should be liberally allowed.

6. Pleading ⇐229

Liberality in allowance of an amendment to a pleading is the rule rather than the exception, and, where such amendment can be made in the furtherance of justice without jeopardizing rights of adverse party, it should be allowed.

7. Pleading ⇐236(4)

Where first amended answer purported to deny plaintiff's allegations of fraud but denials were imperfect in form, and case was tried upon assumption that fraud was a disputed issue, and plaintiff treated denials as being sufficient to require production of proof on issue of fraud, permitting defendant to file a second amended answer containing denials conforming to rules of pleading was not an abuse of discretion.

8. Appeal and error ⇐671(1)

Plaintiff could not on appeal complain that defendant willfully suppressed evidence by failing to call as a witness an employee, where record did not disclose that employee was in possession of facts material to issues.

9. Judgment ⇐197

That defendant's motion for nonsuit was denied and that defendant thereafter offered no evidence did not entitle plaintiff to judgment, since in ruling on a motion for nonsuit all testimony introduced by plaintiff must be taken as true but such rule does not prevail in deciding case on merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge Assigned.

Action by Lawrence M. Price against Mason-McDuffie Company, a corporation, for damages for alleged fraud. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Philip O. Solon and Nathan Kessler, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Hagar, Crosby & Crosby, of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action for damages based on allegations of fraud committed by defendant in constructing a dwelling for plaintiff. The trial court found that defendant had perpetrated a fraud on plaintiff, but held that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The principal question raised by the appeal, so plaintiff states in his opening brief, is the propriety of an order made by the trial court granting defendant leave to file a second amended answer. However, the determination of that question, as well as the others urged in support of the appeal, requires a consideration of the facts of the case and the trial court's findings thereon.

At the time the transactions here involved took place, plaintiff was a professor of languages in the state university at Berkeley, and the owner of a lot situated on the side of a hill in that city. In June, 1923, he entered into a written contract with the defendant company for the construction of a dwelling on said lot. The plans and specifications therefor were drawn and prepared by C. R. Madison, an employee of defendant; and the house was completed in September, 1923. Eight days afterwards it was destroyed by fire; and in November, 1923, plaintiff entered into a second contract with said company to build another dwelling on the same lot. The plans and specifications therefor were likewise prepared by Madison. The house was built on the old foundations, and was completed and plaintiff moved into it on March 7, 1924. The contract price was approximately $7,300, which plaintiff paid in full in accordance with the terms of the contract. Soon after plaintiff moved into the house a number of serious structural defects became apparent to him, and the conditions grew steadily worse during the next several years. Broadly stated, the house progressively sagged, cracked, deteriorated and warped, and plaintiff was fully aware of these conditions, and on three or more occasions called upon the defendant company to repair the damage. The ceiling, walls and foundations cracked; several of the doors and windows jammed; the floors warped; the hearth began sinking; the back and sides of the house sagged, and it was feared that the chimney would fall. Within a year or so after moving into the house plaintiff called the company to repair the cracked plaster; and calling attention to the sagging of the walls of the house and the condition of the foundations, asked the company if something should not be done about it. He was informed that the company had built the house in accordance with the plans and specifications, and that the damage was not caused by faulty construction, but was due to the fact that the house was built on the side of a hill. On that first occasion plaintiff paid the company between $50 and $100 for making the repairs. About two years later it became necessary to summon the company again to make other repairs, for which plaintiff paid an additional $250. In 1929 he called on the company again, this time to make extensive repairs to the foundations, for which he paid approximately $200 more; and between 1934 and 1935 more repairs were necessary, for which the company was also paid. Most if not all of the repair work was done under the direction of two company employees named Nagle and Pusey. In 1936 plaintiff left Berkeley on his sabbatical leave, and upon his return in 1937 found the dwelling in a state of collapse; and after waiting a week for the defendant company to send an expert to inspect the premises, plaintiff employed Mr. Wagenet, a licensed architect, to do so and to perform such work as was necessary to prevent the house from slipping down the hill. For the work performed under the direction of Mr. Wagenet plaintiff paid some $1,170. The complaint in the present action was filed on June 11, 1937.

[1] The trial court found that defendant induced plaintiff to enter into the second contract by falsely representing to him (a) that the defendant would construct the house in a workmanlike manner, in accordance with the plans and specifications and with the building laws of California and Berkeley; (b) that Madison was an architect, as an architect is defined under the laws of the state of California; and (c) that the foundations of the first house were good and substantial and could safely be used for the foundation of the second house. But the court further found that it was not true that at any time after the completion of the second house, that is to say, March 7, 1924, appellant believed or relied upon representations made by defendant that there were no structural defects in the house or foundations; it further found that defendant knew that said foundations were insufficient to support said dwelling house and fraudulently attempted to conceal said fact from the plaintiff, but that defendant did not conceal the same from plaintiff; that plaintiff had knowledge thereof. It further found "that at all times subsequent to the year 1929 plaintiff knew of the condition of said foundations and that they were not constructed or laid in a workmanlike manner or in accordance with said agreements or said drawings, plans, specifications, ordinances or laws, and that solely by reason thereof the said building had become and was untenantable and dangerous in which to live." The evidence is amply sufficient to support the trial court's finding that the defendant company perpetrated a fraud upon plaintiff in the construction of said house; but it also fully sustains the trial court's second ultimate finding as to plaintiff's knowledge of the structural defects in said house and the foundations upon which it was built. Lady Washington C. Co. v. Wood, 113 Cal. 482, 45 P. 809. That being so, the trial court's conclusion that the action is barred by the statute of limitations must be upheld.

[2] Plaintiff contends that because of the statements made to him by defendant's employees to the effect that the damage to the house was caused by the fact that the house was constructed on the side of a hill, it cannot be held that he discovered the fraud at any time prior to 1937 when he was informed by Mr. Wagenet that defective foundations were the real cause of the damage. Plaintiff argues, therefore, that the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure are controlling, and if so his action was brought within the time prescribed by law, citing Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., 163 Cal. 561, 126 P. 351, 42 L.R.A.,N.S., 125. As said, however, in the Lady Washington case, supra [113 Cal. 482, 45 P. 810]: "* * * as the means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge, if it appears that the plaintiff had notice or information of circumstances which would put him on an inquiry which, if followed, would lead to knowledge, or that the facts were presumptively within his knowledge, he will be deemed to have had actual knowledge of these facts;" and clearly this is just such a case. We find nothing in the case cited by plaintiff which can be said to be helpful to him; in fact it appears from the decision therein that the court there was not concerned at all with the question of the statute of limitations.

Nor are we able to agree with plaintiff's contention that the trial court erred in granting leave to file a second amended answer. The circumstances leading up to the making of the order were these: On February 23, 1938, the attorneys then representing defendant filed an amended answer to the complaint. It contained certain denials of the allegations of fraud, damage, and time of discovery of the fraud, and as affirmative defenses pleaded the statutes of limitation, subd. 1, sec. 337, subd. 4, sec. 338, subd. 1, sec. 339, and sec. 343, Code Civ.Proc. In August, 1938, defendant's present attorneys were substituted, and the cause came on for trial in October, 1938. Evidence was introduced by plaintiff in support of all of the allegations of his complaint; whereupon he rested his case. Defendant moved for a nonsuit and the motion was denied; whereupon defendant rested its case, without introducing any testimony. The obvious reason therefor was that it relied upon plaintiff's testimony as establishing that the action was barred by the statutes of limitation. The cause was then continued until November 13, 1938, with the understanding that briefs were to be filed, following which the cause was to be ordered submitted for decision. Plaintiff filed his opening brief wherein he argued, among other things, that the denials in the amended answer of some of the allegations of the complaint relating to the issue of fraud were insufficient in form and amounted to admissions of those allegations. The imperfections in said denials consisted chiefly in the fact that certain allegations of the complaint were denied on information only, rather than on information and belief. Thereupon defendant's present attorneys moved for an order granting leave to file a second amended answer containing denials which admittedly conformed to the rules of pleading. The motion was supported by an affidavit made by defendant's former counsel to the effect that the filing of the answer containing the defective form of denials was due to mistake, inadvertence and excusable neglect. A counter-affidavit was filed by plaintiff's counsel, and a reply affidavit by defendant's present counsel. The motion was granted, and the cause was ordered submitted for decision; whereupon the trial court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and rendered judgment in favor of defendant.

[3-6] In support of his contention that the order permitting defendant to file the second amended answer was erroneous, plaintiff cites several cases including Richter v. Adams, 19 Cal.App.2d 572, 66 P.2d 226, 230; but it should be noted that in most of those cases the trial court denied the application to file the amended pleading, and it was held that such refusal did not amount to an abuse of discretion under the circumstances. It would appear, therefore, that there is no set rule governing such matters; that each case depends upon its own peculiar facts, and that the trial court is vested with a broad discretion in determining whether the amendment may or may not be filed. In any event, so far as we are here concerned, the rule of those cases goes no further than to hold that "* * * amendments of pleadings to conform to the proofs should not be allowed when they raise new issues not included in the original pleadings and upon which the adverse party had no opportunity to defend." Richter v. Adams, supra, quoting from Lavely v. Nonemaker, 212 Cal. 380, 298 P. 976. On the other hand, as stated in California Jurisprudence (vol. 21, p. 183) great liberality should be shown by a trial court at all stages in permitting such amendments as will facilitate the production of all the facts bearing upon the questions involved in the action, where this can be done without working great delay and without jeopardizing the rights of the adverse party, and where the cause of action or the issues involved therein will not be radically changed; and that "amendments which may remove a possible ambiguity in a pleading or cure a defect of form should be liberally allowed." 21 Cal. Jur. 185. In other words, as stated in Abbott v. Limited Mut. Comp. Ins. Co., 30 Cal.App.2d 157, 85 P. 961, liberality, in allowance of an amendment to a pleading is the rule rather than the exception; and in a case where such amendment can be made in the furtherance of justice without jeopardizing the rights of the adverse party it should be allowed. In LeCyr v. Dow, 30 Cal.App.2d 457, 86 P.2d 900, the original answer specifically admitted certain allegations of the complaint, and afterwards an amendment was allowed which specifically denied such allegations. The reviewing court sustained the trial court's order allowing the amendment, saying in effect that the whole subject of amendments to pleadings is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and that while ordinarily a party will not be permitted on trial to amend by denying a fact admitted in the answer, there is no absolute rule governing the matter, and that when the amendment does not operate to the disadvantage or prejudice of the adverse party the trial court's ruling will not be disturbed. See also Wrightson v. Dougherty, 5 Cal.2d 257, 54 P.2d 13.

[7] Here it appears that the first amended answer purported to deny the allegations of fraud, but the denials were imperfect in form; and the answer set up in due form the affirmative defenses of the statutes of limitation; furthermore the record shows that at the opening of the trial it was the understanding of defendant's counsel and doubtless that of the court that the allegations relating to the issue of fraud had been sufficiently denied, and the cause was tried upon the assumption that fraud was a disputed issue in the case. It also appears that plaintiff's evidence was introduced accordingly; that plaintiff himself was fully examined and cross-examined on all phases of that branch of the case. In short, throughout the trial plaintiff treated the denials as did counsel for defendant, as being legally sufficient to require the production of proof on the issue of fraud. It is apparent, therefore, that plaintiff was not taken at any disadvantage, nor has he suffered any prejudice as the result of the trial court's ruling granting leave to file said second amended answer.

[8, 9] Further contention is made that defendant wilfully suppressed evidence by failing to call as a witness an employee named Tompkins. But nowhere in the record does it appear that he was in possession of any facts material to the issues in the case. Finally, plaintiff urges that since defendant's motion for nonsuit was denied and thereafter it offered no evidence, plaintiff was entitled to judgment. But in making this point plaintiff apparently overlooks the fact that in ruling on a motion for nonsuit all testimony introduced by the plaintiff must be taken as true; whereas in deciding the case on the merits, no such rule prevails.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and GOODELL, Justice pro tem., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 272

THOMPSON v. SUTTON et al.

Civ. 6635.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 28, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1129

The policy of the law is to have a hearing on the merits wherever possible, and reviewing courts are much more disposed to affirm an order which results in compelling trial on merits than it is when the judgment by default is allowed to stand and it appears that a substantial defense could be made. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

2. Appeal and error ⇐957(1)
Judgment ⇐139

A broad discretion is allowed to courts in granting relief against default, and it is only in cases where lower court has abused its discretion that reviewing court will reverse action of the lower court. Code Civ. Proc. § 473a.

3. Judgment ⇐143(1)

The provision of Civil Code relating to setting aside of judgments taken against party through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect is a "remedial statute" and is required to be liberally construed so as to dispose of cases on the merits, and give party claiming in good faith to have a subsisting cause of action or substantial defense thereto an opportunity to present it. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Remedial Statute".

4. Judgment ⇐145(2), 159, 163

An applicant seeking relief from judgment taken against him through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect is required in first instance to show only that he has not been personally served with summons and that he has a good defense to the action which he could have presented had he been informed of its pendency, but his opponent may show in opposition to application that applicant had actual notice of action in time to have entered appearance and to have presented defense and that failure to do so was owing to his neglect or his consent to judgment, and, in event of such showing, a case arises for exercise of discretion of the court and it must determine whether the "laches" is of a character that should preclude relief. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Laches".

5. Appeal and error ⇐837(9)

In determining whether showing of a meritorious defense was made by applicants whose motions to vacate and set aside default and judgment and to permit them to answer and defend action on its merits were denied, the reviewing court was entitled to consider both the affidavits filed by the applicants in support of their motions and their verified proposed answers. Code Civ. Proc. § 473a.

6. Judgment ⇐159

Where defendants who claimed easement on land sought relief from default and judgment entered against them in suit to partition the land, affidavits, stating unequivocally that no personal service of summons was made on defendants and that first knowledge they had that such suit had been brought or was pending or that judgment had been entered was when defendants' easement was barricaded for first time, was sufficient showing in respect to lack of personal service of summons to entitle defendants to relief. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

7. Judgment ⇐161

Where defendants who claimed easement on land sought relief from default and judgment entered against them in suit to partition the land, and filed affidavit and verified proposed answer, allegation of answer based on information and belief of facts peculiarly within knowledge of the party, and allegation which merely mentioned alleged easement by way of recital, were insufficient and were eliminated from consideration on the showing of merits. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

8. Judgment ⇐160

Where defendants who claimed easement on land sought relief from default and judgment entered against them in suit to partition the land, and the facts relied on in the showing of merits were specifically stated, the general formal affidavit of merits could be disregarded, since even though it may have been sufficient without the specific statement of facts, since the specific statements were set forth, they were the measure of the merits and the court might determine their sufficiency. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

9. Judgment ⇐145(4)

Where defendants who claimed easement on land sought relief from default and judgment entered against them in a suit to partition the land, the defendants, in alleging facts to show that they had a good defense to the action on the merits, were not required to state probative facts concerning origin of their title to easement. Code Civ. Proc. § 473a.

10. Judgment ⇐145(4)

Where defendants who claimed easement on land sought relief from default and judgment entered against them in suit to partition the land, affidavits and verified proposed answers, which embodied the ultimate fact that the defendants were the owners of the easement in question, were sufficient "prima facie" showing of merit to entitle defendant to relief sought. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie".

11. Judgment ⇐162(4)

Where defendants who claimed easement on land sought relief from default and judgment entered against them in suit to partition the land, and defendants made prima facie showing of meritorious defense, counter affidavits amounting to nothing more than an attempt to controvert truth of showing of merits were insufficient and did not preclude granting of relief to the defendants. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

12. Judgment ⇐145(4)

Where city which claimed easement on land sought relief from default judgment entered against it in suit to partition the land, affidavit and proposed answer of the city, which contained no allegation of its ownership of an easement or that the alleged easement constituted a public street, and merely alleged use of roadway across the land by residents and inhabitants of city and by fire, police, and street departments thereof, did not establish meritorious defense necessary to entitle city to relief sought. Code Civ. Proc. § 473a.

13. Judgment ⇐145(4)
Pleading ⇐8(11)

Where city which claimed easement on land sought relief from default judgment entered against it in suit to partition the land, assertion in affidavit and proposed answer that city acquired a right by user was a mere "conclusion" and did not establish meritorious defense necessary to entitle city to relief sought. Code Civ.Proc. § 473a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Aylett R. Cotton, Judge.

Action by W. W. Thompson against R. R. Sutton and others, for partition of realty. From orders denying motions of defendant City of San Carlos and defendants Asa E. Hull and others to vacate and set aside a default and judgment and to permit them to answer and defend the action on its merits, such defendants appeal.

Order denying motion of defendant city affirmed, and order denying motions of defendants Asa E. Hull and others reversed with directions to grant application and permit the filing of purported answers and defend the action on its merits.

Henry F. Wrigley, of San Francisco, and Albert Mansfield, of Redwood City, for appellants.

R. R. Sutton in pro. per. and Kirkbride & Wilson, all of San Mateo, for respondents.

COMSTOCK, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from orders denying motions of the appellants to vacate and set aside a default and judgment, and to permit them to answer and defend the action on its merits.

The action was commenced as a suit in partition by the plaintiff, W. W. Thompson, against the defendant R. R. Sutton and "all persons unknown who have or claim any right, title, estate, interest or lien in or upon the real property described in the complaint or any part thereof." It was alleged that plaintiff owned a four-fifths interest and defendant R. R. Sutton owned a one-fifth interest in six lots in the city of San Carlos. There were allegations that no other persons claimed any interest in the property excepting the persons designated as "all persons unknown," etc., and as to them that their claims were without any right whatsoever. The prayer was for a partition of the real property according to the respective rights of plaintiff and the defendant R. R. Sutton and that their title be quieted against all others. Service of summons upon defendants "all persons unknown," etc., as described in the complaint, was made by publication once a week for two months in a newspaper published in the city of San Mateo. On February 25, 1938, the defendant Sutton, appearing in propria persona, filed an answer admitting the allegations of the complaint and on that date the default of the defendants "all persons" was demanded and entered and plaintiff and defendant Sutton made and filed a written stipulation waiving notice of trial, written findings, appointment of a referee and an interlocutory decree. On the same day a final decree of partition was entered, allotting to plaintiff five lots and to defendant Sutton one lot and further decreeing that "all persons unknown who have or claim any right, title, estate, interest or lien in or upon the real property described in the complaint, or any part thereof, have and each of them has no right, title, estate, interest or lien of, in or to the said real property or any part thereof, and that they and each of them be, and they are hereby forever banned and foreclosed from claiming any interest therein, and that the title of said plaintiff W. W. Thompson and defendant R. R. Sutton be and the same is hereby quieted as to their said claims."

Thereafter on November 7, 1938, appellant Asa E. Hull served and filed a notice of motion to vacate default and judgment and to be permitted to file an answer and to defend the action on its merits upon the ground that he had not been personally served with summons in said action. Said notice of motion was accompanied by a supporting affidavit and a verified proposed answer. On December 13, 1938, appellants Sagehorn, Mewhirter, McIntyre, Pratt and O'Conner filed a like motion with supporting affidavits and a verified proposed answer. On February 6, 1939, the city of San Carlos served and filed its notice of motion to the same effect with supporting affidavit and verified proposed answer. To each of said motions the plaintiff W. W. Thompson interposed an opposition by counter-affidavit. Upon hearing and submission of the motions, they were denied in two orders, one pertaining to the motion of the city, the other to the motion of the other applicants.

Appellants contend that as a matter of law they are entitled to have the default and judgment set aside and to appear and answer in said action and defend the same on its merits.

[1-3] The policy of the law is correctly stated by appellants in their brief wherein they quote from Waybright v. Anderson, 200 Cal. 374, at page 377, 253 P. 148 at page 149, as follows:

"Moreover, it is the policy of the law to favor, wherever possible, a hearing on the merits, and appellate courts are 'much more disposed to affirm an order when the result is to compel a trial upon the merits than it is when the judgment by default is allowed to stand, and it appears that a substantial defense could be made.' O'Brien v. Leach [139 Cal. 220, 72 P. 1004, 96 Am.St.Rep. 105], supra; Downing v. Klondike Min. [& Mill.] Co. [165 Cal. 786, 134 P. 970], supra; Porter v. Bryson [35 Cal.App. 688, 690, 170 P. 1068], supra. This is clearly indicated in the case of Berri v. Rogero, 168 Cal. 736, 740, 145 P. 95, 97, wherein it is stated that: 'The policy of the law is to have every litigated case tried upon its merits, and it looks with disfavor upon a party who, regardless of the merits of his case, attempts to take advantage of the mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or neglect of his adversary. * * * A broad discretion is allowed to courts in granting relief against default, and it is in cases only where the lower court has abused its discretion that the appellate court will reverse its action.'

"Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a remedial provision and is to be liberally construed, so as to dispose of cases upon their substantial merits, and to give to the party claiming in good faith to have a subsisting cause of action or a substantial defense thereto an opportunity to present it. It is for this reason that appellate courts more readily listen to an appeal from an order refusing to set aside default than where the motion has been granted, since in such case the defaulting party may be deprived of a substantial right. Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 P. 63."

[4] They base their contentions upon the provisions of section 473a of the Code of Civil Procedure. A party seeking relief under said section is not required in the first instance to do more than show that he has not been personally served with summons and that he has a good defense to the action on the merits which he could have presented had he been informed of its pendency; but his opponent may show in opposition to the application that the applicant had actual notice of the action in time to have entered an appearance and to have presented the defense and that the failure to do so was owing to his neglect or to his consent to the judgment and in the event of such showing a case arises for the exercise of the discretion of the court and it must determine whether or not the laches is of a character that should preclude the relief. Guardianship of Stanfield, 32 Cal. App.2d 283, 89 P.2d 696, Hiltbrand v. Hiltbrand, 218 Cal. 321, 23 P.2d 277, Boland v. All Persons, etc., 160 Cal. 486, 117 P. 547, Gray v. Lawlor, 151 Cal. 352, 90 P. 691, 12 Ann.Cas. 990.

The respondents contend that a sufficient case was made to invoke the discretion of the trial court and that its orders find support in the evidence and should not be disturbed on this appeal.

[5] It is urged by respondents that the affidavits and proposed answer of appellants are in and of themselves insufficient to show merit. We think that these supporting papers as presented by the individual appellants demand consideration separately from those relied upon by the appellant city of San Carlos. We are entitled to consider both the affidavits and the verified proposed answers on the question of a showing of merit. Guardianship of Stanfield, supra; Savage v. Smith, 170 Cal. 472, 150 P. 353.

[6] The affidavit of each of the individual appellants states unequivocally that no personal service of summons in said action was ever made upon him and that the first knowledge that he had that such an action had been brought, or was pending, or that the judgment had been entered, was about the middle of October, 1938, "when said defendant's right of way or easement was barricaded for the first time." This was a sufficient showing in respect to the lack of personal service of the summons. Indeed, no point is made by respondents as to that particular phase of the case. The affidavit of appellant Asa E. Hull alleges: "That he is the owner of all of Block 16 of the San Carlos Park Syndicate; and that, as the owner of said block of land, and as an appurtenance thereto, he is the owner of a private right of way or easement across all of the lots described in plaintiff's complaint herein; that this defendant and his predecessors in interest in the said Block 16 have been in the peaceful and uninterrupted use and enjoyment of said private right of way or easement for over twenty years prior to the filing of plaintiff's complaint herein; and that said use and enjoyment of said right of way or easement, as well as the name and address of this defendant, was known to plaintiff both at and prior to the time he filed said complaint." A general affidavit of merits is also included in the affidavit, as follows: "That affiant has fully and fairly stated all the facts relating to said action to Henry F. Wrigley, Esq., an attorney admitted to practice in all courts in the State of California, and affiant's counsel in said cause, and that, after such statement, affiant was advised by said counsel, and he verily believes, that he has a good and substantial defense to said action on the merits."

[7] In the verified proposed answer of the said Asa E. Hull, paragraph III thereof, he states: "Answering allegation 'IV' of said complaint, this defendant alleges that, for more than twenty years prior to the filing of plaintiff's complaint herein, this defendant and his predecessors in interest have been the owners, and have enjoyed the uninterrupted and peaceful use and possession, of a private right of way or easement over and across the said lots of land described in plaintiff's complaint; that the said private right of way or easement was and is shown as 'Bellevue Avenue', first, upon that certain map entitled, 'Map of the Property of the San Carlos Park Syndicate', recorded September 3, 1907, in Book 5 of Maps, at pages 24 to 26, San Mateo County Records, and, second, upon that certain map entitled, 'Supplementary Map of Tract 1 and a portion of Tract 2 of the Property of San Carlos Park Syndicate', recorded May 20, 1909, in Book 6 of Maps at page 63, San Mateo County Records; and that the location, length and width of said private right of way or easement over and across the said lots is as shown upon the said two maps; and except as thus admitted and alleged this defendant denies allegation 'IV' of said complaint." Also, in paragraph I of said proposed answer he states: "Answering allegations 'I' and 'II' of said complaint, this defendant is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges, that plaintiff W. W. Thompson is the owner of the fee to the lots in said allegations 'I' and 'II' described, that defendant R. R. Sutton has no right, title or interest therein, except as trustee for or agent of plaintiff, and that this defendant has and is the owner of a private right of way or easement over and across the said lots, and all thereof; and, except as thus alleged or admitted, this defendant specifically denies said allegations of plaintiff's complaint." And in paragraph II thereof he says: "This defendant denies allegation 'III' of plaintiff's complaint herein; and in this connection, this defendant alleges that his said private right of way or easement over and across the said lots has not only existed on the ground but it has appeared of record for over twenty years prior to the filing of plaintiff's complaint herein." In our opinion the last two quoted paragraphs of the verified proposed answer should be eliminated from consideration on the showing of merits as the said paragraph I is but an allegation on information and belief of facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the party and is hence insufficient. Hall v. James, 79 Cal.App. 433, 249 P. 876; Loveland v. Garner, 74 Cal. 298, 15 P. 844; Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co., 100 Cal. 67, 34 P. 527; Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 484, 35 P. 144; Raphael Weill & Co. v. Crittenden, 139 Cal. 488, 73 P. 238, and said paragraph II merely mentions the alleged right of way or easement by way of recital and is likewise insufficient.

The affidavits and proposed answers of the other individual appellants are substantially similar to that of Asa E. Hull.

[8] The facts relied upon in the showing of merits having been specifically stated, the general, formal "affidavit of merits" may be disregarded, for while this may have been sufficient without the specific statement of facts, when the facts constituting the defense are set forth, they are the measure of the merits and the court may judge of their sufficiency. Osmont v. All Persons, etc., 165 Cal. 587, 133 P. 480.

[9, 10] While the statements of fact on the showing of merits by the individual appellants contain much surplusage and immaterial matter, nevertheless they embody the ultimate fact that said parties, respectively, are the owners of the right of way or easement in question. It is unnecessary for them to state probative facts concerning the origin of their title. Gray v. Lawlor, 151 Cal. 352, 90 P. 691, 12 Ann. Cas. 990; Davidson v. All Persons, etc., 18 Cal.App. 723, 124 P. 570; Garbarino v. Noce, 181 Cal. 125, 183 P. 532, 6 A.L.R. 1433; Merrill v. Hooper, 125 Cal.App. 80, 13 P.2d 786. We therefore are of the opinion that a sufficient prima facie showing of merit was made by the affidavits and proposed answers of said moving parties.

Do the counter-affidavits and maps contain any substantial showing of the essential matters to support the orders, i. e., that applicants had actual notice of the action in time to have entered an appearance and presented their defense and that the failure to do so was owing to their neglect or consent to the judgment, amounting to laches, or that they are estopped? The counter-affidavit in opposition to Asa E. Hull's showing is lengthy and involved. We shall not attempt to recount its entire contents. It admits that no personal service of summons was made upon said appellant. On information and belief it denies that said appellant had no personal knowledge of the bringing or of the pendency of the action or the entry of the judgment until the 13th of October, 1938. Various facts are set forth concerning the knowledge of Asa E. Hull of the pendency of another action to which plaintiff and said city, but none of the individual applicants here, were parties and in which the issues were different. Many facts are alleged concerning the history of the recording of the subdivision maps which tend to show that said appellant does not own an easement over the way claimed by reason of any dedication or as an appurtenance to any lot purchased by him with reference to any of said maps. Other facts are stated concerning the taxation and assessment of lots in the subdivisions in question and the making of certain public improvements therein, all of which took place before the commencement of this action. We find nothing in said counter-showing sufficient to constitute a conflict with the prima facie showing of merits made by said appellant or to support the orders from which the appeal is prosecuted.

The counter-affidavit filed by plaintiff in opposition to the showing of the individual applicants other than Hull is even less substantial than that directed against Hull. It merely denies the allegations on information and belief or for lack of information or belief, except as to the questions of ownership of the easement and as to those the counter-affidavit, "Denies that as alleged owners of said parcels of land, and/or as an appurtenant thereto, they or any of them or their said wives or any of them, are the owners of a private right of way or easement across all or any of the lots described in plaintiff's complaint or any part thereof," and then proceeds to deny said applicant's allegations respecting their peaceable and uninterrupted use and enjoyment of the right of way. No affirmative facts are brought forward to show any basis for a claim of laches or estoppel.

[11] None of the aforementioned counter-affidavits amounts to anything more than an attempt to controvert the truth of the applicants' showing of merits. They are therefore insufficient. Rauer's Law, etc., Co. v. Gilleran, 138 Cal. 352, 71 P. 445; Gracier v. Weir, 45 Cal. 53; 14 Cal. Jur. 1071.

[12, 13] We now turn to the supporting papers used by the appellant city of San Carlos on its motion. The affidavit and proposed answer contain no allegation of its ownership of an easement or that the roadway is a public street. We have carefully searched and find nothing of any materiality regarding a defense on the merits. Allegations are made that since the incorporation of the city in 1925 the city of San Carlos, the residents and inhabitants thereof, and the fire, police and street departments of said city have continuously used a roadway across the property described in the complaint; that the city and its residents and inhabitants "have acquired a right by user to the use of the road or street across the property of the plaintiff;" and that said roadway existed and had been continuously used by the city and its residents, employees and departments for more than twenty years. In our opinion this is no showing of a meritorious defense to the action. The use shown may have been purely permissive, not adverse or under claim of right. Said assertion of the acquisition of a right by user is a pure conclusion.

The other subjects discussed in the briefs are not of sufficient merit to require detailed attention.

The order denying the motion of the city of San Carlos is affirmed. The order denying the motions of the other appellants is reversed with directions to the superior court to grant their applications and permit them to file their proposed answers and defend the action on its merits. Appellants other than city of San Carlos to recover their costs on appeal.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

BRAY et al. v. JONES.

Civ. 2692.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 23, 1942.

1. Taxation ⇐734(9)

Where notice recited that property would be sold for nonpayment of taxes, without mentioning penalties and costs as required by statute, the defect or deficiency appearing in notice was not only an "irregularity", but was such a defect that a subsequent tax deed predicated upon such defective notice was void. Pol.Code § 3747, 3764, as amended by St.1929, p. 742, §§ 1, 2, and §§ 3771, 3771a; St.1929, p. 745, § 4.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Irregularity".

2. Taxation ⇐772

A void tax deed is void for all purposes.

3. Taxation ⇐659, 751

The statutes prescribing manner of service of notice of tax sales and issuance of tax deeds thereunder are "mandatory" and not "directory".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Directory" and "Mandatory".

4. Taxation ⇐803

Generally, a short statute of limitations applies only to tax sales invalid because of mere technical defects and irregularities in the proceedings, and possession under such a statute will not sustain a tax deed that is valid on its face, if there were jurisdictional or fundamental defects in the sale which rendered the proceedings void.

5. Taxation ⇐659

Under statute requiring notice to be given owner that property would be sold for nonpayment of taxes, penalties and costs, the giving of notice as required and in manner prescribed by legislature was a jurisdictional prerequisite to the making of a valid sale of the property. Pol.Code § 3764, as amended by St.1929, p. 742, §§ 1, 2.

6. Taxation ⇐688

Where a tax deed to state pursuant to sale of property for nonpayment of taxes was invalid because of failure to comply with statute relating to notice required to be given owner, no title passed pursuant to the sale, and legislature could not cure the defect by passage of a curative act. Pol.Code §§ 3747, 3764, as amended by St.1929, p. 742, §§ 1, 2, and §§ 3771, 3771a, 3897(1, 8); St.1929, p. 745, § 4.

7. Taxation ⇐804

In suit to quiet title, wherein plaintiffs offered only a void tax deed as basis of their claim of title, neither doctrine of "laches" nor a limitation statute could supply the lack of affirmative proof so as to entitle plaintiffs to judgment. Pol.Code § 3897(8).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Laches".

8. Taxation ⇐810(2), 813

Where tax deed was invalid because proceedings leading up to tax sale were defective, purchaser of the deed should be reimbursed for taxes, costs, penalties and expenses incurred, and purchaser should be allowed to introduce evidence as to amount of such items.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; William L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Suit by W. F. Bray and others against Ida T. Jones to quiet title to certain real property. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Raphael Dechter and Lyman P. Robertson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. J. Rankin, Milo V. Olson, and R. Leslie Sparks, all of Los Angeles, Amici Curiae, for appellant.

West & Vizzard and Edw. West, all of Bakersfield, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Respondents obtained a judgment quieting title to certain real property in Kern County. Defendant Ida T. Jones appealed therefrom.

Respondents, as holders of a tax deed issued by the County Tax Collector of Kern County, brought this action to quiet title against the appellant as the owner in fee of the said property. Respondents rely upon a deed dated October 19, 1937, from the Tax Collector of Kern County. The State of California, as grantor of said deed, according to respondents, acquired title to that property by virtue of a conveyance to the state made on July 15, 1935, by the Tax Collector of Kern County on account of the nonpayment of taxes for the year 1929. In other words, the taxes not having been paid for the year 1929, the property was declared sold to the state on June 30, 1930, and five years having elapsed without any redemption, it was conveyed to the state. It is the contention of appellant that the proceedings leading up to the sale of the property to the state in the year 1930 for the nonpayment of taxes in 1929, and that the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the conveyance of the real estate to the state in 1935, and the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the deed to the respondents, were defective and void.

Under point one it is admitted by respondents in their closing brief that the notice of sale did not comply with section 3764 of the Political Code in that the notice recited that the property would be sold for the nonpayment of taxes instead of reciting that the property would be sold for the nonpayment of taxes, penalties and costs. The notice recites that "* * * unless the taxes delinquent as appear in said list, together with the penalties and costs, are paid on or before the sale date given below, the real estate upon which taxes are delinquent will be, by operation of law, sold to the state * * *." (Italics ours.) In other words, the notice preceding the list specifically states that the list contains the amount of taxes due but makes no mention as to whether the list contains the amount of taxes, penalties and costs. The fact that the list makes no mention of containing the amount of penalties and costs is further strengthened by the statement in the notice that "unless the taxes delinquent as appear by said list, together with costs and penalties are paid, I, the said tax collector, etc., will sell said real estate, etc." This would obviously seem to indicate from a reading of the notice that the list contained the taxes only, and that the owner of the property, in addition to the amount of taxes shown in the list, would be compelled to pay some other sum representing penalties and costs in order to retain his property and prevent such sale.

[1] Respondents state that Gottstein v. Kelly, 206 Cal. 742, 276 P. 347, "is directly in point" but was not cited by either respondents or appellant before it was called to the attention of respondents by amici curiae herein, and they admit in this respect "that the proceedings prior to the sale of the lands by the State of California to the respondents were irregular, and that the title of respondents probably will fall unless sustained by the Statute of Limitations set up in subdivision 8, section 3897 of the Political Code, adopted in 1935, and in effect at the time the sale by the state to the respondents was made." It should be here noted, however, notwithstanding the concession made by respondents, that the holding in Gottstein v. Kelly, supra, has been modified to some extent by legislative enactment. Stats. 1929, ch. 422, p. 742. Gottstein v. Kelly, supra, in effect held that under the provisions of sections 3747 and 3764 of the Political Code, taxes, penalties and costs should be separately shown on the publication of delinquent lists and notices of sale under sections 3771 and 3771a of the Political Code. The legislature, in 1929, amended these provisions (§ 3764, Pol. Code) by requiring that the delinquent list show only "an amount equal to the total amount of all taxes, assessments, penalties, and costs due," and in passing the amendatory act, specifically declared that the amendments were "not a change in, but a statement and declaratory of the law as the Legislature intended it to be by the terms of those sections prior to" the amendment. Section 4 thereof further provided that "all publications of delinquent lists or notices of sale under sections 3771 and 3771a of the Political Code failing to enter taxes, penalties and costs as separate entries but entering the foregoing amounts in one total sum and all sales * * * tax deeds * * * based upon such entries * * * are hereby confirmed, validated and legalized * * *." Clayton v. Schultz, 4 Cal.2d 425, 50 P.2d 446. The defect or deficiency appearing in the notice, as above conceded, is not only an irregularity, but has time and again been held to be such a defect that a subsequent tax deed predicated upon such defective notice is void. Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal.App. 717, 722, 236 P. 371; Snodgrass v. Errengy, 86 Cal.App. 664, 261 P. 497; Gottstein v. Kelly, supra. The giving of notice in the manner and form prescribed by the statute is an essential jurisdictional fact. Cordano v. Kelsey, 28 Cal.App. 9, 19, 151 P. 391, 398; Campbell v. Canty, 162 Cal. 382, 123 P. 266; Southern California B. & F. Corp. v. Mathes, 206 Cal. 749, 752, 276 P. 1013; Clayton v. Schultz, 22 Cal.App.2d 72, 74, 70 P.2d 512.

[2, 3] When a proceeding is void for one purpose it is void for all purposes. A void tax deed is like a void judgment which is but a "dead limb upon the judicial tree, which should be lopped off" at any time. Pettis v. Johnston, 78 Okl. 277, 190 P. 681, 689. In matters pertaining to tax sales, statutes prescribing the manner of service of notice and the issuance of tax deeds thereunder are mandatory and not directory. A deed is void to prevent the operation of the short statute of limitations when there is a fundamental or jurisdictional defect in the proceedings, either disclosed by the evidence of the deed or by the record of the proceedings. Lind v. Stubblefield, 138 Okl. 280, 282 P. 365.

[4] In 26 Ruling Case Law, p. 443, § 399, the rule is thus declared: "A majority of the courts in which the question has arisen have taken the further position that a short statute of limitations applies only to sales invalid because of mere technical defects and irregularities in the proceedings, and that possession under such a statute will not sustain a deed that is valid on its face, if there were jurisdictional or fundamental defects in the sale which rendered the proceedings absolutely void * * *." See, also, Harris v. Mason, 120 Tenn. 668, 115 S.W. 1146, 25 L.R.A.,N.S., 1011; Martin v. White et al., 53 Or. 319, 100 P. 290, citing Blackwell on Tax Titles, § 944; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329; Kypadel Coal & Lumber Co. v. Millard, 165 Ky. 432, 177 S.W. 270; Secret Valley Land Co. v. Perry, 187 Cal. 420, 202 P. 449; Cooley on Taxation, 4th Ed. vol. 4, pp. 2970, 2971, 2974.

[5, 6] Section 3897, subdivision 1 of the Political Code provides in part that "* * * whenever the State shall have become the owner of any property sold for taxes * * * the tax collector * * * shall * * * sell * * *." If the tax deed to the state was void the state did not become the owner of the property sold for taxes. Where the proceedings are so fatally defective that no title passes, the legislature cannot, by a curative act, transfer the property of one person to another. The giving of the notice as required and in the manner prescribed by the legislature was a jurisdictional prerequisite to the making of a valid sale herein. The notice published was unauthorized and therefore constituted no notice. The only notice to the owner which could constitute due process and under which he could be deprived of his property was that set out in the law at the time the sale was made, and it is evident that such notice was not given. Warden v. Broome, 9 Cal.App. 172, 98 P. 252; Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233; 37 Cyc. 1379, 1380.

[7] A careful reading of Clayton v. Schultz, supra, does not indicate an intention by the Supreme Court to announce a rule or establish a principle at variance with those herein expressed. The act of 1929 did not have the effect of validating the tax sale in this case, as the sale was absolutely void when it was made. The day after the sale, the title of the owner was as valid in law and in equity and to all intents and purposes, as though no sale had occurred. Harper v. Rowe, supra. The force of the legislature's declaration is all that purports to make valid a sale which theretofore was void. The deed pursuant to the sale conveyed no title to the state since plaintiffs offered only a void tax deed as a basis of their claim of title. Neither the doctrine of laches nor the statute of limitations could supply the lack of affirmative proof so as to entitle plaintiffs to judgment. Jones v. Walker, 47 Cal.App.2d 566, 118 P.2d 299.

[8] Appellant sets forth several other claimed reasons why the tax sale was void. In view of the concession and determination that the first reason stated was tenable and rendered the sale irregular and consequently void, we see no reason to pass upon the sufficiency of other claimed reasons. Where tax proceedings have been shown to be defective, the purchaser must be reimbursed for all taxes, costs, penalties and expenses incurred. The purchaser may introduce evidence as to the amount of these items. Clayton v. Schultz, supra.

Judgment reversed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 385

LEONARD v. ALEXANDER et al.

Civ. 2901.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 9, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1942.

1. Infants ⇐49

The section of Probate Code relating to contract for attorney's fees for services in litigation, made by or on behalf of minor, does not prohibit an attorney's fee for an attorney for a minor where contract for contingent fees is not approved by court having jurisdiction of minor's estate, but the statute indicates that under such circumstances court awarding judgment to minor should fix attorney's fee based on reasonable value of the services rendered. Probate Code, § 1509.

2. Infants ⇐49

Where contract for attorney's fees on a contingent basis in malpractice action in behalf of minor was never approved by any court, and the action was compromised by minor after reaching his majority and was dismissed, and no judgment ever recovered, provisions of probate code relating to contract for attorney's fees for services in litigation, made by or on behalf of a minor, were not applicable, except insofar as they made the contract for a contingent fee void. Probate Code, § 1509.

3. Infants ⇐50

The services of an attorney are usually considered as "necessaries", and a promise to pay for them is implied when they are rendered in a proceeding personal to an infant.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessaries".

4. Infants ⇐50
Attorney and client ⇐141

Where services were rendered by an attorney in malpractice action on behalf of a minor at mother's request pursuant to a contract providing for contingent fees, which contract was void under probate code because never approved by any court, and the action was compromised by minor after reaching his majority and was dismissed and no judgment recovered, services rendered by attorney were for "necessaries", and their reasonable value was recoverable from minor, but not from his mother.

5. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

Where appeal, in action by attorney to recover value of his services rendered in malpractice action, was on judgment roll, District Court of Appeal would presume that evidence supported trial court's finding that reasonable value of services rendered was $350.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank A. Leonard, Judge.

Action by Jack P. Leonard against Adin Alexander, Jr., and another to recover for services rendered defendants in an action brought to recover damages in a malpractice action. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part with directions.

Hearing denied; CURTIS, J., not participating.

Jack P. Leonard, of Los Angeles, in pro. per., Jesse W. Curtis, Jr., of San Bernardino, and Marion P. Betty, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred A. Wilson, of San Bernardino, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

Plaintiff, an attorney at law, brought this action to recover for services rendered defendants in an action brought to recover damages in a malpractice action.

Plaintiff recovered judgment in the sum of $350 as the reasonable value of his services rendered. A motion for new trial was made and heard by a judge other than the one presiding at the trial. The findings of fact and conclusions of law were modified and judgment was rendered for defendants. There remained in the modified findings a finding to the effect that the reasonable value of the services rendered by plaintiff was $350. The appeal is on the judgment roll.

The case went to trial on a first amended complaint and a pleading entitled "Second Amended Complaint" but which was ordered "filed and for all purposes considered as an amendment, and further, separate, and third cause of action, to his first amended complaint on file herein and as if therein incorporated." This pleading sought recovery for the reasonable value of the services rendered by plaintiff.

We gather from these pleadings that in the years 1922 and 1923, when Adin Alexander, Jr., was of the age of about five years, he was treated by physicians against whom the malpractice action was subsequently brought. The minor and Jennie Alexander, his mother, consulted plaintiff and employed him to bring an action for damages against the physicians. Plaintiff took the case on a contingent fee basis and brought the action. Jennie Alexander appeared in the action as guardian ad litem for the minor. After the trial had proceeded for several days the action was dismissed.

The minor and his mother desired to have another attorney associated with plaintiff in filing another action for damages. They signed a written agreement which was approved by plaintiff fixing the contingent fees of these attorneys, and a second action for damages was filed.

After the second suit was filed there was some dissatisfaction on the part of the minor and his mother with the services of plaintiff and the other attorney was substituted, in the place of the two attorneys, as attorney for plaintiff in the damage action. In the substitution signed by the plaintiff here, it was stated that should Adin Alexander recover, the attorney claimed that he was entitled to compensation for services rendered and that "This substitution shall not prejudice my claim for attorney's fee as aforesaid."

Adin Alexander, Jr., reached his majority about November 4, 1937, and sometime in July, 1939, compromised his claim, received the sum of $8,000 in settlement of it, and dismissed the damage action.

Plaintiff had been paid $100 out of which he was required to pay the costs in the damage actions. He received no attorney's fees for the services he rendered. The record discloses that the other attorney had to bring suit for the services he rendered and recovered judgment for $2,450.

The judgment against plaintiff refusing him compensation for his services is apparently based on section 1509 of the Probate Code which provides as follows:

"A contract for attorney's fees for services in litigation, made by or on behalf of a minor, is void unless the contract is approved by the court in which the litigation is pending or the court having jurisdiction of the estate of the minor, upon petition of any person in interest. When no such contract is approved, and a judgment is recovered by or on behalf of a minor, the attorney's fees chargeable against the minor shall be fixed by the court rendering the judgment."

[1] This section does not prohibit an attorney's fee for the attorney for a minor where the contract for contingent fees is not approved. On the contrary, it indicates rather clearly that under such circumstances the court awarding a judgment to the minor should fix the fee of the attorney based on the reasonable value of the services rendered.

[2] It is not contended that the contract for attorney's fees on a contingent basis was ever approved by any court. As the damage action was compromised by the minor after he reached his majority and was dismissed, no judgment was "recovered by or on behalf of the minor," so the provisions of section 1509 of the Probate Code are not applicable to the rather unusual facts of this case, except insofar as they make the contract for a contingent fee void. We must look elsewhere for authorities controlling our decision.

[3] The general rule concerning the fees of attorneys for services rendered a person under disability to contract, is thus stated in 6 Corpus Juris, p. 748, section 330, as follows:

"The services of an attorney are usually considered as necessaries, and a promise to pay for them is implied when they are rendered in a proceeding personal to an infant, or to any other person incapable of entering into a contract, such as a habitual drunkard or an insane man." 7 C.J.S., Attorney and Client, § 190.

Here the trial court found that all of the services rendered by plaintiff were rendered pursuant to the request of Jennie Alexander. On this question as well as on the question of attorney's fees being necessaries of life in certain cases, the court in Stone v. Conkle, 31 Cal.App.2d 348, 88 P.2d 197, 199, said:

"There is no doubt that legal services rendered an incompetent in proceedings looking toward restoration to capacity are necessaries, and a contract to pay the reasonable value thereof will be implied by law and may be enforced in suitable proceedings. Estate of Doyle, 126 Cal.App. 646, 14 P.2d 920; 4 Cyc. 993. Respondent does not seriously question this rule, but the trial court particularly found that the legal services rendered were at the request of L. S. Durben, for which reason it was held no recovery could be had. As above indicated, the evidence is insufficient to show that plaintiff's assignors were employed by Durben as Mrs. Conkle and her brother-in-law were both informed that the property she was supposed to possess would be looked to for compensation for the services rendered. But, irrespective of this fact, the action being for necessaries, it is immaterial whether the services were performed at the request of the incompetent or of a third party, as the law implies a promise and creates an obligation on the part of the incompetent to pay the reasonable value therefor. The mere claim, therefore, that plaintiff's assignors may have been employed by the brother-in-law, Durben, would not militate against or destroy the right of plaintiff's assignors to recover the reasonable value of the legal services against the respondent Mrs. Conkle because the law is clear that, irrespective of the liability or nonliability of a third person in ordering necessaries for an incompetent, the incompetent herself or her estate is nevertheless liable for such necessaries. McClenahan v. Keyes, 188 Cal. 574, 206 P. 454."

On the right of an attorney to collect the reasonable value of his services from a person under disability and consequently unable to make a valid contract, see Estate of Nielsen, 111 Cal.App. 744, 296 P. 122; Estate of Doyle, 126 Cal.App. 646, 14 P.2d 920; and Dorris v. Crowder, 26 Cal.App.2d 49, 78 P.2d 1039. See also Sanker v. Humborg, 48 Cal.App.2d 203, 119 P.2d 431.

[4] Under these authorities we have reached the conclusion that the services rendered by plaintiff were for necessaries of life of the minor and that their reasonable value is recoverable from him, but not from his mother.

[5] The trial court found the reasonable value of the services rendered to be $350. As the appeal is on the judgment roll, we must presume that the evidence supports that finding.

The judgment in favor of Jennie Alexander is affirmed.

The judgment in favor of Adin Alexander, Jr., is reversed with instructions to the trial court to modify its findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with the views here expressed and to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff against Adin Alexander, Jr., in the sum of $350.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

WEST KEY NUMBER SYSTEM

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
3 1786 10047 2031

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

NON-CIRCULATING